But what maner of Sermon hée made in S. Maries Church, in how excellent Latine hée made it, how finely and how like a Diuine he did it, his matter shall shew notwithstanding I hold my peace: the vnperfect example whereof, being as well as I could somewhat perused and amended, I had rather set out, than altogether suppresse it or kéepe it backe, which profitably putteth in minde and warneth Preachers of many things, and séemeth to haue béene preached when he tooke his degrée of Bachelar in Diuinity, the words being taken out of the first Epistle of Peter the 4. Chapter, vpon the Sonday within the Octaues of the Ascension.

A LEARNED AND GODLY SERMON, MADE IN THE LATINE TONGVE, IN S. MARIES in Oxenford, vpon the Sonday after the Ascention, in the raigne of King EDWARD the sixe, by the famous and excellent Clerke Master IEWEL, late Bishop of SARESBYRY.

I. PET. 4. 11.

If any man speake, let him talke as the words of God.

BEthren beloued in Christ, I haue chosen these words chiefly out of that Epistle of S. Peter, which are accustomed to be read vnto the people this day, because, that whereas I must preach in Latine according to the custome of this place and time, the same in mine opinion seemed to belong properly to this assembly. The which, that they may be plainlier and better vnderstood of you all, I must repeat a few words from the beginning of this whole Epistle. Wherefore we must call to mind, because in those first times, Christian Religion was shut out every where, as pernitious to mens soules, and an infection of Common wealths, and that it seemed great godlinesse to rote out the bringers in of new Religion; lest (I say) that Christian men and those that were godly, should in that season vtterly be discouraged, and cast away all hope, S. Peter doth so instruct them with this Epistle, that they should consider no new or vnwonted thing to haue happned, that Christ himselfe hath suffered far bitterer and vnworthier things, that they should not be faint hearted; lastly, that the way to glory is by afflictions and Crosses.

And to that purpose he warneth the people by themselues and the Bishops also, what belongeth to each of them to take heed of. Concerning that which belongeth vnto the people, he saith, that they haue spent time enough before vpon wickednesse, and that now they ought to change their life with their Religion.

That godlinesse is placed, not in outward show and titles, but in soundnesse of life, and innocency of manners. That it is an ill thing with mouth and tongue only to worship God, and to giue our minde and soule to worship the Diuell; and to disagree from Idolaters, not in life and manners, but in words and profession (only.)

And because they had departed from the most ancient Ordinances and Lawes of their forefathers, and that they being but a few had stirred all kind of men against them, he warneth them that they yet would in all kinde of duties practise charity among themselues, one toward another, least they should be diuided at any time by any dissension of minds or studies. That this is only the token of Iesus Christ, whereby the bondslaues of the Diuell may be knowen from the children of GOD. That so it shall come to passe shortly, that all the whole world shall imbrace the Gospell and the heauenly doctrine, and that the enemies and the haters of the Crosse of Christ, whom godlinesse could not moue, may through ſhame be ouercome, and returne to themſelues. And the Biſhops he warneth, that in thoſe moſt hard times, they ſe to their office with all diligence and care, and that they loke about them diligently that the Congregation take no harme. And that it is not a ſporting matter, but a very great burthen that they haue taken vpon them. And therefore if they preach at any time to the people, that they ſpeake as the wordes of God, and that they ſo behaue themſelues, that others which heare them, may thinke that they heare not men, but the meſſengers and interpreters of the word of God.

This is the portion of Scripture that I iudged moſt fit for this time and place. For becauſe therefore that partly we are entered into the holy Miniſtery, and partly, as I hope, we haue already directed the courſe of our ſtudies to that point, we ſhall be taught in this place, how this heauenly office is to be garniſhed, that our labour may in time to come be very profitable to the Church of God, and the holy Goſpell be moſt largely ſpread abroad. But that this may be done the more orderly, and leſt I ſhould wander or goe out of courſe in my ſpeaking, I thinke it good to touch theſe three points in few wordes: Firſt, That a Preacher ſhould ſpeake: Secondly, What he ſhould ſpeake: Thirdly, How he ſhould ſpeake, that it may be vnderſtanded. Firſt, that he is ſcantly a good Preacher, which neuer ſpeaketh any thing to the Congregation: ſecondly, that a Preacher muſt ſet forth vnto the people not old wiues fables, but the word of God: and laſt of all, that that ſame word of God muſt be handled reuerently, and worthily, according to the dignity of the matter. But that God almighty would lighten all your hearts and my voice with his holy ſpirit, and that ſome fruite may come hereof vnto vs all, I deſire of you that you will helpe my weakneſſe with your deuout praiers.

Firſt of all, I commend vnto your deuotion the vniuerſall Church of Chriſt diſperſed throughout the whole world, and as now it falleth out, in many places, miſerably afflicted, and namely, this our Church of England and Ireland, and in the ſame for our noble King Edward his Maieſty, his moſt noble Siſters, Mary, and Elizabeth, the priuy Councell, the Rulers Eccleſiaſticall and Politicall, and all the people of England, both Vniuerſities, and chiefly this Vniuerſity of Oxenford, the Chaunceler, the Vicechaunceler, the Proctors, Robert Noruent, Preſident of Corpus Chriſti Colledge, Doctor Raynald, Maſter of Merton Colledge, and all the Scholars in both theſe Colledges. Ye ſhall giue thankes vnto God almighty, for King Henry the ſeuenth, and Henry the eight, Kings of noble memory, for Humfrey Duke of Gloceſter, &c. that of his infinite goodneſſe he hath kindled thoſe lights to the nouriſhing of good letters, and ſpreading abroad of Religion: And ye ſhall pray, that it would pleaſe him to raiſe vp others hereafter like vnto theſe, and to gather vs all to their ſociety into the boſome of Abraham.

Let him that ſpeaketh ſpeake as the words of God. To the end that the pith of theſe wordes may be the better vnderſtanded, becauſe I muſt intreate both of Paſtors, and before Paſtors, I haue vſed this diuiſion, To ſhew firſt that a Paſtor ſhould ſpeake often: next of all, that he ſhould ſpeake out of the holy Scriptures: laſt of all, That he ſhould ſpeake grauely and modeſtly according to the worthineſſe of the matter. And ſurely concerning the office of Paſtors, as yet I ſee not ſufficiently what I ſhould ſpeake, or not ſpeake. For to ſpeake that which hath beene before ſo often ſpoken, were not only hatefull, but out of ſeaſon: and to ſpeake nothing of ſo great ſloth, and daſtardie of our times, I am much afraid might ſeeme to ſhew a ſluggard and a daſtard. Truely, in this caſe if the voice of the immortall God might be heard, there were no neede at this time of my voice. For that I may ſay nothing beſides, all the Scriptures doe ſufficiently warne vs of our dutie, God himſelfe hath commanded nothing at any time, either more often, or elſe with more weightie wordes, than that his people ſhould be inſtructed to know him, themſelues and godlineſſe. Thou ſonne of man, ſaith God, in Eſay, Crie and ceaſe not, crie out aloude, lift vp thy voice as a Trumpet, and ſhew vnto my people their wickedneſſe. How oft doth Chriſt crie, Goe ye, Teach ye, Preach ye the Goſpell to euery creature? Wo vnto me, ſaith the Prophet, becauſe I haue kept ſilence. Wo vnto me, ſaith Paul, if I preach not the Goſpell. But ſuch is either our ſecuritie or daintineſſe: beſide that, we haue ſtopped our eares againſt holeſome councell, that we account it as a reproch, if a man warne vs of our dutie. Neuertheleſſe whatſoeuer it ſeemeth to vs, this hath ſeemed to God a help both very firme and very great to the making vp of his Church. For ſo hath God brought vs out of darkenes into light, ſo hath he reſtored vs being dead vnto life, ſo hath he brought vs being priſoners ſoners and captiues out of hell into heauen, ſo hath he broken the powers of the Diuell, ſo hath he brought vs back againe into his owne power and dominion, ſo hath he ſpread abroad the fame of his name into all lands. For if Chriſt, if the Apoſtles, if the Prophets, had held their peace, in what caſe had we now been in? what religion had there been any where? what worſhip of God had there been? That we behold the light, that we haue eſcaped out of bondage, that we are accounted, and be, the Sonnes of God, all that (I ſay) we owe vnto the preaching of the word of God. Let vs not deceiue our ſelues brethren, let vs not deceiue our ſelues. Our matters are not ſo ſtrongly eſtabliſhed, that they cannot fall. Except we take heed, except we looke about, except we put to ſtudy and diligence, all things will eaſily ſlide and fall into their former eſtate. A lamp, except you put Oile often in it, will ſoone be out. The victory is kept euen by ſuch meanes as it is gotten.

For what engines doth not the Diuell now vſe, what crafts doth he not practiſe, what way doth he not take, to ouerthrow the Church of God: He keepeth ſcout-watch alwaies, he is neuer wearied, he hath brought in ſo many vices, ſo much ignorance, ſo great blindneſſe, that there is no place in which a Preacher ought to be idle. And as, if the Sunne were taken away from the world, all things ſhould be left darke, diſparkled and confounded, ſo if the voice of the Paſtor be taken out of the Church, Religion is left at ſix and ſeuen, it is left blind, troubled, all things are mingled with error, ſuperſtition and Idolatry: of ſo great waight is it to be a ſteward of the houſe of God. The Goſpell, Religion, Godlineſſe, the health of the Church dependeth of vs alone. This is our office, this we take vpon vs, and this we profeſſe. And except we doe this, we doe nothing, we ſerue to no vſe. It is not enough to know I wot not what learning. The Diuels perhaps know more than any of vs all. It belongeth vnto a Paſtor not ſo much to haue learned many things, as to haue taught much. Let it ſhame vs, that the baſeſt kind of men, euen Coblers and Porters doe that which belongeth vnto them, and we which ought to giue light to all other are idle and doe nothing. For God would not haue vs idle bellies, but he would haue vs both be interpreters of his minde, miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, Atturnies of the people before the Lord of Sabaoth, the light of the world, Salt, Angels, and the Sonnes of GOD, and ſo to be called: And we are appointed to gouern, not dumbe Cattell, not wilde Beaſts, but the flocke of the Lord, but the Sons of God, but the brethren of Chriſt.

If any of theſe ſhall periſh through our default, his blood ſhall be required at our hands. If theſe things alone were ſtill ſet before vs, in our eies and minds, we would not ſo call from vs carelеſſly and vnadviſedly the ſafegard of our Brethren and of our ſelues, we would not ſo caſt from vs the blood of Chriſt.

There is no cauſe why any ſhould ſay: We ſpeake to them that are deafe, the people giue no eare, we labour for them which are vnthankefull, we prevaile not, we caſt that which is holy vnto Dogges, we giue Pearles to Swine. We know that otherwhile theſe things are truely ſpoken, and it grieueth me exceedingly, that they may be ſo truely ſpoken againſt thoſe that be Chriſtian men. Yet for all this, we may not therefore hold our peace, but ſpeake ſo much the oftener, ſo much the ſharper, ſo much the hotter. For looke how much the diſeaſe is more perillous, ſo much the more needeth there a Phyſition.

Neither can we iuſtly complaine of the peoples ſtubbornеſſe, while we our ſelues doe all the while nothing. Let vs doe our indeauour, and leaue the ſucceſſe vnto the Lord. Then ſhall they, if they be of ſo froward a minde, that they will not heare, die in their owne ſinne. But there is no cauſe why we ſhould be in deſpaire of the peoples ſaluation. God himſelfe huſbanded the Vine, which for Grapes brought out wilde Grapes. GOD himſelfe hath all the day long ſtretched out his hands to a rebellious and ouerthwart people. How oft hath Chriſt himſelfe ſaid: Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, how oft would I haue gathered together thy Children, as the henne gathereth together hir Chickens, whereas they turned away their eares and would not heare? This malady will eaſily be taken away, if the medicine therefore be vſed. Let vs bring forth the light, and God will open their eies: let vs beate at their eares, and God will giue them a heart of fleſh: Let vs giue the word, and God will giue the ſpirit: let vs plant and water, and God in due time will giue the increaſe. For as it is our duty to inſtruct the people with words, ſo it belongeth to God to ioyne vnto his words faith, and force. Such is the ſtrength of the word of God, that to worke nothing, or to profit none, it is not poſſible. Much will fall into the buſhes, into the beaten way, and among ſtones, yet ſome will fal into good ground and bring forth fruit. For looke as the raine commeth downe from heauen, and returneth not thither againe, but moiſtneth & watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth, and giueth seed to the sower, and bread to him that eateth: so my word, saith the Lord, which goeth forth out of my mouth, shall not returne empty vnto me, but shall doe whatsoeuer I will.

But because it is not enough to speake, let vs now consider that which in the second place I haue promised, namely, what is to be spoken. For some otherwhile speake, who had beene better haue held their peace, otherwhile they make a noise and cry out with great contention, speake to no purpose. Wherefore regard must be had, that we neither speake vnfruitfully ne yet hurtfully. For all things are not to be huddled out in a Sermon before the multitude. We must take care what the Religious silence of the people, what the reuerence of the place, what the greatnesse of our office doe require. The truth must be spoken, not lies: the Scriptures, not fables: the precepts of the highest God, and not the dreames of men: For religion is to be ordered not by our iudgement, but by the word of God. Whereinif we shall hearken to Moses, or to the Prophets, or the Apostles, or Christ, or the Father himselfe, we shall not much goe out of the way. For Moses, whatsoeuer was to be said or done in so great a wildernesse, when he led the people being banished and wandering, by a sauage and desert region, alwaies asked counsell at the Lord, he neuer brought them any thing of his owne head. The Prophets alwaies say, The word of the Lord, the vision of the Lord, the voice of the Lord: this saith the Lord, heare the Lord. I, saith Paul, haue receiued my Gospell not of man, neither by man: and againe; I know nothing but Iesus Christ, and the same crucified. And again, If an Angel from heauen shall teach another Gospel than that which you haue learned, let him be cursed. Christ saith, All things which I haue heard of my Father, I haue deliuered vnto you: and, preach you, saith he, not whatsoeuer shall come in your head, but the Gospell to all creatures: and, when as the Pharises and Saduces had moued the questions of diuorcement, and the resurrection of the dead vnto life, he neuer had recourse vnto the Rabbines, but alwaies to the word of the Lord. God the father crying from Heauen, This, saith he, is my dearely beloued Sonne: He saith not, Heare your Fathers, your Grandfathers, or your great Grandfathers: but he saith, Heare him, euen him. For our heauenly Father would haue his Sonne and his word to be taught, and to be beat into mens heads in all places. And certainly it may not be doubted of by any man, but that that, which the most excellent, most wise, and most louing father hath giuen vnto vs for our cause, is most excellent, most wise, and to our reasons most profitable. This is that riuer of water flowing abroad into life euerlasting. This is that flesh, this is, that blood of Iesus Christ, this is, that only both most delicate and most wholsome food of our soules, with this only sword the Diuell is ouercome, with this only stone Goliah is laid along, with this only maule the roughnesse and hardnesse of hearts is softned and ouercome. And were it not for this, neither could religion flourish, nor faith be confirmed, or the Church kept within the limits of her duty. Call to remembrance, I beseech you for the Lords sake, that as oft as the word of the Lord languished, how often and into how many grieuous errors, and how great a breaknecke euill did the whole people fall into, how oft dispised they the mightiest and most louing God their preseruer and Father, how oft worshipped they Astaroth, Beliall, the Sunne, the Mone, Calues and beasts, and turned away themselues from all religion and godlinesse, and put their whole hope and confidence in things most vaine and filthy? For when as euery one hatched out of his owne minde a religion and holinesse vnto himselfe, superstition and such a multitude of new gods increased so suddenly, that the Prophet was informed to crie out, Your Gods are in number as many as your Cities. For when as they had forsaken the truth, life, and religion, what remained, but that they should fall headlong into lies, into destruction, into vngodly worshippings? I had rather make mention of these old things, than to bring in examples which are fresh and in memory. There is none of vs that euer was so blind, that he saw not, or so blockish that he vnderstood not the calamities of former times. We haue far gone beyond, not only the superstition and vanity of the Iewes, but also of the Egyptians and Grecians. For when the authority of Councels, and the conspiracy of a few Bishops and Monkes, was placed aboue the Scriptures, when it was doubted whether the Romish Bishop were a man or a God, and whether he could sinne, when all things were referred to the constitutions of men, and nothing to the knowledge of Christ, when Sales of Pardons, Vowes, and Masses, were made openly and without all shame, when the Sacraments were miserably torne in peces, when the word of God was condemned of fraud and heresie, when nothing was left sound and pure from superstition, when error possessed all things, and the truth could not be heard, where then, or what Church of God was there? It was heresie in those daies, not that disagreed from the Scriptures, but from that which liked a few Bishops. For the Gospell was thrust into corners, nothing was left to the iudgement of Chriſt. Our gods were not then according to the number of our cities, but they were as many as we had ſtreetes, yea almoſt houſes. So were all things vtterlie out of frame, for that Religion depended not on the word of God, but on the will of man. Theſe horrible caſes, brethren, may warne vs, that we neuer vnadviſedly depart from the word of God. And thereof it is that all the Scriptures doe moue vs ſo often and ſo diligently, that we neither adde any thing to the word of God, nor take ought therefrom; nor that we bow to the right hand or the left. Neither would the Lord that we ſhould be Princes and Iudges, but meſſengers and miniſters of his word. For loke what ſerueth to our ſaluation, and vnto godlines, all that hath God himſelfe ſet downe in his lawes. For the holy Scripture (as Paul ſaith) inſpired by God, is profitable to doctrine, to reproue, to correction, to inſtruction, that the man of God may be perfect, inſtructed to euery good worke: that the man of God ſaith he, may be perfect and ſound, and as far as is requiſite either to godlineſſe or maners, that he ſhould in euery reſpect be perfectly furniſhed: and now I pray you what ſhould Gods Embaſſador bring forth vnto Gods people, rather than the word of God? He that is an Embaſſador in ciuill affaires, if perhaps he ſay any thing beſide that which is commanded him, he is accuſed that he hath not done his Embaſſade rightly, he is called to his triall, he is arraigned vpon life and death; and why doe not we with like fidelity handle the word of God? But tut tut, good God, tut tut ſecure a minde, my brethren, tut tut ſecure a minde be we of. And as though men alone could not be deceiued, ſo doe we hold, ſo doe we defend that alonely, which is come from our forefathers. There were among the Iewes many murtherers, thæues, and adulterers, and yet did not Chriſt enuey either more often or more bitterly againſt any, than againſt the Phariſeis and Scribes: You breake, ſaith he, the commandement of God for your owne traditions. In vaine do you worſhip me, teaching doctrines, and the precepts of men. They are blind guides of the blinde. Harlots and ſinners ſhall goe into the kingdome of God before you. How often, and with what words doth the Lord in the Prophets complaine of this? Be aſtoniſhed ye heauens, ſaith he: My people haue done two euils, they haue forſaken me the fountaine of liuing water, and haue digged vnto themſelues broken Ceſternes, which can hold no waters. What is Chaffe compared with Wheate? What is the rathneſſe of men compared with the eternall will of God? For Baſil doth ſay, that that man which dareth put to, or take away any thing from the Scriptures of God, is either a fooliſh Chriſtian, or a notable arrogant fellow. To put to the word of God the inuentions of men, what other thing may it ſeeme, than to mingle new wine not with old wine, but with wine that is dead, and with lees or dregges? and to ioyne light with darkneſſe, a wilde beaſt with a man, a man with God? My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor my waies are not your waies, ſaith the Lord: for loke how far the heauen is from the earth, ſo far are my waies from your waies, and my thoughts from your thoughts. Nay rather loke how far a man is diſtant from God, ſo far is the vnderſtanding of man diſtant from the word of God.

For although very much by the iudgement of all men is to be giuen to the Fathers, yet were they men, and alſo might erre. Truely, to ſpeake nothing elſe of them, they did oftentimes very ill agree among themſelues about very great and weighty matters. But the word of God is ſure, and firme, and certaine, and appointed for euery time. Peter would haue this kind of learning to be deliuered vnto the people in a Sermon. And he that will haue doings (herein) with the people, muſt firſt be inſtructed himſelfe with the word of God, that he may vtter the word as inſpired with an heauenly power. O if Peter were now aliue, what would he ſay, or rather what would he not ſay, ſeeing that religion, godlineſſe, the ſcriptures, are all palled into the inuentions and dreames of men? That is only in queſtion at theſe daies, whether the cuſtomes of men are rather to be retained, or the lawes of God: That alone hath moued theſe turmoiles, that hath ſtirred the whole world, whether more credit is to be giuen vnto a man, or vnto God. I know that theſe things ſeeme new to the moſt of you, and not to be beleeued: but put from you, I beſeech you, your affections, and that opinion of things which you haue already conceiued, and you ſhall well perceiue that I faine nothing for the times ſake, but that I ſpeake the thing it ſelfe. Chriſt hath ordained the holy Communion in remembrance of himſelfe. Men doe neither retaine any remembrance of Chriſt, nor yet Communion, but haue changed all the whole matter into a gay ſhew, and almoſt a ſtage play. Chriſt ſaith, Ye ſhall haue the poore alwaies with you, but me ye ſhall not haue alwaies: I leaue the world and goe to my Father: It is expedient for you that I goe away. And Chriſt ſpake this, not of his Godhead, wherewith he was equall to the Father, or of his heauenly nature, but of this body. Men ſay, that Chriſt neither hath with his body left the world, nor yet gone from hence to his father. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt is in heauen at the right hand of the Father,

Peter

Peter ſaith in the Acts of the Apoſtles, Heauen muſt hold him vntill the time that all things are reſtored: Men ſay, That the body of Chriſt is in heauen and in earth both at once, and is diſpearſed into an infinite multitude of places at one time. Paul ſaith, That Chriſt hath once entred into the holy places, and hath with one only ſacrifice, and one oblation, made perfect all things: Men ſay, that they can ſacrifice Chriſt himſelfe againe euery day, not only for remembrance ſake, but in very deede, and that in infinite places. Chriſt ſaith, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerue: Men worſhip the Euchariſt, alacke the while, being neither Lord nor God, but a Sacrament of the Lord, without authority of the Scriptures, or example of the Apoſtles, and that as God. For, by the liuing God I beſeech you, conſider, in your mindes brethren, who euer, I will not ſay of the Apoſtles, but of the holy Fathers hath either worſhipped the Sacrament himſelfe, or hath ſhewed it forth to be worſhipped of others? I ſee that I ſpeake theſe things not before the common ſort of men, but before them who are profoundly learned, I appeale to all your conſciences, I will vſe in this matter your owne teſtimonie. Chriſt hath commanded the Sacrament to be deliuered whole: Men haue torne the ſame after a miſerable manner. Chriſt willed that nothing ſhould be added to his Law: Men doe not onely adde many things, but the ſame they preferre before the word of God. But why ſhould I reckon vp more? This onely will I ſpeake, and that in a word, they which brought in Tranſubſtantiations, Maſſes, calling vpon Saints, ſole life, Purgatory, Images, Vowes, trifles, follies, babies, into the Church of God, haue deliuered new things, and which the Scriptures neuer heard of. Whatſoeuer they crie or creake, they bring not a iot out of the word of God. And theſe, as I haue ſaid, are the things wherewith the Church of God at theſe daies are diſquieted. Vpon theſe lieth the watch and ward of the Church. Theſe they honour inſtead of the Scriptures, and force them to the people inſtead of the word of God: vpon theſe men ſuppoſe their ſaluation, and the ſumme of religion to be grounded. And that which is much more grieuous, notwithſtanding at this preſent by the great goodneſſe of God, religion is reſtored almoſt to her former dignity and light, yet poore and pitifull ſoules, they ſet great ſtore by theſe things, they to them againe, and teach them, as though without them the Church could not be in ſafety. O if the word of the Lord might be heard, among ſo many clamours, and in ſo great a hurly burly: If we would ſuffer God himſelfe to ſit as Iudge in his owne caſe, the matter would be paſſed ouer with leſſe tumult a great deale, and more eaſily might we agree about the whole matter. Wherefore if all the worſhip of God, all godlineſſe, all religion, be to be ſought out of the word of God: If the inſtitutions of men haue miſerably peruerted all things in all times, let vs, my brethren, vnto whom the office of teaching is alotted, conſider how dangerous a thing it is to ſpeake more: and let all, who will be, and will haue themſelues accounted to be Chriſtians, remember how dangerous a thing it is to beleeue more. And if there be any of this whole number which hath giuen himſelfe to any other kind of life, yet let him conſider that theſe things belong vnto him, ſo that if he neither can, nor will teach, yet let him diligently and attentiuely heare him that ſpeaketh, and giue God thankes, that he hath happened on thoſe times, in which he may heare the word of God freely and purely. Let vs not be wedded too much to our owne wit: let vs not be wedded too much to the Fathers and Forefathers. Let vs not vnaduiſedly thinke that men are ſo luckily borne, that whatſoeuer they ſay, they cannot erre. When we ſhall be placed before that dreadfull iudgement ſeate, when all things ſhall burne, and the Angels of God ſhall tremble, to what Fathers, to what Decrées of our Forefathers ſhall we wretches then appeale? We ſhall then haue refuge to Chriſt alone, then ſhall we vſe the aide and word of Chriſt alone. Wherefore let vs not be of ſo ſecure a minde in ſo great a matter. Our life, our ſoule, our ſaluation, is the thing in hand. The heauenly Father offereth himſelfe vnto vs, and of his owne accord meeteth vs: Jeſus Chriſt crieth out, and calleth euery one of vs, Come vnto me all ye which are grieued and I will refreſh you. How blind be we if we ſee not, how blockiſh if we vnderſtand not, how miſerable if we run from this? Where ſhall the word of Chriſt be heard, if it cannot be heard among Chriſtians? If it cannot be heard among Chriſtians where ſhall it be heard? Let vs once yet open brethren, let vs open our eies, that it may not be ſpoken againſt our ſtubbornneſſe, Therefore you heare not, becauſe you be not of God: and that that ſaying of Eſayas be not conuenientlie applied againſt vs, The heart of this people is waxen groſſe, and they haue hardly heard with their eares, and they haue cloſed their eies, leſt they ſhould at any time ſee with their eies, and heare with their eares, and vnderſtand with their heart, and they ſhould be conuerted, and I ſhould heale them. And what I ſhould ſpeake more before Chriſtian men and the children of God, concerning the word of God, I ſee not.

Now

Now remaineth that which was put in the laſt part, namely, how the Scriptures are to be taught. For not only wiſdome and fidelity, but alſo wiſdome and foreſight is to be vſed. Therefore ſaith Peter, let him not ſpeake only, but let him ſpeake as the wordes of God. Nor yet is it ſufficient to profeſſe onely, and outwardly to ſhew, that it is the word of God which we teach, and with a faire face and earneſt countenance ſing, The word of the Lord: For the Iewes and Turkes and falſe Prophets doe ſo, they all cry out that Chriſt is theirs, and they all reſtraine true religion (as belonging) vnto themſelues. The Phariſeis and Scribes of theſe daies, when they confirme their owne inuentions, and referre all things to the Apoſtles as their authors, and do weeſt the word of God, yet do they crie nothing either oftner, or more importunatly, than, The word of the Lord. But Chriſt hath not taught diſſimulation and hypocriſie. He rather teacheth this, that Paſtors may haue in minde that they repreſent the perſon of Chriſt: that they being induced through the greatneſſe and worthineſſe of the thing it ſelfe, may ſo reuerently doe their office that all men may perceiue, that it is a heauenly buſineſſe which they haue taken vpon them. For the image of God himſelfe muſt ſhine in him that is the miniſter of God. And if the Apoſtles had not ſo vſed themſelues, they had neuer laid the foundations of religion: there would neuer any haue left their altars, their Sacrifices, their Fires, and their gods themſelues, to haue bene of the opinion of a few fiſhers. They counted all that they had as nothing, in compariſon of Chriſt Ieſus. When they were taunted, they taunted not againe, when they were condemned to Priſons, and Fires, they neuer ceaſed to giue thanks, they alwaies greatly reioyced, for that they were afflicted with all maner of punihments for Chriſt his ſake. There was in them ſuch vprightneſſe of heart, ſuch modeſty, ſuch vertue, that whatſoeuer they ſaid, others were aſhamed to ſpeake againſt it. Euen ſo brethren our life ought to ſhine, that as oft as we ſpeake, we may ſeeme to ſpeake the wordes of GOD. For wee are the ſalt of the earth, wee are the light of the world, wee are that Citie ſet vpon the Hill, all mens eies are faſtned on vs: whatſoeuer wee doe, ſtraightway example is taken to doe the like. It is a burden of great difficulty and weight that we haue taken vpon vs. Which if we would all well weigh, the courſe of the Goſpell would not bee ſo hindered, the word of God would not bee ſo much neglected. For when as wee profeſſe God with our mouth, but deny him with our deedes, wee fray away the vnlearned multitude by our example from religion, and the thing that of all other is moſt diuine, wee defile, not with vnpure hands, but with vnpure manners. So for our ſakes is godlines deſpiſed, for our ſake is the truth contemned, for our ſake is the Maieſty of God empaired. Theſe things, brethren, are diligently to be conſidered, and earneſtly to be regarded of vs. For if we liue filthily and wickedly, and bring into the Pulpit nothing but a rolling of the tongue and impudency, whatſoeuer wee ſpeake, wee ſpeake it not, either as it ſhould, or elſe as the wordes of God. But to the end the word of the Lord may be handled according to the worthineſſe thereof, two things principally are by vs to be taken heed of: the one, that we be not weakned nor feebled by feare: the other, that out of the Goſpel we reape no lot or pece of praiſe vnto our ſelues. A Preachers minde muſt be prepared and diligently fenſed againſt either of theſe. For the Goſpell and the word of God, except it be ſtiffly and manfully vpholden and maintained, neither will ſeeme the Goſpel, nor the word of God. For error is fearefull, baſe, and quaking, it feareth all things, it dreadeth all things, it flieth light, and light: but the truth, and the truth of the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt, neuer abaſeth it ſelfe, neuer flattereth any, diſſembleth nothing, fayneth nothing, is vnfearefull, free, bold to ſhew her face, and high. Wherefore as long as we ſpeake the truth, let not the force or authority of any man make vs afraid Let vs call to minde that we are the Meſſengers and Embaſſadors of God: Let vs call to minde that God hath giuen vs power to ſpeake. Of what courage doth not Chriſt make vs, when he promiſeth that he will be the reuenger of the iniury done vnto vs? He, ſaith he, that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me, he which hurteth you, hurteth the light of mine eye: wherefore let vs ſpeake, not diſſemblingly, not darkly, as did the Phariſeis, but freely and plainly as hauing authority, as meete it is that the words of God ſhould be vttered. But neuertheleſſe moderation muſt be vſed, that we doe not vnſeaſonably touch or ſpot the good name and fame of others; for when we ſhall ſeeme to taunt or raile, and to handle our owne cauſe, rather than to teach the word of the Lord. But it becommeth the ſeruant of the Lord to be modeſt and circumſpect, not to blab out any thing raſhly or cockiſhly, leſt we may ſeeme to ſpeake not out of the holy Pulpit, but out of the Cart: neither yet to haue cited the Goſpell, but to haue brought vp againe the old maner of Commodies. The next thing is, that a Preacher haue not too great a conceit of himſelfe, but that he think that that function and office happned vnto him from aboue from God, that he ſhould diſcharge his duty diligently, and with very great feare, and that he ſhould thinke that he is occupied not in his owne businesse but in Gods businesse. So Paul saith, he is nothing: Iohn trieth, that he is vnworthy to pull off the shooes of Messias: And therefore to abate arrogancy, they are in the holy Scriptures called not Princes, not Magistrates, not Rulers, not Kings, but Stewards, Bailifes, Preachers or Criers, Ministers, Seruants, to the end that for as much as we doe this geare in the behalfe of another, we should not grow proud for another bodies praise. For the Lord hath not therefore committed his talent vnto vs, that we should conuert it to our owne commodity. For he would not haue vs Preachers and Criers of our owne wit and skill, but of his will, neither doe we for any other cause carry about this treasure in Earthen vessels, than for that it should be the brightnesse and cleare light of the power of God.

I will not stay you with any more words. Ye haue heard that a Preacher must speake both oft, and out of the word of God, and also grauely and modestly. We brethren, either are Preachers, or will be Preachers: let vs beare in minde that these things belong to vs, and that S. Peter saith to vs, He that speaketh, let him speake as the words of God. There is nede not only of our diligence, but also of prudency and fidelity; wherefore whatsoeuer we are able by nature, whatsoeuer by Counsell, whatsoeuer by wit and cunning, let vs bestow it all to serue the Church of God. We are the Stewards of the house of God, let vs not dissipate and scatter the houshold of God. If we be the Apostles of God, let vs shew Apostolike minds. If we be the brethren of Christ, let vs beare Christ, let vs fede his Lambs, let vs feed his sheepe, let vs goe, let vs preach, let vs teach. The vniuersall world seemeth a good while since to trauaile of Christ, let vs cast about our eyes brethren. How great is the haruest euery where, how few be the Reapers? And this I speake vnto them of whom there is some good hope. If there be any that laugh at these things, or mocke them, why should I hope that they will heare me, who will not heare Christ himselfe? Let the calamity of our brethren moue vs, let the curse of God moue vs [namely] Cursed is he that doth the worke of the Lord negligently: let that most grieuous threatning moue vs (namely) Their blod will I require at thy hand. Let vs prepare our selues to that most sweete voice and speech of Christ (namely) Well done seruant, Goe in. Let vs speake in season and out of season, let vs speake the word of the Lord, let vs speake as the words of the Lord, that Gods praise may be set forth in all things by Iesus Christ,

for euer and euer
Amen.

FINIS.

THE TRVE COPIES OF THE LETTERS BETVVEENE THE REVEREND FATHER IN GOD Iohn Bishop of Sarum, and D. Cole, vpon occasion of a Sermon that the said Bishop preached before the Queenes Maiesty, and hir most honorable Counsel.

I Trust I shall not neede many words to make my entry with you. You haue made so large and gentle an offer, that my request being employed within the compasse of the same, shall haue an answer I hope to my comfort.

Where in these Articles you seeme very resolute, and as it is thought so well armed, that you haue wherewith to perswade any reasonable man to be in them of your opinion: may it therefore like you to send me the chiefe places, in these matters not written, (for that were to much paines for you) but noted, or, as they learned it, quoted, which and where they be: And I promise you, by the faith I beare to God, I shall yeld so far as you shall giue me cause.

I would wish it might please you to write herein againe, for talke will not so well further that you should herein intend. If happily it shall like you to write any more than the places, which ye account will thoroughly proue your opinion, I pray you doe it rather Dialecticè, than otherwise. For the weight of these matters more requireth learning than words.

If the places that you haue in these Articles be but such as are already answered by learned men on our side, or but such as Caluine, Bucer, or other of the Protestants haue laid for themselues, then I trust you will lay more weight or reason to them. For such as they be, in them, I haue already seene. I repute them perase somewhat able to doe with yong folke, or the simple and vnlearned people: other, I weene, weigh them no better than they be worthy.

Yet one thing more I long much to be answered in, why ye rather offer both in your Sermon yesterday in the Court, and at all other times at Paules Crosse, to dispute in these foure points, than in the chiefe matters that lie in question betwixt the Church of Rome and the Protestants. It seemeth to me far the nearer way to compasse that you would so faine win, if ye began not with such matters which we deny not, but a Generall Councell might take order that they should be practised as ye would haue it. Mary the Article of the presence of Christs body and blood in the Sacrament: the Article of our Iustification: the value of a Christian mans good workes: whether the Masse vsed in the Church of Rome be tolerable yea or no: yea, whether that the Masse be not a very sacrifice acceptable to God indeede, and good both for the quicke and the dead: whether any Scripture forbiddeth a man to desire the blessed Apostles and Martyrs in heauen to pray for vs: whether it be lawfull to honour them: and whether it be lawfull for vs, and good for them, to pray for all Christian soules; I weene if ye had the vpper hand but in one of these questions, the world might well thinke we were finally to be truſted in all the reſt. For we make a plat and plaine anſwer to them, without if, or and. So doe we not, whether the Seruice ought to be in Engliſh or not. Or, whether the people ought to receiue in both kinds or no. Or, whether any priuate Maſſe ought to be ſaid in the Church or no.

I haue ieoparded to wade thus farre with you, for no worſe purpoſe than I haue vttered at the beginning. For all truth, if you ſhew me good cauſe why, I ſhall yeld, as I haue promiſed.

Mine aduenture in this caſe ſhall be ſo taken, I truſt, as no aduantage be ſought againſt me, as for breach of any part of my duty otherway or other. Wherefore I pray you conſtrue my doings by the meaning I had in them.

I haue here ſet in writing the queſtions that you haue ſo gently offered to be reaſonable, in ſuch ſort in effect as they were reported from your mouth to me.

1. Whether there remaine any ſubſtance of Bread and Wine after the conſecration done as the Church appointeth?

2. Whether it be tolerable that the people ſhould receiue vnder one kinde or no?

3. Whether it be any offence before God that the common Seruice ſhould be ſaid in a tongue that the people vnderſtandeth not?

4. Whether it be any offence before God, a Prieſt to ſay Maſſe, vnleſſe one or other receaue with him.

I Perceiue by your Letters that ye were not preſent your ſelfe at my Sermon in the Court, but onely heard of it by the report of others. And where you deſire to be anſwered in certaine points touching the ſame, conſidering both my calling, and alſo the place where I ſpake, I ſtand in doubt whether I may ſafely without further licence giue a rekening of my doctrine, being vttered before the Prince, the Counſell, and the whole State of the Realme, ſpecially to a Subiect, and ſuch a Subiect, as miſliketh all Sermons, and yet will not vouchſafe to heare one. Notwithſtanding, forasmuch as I am perſwaded that you charitably deſire to be reſolued, I can alſo charitably be contented, as a friend with a friend, or a ſcholar with a ſcholar, to confer with you herein, reſeruing alway my former proteſtation.

Touching the quotations of the ſpeciall points and grounds that I ſtand vpon, if you had heard the maner of my doctrine your ſelfe, I beleeue you would not haue required them. For your reporter hath altered the whole forme of my ſpeaking.

For I ſtood only vpon the negatiue, which, as you ſaid, when time was, in the diſputation that ſhould haue beene at Weſtminſter, is not poſſible to be proued.

My offer was this, That if any one of all thoſe things that I then rehearſed, could be proued of your ſide by any ſufficient authority either of the Scriptures, or of the old Doctours, or of the auncient Councels, or by any one allowed example of the Primitiue Church, that then I would be content to yeld vnto you.

I ſay you haue none of all thoſe helps, nor Scriptures, nor Councels, nor Doctours, nor any other antiquity: and this is the Negatiue. Now it ſtandeth you vpon to proue but one affirmatiue to the contrary, and ſo to require my promiſe.

The articles that I ſaid could not be proued of your part were theſe:

That it cannot appeare by any authority, either of the old Doctours, or of the ancient Councels, that there was any priuate Maſſe in the whole Church of Chriſt at that time.

Or, that there was then any Communion miniſtred in the Church to the people vnder one kinde only.

Or, that the common prayers were then pronounced in a ſtrange tongue, that the people vnderſtood not.

Or, that the Biſhop of Rome was then called Vniuerſalis Epiſcopus, or Caput Vniuerſalis Eccleſiæ, an vniuerſall Biſhop of the whole world, or elſe the head of the vniuerſall Church.

Or

Or, that the people was then taught to beleeue, that in the Sacrament after the Conſecration, the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine departeth away, and that there remaineth nothing els but only the accidents of Bread and Wine.

Or, that then it was thought lawfull to ſay, ten, twentie, or thirtie Maſſes in one Church in one day.

Or, that the people was then forbidden to pray, or to reade the Scriptures in their mother tong.

And other mo Articles a great number I reckened vp then at Pauls Croſſe, which it were long now to rehearſe.

And if any one of all theſe Articles can be ſufficientlie proued by ſuch authoritie as I haue ſaid, and as ye haue borne the people in hand ye can proue them by, I am well content to ſtand to my promiſe.

If you ſay, theſe are but ſmall matters in compariſon of others: yet as ſmall as ye would haue them ſeeme now, ſome men haue felt no ſmall ſmart for them.

And where you maruell why I began not rather with the Reall preſence, with Juſtification, with the value of good works, with the Sacrifice of the Maſſe, with praying vnto Saincts, with praying for the dead: although indeed it may ſeeme very much for me to be appointed by others what order I ſhould take in my preaching; yet to anſwer the truth, why I paſſed by theſe matters at the firſt, and rather began with other, the cauſe was, not for that I doubted in any of the premiſſes, but only for that I knew the matters, that you moue queſtion of, might at leaſt haue ſome colour or ſhadow of the Doctours. But I thought it beſt to make my entrie with ſuch things, as wherein I was well aſſured ye ſhould be able to finde not ſo much as any colour at all. And if ye will firſt grant this to be true, as I beleeue you will, notwithſtanding the people haue been long told the contrary, afterward I am well content to trauell with you farther in the reſt.

Further, I maruell much ye write, that touching a priuate Maſſe, or the receiuing vnder one kinde, or the common prayers to be had in an vnknowen tongue, or otherwiſe, ye are not reſolued to anſwer preciſely without if, or and. For where ye ſay ye are content to be ordered herein by a Generall Councell: firſt I would know what Generall Councell of any antiquitie euer decreed any of thoſe matters againſt vs; vnleſſe perhaps ye will ſay the Councell of Conſtance, that of late yeeres pronounced openly againſt Chriſt himſelfe, and all the Primitiue Church, that it ſhould be a Schiſmaticall diſorder, if the people ſhould communicate vnder both kinds. And hauing no ancient Councell, that euer was, to alledge in theſe matters, I maruell how ye can iuſtlie ſay, ye are altogether ordered by Councels. And yet farther would I learne, what warrant any Generall Councell can haue to decree any thing contrarie to Gods word.

Where ye ſay, ye haue ſeene Maſter Caluins, and Maſter Bucers reaſons, and haue found them very weake, and not able to moue any other than yong folke, and vnlearned people; me thinketh that anſwer is ſo common and ſo generall, that it may ſerue our turne as well as yours. For we haue read Coclæus, Eckius, Pigghius, Bunderius, and ſuch others, and haue found ſuch reaſons and anſwers in them, as I beleeue you your ſelfe are not much moued withall.

Where you ſay, that Maſter Caluins and Maſter Bucers reaſons haue beene anſwered; I grant indeed they haue beene anſwered, but not ſo much by learning, as by other meanes, as you know. But your reaſons haue beene anſwered by reaſon ſufficientlie, as now, God be thanked, the whole world knoweth.

But to conclude, as I began, I anſwer, that in theſe Articles I hold only the negatiue, and therefore I looke how you will be able to affirme the contrarie, and that, as I ſaid afore, by ſufficient authoritie. Which if ye do not, you ſhal cauſe me the more to be reſolued, and others to ſtand the more in doubt of the reſt of your learning. 20. Martij.

Ioh. Sarum.

Doctour Coles ſecond Letter to the Biſhop of Sarum.

I Shall for this time paſſe ouer all other parts of your anſwer. and renue my former ſute vnto you, in moſt heartie and humble wiſe, deſiring you to giue eare vnto me in the ſame.

Remember for Gods ſake, how I began with you, not for other intent than to be inſtructed, why I ſhould be accounted obſtinate for ſtanding in contrarie opinion with you. Now when I weigh your anſwer ſent me lately in writing, I thinke you do

miſtake my doing, ſuppoſing that the ſame commeth not of ſuch ground as it doth. My Letter ſent to you declareth in my firſt entrie with you what my meaning was, and whereof it proceeded. I heard by report of many, that both at Paules and other where, ye openly wiſhed, that one man thinking otherwiſe than you do, would charitablie talke with you, whom you would with like charitie anſwer, and indeuour to ſatiſfie. And although you had not ſo proteſted, yet is it the part of a common and puplike preacher to performe no leſſe when occaſion is giuen. With which cauſe I was moued to write as I did, intending, if I might, to learne of you that I knew not, and that could by learning perſwade a man not wholly vnlearned to yeld thereunto, according to the words of my writing, and proteſtation.

But I finde not this meaning in your writing ſent vnto me, wherein you ſhew your ſelfe diſpoſed only to defend your teaching, as confeſſed and taken for true, and not to giue any account thereof, or to ſatiſfie any that doubteth. And there you bid me alleage to the contrarie and diſproue your ſaying, which neither reaſon, nor law can driue me to. Reaſon, becauſe the doctrine being yet doubfull, and ſtanding vpon proſe, the teacher ſhould firſt approue it vnto ſuch as doubt. Which the cuſtome of learning in all Vniuerſities proueth true: Where the opponent, when the matter is denied, as your doctrine is by vs, alleageth for that part which he would haue ſeeme true. And you take on you to diſproue that doctrine, which long time hath beene receiued. Euermore when any man profeſſed a reformation of doctrine, as you do, the reformer hath euer alleaged cauſes why they ſo did, and ſo take in hand to proue that they taught, againſt ſuch as did & would think otherwiſe.

But becauſe you are a Biſhop, and ſpake in ſuch an audience, ye doubt whether you ought to ſhew cauſe of that you teach or no, and therefore ye ſpake by proteſtation. Whereat I do much maruell: for the perſon or the place maketh no difference who ſhould proue or diſproue. The greater perſonage you beare, the leſſe cauſe haue ye to be put to anſwer. You haue not yet, I weene, all forgot the trade in Oxford, which you and I were brought vp in. In Scholes of Philoſophie a Maſter of Art is the higheſt degree; where the Maſter is rather put to oppoſe, than to anſwer. And likewiſe in Diuinitie in ordinarie diſputation, the Doctour oppoſeth, the meaner man anſwereth. And what reaſon ſhould leade you to thinke that a Biſhop ſhould not rather ſhew cauſe of that he teacheth, than any other? Saint Paul requireth in a Biſhop that he be διδακτικὸς, a man before all other meete and able to teach. And it is a rule in Biſhops, that they be readie to giue an account of their beliefe. And many reaſons are there why it ſhould be ſo.

You can not ſay I am an Heritike, or obſtinate, and thereby put me off. For I offer to yeld in all that ye proue to me. I ſtand in place and caſe to learne, and you a man appointed to teach. I come for no other purpoſe but to learne more than I know. I come to you for counſell in thoſe points ye ſeeme very reſolute in: I meane you no harme nor guile. Caſt me not off for Gods loue, as men do beggers, when they mind to do them no good.

If ye haue Scriptures, Councels, &c. with you, I deſire to know them. If ye haue none, let me and my fellowes alone in your Sermons. We trouble you not, nor giue you cauſe to deale ſo vnmercifull with vs, as ſome of your ſide doe. as though we were the moſt vnreaſonable men in the world.

By lawe vpon good grounds no man ſhould be put to reaſon where matters are once agreed on. I and my fellowes are in bands to auoid ſuch kinde of reaſoning as ye would put me to. Wherein wiſe men ſee, when ye openly prouoke vs to diſproue that ye teach, ye fare as if you ſhould ſay to one that is bound hand and foote, Come ſtrike me and thou dareſt. We are, as I ſaid, in place of learners, and ye in place to teach. We are defendants, and ye the plaintiffes. We continue in the faith we profeſſed ſith our Baptiſme, ye pretend a change in the ſame. We haue with vs an Apoſtolicall Church, ye haue none yet approued. We make no innouation: for, In rebus nouis conſtituendis, ſaieth the law, euidens debet eſſe vtilitas: and all new attempts are to be ſuſpected.

Ye ſeeme to miſlike in maner all that hitherto hath beene receiued. But ye ſay, ye bring vs againe to the Primitiue Church. It is a foule fall in reaſoning, to bring that for proſe which lieth yet in queſtion, or plainly denied. We are in poſſeſſion, ye come to put vs from it. Ye meane to draw vs to you: we deſire to know cauſe why. What reaſon leadeth you to put a negatiue in queſtion thereby to grieue your aduerſarie (yet haue you none of me, for I ſeeke on you to be taught) where in lawe a perſon aſſaulted, can be put to no more but to defend. Where a negatiue implieth in it a yea, or affirmation, there the plaintiffe is put to his proſe. But I proteſt once againe, I come not to diſpute, but to learne.

You will happilie ſay, that both our ſide and yours hath alreadie ſaid euen ſo much in the matters that be in queſtion betwixt vs, that as ye can ſay no more for your part then hath bene said already, no more can we neither, and therefore as good neuer a whit as neuer the better. If the reasons that Caluin, Bucer, and other Protestants doe make, can not mone you, what auaileth any more talke? If the case be such indeed, that neither part can go further, but alleg saie that maketh for either part, then either let both parts let other alone, vntill such a generall Councell be assembled as ye will agree to stand by, which will not be I trow whiles I liue, nor seuen yeares after for ought I se yet. And yet I se other folke thinke that not reasonable, because the chiefest points we striue on are already determined.

And here it boteth not to say as ye doe of the Councell of Constance slanderously, till ye had proued that ye say. I am somewhat bold with you in this terme; but pardon me I pray you, this case requireth the same, It boteth not, I say, to say the Church hath walked in blindnesse, so as ye make none account of such determination. Remember ye haue not yet proued the errour of one generall Councell.

If it be as you say, all is said that can be; then you and I now should doe well to weigh the reasons of both sides. Here if ye say, what weights or balance will ye weigh them by; let vs hardly doe herein as men doe, when the question is, which of two pieces of gold or two pieces of cloth is best; then they take a fine piece of gold or cloth, and that that goeth nearest the best, that ought to be so taken for best. Let you and me weigh your mens reasons and ours by the Fathers weights and balance, and se who reasoneth most like S. Augustine, S. Basil, S. Cyprian, Tertullian, Irenæus, and Dionysius, the Councels, and such other weights fit for that purpose.

Thus we se there is yet good cause enough, why men may soberly learne one of another. And if it misfortune that for lacke of light we cannot agree which ballance weigheth heauiest, let vs borow eies of our neighbours. And if ye begin handsomly with me, I mistrust not but men shall at length get more liberty for so good a purpose, when good meaning is well knowen.

By this ye se I meane no guile, nor attempt no new practise. If ye refuse me at this request, for se what may be thought. You are not all without enemies pardy. Some will perchase construe yee refuse Conscientia imbecillitatis, &c.

Well, if ye send word ye are at a point, and will goe no further, then I pray you that of all this incounter there grow no farther breach of amity, or harme otherwaies. I meane and deale plainly, and trust vpon your open promise to goe harmeles againe from you, as I began. Here repeating againe my former protestation, that I am not nor will be against any Article that learning or reason can shew I ought to beleue, being ready without malice to heare and take what may be alleaged to driue me to that ye teach, & desiring you herewithall to construe my sayings by the intent I had in them, and also to tender my sute, I shall here make an end, and trouble you no further, vnlesse I se more comfort at your hand.

I had once made ready to be sent you another answer, which vpon better aduise I thought good to stay. I meant in both one thing, but my first was some deale sower, and would haue bene as bitter as a medicine, or, in time of Lent, penance. I striue with nature, the lesse to offend you: and so I trust you se cause to forgiue me, if in any part of my writing I seeme ouer eager.

24. Martij. Henricus Cole.

The Answer of IOHN Bishop of Sarum vnto Doctor Coles second Letter.

IN your second Letters I finde many words to little purpose. It had bene better for you to haue alleaged one sufficient authority, whereby I might haue learned that I looked for.

For in my Sermon at Pauls and els where, I required you to bring forth on your part either some Scripture, or some old Doctour, or some ancient Councell, or els some allowed example of the Primitiue Church. For these are good grounds to build vpon, And I would haue marueiled that you brought nothing all this while, sauing that I knew ye had nothing to bring.

But now forasmuch as you seeke shifts, and will come to answer, I count him vnwise that knoweth not your meaning.

Ye aske why ye should be called obstinate. Doubtlesse I haue a better opinion of you, and trust ye be not so. But if a man withstand an open truth, hauing nothing wherwith to defend himſelfe, I remit him to your owne iudgement, whether he may be called obſtinate or no.

F You put me in remembrance of mine office, that forasmuch as I am a Biſhop, I ſhould be ἀδιάπτωτος, that is, ready to yeld account of ſuch things as I teach: I thanke God, ſo I doe, and haue done hitherto to my power, both priuately and openly.

G But if this be my duty, and required at my hands, what priuiledge haue you, that you onely may not allow one peece ſentence to the confirmation of your learning?

H You would haue men thinke I flie anſwering, becauſe I am a Biſhop. This in Logike is called Paralogiſmus, à non cauſa, vt cauſa.

I I alleaged the place and audience where I ſpake, and not only mine office, for that I thought it might appeare ſome want of diſcretion to call that doctrine into queſtion which I knew was grounded vpon Gods word, and authoriſed and ſet forth by the Queenes Maieſty, and by the aſſent of the whole Realme.

K But as touching my calling, I am not onely ready to anſwer any man in any thing that I profeſſe, but alſo vpon ſufficient allegation, as I haue promiſed, very well content to yeld vnto you.

L But I beſeech you, what reaſon of your faith in theſe matters gaue you ſometime when ye were in place? Scriptures, Doctours, Councels ye had none, as it now appeareth by your ſilence.

M Therefore the ground of your perſwaſion muſt then needs be, Nos habemus legem, & ſecundùm legem, &c.

N You know what followeth: for as truely as God is God, if ye would haue vouchſafed to follow either the Scriptures, or the ancient Doctours, and Councels, ye would neuer haue reſtored againe the Supremacie of Rome after it was once abolished, or the priuate Maſſe, or the Communion vnderone kinde, &c.

It greeueth you that I ſhould reſt vpon the negatiue, and ſo put you to your proofes.

O Wherein notwithſtanding ye alleage againſt me the cuſtome of the Scholes: yet ye know, Chriſt vſed the ſame kinde of reaſoning in his Schole. As when he ſaid to the Phariſies, Hoc Abraham non fecit, This thing Abraham neuer did. And againe, when he anſwered them in the caſe of Matrimonie, A principio non fuit ſic, It was not ſo from the beginning: he ſtood only vpon the negatiue. Wherein if the Phariſies had béene able to proue but one affirmatiue, either that Abraham had done ſo, or that the law of diuorce had béen ſo from the beginning, Chriſt with his negatiue might ſone haue béen confounded.

Euen ſo, when the Biſhop of Conſtantinople had taken vpon him to be called the vniuerſall Biſhop of the whole Church, which title afterward the Biſhop of Rome began to vſurp to himſelfe, and for the maintenance of the ſame had often times diſquieted and ſhaken the whole world; but when the Biſhop of Conſtantinople firſt began to vſe this ſtile, Gregory béeing then the Biſhop of Rome confounded him only with the negatiue:

P Nemo, ſaid he, deceſſorum meorum hoc profano vocabulo vti voluit; None of my predeceſſors would euer vſe this vnchriſtianlike and leaud name. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 80. And againe, Epiſt. 92. Sancti ante legem, Sancti in lege, Sancti ſub gratia, omnes perficientes Corpus Domini in membris ſunt conſtituti. At nemo ſe vniuerſalem dici voluit. The holie men before the law, the holie men vnder the law, the holie men vnder the grace of the Goſpel, all together making vp one bodie of the Lord, are placed amongſt his members: but none of them would euer ſuffer himſelfe to be called vniuerſall.

I haue choſen eſpeciallie theſe examples, becauſe they ſéeme to ſerue me to double purpoſe. Thus Gregory reaſoned then as we do now, only vpon negatiue: and if then the Biſhop of Conſtantinople had béene able to proue but one affirmatiue, that any Biſhop of Rome aforetime had vſed that ſtile, or that euer any man, either before the Law, or vnder the Law, or vnder the Goſpel, had ſuffred himſelfe to be called vniuerſall Biſhop, then had Gregory béene confounded.

Q But as touching the cuſtome of the Schooles, I truſt ye haue not yet forgotten, that Ariſtotle giueth order to the opponent in many caſes to require an inſtant; as I do now at your hand. And what is that els, but in the denial to defend the negatiue, and to driue the aduerſarie to auoch the affirmatiue? But that will ye not do, and ye know why, although ye diſſemble it. But ſoner ye require to ſée our grounds.

R And what better ground can we haue on our ſide, then that Doctor Cole, the chiefeſt man on the other ſide, can finde no ground to ſtand againſt vs?

S Ye that will make any innouation, ſay you, muſt giue a reaſon of his doings. O maſter Doctour, this reaſon fighteth moſt againſt your ſelfe: for you haue miſliked and put away the moſt part of the order of the primitiue church, and yet ye neuer gaue any good reaſon of your doings.

T You ſay you are in poſſeſſion. No, ye were ſometimes, you are not now. And when you were, ye had no right title nor good euidence, no more than they that ſometimes ſate in Moſes chaire, or they that ſaid, Noſtrum filij Abraham, We are the children of Abraham, and thereby claimed their poſſeſſion. Therefore ye were poſſeſſores male fidei, and for that cauſe ye are now iuſtly remoued.

V Now if ye thinke ye haue wrong, ſhew your euidence out of the Doctours, the Councels, or Scriptures, that ye may haue your right and reentry. I require you to no great paine, one good ſentence ſhall be ſufficient.

Aa You would haue your priuate Maſſe, the Biſhop of Romes Supremacy, the Common prayer in an vnknowen tongue: and for the defence of the ſame, ye haue made no ſmall adoe. Me thinketh it reaſonable ye bring ſome one authority beſide your owne, to auouch the ſame withall. Ye haue made the vnlearned people beleeue ye had all the Doctours, all the Councels, and fiftene hundred yeres on your ſide. For your credits ſake let not all theſe great vaunts come to naught.

Bb Where ye ſay ye are in place of a learner, and gladly come to be taught, you muſt pardon me, it ſeemeth very hard to beleeue. For if you were deſirous to learne, as you would ſeeme, ye would come to the Church, ye would reſort to the Leſſons, ye would abide to heare a Sermon: for theſe are the Scholes if a man liſt to learne: It is a token the Scholar paſſeth little for his Booke, that will neuer be brought to Schole.

Cc Ye deſire ye may not be put off, but that your ſuts may be conſidered. And yet this halfe yeere long I haue deſired of you, and of your breathren, but one ſentence; and ſtill, I know not how, I am caſt off, and can get nothing at your hands.

Dd You call for the ſpeciall proues of our doctrine, which would require a whole Booke, whereas if you of your part could vouchſafe to bring but two lines, the whole matter were concluded.

Ee Yet leſt I ſhould ſeeme to flie reckoning as ye do, or to follow you in diſcourteſie, I will performe ſome part of your requeſt, although indeed it be vnreaſonable.

Ff Againſt your new deuice of Tranſubſtantiation, beſides many others whom I will now paſſe by, ye haue the old Father and Doctour Gelaſius, whoſe iudgement I beleeue ye will regard the more, becauſe he was ſometime Biſhop of Rome, which ſee, as you haue taught, can neuer erre.

Gg And is alleaged in the Decrees: his words be plaine: Non deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia panis, & natura vini; It leaueth not to be the ſubſtance of bread, and the nature of wine.

Hh But to auoid this authority, ſome men of your ſide haue bene forced to expound theſe words in this ſort: Non deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia, hoc eſt, non deſinit eſſe accidens; It leaueth not to be the ſubſtance of bread, that is to ſay, it leaueth not to be the accidence, or the forme, or the ſhape of bread. A very miſerable ſhift.

Ii Euen as right as the Scholy expounded the text, Diſt. 4. Statuimus, id eſt, abrogamus. Yet Doctour Smith of Oxford toke a wiſer way: for his anſwer is, that Gelaſius neuer wrat thoſe words, and that they hang not together, and that there is no ſence nor reaſon in them.

Kk Here haue you, that after the conſecration there remaineth the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine.

Ll Now bring ye but one Doctour that will ſay as ye ſay, that there remaineth only the accidents, or ſhapes of bread and wine, and I will yeld.

Mm As touching a priuate Maſſe, Gregory ſaith in his Dialogues, that before the time of the Communion, the Deacon was wont in his time to cry vnto the people, Qui non communicat, locum cedat alteri; Who ſo will not receiue the Communion, let him depart and giue place to others.

Nn To breake the ordinance of Chriſt, and to communicate vnder one kind only, your own Doctor Gelaſius calleth it Sacrilegium. And Theophilus Alexandrinus ſaith: Si Chriſtus mortuus fuiſſet pro Diabolo, non negaretur illi poculum ſanguinis; If Chriſt had died for the Diuell, the cup of the blod ſhould not be denied him.

Oo That the common praiers were vſed in ỹ common tongue, you haue S. Baſil, S. Hierome, S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Ambroſe, & the Emperor Iuſtinian: the places be knowen.

Pp You ſee I diſaduantage my ſelfe of many things that might be ſpoken, for at this preſent I haue no leiſure to write Bookes.

Qq Now muſt I néeds likewiſe deſire you, forasmuch as I haue followed your mind ſo far, either to bring me one old Doctour of your ſide, or els to giue vs leaue to thinke as the truth is, ye haue none to bring.

You deſire vs to leaue talking againſt you, and no more to deale ſo vnmercifully with you in the Pulpits.

Rr O maſter Doctour, call you this vnmercifull dealing? when you were in authoritie ye neuer could call vs other than Traytours, and Heretiques: and yet beſides all that, vſed our bodies as you know.

Sſ We only tell the people, as our dutie is, that you withſtand the manifeſt trueth, and yet haue neither Doctour, nor Councell, nor Scripture for you, and that you haue ſhewed ſuch extremitie, as the like hath not bẽ ſeene: and now can giue no reckening why. Or if ye can, let it appeare.

Tt You ſay our doctrine is yet in doubt. I anſwer you, to vs it is moſt certaine and out of all doubt. But if you for your part be yet in doubt, reaſon and charity would ye had bene quite reſolued and out of doubt, before ye had dealt ſo vnmercifully for it with your brethren.

Vu You are bound, you ſay, and may not diſpute: yet God be thanked, you are not ſo bound as ye haue bound others. But I would wiſh the Quenes Maieſty would not onely ſet you at liberty in that behalfe, but alſo command you to ſhew your grounds. But when yee were at liberty, and a free diſputation was offered you at Weſtminſter before the Quenes moſt honorable Counſell, and the whole eſtate of the Realme, I pray you whether part was it that then gaue ouer? And yet then you knew ye were not bound.

Aaa Ye ſay ye remaine ſtill in the faith ye were baptiſed in. O good maſter Doctor ſtand not too much in that point. You know ye haue already forſaken a great number of ſuch things as were thought neceſſary when ye were Baptiſed; and yet beſides that, how many times haue ſome of you altered your faith within the ſpace of twenty yeres? Remember your ſelfe, who wrote the Booke [a] De vera obedientia, againſt the Supremacy of Rome? [b] Who commended it with his Preface? [c] Who ſet it forth with ſolemne Sermons? [d] Who confirmed it with open oath?

And in manner all the reſt.

You haue Eccleſiam Apoſtolicam, ye ſay, and we haue none. Howbeit, in all theſe matters that we now intreate of, we haue, as you know, and muſt nedes confeſſe, the old Doctors Church, the ancient Councels Church, the Primitiue Church, S. Peters Church, S. Paules Church, and Chriſts Church; and this, I beleeue, ought of good right to be called the Apoſtles Church. And I maruell much, that you knowing ye haue none of all theſe, yet ſhould ſay, ye haue Eccleſiam Apoſtolicam.

Bbb

Ccc Where ye ſay ye make no innouation; it is no maruell: for in manner all things were altered afore to your hands, as may moſt euidently appeare by all theſe matters that be now in queſtion betweene vs, wherein ye haue vtterly changed and aboliſhed the order of the old church, and doe nothing but the contrary; and what euident profit the Church of God hath gotten by it, I thinke it a hard matter to declare.

Ddd You would haue the matter turned ouer to ſome generall Councell as we would be content to ſtand by; howbeit, that you thinke will not be in your time.

Eee Notwithſtanding, I dare boldly ſay, ſuch a Councel will be a great while before ye ſhall be able to finde any Doctor, or old Councel to ſerue your purpoſe. But though there were neuer ſuch a Councell, yet truth will be truth notwithſtanding, for the Councell can not make the falſhood truth, but the thing that is taken to be true, it certifieth onely to be true. But what redreſſe can there be loked for of ſuch a Councell, where as no man ſhall be Iudge, or ſuffred to ſpeake one way or other, but only ſuch as be openly and inſtly accuſed and found faulty, and where as he that is himſelfe moſt out of order, ſhall be head and reformer of the whole?

Fff Both parties, ye ſay, haue waded ſo far herein, that now they can goe no further, and therefore ye would haue either part let other alone. If you of your part would haue done ſo, when time was, many a godly man had now bene aliue.

Ggg Whereas you ſay, you would haue the ſayings of both parties weighed by the balance of the old Doctours, ye ſee, that is our only requeſt; and that in the matters ye write of, I deſire euen ſo to be tried.

Hhh But why throw ye away theſe balance, and being ſo earneſtly required, why be ye ſo loth to ſhew forth but one old Doctour of your ſid? Ye make me beleeue, ye would not haue the matter come to triall: only ye ſet forth the emptie names of S. Auguſtine, of S. Hierome, of S. Chryſoſtome, of S. Baſil, of S. Cyprian, of Tertullian, of Ireneus, of Dionyſius, of the Councels, &c. as the Apothecaries oftentimes ſet forth their painted Boxes, and nothing in them: you ſhew me only the names of the Doctours, which I knew afore; but ye ſhew me not one word in them of the priuate Maſſe, or of the reſt of the matters that lie betweene vs. If ye could haue found any thing in them for your purpoſe, I beleeue you would not haue brought them empty. But that is a policy in the time of Siege, when the Souldiers within begin to want victuals, to throw forth a few loues ouer the walles, that the enemy without may thinke they haue ſtore enough, and ſo giue ouer the Siege.

You

Iii You ſay, I ſlanderouſly miſrepoꝛt the late Councell of Conſtance. O ſir, theſe woꝛds ſauour to much of your choler, and might better haue bꝛne ſpared. I ſpeake moꝛe fauoꝛably of that Councell than I might haue done.

Kkk Foꝛ the woꝛds of the Councell be theſe, ſpeaking namely of the Communion vnder both kinds: Pertinaciter aſſerentes oppoſitum, tanquam Hæretici arcendi ſunt: that is, They that ſtubboꝛnely defend and maintaine the contrary, that is to ſay, they that ſtand in defence of that, that Chꝛiſt commanded to be done and the Apoſtles, which all the old Catholike Doctoꝛs and the whole Pꝛimitiue Church obſerued, ought to be puniſhed ſo, as is mãte foꝛ Heretikes. By theſe woꝛds they are called not Schiſmatikes, as I ſaid, but ſtubboꝛne Heretikes, which is a great deale moꝛe odious. You ſee therefoꝛe my repoꝛt was moꝛe gentle than the Councell deſerued.

Lll Whereas you ſay we could neuer yet pꝛoue the eꝛꝛoꝛ of one generall Councell, I thinke your memoꝛy doth ſomewhat deceiue you. Foꝛ to paſſe by all other matters, Albertus Pighius, the greateſt learned man, as it is thought, of your ſide, hath found ſuch eꝛꝛours to our hands: foꝛ in his Eccleſia Hierarchia, ſpeaking of the ſecond Councel holden at Epheſus, which you cannot deny but it was generall, and yet toke part with the Heretike Abbat Eutyches againſt the Catholike Father Flauianus, he wꝛiteth thus: Concilia vniuerſalia etiam congregata legitimè, vt benè, ita perperam, iniuſtè, impiéque iudicare & definire poſſunt. Generall Councels, ſaith he, yea euen ſuch as be lawfully ſummoned, as they may conclude things well, ſo may they likewiſe iudge and determine things raſhly, vniuſtly, and wickedly.

Mmm And of the two Councels holden of late yéres at Conſtance, and at Baſil, where as Pope Iohn, and Pope Eugenius were depoſed, he ſaith plainely, that they decꝛéd both againſt reaſon, and againſt nature, and againſt all examples of antiquity, and againſt the woꝛd of God; and yet both theſe Councels were called generall.

Nnn Yé pꝛeſſe me ſoꝛe, that if I wꝛite you not a Booke of my pꝛoofes; it will be thought I doe it Conſcientia imbecillitatis, foꝛ the diſtruſt of the weakneſſe of my part. Belike you haue foꝛgotten wheꝛefoꝛe you with all your company not long ſince openly refuſed to enter diſputation with vs at Weſtminſter. Doubtleſſe the greateſt part thought it was (as it was indeꝛd) Conſcientia imbecillitatis, euen foꝛ diſtruſt of the weakeneſſe of your part. And what thinke yé is there now iudged of you, that being ſo long time required, yet cannot be woꝛn to bꝛing one ſentence in your owne defence?

Ooo I haue afoꝛe alleaged a few reaſons of my part, which by oꝛder of diſputation I was not bound to doe: now let the woꝛld iudge which of vs two ſlieth conference. I pꝛoteſt beſoꝛe God, bꝛing me but one ſufficient authoꝛity in the matters I haue required, and afteꝛward I will gently and quietly conferre with you farther at your pleaſure.

Ppp Wheꝛefoꝛe, foꝛaſmuch as it is Gods cauſe, if ye meane ſimply, deale ſimply, betray not your right, if ye may ſaue it by the ſpeaking of one woꝛd.

Qqq The people muſt nꝛds muſe ſomewhat at your ſilence, and miſtruſt your doctrine, if it ſhall appeare to haue no ground, neither of the old Councels, noꝛ of the Doctoꝛs, noꝛ of the Scꝛiptures, noꝛ any allowed exꝛample of the Pꝛimitiue Church to ſtand vpon, and ſo your fifténe hundꝛed yéres, and the conſent of antiquity and generality that ye haue ſo long and ſo much talkt of, ſhall come to nothing. Foꝛ thinke not that any wiſe man will be ſo much your frinde, that in ſo weighty matters will be ſatiſfied with your ſilence.

Rrr Whereas you ſay, I am not altogether without enemies; I aſſure you, whoſoeuer be enemy vnto mé, I foꝛ my part am enemy vnto no man, but only wiſh, that Gods truth may be knowen of all men. But he that is enemy vnto me in this behalfe, I feare mé is enemy vnto ſome other, whom he would be loth to name.

Sſſ You ſuppꝛeſſed, ye ſay, your firſt letters, foꝛ that you ſaw they were to ſoꝛoꝛe. That had bꝛne all one to me: foꝛ ſoꝛoꝛe woꝛds are not enough to quaile the truth. Howbeit to my knowledge I gaue you no euill woꝛd to increaſe that humoꝛ. But if ye will ſtill ſtriue againſt nature, as ye ſay ye haue done now, and conquer the reſt of your affections too, I doubt not but we ſhall ſone agrée.

Ttt Yéere I leaue, putting you eftſones gently in remembꝛance, that being ſo often and ſo openly deſired to ſhew foꝛth one Doctour, oꝛ Councell &c. in the matters afoꝛe mentioned, yet hitherto ye haue bꝛought nothing; and that if ye ſtand ſo ſtill, it muſt nꝛds be thought ye doe it Conſcientia imbecillitatis, foꝛ that there was nothing to be bꝛought.

20. Martij. Iohn Sarum.

Doctor

Doctour Coles answer to certaine parcels of the second Letters of the Bishop of Sarum, set forth in such sort as it came from the Author. 8. Aprilis Anno 1560.

A IT liketh you thus to say, that your readers may thinke you touch me very sore, where you discouer great vntruth in your writing. For my purpose was to be taught, and to this marke only I shot. You for lacke of good matter, answer, I speake not to the purpose; not to your purpose, but to mine.

B How oftentimes must I tell you, I come not to teach, but to be taught?

C You require that is dangerous for me to doe, as you know.

D Well railed, you shall finde that we haue more than all you shall be able to answer, when time shall require.

E These words glistered gold-like, and discloseth in you no will to satisfie my demand, I warn for lacke of stuffe.

F You say much, and proue nothing; your truthes be so open, that none seth them but your owne syde.

G I haue no priuiledge; when reason, and law shall will me to doe it, you shall finde it; now I stand bound to the contrary, as you know.

H I must néeds thinke some part of your writings made by some smatterer, as here for a shew of skill in Logike, brought in a place of Logike out of all purpose. How frame you this to your purpose, and you shall finde me therein true, as I shall happily make you to see, if you driue me to it.

I So did I too. Your doctrine against Transubstantiation is yet to be proued, and no man bound to beléeue it. And yet being as true as you would haue it séeme, yet may you informe the weake and willing to learne.

K That you are required, that you refuse, and make large offer to no purpose.

L We brought more than ye were able to answer, all were it no Scriptures, nor Councels, nor Doctours.

M This argument would I faine see proued.

N Stout and bold asseueration maketh no proofe in the law.

O Here is againe one place that I reckon ye put not in your selfe, for it maketh quite against you. For Christ proued the Pharises were not Abrahams children, and that a man may not put away his wife for euery cause.

P Two purposes against your selfe. Gregory proueth a negatiue, because none of his forefathers euer vsed the title. As one might say, that you preach is naught, because men in times past taught not so. This part of Gregory serueth no whit to disproue the Soueraignty, as Driedo will teach you, if you vouchsafe to reade him.

Q If you reade againe the place in Aristotles Topikes, you shall there see the better to vnderstand it. He speaketh it where men dispute Dialecticè, in such sort as we doe not, and therefore it serued not your purpose. But I tell you yet once againe, I come not to dispute, but to learne.

D. Cole will proue it when it commeth to his turne.

S In the end of this writing ye shall finde mine answer to that you here say. The last answer.

T When you meddle with law, you shew your skill. I am still in possession of all that euer I thought: and if you put me out of possession by force, I ought to be restored. Had not the Priests in the old law good title to sit in Moses chaire? What, you forget your selfe: yes perdy. The Law accounteth no man Malæ fidei possessorem, after that he hath continued in possession an hundred yeres. But I pardon you for mistaking the law, it is not your faculty.

V I enter no sute against you, and it were folly to shew mine euidence vntill it may serue and take place. I craue only to be informed, which I cannot obtaine. Patientia.

Aa When I commence law against you, then this speech may serue you to some purpose.

Bb Why I come not to your Sermons? This question is captious, and yet you are not herewith discharged why you should not instruct me. As men chuse their wines, so chuse they their teachers. S. Augustine, S. Chrysostome, &c. Sermons, tend more to teach, than to conuince.

Cc We stand not in case like: what néede so much of one thing?

All

Dd All that I required may be couched in six lines, and for ought that I see yet, in lesse two.

Ee It is no discourtesie to refuse to doe that, wherewith I might forfet my recognisance.

Ff I see well ye write much and read little. Gelasius is full answered by Tapper, in articulo de transsubstantiatione.

Gg You alledge his words otherwise than you finde them; which fault I trust groweth on ouersight.

Hh Shew what they are, that it be not thought that you deuise this of your own phantasie.

Ii This glosse you mislike, because you vnderstand not the Glossers meaning. It may stand full well.

Kk Soft and faire, you haue not read the answer. Reade forarde, and you shall see more.

Ll At my cue I shall be ready for you.

Mm Ye haue better stuffe than this I trow. For this is somewhat weake.

Nn The decrees, where you learned this of Gelasius, tell you how you should vnderstand it.

Theophilus shall be answered, when I come to dispute with you.

Oo Whether the Greeke and the Latine tong were then vnderstood of the common people, remaineth yet vpon proofe. Well, I trow S. Basil, &c. properly not very well. Here I remaine still in doubt.

Pp I pray you take good leasure, and write effectually.

Qq I wis you know I may not, nor the case I stand in requireth it not. You misreport: I said if, &c.

Rr Men of your side vsed themselues traiterously to Queene Mary, as none of vs doe now.

Ss Not manifest, vntill it be better proued. You had but the Law; you require more than any Law will beare against vs.

Tt I doubted more than I doe. You giue me good cause to be well confirmed.

Vu At Westminster we came to dispute, and we were answered, there was none appointed; where we refused not to write neither. But when our Bookes could not be read as yours was, we refused not vtterly to dispute, but only this case, if our Bookes could not be suffred to be read as indifferently as yours was. Now hardly, weigh whether you haue indifferently reported, that we vtterly refused to dispute with you or no.

Aaa What one thing am I gone from? You say much, and proue little. You meane the old Bishop of Winchester, who repented at the houre of his death. And where you meane I condescended to the Primacy of King Henry at my first comming home, or I had laboured that matter, you did the like your selfe. For in Queene Maries time you subscribed to the Articles, some of them we are entred to talke in, to your no lesse blame than mine. There be in the towne that both saw you subscribe, and can bring forth your hand.

Bbb To this, and some part of the next article, you shall be answered in the end of this writing, as I before said.

Ccc What needeth so much of one thing? this seemeth you to seeme to say too much.

Eee Such fond excuses men lay; how true let other iudge.

Fff You forget your selfe; I say not thus pardy: looke better in the place.

Ggg Then begin, if you thinke the time will serue, or put it ouer till another time.

Hhh All these be but words often repeated, and answered alreadie.

Iii Read the place againe, I say not so, and then you shall see lesse cause to complaine.

Kkk You say, the Councell at Constance openly pronounced against Christ himselfe. Wherein I pray you? because the Fathers there said; Who saith it is of necessitie to receiue vnder both kinds, and that the approued custome of the Church is Sacrilege, to be taken for an Heretike; yet no Heretike, but in a wrong opinion. Then belike you can bring in some Text where Christ commanded it should not be receiued, but vnder both kinds; which you can neuer do. So is your report of this Councell very slanderous still. Read 4. Canonem Concilij Constantiensis.

Lll You ground your proofe vpon Pighius errour. For Pighius holdeth, the Councell of Ephesus was generall, which the Councell of Calcedon denieth. So that I maruell much herein of you, that you alledge that for a Councell, which hath no place in the Bookes of Councels.

Mmm Wherein doth Pighius proue the Councels of Constance, and Basil, to haue erred? Mary because they decreed the generall Councell to be aboue the Pope. If ye take these two Councels to haue erred in this point, you are a greater Papist than I am: for I hold herein rather with Gerson. I trow this be one place that you wrote not your selfe. Yet I reckon no errour proued in any generall Councell, by that you haue said.

Nnn To this, I haue answered alreadie to you.

Ooo I haue anſwered to this already, what order of diſputation diſchargeth you of proofe: yet remember I came not to diſpute, but to be taught.

Ppp If you refuſe to inſtruct me, vnleſſe I bring ſome proofe of my part, you bid me to my coſt. You bid me to a feaſt, where, while I ſhould take on me to proue your doctrine naught, I were like to forfet my Recognisance, which you guilefully allure me vnto.

Qqq God wot I paſſe little in theſe matters what the poore ſilly ſoules deeme of my doings. Wherein you haue no cauſe to complaine, ſith they be euill to ward you. Wiſe men, I doubt not, ſee what iuſt cauſe I haue to doe as I doe.

Rrr You would beare folke in hand, that they that agree not in doctrine with you, are not the Queenes friendes, which you gather by your owne ſide in Queene Maries raigne: but I neuer brake amity with any man for diſſent in religion. I keepe ſtill mine old friends, be their religion good or bad.

Sſſ As though mine affection only cauſed me to diſſent from you in religion. Which argument may ſerue you happily in Rhetorike, but no where els I weene.

NOw foraſmuch as you make this a great foundation againſt vs, that we vary from the Primitiue Church, and thereby make the ſimple ſoules weene that we were in the wrong ſide: Heere I pray you ſhew your opinion, whether we are bound to doe all things which we finde by ſufficient authority were in vſe in the Primitiue Church. And becauſe you ſhall not be herein ſquemiſh, I ſhall here begin to ſhew you mine.

I am of the opinion, that the Councell of Conſtance was in this matter. I thinke it an errour, I am bound to doe as the Primitiue Church did, where the Church cuſtomably vſed the contrary. I recken an example no bond. I deny not but thoſe examples were to be followed, and not to be broken at euery mans will and pleaſure, vntill by common aſſent other order were taken. But if you ſeeke old writers, and finde me that the Church theſe ſix hundred yeeres obſerued not many things which were practiſed, and accounted for good, wholeſome, and holy in the Primitiue Church, and thereby deeme vs in errour, this were a wrong iudgement. For the Church of Chriſt hath his childhood, his manhood, and his hoare haires: and as that that is meete for a man in one age, is vnmeete in another, ſo were many things meete, requiſite, and neceſſary in the Primitiue Church, which in our daies were like to doe more harme than good.

This is no new deuiſed phantaſie, but vttered eleuen hundred yeres ago by Saint Ambroſe, without reproch. I ſhewed you, and red you the place at Weſtminſter (as you may remember) and it were too long to make reherſall of his words here.

We might by taking the contrary opinion herein, be led to thinke we ought to receiue the Sacrament euermore after Supper, and not faſting. But Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that Chriſt left this to his Church, to take order how, and in what ſort, his Sacraments ſhould be receiued and vſed: wherein he ſaith, it is a maruellous inſolent kind of madneſſe to miſlike that which is receiued in the Church, where the cuſtome is not againſt any commandement in the Scripture. Saint Peter cauſed (as Damaſus ſaith) a commandement to be giuen, that no man ſhould come bare faced to the Church. Saint Clement tooke order, that the Clergy ſhould haue all things in common, and to liue together, as in the late reformed order of Saint Benets Monkes doth moſt godly appeare. And not many yeeres ſince, the ſaid order in all Cathedrall Churches was obſerued. Yet I weene it were an errour to hold, of neceſſity it ſhould be ſo ſtill, or to ſay the Church were in errour, becauſe it hath ſuffred a contrary cuſtome to creepe in. Then if the cuſtome of the Church may breake that was in the Primitiue Church commanded, it is leſſe offence to leaue vndone that was at the beginning practiſed, and no commandement giuen for other to follow the ſame. Thus much I thought to put you in remembrance of, for ſuch matters as you touch in the 17. 42. 43. numbers.

8. Aprilis. Henricus Cole.

A Letter ſent from the Biſhop of Sarum to Doctour Cole, wherein he requireth of him a true and a full Copie of the former anſwer.

I Vnderſtand by the report of diuers, that appearing of late before the Queenes Maieſties Viſitors at Lambeth, and being there demanded of a Letter that was then abroad in your name, as anſwer vnto me, whether ye would acknowledge the ſame as your owne, or no; and ſo much the more, for that ye had had vſed the matter vnder couert, and ſent your copies abroade into all places, euen into mine owne Dioceſſe, and yet not vnto me, thereby to diſcredit me in corners at my firſt comming, whereof I haue the greater cauſe to complaine of your doings: ye made anſwer, not only that it was your owne, but alſo that it was much abridged, and that the originall was twice aſmuch. If it be ſo, the fault is your owne, that would ſo vnaduiſedlie beſtow your writings. As for my part, as they came to me not by your ſending, but by very chance, euen ſo did I cauſe them to be copied out iuſtly, and truly, without adding or diminiſhing of one letter, and according haue I made out mine anſwer to the whole. Now forasmuch as I vnderſtand there be certaine both Honorable, and Worſhipfull, that would gladly haue our doings to the print, and ſo publiſhed; theſe ſhalbe to deſire you, for the bettering of your owne cauſe, to ſend me your owne copie full and large, as ye ſay ye gaue it out at the firſt, that I may do as I ſhall thinke good, and you haue no cauſe to thinke your ſelfe iniuried if I anſwer one parcell of your letters, and not to the whole. I pray you let me heare from you with expedition, for I meane plainly, and therefore haue cauſed the print to ſtay vpon your anſwer. Thus I bid you farewell. From Shirburne the xrij. of July. Anno 1560. Iohn Sarum.

VNto this Letter, Doctor Cole being beſides by meſſenger earneſtly required, would make no anſwer one way or other, therfore vpon his refuſall, it was thought good to anſwer his Letters as they were.

¶ The Reply of the Biſhop of Sarum, to the Letter aboue written, which D. Cole contrarie to euen dealing had giuen out, and ſent abroad, not to the ſaid Biſhop to whom he wrote it, but priuily and ſecretly vnto certaine of his owne friends.

THere came to my hands of late by chante a Scroll ſet forth in ſhort broken ſentences, conteining an anſwer to the Second Letters that I had ſent vnto you before, which as by certaine familiar phraſes, by the date, by the ſubſcription of your owne name, and by other tokens, appeared to me to be yours: ſo by the tying and ordering of the ſame, I had ſome cauſe to thinke it ſhould not be yours, and eſpecially, for that being, as it appeared, written vnto me, it was ſent priuily abroad vnto others, and not to me. For I thought, that you being a man of this age and credit, would not haue bẽ aſhamed of your owne writings, or would haue concealed them from him, to whom you had directed them, or haue ſought for a falſe light to ſet forth your matters in, as Merchants ſometimes vſe to do, the better to vtter their ſorie wares.

Moreouer, I ſaw, that your words thorowout were heaped vp with taunts and ſcornes, and were ſomewhat too much ſtained with choler to haue proceaded from a ſober graue man, as I euer toke you to be.

Thus being vncertain of the truth herein, after I had ſent often times to you, to know whether you would auouch it for your owne, or no, and could neuer get word from you, by reaſon that you ſhifted your ſelfe, and would not be found; I thought it good to ſtay my ſelfe from anſwering, vntill I might get certaine knowledge of the Authour.

At the laſt, after I had aſſayed many waies, and could by no meanes heare from you, hauing no longer continuance in the Citie to ſtay the vntrue reports which I heard were ſcattered by ſome of your friends, I could not but before my departure hence make out mine anſwer vnto you, as hauing cauſe to thinke the Letters that were brought me ſhould be his, in whoſe name they were giuen abroad.

Firſt, where you haue made your anſwers ſeuerall, and ſet them ſo far off from the parcels of my Letters, I gheſſe you did that of very purpoſe, that your reader might ſée your anſwer, but not ſée what it was whereunto you anſwered.

Therefore I haue ioyned my ſayings and yours ſimply and plainly both together, without colour, or ſhadow, that the indifferent reader may haue all before his eies, and ſo be the better able to iudge aright.

Sarum.

IN your ſecond Letters I finde many words to ſmall purpoſe. It had bẽne farre better for you to haue alledged one ſufficient authoritie, whereby I might haue learned that I loked for.

Cole.

Cole.

IT liketh you thus to say, that your Readers may thinke you touch me very sore; where you discouer a great vntruth in your writing: for my purpose was to be taught, and to this marke onely I shot. You for lack of good matter answer, I speake not to the purpose. Not to your purpose, but to mine. How often times must I tell you, I come not to teach, but to learne?

COntrarie to the rules of Rhetorik, I see you begin to chafe and to enflame all your affections euen at the first. Soberneſſe were much fitter for a Doctor. But your heates be such, that your friends haue shewed me you must be borne withall.

I neither discouer, nor couer any vntruth in my writing, but as you know, only vtter the very truth. For at Pauls Crosse I required you, or any of you, to shew the grounds of your religion, if you had any, that by indifferent conference the truth the better might appeare. And this had been to your purpose, if ye had meant plainly, and to mine too. But you run away in the mist, and flie the net, lest happily ye should be taken; and so purposely goe about to bleare your readers eies, and to couer the truth: and hauing in very deede nothing to alledge for your selfe, yet ye make a countenance as though ye lackt nothing. And so I grant you follow your purpose, and not mine.

Where you say, ye come only to learne, and not to quarrell; he must needs be your very friend that will beleeue you. Howbeit, the pretence of a learner may keepe your credit for a while, and saue you from shewing what ye can say: and therefore I read you, vse it still. But by your scoffes and scornes it may appeare, you come to controll, sooner than to learne. God send vs both humblenesse of heart, that we may content our selues to be taught.

Sarum.

IN my Sermons as well at Paules Crosse, as elsewhere, I required you to bring forth of your part either some Scripture, or some old Doctour, or some antient Generall Councell, or els some allowed example of the Primitiue Church, for these are good grounds to build vpon. And I would haue marualled that you brought forth nothing all this while, sauing that I knew you had nothing to bring.

Cole.

YOu require that is dangerous for me, as you know.

The Reply. Sarum.

IF it be dangerous to you because you stand bound, why do you not put it ouer to some other of your side that is not bound? This shadow will serue well before your friends, that will winke when you bid them, and see no more than you will haue them see. But forasmuch as ye haue vsed this excuse so often, and so few wise men will beleeue it, I would thinke it good that now ye would deuise some other.

Sarum.

BVt now forasmuch as ye seeke shifts, and will not come to answer, I account him vnwise that knoweth not your meaning.

Cole.

VVEll railed, you shall finde that we haue more than all you shall be able to answer when time shall require.

The Reply. Sarum.

THis answer, notwithstanding it is bitter yet because it is vntrue, and beareth more smoke than flame, it moueth me the lesse. Heere I misse in you some part of your courtesie. These matters would be tried by reasoning, better than by scolding. By likelihod some other man had moued your choler: for my words be as far from railing, as yours are from modestie.

Where

Where you write, that you haue more than all we ſhall be able to anſwer, if euery crake were a good ſubſtantiall argument, I were confuted. But notwithſtanding theſe terrible threates, yet in concluſion, as your cuſtome is, ye bring nothing.

The arguments that you ſay we ſhall neuer be able to anſwer, are ſword, and fire, ſuch as of late daies ye vſed ſo plentiouſly for lacke of others. And yet as ſtrong and as forcible as they were (God be thanked) they haue bene fully anſwered, to the great and vnſpeakable comfort of Gods people, and to your ſhame and confuſion for euer.

As touching the old Doctours and Counſels, I would ye had a tearme aſſigned you, ad exhibendum: in the meane ſeaſon, for lack of other witnes, ye may write teſte meipſo, as Princes do.

Sarum.

YE aſke me why ye ſhould be counted obſtinate. Doubtleſſe I for my part haue a better opinion of you, and truſt you are not ſo. But if a man withſtand an open truth, hauing nothing wherewith to defend himſelfe, I remit him to your owne iudgement, whether he may be counted obſtinate, or no.

Cole.

THeſe words glitter Gold-like, and diſclaſe in you no will to ſatiſfie my demand: I weene for lack of ſtuffe.

The Reply. Sarum.

IT pleaſeth you to make your ſelfe merrie with theſe words. I alledged vnto you S. Auguſtine, S. Ambroſe, S. Baſil, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Hierome, Gelaſius, Theophilus, and S. Gregorie; therefore it is vntrue that ye ſay, I had no will to ſatiſfie your demand. Now bring you but one of all theſe, or any other of your ſide in the maters that lie now betweene vs, to ſatiſfie my demand, and as I haue ſaid, you ſhall haue the victorie.

You ſay, we lack ſtuffe to proue our purpoſe. O would to God your ſtuffe and ours might be laid together! then ſhould it ſone appeare how true it is that ye ſay, and how faithfullie ye haue vſed the people of God.

Sarum.

YOu put me well in remembrance of mine office, that forasmuch as I am a Biſhop, I ſhould be ἀπολογητὴς, that is, readie to yeild an account of ſuch things as I teach. I thanke God ſo I do, and haue done to my power, both priuately and openly. But if this be my dutie, and required at my hands, what priuiledge haue you, that you only may not allow out one ſentence to the confirmation of your doctrine?

Cole.

YOu ſay much and proue nothing. Your trueth is ſo open, that no man can ſee it but your owne ſide. I haue no priuiledge: when reaſon and Law ſhall will me to do it, you ſhall finde it. Now I ſtand bound to the contrarie, as you know.

I Speake not too much, as your ſelfe can witneſſe. How much I proue, ſhall reſt vpon the wiſedome & iudgement of the reader. Both the truth of our part, and the vntruth of your part is ſo open, that now God be thanked the whole world is able to ſee it, vnleſſe there be ſome ſuch as haue eies and will not ſee: yet Iuſtificata eſt ſapienſia Dei à filijs ſuis.

Ye ſay you will ſpeake when reaſon and lawe ſhall will you to doe it. Of the lawe I will ſay nothing, but only this by the way, becauſe you are a Doctour of lawe, what lawe haue you that can driue a man to proue a negatiue? or if ye haue no lawe, what reaſon haue you that I ſhould doe it? But me thinketh both reaſon and humanitie would ye ſhould haue anſwered me ſome what, ſpeciallie being ſo often and ſo openly required. At the leaſt you ſhould haue alledged Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Chryſoſtome, Hierome, as ye did ſometimes alledge the decree of the Councell of Epheſus, the firſt, for the Communion vnder one kinde, which decree neuer was yet found, nor neuer will be. Howbeit becauſe you ſpeake of reaſon, whereas a man hath nothing to ſay, it is good reaſon he kepe ſilence, as you doe.

Sarum.

6. YOu would haue men thinke I flie answering, because I am a Bishop. This in Sophistry is called Paralogismus, à non causa vt causa. I alleaged the place and audience where I spake, and not only mine office. For I thought it might appeare some want of discretion, to call that doctrine into question, which I knew was grounded vpon Gods word, and authorised and set forth by the Queenes Maiesty, and by the assent of the whole Realme.

Cole.

I Must néedes thinke some part of your writing made by some smatterer, as héere, for a shew of skill in Logike, brought in a place of Logike out of all purpose. How frame you this to your purpose? and you shall finde me therein true, as happily I shall make you to sée, if you driue me to it. Your Doctrine against Transubstantiation is yet to be proued, and no man bound to beléeue it. And being as true as ye would haue it séeme, yet may you informe the weake and willing to learne.

YE doe me too much wrong, that will not allow me thus much Logike of mine owne. But it was euer your grace, to beare the people in hand that all we are altogether vnlearned, and know nothing. Which thing if it were true, it were the more to your shame, thus openly to be confounded thorow the whole world, by men of so small learning. Howbeit, thus it pleased you to talke, for want of better reason.

Ye call me a smatterer in Logike, as if your selfe were as perfect in Logike as Aristotle. And yet I remember well I vnderstood as much Logike as this commeth to, and somedeale more, for twenty yéres ago, ye wis when you, by your owne report, were but a simple smatterer in Diuinity. Neither did I bring it in for a shew of skill, as you say, but to declare your ouersight, and lake of skill, which appeareth now not only in Diuinity, but also in Logike. For where you say I brought it in out of all purpose, me thinks you haue forgotten some part of your old rules, and know not what Paralogismus à non causa, vt causa, meaneth. Which is, whensoeuer in reasoning the very true cause is suppressed, and another cause of purpose set in place. For example I say, I conferre with you vnder protestation, lest I should séeme to call the doctrine into doubt, which I know to be established by Gods word, and by sufficient authority thorowout this Realme. And you would haue it taken that I doe it, because I am a Bishop. Which indéed is of your side a sophistication, à non causa, vt causa. So likewise I say, you alledge no Doctors, nor Scriptures, nor Generall Councels, as true it is, because ye haue none to alledge. But you would make men beléeue ye dare not alledge them, because ye stand bound in Recognisance to the contrary. And this of your side is another Sophistication, à non causa, vt causa.

Where you say, ye will shew me that I brought this in out of all purpose, it had béene more for your credit, if ye would haue done it out of hand. But forasmuch as the fairest shew of your learning hangeth on the Future tence, and standeth onely vpon promise, I trust you will bring forth your old Doctours and Councels, and performe this both together which will be ye know when.

The truth of our doctrine against Transubstantiation was proued sufficiently, and well allowed, before your doctrine with transubstantiation was euer heard of. For you are not able to shew me not so much as the very name of transubstantiation in any kind of writer, new or old, before the late Councell of Laterane, which, as you know, was holden in Rome a thousand two hundred and fifténe yéres after Christ. So long the Church of God, and the Catholike faith was able to stand without your transubstantiation. Which, if it were so true, as ye would haue men thinke it, I marueil it could neuer be knowen before.

BVt as touching my calling, I am not only ready to answer any man in any thing that I profesle, but also vpon sufficient allegation, as I haue promised, very well content to yéld vnto you.

Cole.

THat you are required that you refuse, and make large offer to no purpose.

The Reply. Sarum.

THat you required me I haue partly performed, euen in my laſt Letters, as you your ſelfe doe know right well, and that not altogether from the purpoſe, as it ſhall appeare. Bring you forth as much of your ſide, and I will ſay ye come well to the purpoſe.

Sarum.

BAt I beſeech you, what reaſon of your faith in theſe matters gaue you ſometime when you were in place? Scriptures, Doctours, Councels, ye had none, as now appeareth by your ſilence. 8

Cole.

WE brought more than ye were able to anſwer, all were it not Scriptures, nor Doctours, nor Councels.

The Reply. Sarum.

INſtead of Scriptures, Doctours, and Councels, ye brought ſuch extremity, as the world hath not ſeene the like, and as you are now loth to heare of, and yet it pleaſed God that the ſame ſhould be anſwered ſufficiently, with patience and ſufferance. But heere am I glad ye confeſſe one truth by the way, that ye brought in all that time neither Scriptures, nor Doctours, nor Generall Councels of your ſide; and yet I trow ye were free from Recogniſance. This I beleeue paſſed you vnwares, and not of purpoſe. As your Proloquutor in the diſputation at Oxford, gaue out one truth by chance vnaduiſedly, as he gaue knowledge to the audience in the Diuinity ſchole of what matters they would diſpute. For thus he ſaid, and that in your owne hearing: Viri fratres, conuenimus hûc hodiè diſputaturi contra horribilem illam Hæreſim, de veritate Corporis & Sanguinis Chriſti, in Euchariſtia. Brethren, ſaid he, we come hither this day to diſpute againſt that horrible Hereſie, of the verity of Chriſts body and bloud in the Sacrament. God would haue him vtter ſome truth then, as you doe now, becauſe he was Pontifex illius anni. But forasmuch as you confeſſe ye brought neither Scriptures, nor Doctours, nor Councels, I remit the matter to your owne reader to conſider what ye brought.

Sarum.

THerefore the ground of your perſwaſion muſt then needes be, Nos habemus legem, & ſecundum legem, &c. You know what followeth, that is, We haue a law, and according to our law he muſt die. 9

Cole.

THis argument I would faine ſee proued.

The Reply. Sarum.

YOur whole practiſe, and the order of your doings for ſix yeres together hath proued it ſufficiently. And beſides that, a Biſhop of yours euen in that time, ſitting in iudgement vpon a poore man in a caſe of religion, and hearing him alledge the Scriptures, and other authorities for himſelfe, rounded a Gentleman in the eare that ſate next to him with theſe words; Nay, if we ſtriue with them in Scriptures and reaſoning, we ſhall neuer haue done. We muſt proceed againſt them with the Law.

Sarum.

FOr as truely as God is God, if ye would haue vouchſafed to follow either the Scriptures, or the ancient Doctours, or the Counſels, ye would neuer haue reſtored againe either the Supremacy of Rome after it was once abolished, or the priuate Maſſe, or the Communion vnder one kind, &c. 10

Cole.

STout and bold aſſeueration, maketh no proofe in the Law.

The Reply. Sarum.

TRue and earneſt aſſeueration maketh a proofe ſufficient in the law, as long as ye haue nothing to the contrary, as indeede ye haue not, nor neuer ſhall haue. But without queſtion, your terrible gard of Billes and Halberds, your grinning and ſcoffing, with other like your demeanour, as ye vſed in the diſputations at Oxford againſt the Martyrs and faithfull witneſſes of Gods truth, and as now your crakes of many things, and bringing forth of nothing, I beléeue to any wiſe man maketh but ſmall proofe in Diuinity. But if ye would haue had any wiſe man miſlike my aſſeueration, ye ſhould haue ſhewed by what Scriptures, by what Councels, or by what Doctours, ye reckoned theſe things againe.

Sarum.

11 IT grieueth you that I ſhould reſt vpon the Negatiue, and ſo put you to your proofes, Wherein notwithſtanding ye alledge againſt me the cuſtome of the Schooles: yet you know Chriſt vſed the ſame kind of reaſoning in his Schoole. As when he ſaid to the Phariſies, Hoc Abraham non fecit: This thing Abraham, neuer did. And againe, when he anſwered them in the caſe of diuorce, A principio non fuit ſic, It was not ſo from the beginning, he ſtood only vpon the Negatiue.

Cole.

HEre is againe one place that I recken you put not in your ſelfe, for it maketh quite againſt you. For Chriſt proued the Phariſies were not Abrahams children, and that a man may not put away his wife for euery cauſe.

The Reply. Sarum.

I See you would faine put me out of credit, as though I were not able to anſwer your Letters without conference. But this I recken you doe for a iolly policy, that while your reader is loking vpon me, he ſhould forget the whole matter that we talke of. If the examples that I alledge be againſt my ſelfe, then are you the more beholding to me. For they cannot likely make againſt me in this caſe, but they muſt néedes make for you. Yet I pray you ſhew mée by all your Logike, how holdeth this argument of yours:

> Chriſt proued, that the Phariſies were not Abrahams children, and that a man may not put away his wife for euery cauſe: Ergo, this matter maketh quite againſt me.

METhinketh héere is a very ſhort Syllogiſmus. I maruell where you left your Medius terminus; you ſhould haue ſquared it better before it had paſt your hands. As for the allegation, it maketh euidently for me. For as I ſaid, Chriſt ſtood then vpon the negatiue againſt the Phariſies, as we doe now againſt you.

Sarum.

12 EVen ſo, when Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople had taken vpon him to be called vniuerſall Biſhop of the whole Church, which title afterward the Biſhop of Rome began to vſurp to himſelfe, and for the maintenance of the ſame, hath often times diſquieted and ſhaken the whole world: but when the Biſhop of Conſtantinople firſt began to vſe this title, Gregory being then Biſhop of Rome, confounded him only with the negatiue. Nemo, ſaid he, deceſſorum meorum hoc profano vocabulo vti voluit: None of my predeceſſours (which had continued from Peter downeward, for the ſpace of ſix hundred yéares after Chriſt) would euer vſe this vnchriſtianlike and leaud name: Li. 4. Epiſt. 80 And againe, Epi. 92. Sancti ante legem, Sancti in lege, Sancti ſub gratia, omnes perficientes corpus domini in membris ſunt conſtituti. The holy men before the Law, the holy men vnder the Law, the holy men vnder the grace of the Goſpell, altogether making vp one body of the Lord, are placed amongſt his members. But none of them would euer ſuffer himſelfe to be called vniuerſall. I haue choſen me ſpecially theſe examples, becauſe they ſéeme to ſerue me to double purpoſe. Thus Gregory reaſoned then, as we doe now, only vpon the negatiue: and if the Biſhop of Conſtantinople had béene able to proue but one affirmatiue, that any Biſhop of Rome afore time had vſed that title, or that euer any man, either before the Law, or vnder the Law, or vnder the Goſpell, had ſuffered himſelfe to be called vniuerſall Biſhop, then had Gregory béene confounded.

Cole.

D Cole confeſſeth, that no Biſhop of Rome

TWo purpoſes againſt your ſelfe. Gregory proued a negatiue, becauſe none of his forefathers euer vſed that title. As one might ſay, that you preach is naught, becauſe men in times paſt taught not ſo. This part of Gregory ſerueth no whit to diſprooue the Soueraignty, as Driedo will teach you, if you vouchſafe to read him.

before Gregory, that is, for the ſpace of ſixhundred yeeres after Chriſt, would euer take vpon him the title of vniuerſall Biſhop.

The Reply. Sarum.

YOu ſay, I bring Gregory againſt my ſelfe. God be thanked you are able to bring neither Gregory, nor any elſe, that in any of theſe matters may but ſeeme to make with you. But if Gregory ſtand vpon the Negatiue, as I doe, and as you your ſelfe confeſſe, he maketh ſufficiently to my purpoſe. Now iudge you whether theſe proofes be negatiues, or no.

Nemo deceſſorum meorum hoc profano vocabulo vti voluit. Or this: Nemo ſe vniuerſalem dici voluit. And ſay not I alledge matter againſt my ſelfe, vnleſſe ye haue where with to diſproue it better.

You anſwer farther, that one might ſay the like againſt vs, that we preach this day is naught, becauſe men in times paſt taught not ſo. Like as Gregory found falt with Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, for that he intituled himſelfe an vniuerſall Biſhop of the whole Church, whereas none of his predeceſſours durſt neuer take that name vpon him. Indeed this anſwer might haue ſome ſhew, if men in times paſt had neuer taught ſo as we teach now. But I doubt not but herein your owne learning and conſcience crieth out againſt you. For you know that the matters that lie in queſtion betweene vs, haue beene taught, as we now teach them, both by Chriſt himſelfe, and by his Apoſtles, and by the old Doctours, and by the ancient Generall Counſels: and that you, hauing none of theſe or like authorities, haue ſet vp a Religion of your owne, and built it onely vpon your ſelfe. Therefore I may iuſtly and truely conclude, that you now teach, and of long time haue taught the people, touching the Maſſe, the Supremacy, the Common prayer, &c. is naught: for neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles, nor the old Doctours, Tertullian, Cyprian, S. Hierome, S. Auguſtine, S. Ambroſe, S. Chryſoſtome, &c. euer taught the people ſo as you haue taught them.

You ſay, this place ſerueth me nothing againſt the Supremacy. I marueil much you ſay not, it ſerueth you to proue the Supremacy. Gregory ſaith, No Biſhop of Rome vntill his time, which was ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, would euer be called, the vniuerſall Biſhop.

He ſaith, that Leo his predeceſſour refuſed the name, notwithſtanding it were offered vnto him in the Generall Councell of Chalcedon.

He ſaith, it is a proud, and a profane title, and a name meete for Antichriſt.

He ſaith, whoſoeuer will take that name vpon him, is Antichriſts fore-runner.

He ſaith, to conſent to ſuch a name is the deniall of the faith: and yet ſay you, he ſpeaketh not one word againſt the Supremacy.

Heere would I faine be anſwered one thing by the way; if no Biſhop of Rome would euer take vpon him to be called the vniuerſall Biſhop, or head of the whole Church for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, where then was the head of the vniuerſall Church all that while? Or how could it then continue without a head, more than now? For now you ſay it is vnpoſſible. Or if the Church had no vniuerſall head in the earth for ſo long a time after Chriſt, why doe you now furniſh out the Biſhop of Romes authority in the hearing of the vnlearned, with ſuch a glory and face of antiquity? As if the Biſhop of Rome had euer beene named the head of the Church, ſince the time that Peter came firſt to Rome. But becauſe your ſelfe were not able to auoid the force of Gregories words, you did well to turne me ouer to Doctour Driedo.

Sarum.

BUt as touching the cuſtome of the Schooles, I truſt ye haue not yet forgotten, that Ariſtotle giueth order to the opponent in many caſes to require an inſtant of the reſpondent, as I doe now at your hands. And what is that elſe, but in deed to defend the negatiue, and to driue the aduerſary to auouch the affirmatiue?

Cole.

IF you read againe the place in Ariſtotles Topikes, you ſhall ſee there the better to vnderſtand it. He ſpeaketh it, where men diſpute Dialectice, in ſuch ſort as we doe not; and therefore it ſerueth not your purpoſe. But I tell you yet once againe, I came not to diſpute, but to learne.

The Reply. Sarum.

I Neuer thought it had bene so high a mystery to vnderstand the nature of an Instant. Children were wont to haue it in their common disputations in the Parish Schooles in Oxford. If it serue only for them that dispute dialecticè, and ye (as ye pretend) beare the person onely of a learner, and come not to dispute; why then did ye alledge against me the custome of the Schooles, and the disputations of Maisters of Art in the Vniuersities? We know they vse there to dispute only dialecticè, and none otherwise. And that I speake herein, I speake only vpon occasion of your owne words. How shall I thinke ye remember your Aristotle, if ye so sone forget your owne letters?

Sarum.

BVt that ye will not doe, and ye know why, although ye dissemble it. But soner ye require to see our grounds. And what better ground can we haue on our side, than that Doctour Cole the chiefest man on the other side, can finde no ground to stand against vs?

Cole.

Ridetur chorda qui semper aberrat eadem. Doctor Cole will proue it, when it commeth to his turne.

The Reply. Sarum.

SEeing for lacke of Doctours ye answer me with Poets, it shall do well to answer you againe with the same. Decies repetita placebunt. And yet when ye come so often with the pretence of desire to be taught, and of your recognisance, if I list to skoffe as ye do, why may not I as well say to you, Ridetur chorda qui semper aberrat eadem? as for the proouing hereof, ye do well to take a day. In the meane season giue others leaue to thinke the truth.

Sarum.

HE that will make any Innouation, say ye, must giue a reason of his doings. O maister Doctour, this reason fighteth most against your selfe: for ye haue misliked and put away the most part of the order of the Primitiue church, and yet ye neuer gaue good reason of your doings.

Cole.

IN the end of my writing ye shall finde mine answer to that yée here say. The last answer.

The Reply. Sarum.

AND there shall you finde the Reply.

Sarum.

YE say ye are in possession. No, ye were somtime, ye are not now: and when ye were, ye had no right title or good euidence to claime by, no more than they which sometime sate in Moses chaire, or they that said, Nos sumus filij Abrahami, We are the children of Abraham, and thereby claimed their possession: therefore ye were Possessores malæ fidei, and for that cause ye are now iustly and orderly remoued.

Cole.

WHen ye meddle with law, ye shew your skill. I am still in possession of all that euer I taught, and if you put me out of possession by force, I ought to be restored. Had not the Priests in the old Law good title to sit in Moses chaire? What ye forget your selfe, yes perdy. The Law accounted no man malæ fidei possessorem, after that he hath continued in possession an hundred yeares. But I pardon you for mistaking the Law, it is not your faculty.

The Reply. Sarum.

I Haue not so little skill in the Law but I vnderstand what are malæ fidei possessores. And as now (Gods name be praised) it is well knowen that ye haue bene they, ye are put out out of poſſeſſion, not by violence of man, but by the very force of Gods truth, which ſo deuoureth and conſumeth vp all error and falſhod, as Moſes Serpent deuoured and ſwallowed vp the fained Serpents of the Sorcerers. If ye claime to be reſtored, be not agrieued to ſhew your euidence.

Where ye ſay, the Biſhops and Prieſts that were in Chriſts time had good title to ſit in Moſes chaire: I grant you they had euen as good title, as ye had to ſit and beare rule in the Church of Chriſt; and therfore your example miſliketh me neuer a whit. Yet ye know, Chriſt called them Fures & latrones, theeues and robbers: and ſaid vnto them, Vos ex patre diabolo eſtis, Ye are the children of the diuell.

Ye ſay, the Law accounteth no man poſſeſſorem malæ fidei, that hath continued in poſſeſſion one hundred yeares. Which thing notwithſtanding I can be content to grant you to be true in the ciuill Law, yet is it not true in the Law of God; and that, as ye know, is proued by diuers authorities euen in your owne Decrees, Diſt. 8. There is alleaged S. Auguſtine, whoſe words are theſe: Veritate manifeſtata, cedat conſuetudo veritati. Nemo conſuetudinem rationi, & veritati præponat: quia conſuetudinem ratio & veritas ſemper excludit. After the truth is once found out, let cuſtome giue place vnto the truth. Let no man ſet cuſtome before truth and reaſon: for reaſon and truth euermore put cuſtome to ſilence.

Likewiſe S. Gregory; and his words are theſe: Si conſuetudinem opponas, aduertendum eſt, quod Dominus dicit, Ego ſum via, veritas, & vita: non dicit, Ego ſum conſuetudo. Et certè quælibet conſuetudo quantumuis vetuſta, quantumuis vulgata, veritati omnino eſt poſt ponenda. If ye lay cuſtome for your ſelfe, ye muſt remember that Chriſt ſaith, I am the way, the truth, and the life: he ſaith not, I am cuſtome. And doubtleſſe any cuſtome, be it neuer ſo ancient, neuer ſo common, yet muſt it néeds yéelde to the truth.

Likewiſe S. Cyprian; whoſe words be theſe: Si ſolus Chriſtus audiendus eſt, non debemus attendere, quid aliquis ante nos faciendum putarit, ſed quid, qui ante omnes eſt, Chriſtus prior fecerit. Neque enim hominis conſuetudinem ſequi debemus, ſed veritatem Dei, cum per Eſaiam Prophetam Deus loquatur, & dicat, ſine cauſa colunt me docentes mandata, & doctrinas hominum. If only Chriſt muſt be heard, we may not waigh what any man hath thought good to doe that hath béene before vs, but what Chriſt hath firſt done that is before all men. For we may not follow the cuſtomes of man, but the truth of God, ſpecially for that God ſaith by the Prophet Eſay, They worſhip me in vaine, teaching the commandements and doctrines of men. Thus ye ſée euen by your owne Decrees, that cuſtome againſt the truth is a very ſimple ground to build vpon.

And like as ye vſe to ſay, Nullum tempus præſcribit Regi, Some thinketh of good right ye ought as well to ſay, Nullum tempus præſcribit Deo. Otherwiſe Antichriſt ſhall come, and ſit in poſſeſſion of the holy place, and beare himſelfe as if he were God, and that, God knoweth, how many hundred yeares together: and yet at the laſt he ſhall be but Antichriſt, ſit he neuer ſo high. For preſcription of an hundred yéares cannot make the falſhood to be the truth; nor can any preſcription be auailable in your owne law, vnleſſe it haue bonum titulum, and that in Religion muſt néeds be the word of God. Which word, foraſmuch as ye haue not to alledge (as ye your ſelfe know, no man better) all the face of your preſcription is but vaine, and therefore ye were, as I ſaid, poſſeſſores malæ fidei. And ye haue a ruls of your law, poſſeſſor malæ fidei, nulla temporis longinquitate præſcribit. And therefore Chriſt in the caſe of diuorce reſted not vpon the cuſtome that was then receiued, but appealed vnto the firſt inſtitution of Mariage, and told the Phariſies then, as we now tell you, à principio non fuit ſic, It was not ſo at the beginning.

Whereas ye ſay, I miſtake your law; I grant, it is poſſible I may ſo doe, as well as you; howbeit, I am well aſſured in this place I miſtake it not. I would to God you being a Doctour of the law did no worſe miſtake the Scriptures.

Sarum.

NOw if ye thinke ye haue wrong, ſhew your euidence out of the Scriptures, the Doctours, or Councels, that ye may haue your right againe and ſo reenter. I require you to no great paines, one good ſentence ſhall be ſufficient. Ye would haue your priuate Maſſe, the Biſhop of Romes Supremacy, the common prayers in an vnknowen tongue, and for defence of the ſame ye haue made no ſmall adoe: me thinketh it were reaſon ye ſhould bring ſome authority beſides your owne to auouch the ſame withall. Ye haue made the vnlearned people beléeue that ye haue all the Doctors, all the Councels, and fiftéene hundred yeares of your ſide. For your credits ſake, let not all theſe great vants come to nought.

Cole.

Cole.

I Enter no ſuite againſt you, and it were folly to ſhew my euidence vntill it may ſerue and take place. I craue only to be informed, which I can not obtaine. When I commence law againſt you, then this ſpæch may ſerue you to ſome purpoſe.

The Reply. Sarum.

IF you will not proſecute your ſuite, it is reaſon ye be caſt in a non-ſuite. But ye doe beſt to make a delay, for ye know ye haue to doe with them that haue ſæne your euidence.

Ye ſay ye kæpe your proofes vntill ſome better time, when they may ſerue, and take place. When Pompey, a noble Gentleman of Rome was marching forth to fight in the field againſt his enemy Iulius Cæſar, and Cato, an old graue Senatour, one of the ſame party, had ſhewed him he wanted men; Tuſh, quoth he, I ſhall haue men enow; for aſſone as I ſhall but ſtampe the ground with my foote, ye ſhall ſæ ſpring vp a ſwarme of Souldiers, afterward when the field was fought, and Pompey diſcomfited, and began to flie with much diſhonour; O ſir, ſaid Cato, where is now your promiſe? why ſtampe ye not the ground? when ſhall we ſæ your ſwarme of Souldiers? Euen ſo may I ſay to you, notwithſtanding your great vaunts that ye haue made; ye ſæ now ye are diſcomfited, ye ſæ the field is almoſt loſt: where are now your crakes of Doctours, and Councels? Why ſtampe ye not your bookes? why come ye not forth with your euidence? Now ye ſtand in næde of it, now it will ſerue and take place, if ye haue any. But ye learned this policy of your Tully: Scitum eſt, ſaith he, cauſam conijcere in tempus, cum adferre plura, cum velis, non queas: when ye haue no more to ſay, it is wiſdome to lay the fault in time.

Sarum.

WHere ye ſay, ye are in place of a learner, and gladly come to be taught, ye muſt pardon me to ſay the truth, I recken your very friends, in this point, will hardly beleæue you. For if ye were deſirous to learne, as ye would ſæme to be, ye would come to the Church, ye would reſort to the Leſſons, ye would abide to heare the Sermons; for theſe are the Schooles if a man liſt to learne. It is a token the Scholar ſetteth little by his booke, that will neuer be brought to Schoole.

Cole.

WHy I come not to your Sermons? This queſtion is captious: and yet ye are not herewith diſcharged why ye ſhould not inſtruct me. As men chuſe their wiues, ſo chuſe they their teachers. S. Auguſtines and S. Chryſoſtomes Sermons tend more to teach, than to conuince.

The Reply. Sarum.

I Meant not to be captious, but only to put you in remembrance that your pretence of learning is but feined, and that you are not indæd ſo willing to be taught, as ye would ſæme to be. Whenſoeuer ye ſhall ſhew me by your law, that a man may be required to proue a mære negatiue, I will be content to confer with you, and to ſhew you the reſt of my proofes.

Ye ſay, ye chuſe your teacher as men doe their wiues; many men are led by folly and fancy in chuſing their wiues. I would your lucke ſhould be better in chuſing your teacher. But S. Paul prophecied in his time, that there ſhould come Scholars with tickling eares, and chuſe themſelues teachers accoording to their owne appetites, that ſhould turne away their eares from the truth, and giue themſelues to the hearing of fables. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, there were ſcholars in his time that would ſay to their teachers, Loquimini nobis placentia, videte nobis errores. Auferte à nobis viam, declinate ſemitam, ceſſet à facie noſtra ſenectus Iſrael. That is, Speake to vs ſuch things as may like vs, ſæ to vs errours, lead vs out of the way, bring vs out of the path. Let vs haue no more of the holy God of Iſrael before our face. And ſhall I thinke you chuſe me for loue, as men doe their wiues? I can as yet litle finde it in your talke. But becauſe I came nære to the matter, and with my negatiue declared the weakenes of your ſide more than ſome others did, therefore ye breake out firſt vpon me, and laid in a claime without euidence, and hauing nothing to ſay ye would ſæme to haue ſome-what: as women that would ſæme to be with child ſometimes reare vp their bellies with a cuſhion.

WE ſtand not in caſe like. What nꝛd ſo much of one thing?

The Reply. Sarum.

YE are much beholden to your recogniſance; yͤ make much adoe, and yet bꝛing nothing.

YE call foꝛ the ſpeciall pꝛoofes of our doctrine, which thing requireth a whole booke. Whereas if yͤ of your part, would vouchſafe to bꝛing but two lines, the whole matter were concluded. 20

Cole.

ALL that I required may be couched in ſix lines, and foꝛ ought I ſͤe, in leſſe to.

The Reply. Sarum.

LEt the reſt of your trueth be tried by this. Yͤ know that the old father Theodoretus, had moꝛe than ſix lines of our ſide; and thereſoꝛe M. Clement tare the whole place out of his booke, and burnt it, thinking there had bͤne no moꝛe copies, leſt perhaps it ſhould come to light.

Yͤ know, that Occam, one of your owne Doctous, hath moꝛe than ſix lines againſt you. And thereſoꝛe the laſt Pope condemned him as an heretike.

Yͤ know, there is ſomewhat beſide in S. Auguſtine, in S. Hierome, in S. Chryſoſtome, ꝛc. I beleeue moꝛe than Royard, oꝛ Tapper, could euer anſwer.

Ye know, that ye your ſelfe in your laſt anſwer granted me, that the examples of the pꝛimitiue church are of our ſide, and thereſoꝛe yͤ reſt vpon an other point, that the Pꝛimitiue Church in the Apoſtles, and old Doctoꝛs time was but an infant and a babe in compariſon of your Church of Rome. Thereſoꝛe me thinketh, ſauing that it was your pleaſure, yͤ were ſomewhat ouerſeene to ſay, that all our allegations may be couched in ſix lines. IT is no diſcourteſie, to refuſe to doe that, wherewith I might foꝛget my recogniſance.

YOur recogniſance doth you good ſeruice to ſaue your credit: yͤ flie away like a ſaint ſouldiour, and yet hold vp your ſhield as if yͤ were fighting ſtill.

AGainſt your newe deuice of tranſubſtantiation (beſides many others, whom I now paſſe by) yͤ haue the old father, and doctour Gelaſius, whoſe iudgement, I beleeue, yͤ will regard the moꝛe, becauſe he was ſometimes a Biſhop of Rome, which Sͤe, as yͤ haue taught, can neuer erre. And is alledged in the decrees: his woꝛds bͤe plaine. Non deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia panis, & natura vini. 22

Cole.

I Sͤe well yͤ write much, and read little: Gelaſius is full anſwered by Tapper, in articulo de tranſubſtantiatione. Ye alledge his woꝛds otherwiſe than ye finde them. Which fault, I truſt, groweth of ouerſight.

The Reply. Serum.

HOw are yée so priuie to my reading? Wise men auouch no more than they know: yée lackt shift when yée were driuen to write thus. I assure you I haue not béene so slacke a student these twenty yéres, but that beside other old writers of diuers sorts Greeke & Latin, I haue not spared to read ouer, euen such as haue written of your side, as Roffensis, Pigghius, Hosmasterus, Echius, Hossius, & such others; and yet, vntill this day I neuer set abroad in Print twenty lines. But this is your old wont, to make the people thinke that we reade nothing else but two-pennie doctors, as ye call them. As in the disputation at Westminster, ye would séeme to stand in doubt, whether we were able to vnderstand you or no, when yée speake a little Latin: and as of late yée doubted not to say, that master doctour Martyr was not able to make a Syllogismus: which thing indéed, is as true, as the rest of your religion.

But I pray you, what had Steuen Gardiner read, when he alledged the third booke of S. Augustine, de Sermone Domini in monte, and yet S. Augustine neuer wrote but two?

What had the same Stephen Gardiner read, when he alledged Theophilactus, and called him Theophilus Alexandrinus, who was before Theophilactus well néere fiue hundred yéres?

What had doctour Smith of Oxon. read, that openly in the disputations there, Anno Dom. 1554. alledged the Councell of Nice to proue the phansie of your transubstantiation: and when he came to shew the place, was not able to finde one word, either in that Councell, or in any other of antiquitie, that might séeme to make for it?

What had he read, that being a Iudge in the same disputations cried out so bitterly vpon the man of God, the Archbishop of Canturburie, and that foure or fiue times together, Ostende mihi qualis corpus fuit? qualis corpus fuit? and was not able to vtter his minde in congrue Latin? This thing I trust, yée will record with me, for it was spoken in your owne hearing. D. Ogle thorp.

Your importunitie hath caused me, contrary to mine own nature, to vtter these things, which otherwise I could haue concealed. O, boast not your selfe too much of your great reading. When you bring me any old Doctour or Councell, for your purpose in the matters that we now talke of, then will I say yée haue read much.

As for Gelasius, howsoeuer it pleaseth D. Tapper to construe him, he saith plainly, that in the Sacrament there remaineth the substance, and nature of bread and wine. But yée say, I alledge Gelasius otherwise than I finde him, and héereof your friends haue made much adoe. I sée, it must be a very small fault that shall escape your eies. Gelasius words be these: Non desinit esse substantia panis, vel natura vini. Which words, hauing not the booke at hand, I reported thus: Non desinit esse substantia panis, & natura vini. I beseech you, how farre went I either from the words, or from the meaning of the authour? I sée it was not for nought, that children in the schooles were wont to finde a difference betwéen these two prepositions, Comedi bis panem, and bis panem comedi. But I perceiue the fault was such that yée were loth to make matter of it. If I had altered any part of the sense and meaning of the writer, I trow, I had béene like to heare more of it.

I remember what a clapping of hands, and stamping of féete, yée made at Oxon. against that notable godly learned man, the Archbishop of Canturburie, for that he, alledging a place out of S. Hilarie, had changed but one letter, and written, verò, in stead of verè: Yée triumphed ouer him, and pointed him to the people, and called him a falsarie, a wrester, a corrupter of the Doctors. And yet afterward it was found, and will yet appéere, that two of your owne Doctors, Steuen Gardiner, and Smith in their owne printed bookes had changed the same letter, and written, verò, aswell as hée.

Howbeit, God be thanked, yée will not giue me cause to finde such fault with your allegations, for yée are able to alledge nothing at all.

But it were too long to shew how many times, and how shamefully, the writers of your side haue corrupted the old Doctors. Yet for example sake, of a great number to shew you one or two, how thinke you by your doctor Pighius, that violently altereth both the words, and the meaning of S. Augustine? For where S. Augustine writeth thus, Quid tam grate offerri, aut ab illo suscipi potest, quàm caro sacrificij nostri, corpus effectum Sacerdotis nostri? meaning the Sacrifice that Christ offered vpon the Crosse: Pighius putteth in of his owne, A nobis, which S. Augustin had not, and made vp the sentence of this sort: Quid tam gratè offerri à nobis, aut ab illo suscipi potest, quàm caro sacrificij nostri, corpus effectum Sacerdotis nostri? and so perforce, turned it to the pretensed Sacrifice of your masse. De Trini. li. 4. cap. 14.

How thinke yée by Steuen Gardiner, that in his booke of the diuels Sophistrie, was not afraid to corrupt the words of the holy Prophet? For whereas Dauid had written: Es- cam dedit timentibus se, he doubled the Pronoune, and wrote it thus: Escam se dedit timentibus se. This must nedes appeare to be somewhat more than an vntruth. But what needeth mo examples? Camotensis a doctor of your owne, saith in generall of all your side: Vim faciunt Scripturis, vt habeant plenitudinem potestatis: they wrest, saith he, the Scriptures violently, that they may haue the fulnesse of their power.

Sarum.

BVt to auoid this authority, some mon, of your side, haue bene driuen to expound these plaine words of Gelasius, in this sort: Non desinit esse substantia, hoc est, non desinit esse accidens. Euen as right as the Glosse expoundeth the Text, Dist. 4. Statimus, id est, abrogamus. 23

Cole.

SHew what they are, that it be not thought that ye deuise this of your owne fantasie. This Glosse ye mislike because ye vnderstand not the Glossers meaning. It may stand full well.

The Reply. Sarum.

WHat if I should say Doctor Cole hath expounded it so? If not, then I pray you imagine with your selfe how ye may be able to shift away Gelasius otherwise. Yet because ye will nedes put me to my proofes, in a matter that ye knowis plaine, I pray you take the paines to read Steuen Gardiner, in his booke that is answered by the Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, ye shall finde these words: Gelasius, saith he, speaking of the Bread and Wine, reciteth not precisely the substance to remaine, but saith the substance or nature: which nature he calleth after the property. Hereby this Doctours minde, substantia is Latine for property. Which, as ye know, is nothing else but accidens.

And againe in his book that he calleth, Marcus Antonius Constantius, written in Latine, ye shall finde these words: Quod ait panem in sua substantia, vel natura manere, vel substantiam sentit Accidentium, vel naturæ proprietatem. It is a very strange phraise of speech to say substantia accidentium. But it is as strange to say, as he saith in another place, Accidentia sunt substantiarum partes. Howbeit after ye had once deuised a new religion, it was mete that ye should deuise out also some new phrases of speech, that neuer had bene heard of afore. And yet is not this the grossest part of your learning neither. Now I trust ye see I deuised not this of mine owne phantasie.

I maruel somewhat that ye say I vnderstand not the Glossers meaning. For me thinketh there is not so high nor mysticall learning in it, but that a meane learned man may some reach vnto it. But I see, it must be a desperate sore, but ye will finde some salue for it: I pray you first read the text, and then consider how handsomly the Glosse will frame vnto it. The text is this: Statuimus, vt septem hebdomadas plenas ante sanctum Pascha, omnes Clerici, id est, in sortem Domini vocati à carne ieiunent. Now followeth your Glosse: Statuimus, id est, abrogamus. And because ye vnderstand the Glosse better than I, as ye say, and like it so well, read the text accordingly, and say thus: Abrogamus vt septem hebdomadas plenas ante sanctum Pascha, omnes clerici à carne ieiunent. And I beleeue whatsoeuer meaning ye make of it, ye shall make but vnhandsome Latine. Now let your Reader iudge, whether of vs two better vnderstandeth the Glossers meaning.

Sarum.

HEere ye haue, that after the words of consecration, there remaineth in the Sacrament the substance of bread and wine. Now bring ye but one Doctour that will say, as ye say, that there remaineth onely the Accidents, and shewes of bread and wine, and I will yeld. 24

Cole.

SOft and faire, ye haue not read the Answer. Read Royard, and ye shall see more. At my cue I shall be ready for you.

The Reply. Sarum.

IF Royards answer had bene worth the hearing, ye would not haue bene ashamed to haue alledged his words. At your cue you will be as ready, as S. George a horsebacke, euermore riding, and yet euermore standing still; ye will be a very euill Auditour, that lay downe ſo little, and reckon ſo much. But bring ſome old Councell, or Doctour, with you at your cue, or elſe folke will ſay, ye haue none to bring.

Sarum.

AS touching a priuate maſſe, Gregorie ſaith in his Dialogues, that before the time of the Communion, the Deacon was wont, euen in his time, to crie vnto the people on this wiſe: Qui non communicat, locum det alteri: Whoſo will not receiue, let him depart, and giue place to others.

Cole.

YE haue better ſtuffe than this, I trow, for this is ſomewhat weake.

The Reply. Sarum.

WHatſoeuer this ſtuffe ſéemeth to you, your anſwer ſéemeth to me verie weake. If ye be no better able to anſwer this, how will ye be able to anſwer the reſt? It appeareth by theſe words of S. Gregorie, that in his time, which was ſix hundred yéeres after Chriſt, whoſo would not communicate with the Prieſt, at the Communion, was commanded out of the Church. Whereby it is cléere they had then a Communion, and that all the congregation preſent, receiued together. Now either ſhew yée me ſo much for your priuate maſſe, or elſe ſay no more, this ſtuffe is weake.

Sarum.

TO breake the ordinance of Chriſt, and the people to communicate vnder one kinde onely, your owne Doctor Gelaſius calleth it Sacrilegium. And Theophilus Alexandrinus of the ſame matter, writeth thus: Si Chriſtus mortuus fuiſſet pro Diabolo, non negaretur illi poculum ſanguinis.

Cole.

THe Decrées where ye learned this of Gelaſius, telleth you how yée ſhould vnderſtand it. Theophilus ſhall be anſwered, when I come to diſpute with you.

The Reply. Sarum.

HEre, I trow, your memory deceiued you; yée meane the gloſſe, and not the Decrée. For the words of Gelaſius in the Decrée are plaine: Diuiſio vnius eiuſdémque myſterij ſine grandi ſacrilegio non poteſt peruenire. And the words that he vſeth farther: vt integra Sacramenta percipiant, aut ab integris arceantur: ſéeme not ſo much to pertaine to the Prieſts as to the people. But yée did well to turne ouer Theophilus vntill ſome other time, for I wéene ye had no anſwer ready made.

Sarum.

THat the Common praiers were vſed in the common knowen tong, yée haue S. Baſil, S. Hierom, S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtom, and the Emperor Iuſtinian, and many others. The places be knowen.

Cole.

WHether the Gréeke, and Latin tongs, were then vnderſtood of the common people remaineth yet vpon proofe: well, I trow, S. Baſil approueth not very well. Héere I remaine ſtill in doubt.

The Reply. Sarum.

I Maruell much that any learned man ſhould doubt at this. For if the common Gréeke people vnderſtood not the Gréeke tong, nor the common Latine people, the Latine tong, then would I faine know what tong they vnderſtood? I can ſée no great cauſe why they ſhould forget their owne tong, and learne another. But Arnobius in his time called the Latin tong, Sermonem Italum, becauſe it was vſed throughout all Italy.

S. Ambroſe in his time, preached to the people of Italy in Latine, and as it is to be thought, the people vnderſtood him.

S. Auguſtine, in his Sermons to the common people in Aphrica, hath diuers times theſe words: Nunc loquar Latinè vt omnes intelligatis: Now will I ſpeake Latin, ſaith S. Auguſtine Auguſtine, to the common people, that yée may all vnderſtand me. S. Gregory in his Sermons vſed the Latine tongue to the people: and I trow he ſpake not all in vaine. I marueil why ye doubt not aſwell, whether the common Greeke people vnderſtood Demoſthenes, or Æſchines: or the common Latine people vnderſtood Cicero, or Hortenſius, when they ſpake vnto them in their mother tongue.

Now, that the common prayers, in S. Baſils, S. Ambroſe, and S. Auguſtines time were in the common vulgar tongue, marke how well it may be proued.

S. Baſil ſaith thus of the vſage of the common prayer in his time: Coniunctus ſonus virorum, mulierum, paruulorum, tanquam fluctus ferientis littora, in noſtris ad Deum precibus excitatur: In our prayers that we make to God, we raiſe vp ſuch a ſound of the voices of men, women, and children praying together, as if it were the noiſe of the waues beating againſt the ſea bankes. Whereby it appeareth, that in S. Baſils time, men, women, and children, ſang in the Churches altogether.

Chryſoſtome of his time ſaith thus: Ne mireris, ſi in ſacris noſtris, populus, cum Sacerdote colloquatur: Maruell not, ſaith he, if that in our prayers the Prieſt and the people talke together.

Auguſtine of his time ſaith thus: Non eſt opus loquutione cum oramus, id eſt, ſonantibus verbis, niſi forte ſicut Sacerdotes faciunt, ſignificandæ mentis ſuæ cauſa, non vt Deus, ſed vt homines audiant: We néede not, ſaith he, to vſe words, or ſound of voice when we pray, vnleſſe it be as the Prieſts doo, to declare their meaning; not to the intent that God may therfore heare them, but that they may be heard of men.

But, becauſe ye be a Doctour of Law, I would not haue you forget Iuſtinian the Emperour, the firſt compiler of your Lawes. He, if ye be remembred, commanded the Biſhops that they ſhould ſet forth the common prayers in open voice, and that, as he ſaith, Vt maiori deuotione audientium animi efferantur: That is, that the mindes of the hearers may be ſtricken with more deuotion. He thought then that the vnderſtanding of the prayers ſhould enkindle deuotion in the hearts of the hearers. For I beléeue, he had neuer heard ſay, that ignorance ſhould be the cauſe of true deuotion, as ye boldly auouched in the diſputation at Weſtminſter, in the hearing and wondering of the moſt part of the honourable and worſhipfull of this Realme. I know not by what ſecret reuelation ye learned this firſt. For your owne Councels ſay, Ignorantia mater eſt cunctarum errorum. That is to ſay, Ignorance is the mother of all maner errours. And the ſame words ye haue alleaged in your owne Decrées, Diſtin. 38. and are very agréeable vnto Chriſts words in the Goſpell: Erratis neſcientes Scripturas; Ye are in erreur, becauſe ye vnderſtand not the Scriptures.

Origenes one of the oldeſt Doctours of the Church, ſaith thus: Tormentum eſt Diabolo, ſi quem videat legere ſacras literas: poſſidet enim omnes qui verſantur in ignorantia: It is a ſcourge (ſaith he) and a torment to the Diuell, if he ſée any man read the Scriptures: for he hath power vpon all them that remaine in ignorance.

S. Cyril ſaith: Pueri noſtri legunt ſacras literas, & ex eo fiunt religioſiſſimi: Our children, ſaith he, read Scriptures, and thereof they become deuout and holy.

And what néedeth mo allegations? Your owne Doctour Lyra, ſaith: Si populus intelligat rationem Sacerdotis, melius reducitur in Deum, & maiori deuotione reſpondet, Amen. That is, If the people vnderſtand the Prieſt, they are better brought to God, and with more deuotion they anſwer, Amen.

It muſt néeds be a miſerable cauſe that is grounded only vpon ignorance; for no man hateth the light, but he that doth euill. Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſies, This is your time, and the power of darkneſſe. If the people had vnderſtanding of the truth, they would not ſuffer you thus to lead them into error as ye doe, and haue done. But I remember Plinius writeth, that, notwithſtanding the Lion be a marueilous fierce and courageous beaſt, yet if ye may once hoodwincke him, or make him blind, ye may lead him whither ye liſt. Thus much by the way I thought good to put you in remembrance, for that the ſtrangeneſſe of your doctrine ſo required: if ye had aſmuch to ſhew of your ſide, I beléeue, of your courteſie ye would not hide it.

Sarum.

YE ſée I diſaduantage my ſelfe of many things that might be ſpoken: for at this preſent I haue not leiſure to write Bookes.

Cole.

I Pray you take good leiſure, and write effectually.

The Reply. Sarum.

A Doctour of Law, and a man of wisedome should bring more learning, and fewer scornes.

Sarum.

NOw must I needes desire you, forasmuch as I haue followed your minde so farre, either to bring me one Doctour of your side, or else to giue vs leaue to thinke ye haue none.

Cole.

I Wis, ye know I may not, nor the case I stand in, requireth it not.

The Reply. Sarum.

I wis, ye know ye can not, and therefore ye doe best to say ye may not.

Sarum.

YE desire vs to leaue talking against you, and no more to deale so vnmercifully with you in the Pulpits. Alas master Doctour, call ye this vnmercifull dealing? What was then your dealing, when ye were in place? If ye remember, ye could neuer vouchsafe to call vs other than Schismatikes, Heretikes, or Traitours, in your Pulpits; and yet besides all that, ye vsed our bodies as ye know. We only tell the people, as our duetie is, that ye withstand the manifest truth, and yet haue neither Scripture, nor Doctour, nor Councell for you: and that ye haue shewed such extremity, as the like hath not beene seene, and now can giue no reckning why; or if ye can, let it appeare.

Cole.

YE misreport me. I said, if men of your side vsed themselues traiterously to Queene Mary, as none of vs doe now, not manifest, vntill it be better proued, ye had but the Law: ye require more than any Law will beare against vs.

The Reply. Sarum.

IF they were Traytours, why did ye burne them as Heretikes? The matter would be too odious to shew what hath beene wrought by men of your side against their Princes. But as I then neuer liked them that drew their sword against their Soueraigne, euen so now I pray God confound them, whosoeuer they be, that shall first begin the same.

What Law ye ministred vs in those daies, I remit it vnto you that are a Lawyer. But I am well assured, ye shewed vs neither diuinity, nor humanity. But I pray you, what Law had ye to imprison such euen as had broken no Law? and so to keepe them in your Cole-houses, in stockes and fetters, with all extremity and cruelty, vntill ye had made a Law for them, and to doe with them, as Cyril saith the Iewes did with Christ; Primùm ligant, deinde causas in eum quærunt: priùs captum habent, quàm accusatum. First, they bind him fast, saith Cyril, and then they deuise matter against him: They lay hands vpon him before any man accuse him.

What Law had ye to burne the Queenes subiects hands with candles, or torches, before they were condemned to die by any Law?

What Law had ye to ascite a man to appeare, Peremptorie, at Rome within fourescore daies, and yet that notwithstanding to keepe him still in prison in Oxford? and afterward for not appearing at his day, at Rome, to condemne him there as obstinate?

Or what Law had ye to put the same man to death against the expresse words of your owne Law after he had subscribed vnto you, and was found in no relapse? I trust ye can say somewhat herein, for that you being then a Lawyer, and in commission, had the execution of the law. But I beleeue, when ye haue searched your bookes thorow, ye shall finde ye had not so much law, as they that said, Nos habemus legem, & secundùm legem debet mori.

Sarum.

WHere ye say, our doctrine is yet in doubt; I assure you, to vs it is most certaine, and out of doubt. But if ye for your part be yet in doubt, reason and charity would ye had bene better resolued, and quite out of doubt, before ye had dealt so vnmercifully with your brethren.

Cole.

I Doubted more than I doe now: ye giue me good cause to be well confirmed.

The Reply. Sarum.

THis is a faire shift of Rhetorike when other helpe faileth you. Euen thus the Phariſes after they had bene long in a mammering, and in doubt of Christ, at the last were fully confirmed and out of doubt, and said vnto him, Iam ſcimus te habere demonium. As if they should then haue said vnto Christ, as you say now to vs: We doubted more before than we doe now, for now ye giue vs good cause to be well confirmed. But if I haue confirmed you, bringing ſuch proues as ye are not able to answer, how then (think ye) haue others cause to be confirmed at your hands, that haue vsed ſuch extremity, and yet are able to bring nothing at all?

Sarum.

YE are bound, ye say, and may not dispute: yet are ye not so bound as ye haue bound others. But when ye were at liberty, and a free disputation was granted and offered at Weſtminſter before the Queenes Maieſties most honorable Counsell, and the whole State of the Realme, I pray you whether part was it that then gane ouer? And yet then, ye know, ye were not bound, vnleſſe it were to silence, becauſe ye had nothing to say. 52

Cole.

AT Weſtminſter we came to dispute, and were answered, that there was none appointed, where we refused not to write neither. But when our booke could not be read as yours was, we refused not vtterly to diſpute, but only in the caſe, if our booke could not be ſuffered to be read as indifferently as yours was. Now hardly weigh whether ye haue indifferently reported, that we vtterly refused to diſpute with you, or no.

The Reply. Sarum.

YE could not lightly haue gotten ſo many vntruths together without ſome ſtudy. Where ye say, ye were answered, there was no disputation appointed at Weſtminſter; If I ſhould aſke you who made you that answer, I reckon ye would be to ſeeke. For I truſt ye haue not yet forgotten, that ye your ſelfe were the firſt man that began to diſpute there that day, and ſpake there an whole houre together without interruption. But I marueil ye say not, that we of our part gaue you ouer, and refuſed to diſpute.

Ye say, ye refuſed not to write your allegations and answers, as ye had promiſed to do, and earneſtly required it might be ſo, and yet contrary to your requeſt and promiſe, ye could not be gotten, as ye know, to write one line.

Ye say, your booke could not be read as ours was; and yet ye know ye had no booke there to be read at all, as we had.

As for the indifferent ordering and hearing of the matters, I remit that to them that were the orders of it, of whom ye can not in any wiſe complaine, but both your owne, and the hearers conſciences muſt needs accuſe you.

The order of the diſputation was, that both parts ſhould the firſt day bring in their aſſertion all in writing, and that the next day either party ſhould answer the others booke, and that alſo by writing, which was your owne requeſt, as it will appeare by your proteſtation ſent to the Counſell in that behalfe. The firſt day, ye came without any booke at all, contrary to the order taken, and alſo, as I haue ſaid, to your owne requeſt. The ſecond day, ye refuſed to proceede any farther, and ſtod onely vpon this point: that vnleſſe ye might haue the laſt word, ye would not diſpute. For ye ſaid, whoſoeuer might haue that, were like to diſcedere cum applauſu: for theſe very words two of your owne company vttered in Latin, euen by the ſame termes as I doe now; otherwiſe ye ſaid ye would not diſpute. Which answer was ſo vaine, that not only the reſt of the hearers, but alſo the Biſhop that then was, of Yorke, your owne friend, found fault with it, and was aſhamed of it, and bad you proceed. In concluſion, contrary to all mens looking for, only vpon your refuſal, the diſputation was ſuddenly broken off. And I am content to ſtand to the iudgement of all the hearers herein, whether I haue reported indifferently, or no.

Sarum.

YE say, ye remaine still in the faith ye were baptised in. O master Doctour, stand not too much vppon that point. Ye know ye haue already forsaken a great number of things that were thought necessary when ye were baptised. And yet besides that, how many times haue some of you altered your faith within the space of twenty yeres? Remember well your selfe, who wrote the booke de vera obedientia, against the Supremacy of Rome? * Who commended it with his Preface? * Who set it forth in solemne Sermons? * Who confirmed it with open oath?

* Boner.
* Tunstall.
and almost all the rest.

Cole.

WHat one thing am I gone from? ye say much, and proue little. Ye meane the old Bishop of Winchester, who repented at the houre of his death. And where ye meane I condescended to the Primacy of king Henry at my first comming home, or I had laboured the matter, ye did the like your selfe. For in Quene Maries time ye subscribed to the Articles, some of them we are entred to talke in, to your no lesse blame than mine. There be in this towne that both saw you subscribe, and can bring forth your hand.

The Reply. Sarum.

YEs, I thinke ye are gone from one thing at the least, besides Pardons, and Pilgrimages. I meant not Doctour Gardiner to pull him out of his graue, and to torment him being dead, as ye did Maister Bucer, Maister Fagius in Cambridge, Doctour Peter Martyrs wife in Oxford, and others more: but only that I would not haue you build too much vpon your constancy, which hitherto hath beene found to be euen as the pleasure of the Prince.

But he repented him, ye say, when he saw he should needes die. I trust he did so, for he had good cause so to doe. But if he repented himselfe of his booke that he had written so stoutly against the Pope, why did he not recant it in all his life time? why did he not reuoke his errour openly? why held he his peace? why dissembled he so deeply for the space of twenty yeres together?

Ye say, it was only at your first cumming home from Italy, that ye condescended to the Primacy of King Henry. Here must I put you in remembrance that ye continued therein still all King Henries time out, euen vntill the death of King Edward, and the comming in of Quene Mary. And if her Grace had continued out to haue entituled her selfe the Supreme head of the Church of England, as she did a great while after her first entry, and that (as it is to be thought) without burthen of her conscience, I doubt not then but ye would haue talkt better with your selfe, and continued so still. All this meane while ye came to the Church, ye said and heard the common prayers, ye ministred, and receiued the Communion, and in all your doings bare your selfe as any other subiect of this realme. And thus held out, as I said, for the space of twenty yeres: I may say to you, this was a good long comming home. Therefore I may well thus conclude, and ye must needes confesse the same, that either ye deceiued the people then by your example, and conformity of all your doings, allowing that religion for good, which in your conscience ye knew to be naught; or els that ye be a dissembler, and deceiue the people now, making them, asmuch as in you lieth, by your example, to thinke this religion to be naught, which in your conscience and knowledge ye find to be godly and good. So that whatsoeuer iudgement ye haue now, or heretofore haue had of this religion, it must needs appeare, that either ye be now, or els haue been a deceiuer of the people. But after ye had laboured the matter better, and, as ye say, had read the Doctours, I pray you what Doctour found ye, that euer told you, either that the Pope ought to haue the supremacy of the whole Church, or that the Prince in his owne Church ought not to haue it?

But I haue subscribed, ye say, aswell as ye, and my hand is to be seene, and there be some that saw me when I did it. These proues were needfull, if I had denied the fact. But I haue confessed it openly, and vnrequired, in the midst of the congregation. The arguments that ye made were so terrible; ye concluded altogether with fire and fagot. I confesse I should haue done otherwise: But if I had not done, as I did, I had not been here now to encounter with you: if ye should now be apposed with the like conclusions, I doubt not but ye would be glad to doe, as both ye your selfe, and your fellowes haue done heretofore.

Sarum.

Sarum.

YE haue Ecclesiam Apostolicam, ye say, and we haue none: yet ye know in all these matters that we now intreate of, we haue the old Doctours Church, the ancient Councels Church, the Primatiue Church, Saint Peters Church, Saint Pauls Church, and Christs Church. And this I beleeue, vnlesse ye can bring me good reason to the contrarie, may be called the Apostles Church. And I maruell much, that ye hauing, as ye know, none of all these Churches, or any shadow or token of them; yet should so boldly say, ye haue Ecclesiam Apostolicam. 34.

Cole.

TO this, and some part of the Article, ye shall be answered in the end of this writing, as I before said.

Sarum.

WHere ye say, ye make no innouations, it is no marueil; for in a manner all things were altered to your hand, as may most euidently appeare by all these matters that be now in question. Wherein ye haue vtterly changed and abolished the order of the Primatiue Church, and doe nothing else but the contrary. And what euident profit the Church of God hath gotten by it, I thinke it a hard matter for you to declare. 35

Cole.

WHat needeth so much of one thing? This seemeth you to seeme to say too much.

The Reply. Sarum.

THis answer is so short, that it concludeth nothing.

Sarum.

YE would haue the matter turned ouer to some such generall Councell as we would be content to stand vnto; howbeit, that ye thinke will not be in your time. Notwithstanding, this I dare boldly say, such a Councell will be, a great while before ye shall finde any Doctour, or old Councell to serue your purpose. But if there neuer be such a Councel, yet truth will be truth notwithstanding. For the Councel cannot make falshood truth, but that thing that it taketh for truth, it certifieth only to be true. 36

I Grant.

Sarum.

BVt what redresse can there be loked for at such a Councell, whereas no man shall be Iudge, or suffered to speake one way or other, but only such as be openly, and iustly accused, and found faulty? and whereas he that is himselfe most out of order, shall be head and reformer of the whole? 37

SVch fond excuses men lay: how true, let other men iudge.

The Reply. Sarum.

YE know, that in your owne law there was euermore Exceptio Iudicis incompetentis. And by what law can ye finde, that a man may be a competent Iudge in his owne cause? If the indifferent vsing of the matter may be tried by experience, in this your last generall Councel holden at Trident, ye know, that not one man of our side, notwithstanding there were a great number of them there, sent thither of purpose by their Princes, could be suffered to sit among the rest, or to haue a voice, or to yéld a reason of his faith. And Pope Iulius the third, gaue out vnder his breefe, that none of them all should be heard there, vnlesse it were, as he said, to recant their errours.

And notwithstanding Pighius himselfe had confessed there were open errours in the Masse: notwithstanding Latomus, a Doctour of your owne, had confessed a great abuse in the Communion vnder one kind: notwithstanding Pius the second, Bishop of Rome, had seene and confessed great abuse in the restraining of Priests mariage: yet in the same Councell they concluded among themselues, that no maner of thing should be changed at all that had bæn once receiued in theire Church. Therefore these be not fond excuses, the world seith they be too true.

Sarum.

BOth parties, ye say, haue waded so farre herein, that now they can go no farther, and therefore ye would haue either party let other alone. This ye say now because ye see ye are called to an audit, and are not able to make your account. But if ye of your part had bæne so indifferent when time was, many a godly man had now bæne aliue.

Cole.

YE forget your selfe, I say not so pardy: loke better in the place.

The Reply. Sarum.

IF ye meant not so, it skilleth not greatly, it is to small purpose: consider it well, and ye shall finde my conclusion true.

Sarum.

WHere ye say, ye would haue the sayings of both parties weighed by the balance of the old Doctours, ye see, that is our speciall request vnto you. And that in the matters you writ of, I desire euen so to be tried. But why throw ye away these balance? and being so often times required, why be ye so loth to shew forth but one old Doctour of your side? Ye make folke beleue ye would not haue the matter come to triall: onely ye set forth the empty names of Saint Augustine, of S. Hierome, of S. Chrysostome, of S. Basil, of S. Cyprian, of Tertullian, of Ireneus, of Dionysius, of the Councels, &c. as the Apothecaries set forth their painted Boxes, and oftentimes nothing in them. Ye shew me only the names of the Doctours which I knew before, but ye shew me not one word in them of the priuate Masse, or of the rest of the matters that lie betweene vs. If ye could haue found any thing in them for your purpose, I beleue ye would not haue brought them empty.

Ye say, all these matters be already determined. But where I pray you? or in what Generall Councel? This is it that I would so glady know at your hand, and that, ye say, ye haue, and yet so vngently kepe it from me.

Cole.

THen begin, if ye thinke the time will serue, or put it ouer till another time. All these be but words often repeated, and answered already.

The Reply. Sarum.

I Haue offered and begun in vaine, for ye kepe your selfe off, and will not come to answer. These words I grant haue bæne vpon good occasion oftentimes repeated, and I thinke ye would say somewhat to them, if ye were able.

Sarum.

YE say, I slanderously misreport the late Councell of Constance. O good master Doctour, these words sauour too much of your choler, and might better haue bæn spared. I spake more fauourably of that Councell than I might haue done. The words of the Councell be these, speaking namely of the Communion vnder both kinds: Pertinaciter asserentes oppositum, tanquam Hæretici arcendi sunt. By these words, they that maintaine the manifest ordinance of Christ, and the practise of the Apostles, are not called Schismatikes, as I said, but stubborne and wilfull Heretikes. Ye see therefore, my report was more fauourable, than the Councell deserued.

Cole.

YE say, the Councell of Constance openly pronounced against Christ. Wherein I pray you? Because the Fathers there said, Whoso saith it is of necessity to receiue vnder both kinds, and the approued custome of the Church is Sacrilege, is to be taken as an Heretike; and yet none Heretike, but in a wrong opinion. Then belike ye can bring in some text, where Christ commanded it should not be receiued but vnder both kinds, which ye ran neuer doe: ſo is your report of this Councell ſlanderous ſtill. Read 4. Canonem Concilij Conſtantienſis.

The Reply. Sarum.

IT grieueth you that I ſhould ſay, the Councell decréd againſt Chriſt: but conſider it aright, and ye ſhall finde it. Chriſt as ye know, appointed the Communion vnder both kinds, and commanded his Diſciples to doe the ſame as he had done it. Therefore hee that commandeth the contrary, and that vnder the paine of hereſie, pronounceth openly againſt Chriſt.

Ye call it an approued cuſteme of the Church. Yet remember S. Cyprians words that be alledged in your owne Decrées: Chriſtus non dicit, ego ſum conſuetudo, ſed ego ſum veritas: that is to ſay, Chriſt ſaith not, I am cuſtome, but I am the truth. But if cuſtome might iuſtly preuaile againſt an open and plaine truth, I pray you where was your Communion vnder one kind euer at any time, ſince the beginning of the world, allowed for a generall cuſtome? Or being but a particular cuſtome, as it is, and that receiued only of your ſelfe, in what generall Councell was it euer allowed?

Ye ſay, your owne ordinances may not be broken without the authority of a generall Councell. And dare ye without any ſuch authority, only vpon a vaine and particular cuſtome, to breake the vniuerſall ordinance of Chriſt?

Ye ſay, men are not to be iudged heretikes that withſtand your order herein, but only to be in a wrong opinion. Héere I ſée that ye and your brethren agrée not in iudgement both together, and therefore ye ſhall the leſſe maruell, if we diſagrée from you, and miſtruſt you both. For Hoſius, a Doctour of your ſide, is not afraid to call it hereſie, and ſacrilege: his words be plaine.

Nunc hæreſin profert, ſeque pollicetur oſtenſurum, omnes eſſe impios, qui vtriuſque ſpeciei communionem laicis denegant. And againe: An autem idem in Regno tuo factum non vidimus? vbi Calix per ſummum ſacrilegium vſurpatur? And againe: Vellem autem vnam mihi terram aliquam oſtendi, vbi priuata libidine, calix vſurpari cœptus eſt, in qua non è veſtigio multæ ſint aliæ & quidem horribiles hæreſes conſequutæ. Thus, to doe that thing that Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and all the old Fathers did in the Primitiue Church, without exception, this Doctour concludeth it to be an horrible hereſie.

And if it were taken for no Hereſie, as ye ſay it was not, then was your Councell to much to blame that gaue ſo cruell ſentence againſt the people of Bohemia, for that they thought it neceſſary to vſe both kinds, according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, and pronounced thus againſt them, Tanquam Hæretici arcendi ſunt. For if they take them for no Heretikes, they did them great wrong to puniſh them as Heretikes. And yet is your Doctour Hoſius to much to blame, to condemne any thing for hereſie, without any word of God, and ſpecially without the authority of any old Doctor, or any generall Councel.

Ye aſke me what text I can bring forth, wherein Chriſt commanded that the Communion ſhould be receiued vnder both kinds. The inſtitution of Chriſt, and his commandement thereunto annexed, as me thinketh, is text good enough to him that will be ruled by Chriſt. I will not aſke ye, what text ye can bring wherein Chriſt hath commanded you to miniſter the Communion in one kind. But this only would I know, what text ye can bring, whereby a Prieſt miniſtring the Sacrament, is commanded to receiue it in both kinds, more than any other Lay-man. I know your anſwer; ye muſt nedes ſay, the inſtitution of Chriſt. And yet by your owne interpretation, if a Prieſt communicate himſelfe vnder one kind, Gelaſius calleth it Sacrilegium; which thing I recken he would not haue ſaid, if he had not thought it contrary to the open words and inſtitution of Chriſt.

Againe, what text can ye bring, whereby as touching this point the Prieſt hath any priuiledge aboue the people? If ye can find none, as indeed ye ſhal neuer be able, then that that is ſacriledge in the Prieſt, is alſo ſacriledge in the people.

Againe, what text can ye bring, whereby Chriſt hath preciſely forbidden any man to baptiſe onely in the name of the Holy Ghoſt? vndoubtedly ye can finde none in all the Scriptures, but only Chriſts inſtitution. And yet whoſoeuer would decrée that ſuch kind of Baptiſme ſhould be vſed, I trow ye would ſay he decréd againſt Chriſt, becauſe hee breaketh the inſtitution of Chriſt.

Euen ſo doth your Councell of Conſtance in the matter we laſt talkt of. Therefore my words are true ſtill, and yet ye (ye muſt giue me leaue to ſay the truth) haue concluded with a ſlander.

Touching the thing it ſelfe, ye are ſo certaine of it, that none of you all can tell at what time it firſt began. But this ye know well, if ye liſt to be knowen of it, that it began neither in Chriſts time, nor in the Apoſtles time, nor in the old Doctors time, nor within the compaſſe compaſſe of ſeuen hundred yéeres after Chriſt. And therefore if a man ſhould aſke you of your Communion vnder one kind; De cœlo eſt, an ex hominibus? yée muſt néedes anſwer, it came not from heauen, foraſmuch as it hath no teſtimony of Gods word, but onely crept in (as Steuen Gardiner confeſſeth) by a ſuperſtitious negligence in the people.

Sarum.

WHere yée ſay, ye could neuer yet finde the error of one generall Councel, I trow this eſcaped you, for default of memory. Albertus Pigghius, the greateſt learned man of your ſide, hath found out ſuch errors to our hands, namely, in his booke that he calleth, Eccleſiaſtica Hierarchia, ſpeaking of the ſecond Councell holden at Epheſus, which yée cannot deny but it was generall, and yet toke part with the Heretike, Abbat Eutyches, againſt the godly man, Flauianus: he writeth thus; Concilia vniuerſalia, etiam congregata legitimè, vt benè, ita perperam, iniuſtè, impiéq; iudicare ac definire poſſunt: that is, generall Councels, yea euen ſuch as be lawfully ſummoned, as they may conclude things well, ſo may they likewiſe iudge and determine things rathly, vniuſtly and wickedly.

Cole.

YE ground your ſelfe vpon Pigghius errour: for Pigghius holdeth the Councell of Epheſus was generall, which the Councell of Chalcedon denieth. So that I maruell much herein of you, that ye alleage that for a Councell, which hath no place in the booke of Councels.

The Reply. Sarum.

IN Pigghius words there are two things to be noted. The one is, that he ſaith a generall Councell may erre in faith: The other, that he ſaith, the ſecond Councell of Epheſus was generall. And foraſmuch as ye challenge him onely for the latter, I thinke yée will agrée with him in the firſt; which to my purpoſe is ſufficient.

But héere yée cauſe me to maruell, what ye meane to make ſo little account of Pigghius: for he, as ye know, hath béene taken for the chiefeſt champion of your ſide.

Pigghius ſaith, the Councel of Epheſus was generall; and ye ſay it was not ſo. Ye muſt giue mée leaue to ſay the truth, if the matter come to a, quid dicunt, Pigghius, will be taken in the country for a man aſwell learned, and as ſkilfull in the Councels, as Doctour Cole, Ye ſhould not ſo little eſtéeme the doctours of your owne ſide, leſt that being not able to alleage any old Doctor, and refuſing the new, it may happily be thought ye haue neither old, nor new. And yet when ye were before the Quéenes Maieſties Commiſſioners, at Lambeth, ye ſaid openly there, that Pigghius is full of errours. But foraſmuch as ye your ſelfe haue begun to finde fault with your owne Doctors, I truſt héereafter ye will the better beare with vs, if we ſometime ſhall doe the ſame. Héere ye driue me to vſe the moe words, partly to defend Pigghius in his right, and partly to make you ſée how wilfully ye withſtand an open truth, hauing ſo little to the contrary. And as ye ſhall be found true in this, euen ſo am I well content to take you in all the reſt.

Firſt Nicephorus, and Euagrius, that write the whole ſtory and order of the Councel of Epheſus, neuer denied it to be generall.

Theodoſius the Emperour, that ſummoned the Biſhops together, as it may appeare by his words, toke it to be generall. For thus he writeth to the Councell: Cogitantes non eſſe tutum abſque veſtra ſancta Synodo, & vbique ſanctarum Eccleſiarum Præſulibus, huiuſmodi quæſtionem de fide renouari, neceſſarium duximus veſtram ſanctitatem conuenire. Theſe words, Sanctarum Eccleſiarum, quæ vbique ſunt, import a generality of all Churches throrow the world. Farther, there was the Emperours authority, the Biſhop of Romes Legate; which, as ſome men thinke, maketh vp all together, and other Biſhops of all Nations. And how could ſuch a Councell not be generall?

Your Doctours of Pariſe, haue concluded thus, Articulo xxij. Quod autem magiſtri noſtri dicunt de legitima congregatione, notandum eſt ad hoc, vt Concilium legitimè congregetur, ſufficere, quòd ſolemnitas & forma iuris ſolemniter ſit ſeruata. Quia ſi quis trahere vellet hoc in diſputationem, vtrùm prælati, qui ibi ſedent, habeant rectam intentionem: & vtrùm ſint docti, & vtrùm habeant ſcientiam ſacrarum literarum, & animum obediendi ſanæ doctrinæ, eſſet proceſſus in infinitum. That is to ſay; Whereas our Doctours ſpeake of a lawful Councel, we muſt marke, that to this, that the Councell be lawfully gathered, it ſhall be ſufficient that the ſolemnity, and forme of law be ſolemnly obſerued. For if we ſhould moue queſtion, whether the Biſhops that ſit in Councel, haue a godly meaning, and whether they be learned, and whether they haue vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, and whether they minde to ſubmit themſelues to ſound doctrine, then ſhould we neuer haue done. Thus it is decred by your Doctors, that neither godly meaning, nor learning, nor knowledge of the Scriptures, nor obedience vnto ſound doctrine, is to be ſtaighed in the Biſhops that rule the Councell, but onely a certaine ſolemnity, and forme of law. Dioſcorus, that was Preſident of the ſame Councell, and his words be reported in the Councell of Chalcedon, ſaith thus: Theodoſius confirmauit omnia quæ iudicata ſunt à ſancta & vniuerſali Synodo generali: Theodoſius, ſaith he, hath confirmed all ſuch things as were determined by this vniuerſal and generall Councell.

Here ye ſee, it is called an vniuerſall, and a generall Councell. And afterward in the ſame Councell of Chalcedon, ye ſhall finde theſe words: Sanctiſſimo, & Domino amantiſſimo, vniuerſali Synodo congregatæ in Epheſo metropoli: To the holy, beloued vnto the Lord, the vniuerſall Councell gathered in the mother City of Epheſus.

But if perhaps ye doubt of theſe words, becauſe the one was Eutyches, the other was Dioſcorus, by whom they were ſpoken (howbeit notwithſtanding they were heretikes, yet could they not lightly make an open lie in a matter that was ſo euident) then read ye the old Father Liberatus, that was Archidiaconus Carthaginenſis, and liued vnder Vigilius Biſhop of Rome, at the leaſt a thouſand yeres agoe, and writeth the very ſtory of this Councel: his words be theſe: Fit Epheſi generale Concilium, ad quod conuenerunt, Flauianus, & Eutyches, tanquàm iudicandi. There is appointed, ſaith he, at Epheſus a generall Councell, in the which Flauianus and Eutyches made their appearance, as men ſtanding to be iudged. Now if ye will ſay, that generale Concilium, is not in Engliſh a general Councel, then I would it might be put ouer to ſome other court. O Maiſter Doctour, if ye meant nothing elſe but truth, ye would not doe as ye doe.

Thus much haue I written in the defence of your Doctor Pigghius, for that I ſaw him accuſed of you without cauſe.

Sarum.

AND of the Councels holden of late yeres at Conſtance and Baſil, whereas Pope Iohn, and Pope Eugenius were depoſed, he ſaith plainely, that they decred both againſt reaſon, and againſt nature, and againſt all examples of antiquity, and alſo againſt the word of God. And yet both theſe Councels were called generall. 42.

Cole.

WHerein doth Pigghius proue the Councels of Conſtance, and Baſil, to haue erred? Marry becauſe they decred the generall Councell to be aboue the Pope. If ye take theſe two Councels to haue erred in theſe points, ye are a greater Papiſt than I am. For I hold herein rather with Gerſon. I trow this be one place that ye wot not your ſelfe. Yet I recken no errour proued in any generall Councell by that ye haue yet ſaid.

YEs, I aſſure you, Maiſter Doctor, I put in this place, and all the reſt my ſelfe alone without conference. And yet God be thanked, I can finde nothing in your writings but ſuch as any man may ſwne ghelle it came only from your ſelfe alone. Ye take exception before with that I alleaged the Councell of Baſil, and ſent me word that no ſuch thing could be found. But now I ſee ye are better aduiſed.

As touching Pigghius I vſed his authority herein, as S. Paul, to reproue them that denied the reſurrection, vſed the authority of them that baptiſed for the dead, not for that he thought ſuch baptiſme well miniſtred, but onely for that it ſerueth to his purpoſe. For I ſhewed you not what I thought my ſelf, but what Pigghius, your great Doctour thought; and what ye your ſelfe muſt néeds thinke, vnleſſe ye will pull downe your owne doctrine, and ſet the Pope himſelfe and all his adherents vpon your top.

But if ye take part with Gerſon, as ye ſay you doe, marke how the chiefe pillar of your building begins to ſhake.

If the Pope be head of the church, as ye ſay, and the Councell be but Eccleſia repreſentatiua, that is, a reſemblance of the church, as your Canoniſts and Schoole-men ſay: how can it be but the Pope by your owne ſaying (whether Gerſon will or nill) muſt néeds be head of the Councell? for he that is head of the whole, muſt alſo be head of the part: vnleſſe perhaps ye will ſay, the part is greater than the whole. Of theſe grants of yours there followeth conſequently great inconuenience againſt your ſelfe.

Ye ſay, The Pope is not aboue the Councell. Ergo, May ſome other man ſay, He is much leſſe aboue the whole Church.

Againe. The Pope is not aboue the Church. Ergo, Hée is not head of the Church.

But all this notwithſtanding ye ſay the Councel is aboue the Pope. And yet ye know, that euen now, whatſoeuer is decréd in any generall Councell, there is euermore deuolution made to the Pope, as vnto him, that is thought to be aboue the Councel, and without whom nothing may be concluded.

Haue ye forgotten, that Pope Pius, and Pope Iulius, of late yéres, commanded there ſhould no appeale be made from the Pope to any Councell?

Haue ye forgotten, that the laſt generall Councell holden at Trident concluded thus at the end, Saluâ ſemper in omnibus Sedis Apoſtolicæ authoritate: as confeſſing openly that they toke the Pope to be aboue the Councell?

Haue ye forgotten, that your owne Doctours ſay, Papa eſt fons omnis iuris: the Pope is the fountaine of all maner law: And, Papa habet omnia iura in ſcrinio pectoris ſui; the Pope hath all law vnder the ſecret of his breaſt?

Haue ye forgotten what it is written in the Popes owne Decretals, Extra, de electione, & electi poteſtate: Si totus mundus ſentiet in aliquo contra Papam, videtur quòd ſtandum ſit ſententiæ Papæ: If all the world ſhould giue ſentence in any matter againſt the Pope, it appeareth for all that, we ought to ſtand to the determination of the Pope?

Haue ye forgotten, that it is written in your owne Councels, Papa à nemine iudicatur; The Pope is iudged of no man? And a iolly reſon ioyned to the ſame; Quia non eſt diſcipulus ſupra magiſtrum. For there is no ſcholar aboue his Maſter.

Haue ye forgotten that that is written in your Decés; Neque ab Auguſto, neque a Regibus, neque a toto clero neque a populo, Iudex iudicabitur: The Iudge, that is to ſay, the Pope, ſhall be iudged, neither by the Emperour, nor by Kings, nor by the whole Clergy, nor by the people.

And againe: Aliorum hominum cauſas voluit Deus per homines terminare: ſed huius ſedis præſulem, ſuo ſine quæſtione ſeruauit arbitrio: Other mens cauſes God would haue to be determined and ruled by men: But the Biſhop of this Sea, out of all doubt, he reſerued only to his owne iudgement.

And againe: Facta ſubditorum iudicantur à nobis, noſtra autem a ſolo Deo; the doings of our ſubiects are iudged by vs: but our doings are iudged only by God.

Haue yet forgotten, that your Scholemen ſay, Papa habet ius infragabile, de quo non licet diſputare: The Pope hath a right that no man may withſtand, of which right no man may diſpute?

Haue ye forgotten, that is written in your Decretales, De tranſlatione Epiſcopi, in the Gloſſe: Papa naturam rerum immutat, ſubſtantialia vnius rei applicando alteri: Et de nullo poteſt facere aliquid: Et ſententiam quæ nulla eſt, facit aliquam. Quia in his quæ vult, ei eſt pro ratione voluntas. Nec eſt qui illi dicat, Cur ita facis? That is, He changeth the nature of things, applying the ſubſtantiall parts of one thing to another: And of nothing he is able to make ſomewhat. And that that is no ſentence, he maketh a good ſentence. For in any thing that he willeth, his will ſtandeth in ſtead of reaſon. And there is no man, that may ſay vnto him, Why doeſt thou thus?

Haue ye forgotten, the words of your owne Councels, Papa non non poteſt iudicari, the Pope can not be iudged? And the ſame fortified with a good reaſon, cut of the words of the Prophet Eſay, who ſpake in the perſon of God; Quia ſcriptum eſt, Nunquid gloriabitur ſecuris aduerſus eum qui ſecat eum ea? Shall the axe boaſt himſelfe againſt him that heweth with it? Or haue ye forgotten, that Hoſtienſis, your owne doctour writeth, Papa eſt omnia & ſuper omnia; The Pope is all, and aboue all? which words Saint Paul ſpeaketh onely of Chriſt. So reuerently the Doctours of your ſide vſe Gods holy Scriptures.

Yet I paſſe by as great a number of the like ſentences to the ſame purpoſe. Thus ye ſée if yé take part with Gerſon, a great many of your owne friends will fall out with you, and ye will be in hazard to be called an heretike.

Ye ſe by this, that the Councel of Conſtance, and Baſil, being both generall, as Pighius ſaith, decréd a falſhood, and were in erroꝛ, as ye your ſelfe muſt nédes confeſſe, as well as Pighius, if ye will ſtand to your owne doctrine. And therefore, Cardinalis Caietanus, one of your owne ſide ſaith, that both theſe Councels were afterward iuſtly abrogate: I thinke for that they were thought to haue decréd a miſſe. And ſo both Gerſon and you, by the the iudgement of all your brethren, remaine ſtill in errour. And when ye haue ſought out the bottome of your learning, I beleeue it will be hard for you to finde any good ſufficient cauſe, why a generall Councell may not as well be deceiued, as a particular. For Chriſts promiſes; Ecce ego vobiſcum ſum; and, Vbicunq; duo aut tres conuenerint in nomine meo, ibi ſum ego in medio illorum, are made as well to the particular Councell, as to the generall.

Howbeit, whether the Councell may erre or no, ye know it auaileth you but little to ſtand greatly to the defence of Councels in theſe points, vnleſſe ye had ſome Councell to make for you. But like as the Romanes, in old times, worſhipped their god Vulcanus, with all godly honour, and yet would neuer vouchſafe to giue him a Chapell within their towne: euen ſo ye, as it appeareth, can content your ſelues to honor the Councels, and to haue them euer in mouth, yet will ye not vouchſafe to take them nere to you, and to be ordered by them. And therefore theſe words of yours, are only of office, and of courſe, that the very countenance ye giue the matter might make your reader beleeue, that ye haue all the Councels of your ſide, and we haue none.

But alas what reuerence, or regard haue ye to the Councels? The Councell of Nice appointed three Patriarchs to rule the whole Church, each of them within his precincts of like authority: Ye haue broken this Councell, and giuen all the whole authority to one alone. The Councel holden at Elberis decreed, that there ſhould be no kind of Image of any thing that is worſhipped, painted in the Church: Ye haue broken this Councel, and filled your Churches full of Images. The Councel of Antioch decreed, that ſuch as came into the Church and heard the Scriptures read, and abſtained from the Communion, ſhould be excommunicate from the Church: Ye haue broken this Councell, and neither doe ye red the Scriptures in ſuch ſort as the people may perceiue them, nor once exhort them to the Communion. The Councell of Carthage commanded there ſhould nothing be read in the Church but only the Scriptures of God: Ye haue broken this Councel, and read ſuch Legends and fables vnto the people, as ye your ſelues know were manifeſt and open lies. The Councel of Rome vnder Pope Nicolas, commandeth, that no man be preſent at the Maſſe of a Prieſt, whom he knoweth vndoubtedly to keepe a concubine, and that vnder the paine of excommunication: Yet he whom ye would ſo faine haue to be taken for the head of your Church, not onely hath broken this Councell, but alſo, for a certaine ordinary tribut to be yerely paid, giueth his Prieſt free licence and diſpenſations, vnder his great ſeale, openly to keepe Concubines without controlement. And what nede we moe examples? Ye make the Councels waigh as ye will; when ye liſt, as heauy as Gold; againe, when ye liſt, as light as feathers. Pope Iulius the ſecond, called a Councell at Rome, onely to ouerthrow the Councell of Piſa. And the whole order of Saint Dominikes Friers cried out ſhame vpon the Councel of Baſil, for that the Biſhops there, had taken part with the Scotiſts, againſt the Thomiſts, touching originall ſinne in our Lady. The Councell of Paris, was ſcoft at, and iefted out of all parts, and vntill this day kept of no part. For our Doctors of England ſaid, it had no power to ſaile ouer the Sea: Egidius of Rome ſaith, it was too heauy to clime ouer the Alpes. Thus much for that ye ſeeme to ſtand ſo earneſtly to the defence of Councels, hauing in theſe points not one Councell to alleage for your ſelfe.

Sarum.

YE preſſe me ſore, that if I write you not a booke of my prowes, it will be thought I doe it, concientia imbeſcilitatis. Belike ye haue forgotten why ye, with all your company, not long ſince, refuſed to enter into diſputation with vs at Weſtminſter. Doubtleſſe the greateſt part thought it was, as it was indeed, concientia imbeſcillitatis. And what thinke you is there now thought in you, that being ſo often required, yet cannot be won to bring ſo much as one prize ſentence in your owne defence? I haue before alleaged a few reaſons of my part, which by order of diſputation I was not bound to doe. Now let the world iudge, whether of vs both flieth conference.

Cole.

I Haue anſwered to this already. What order of diſputations diſchargeth you of prowes? Yet remember, I came not to diſpute, but to be taught.

The Reply. Sarum.

YE haue anſwered me by ſaying nothing; which I thinke ye would not haue done, if ye had any thing elſe to anſwer: from prowes in this matter I am ſufficiently diſcharged by the

the law of impoſſibility. For as he ſaid openly at Weſtminſter (and once againe I put you in remembrance of the ſame, becauſe it is your owne law) it is impoſſible to prooue a negatiue. All your helpe is in the ſhadow and pretence of learning, wherby it appeareth well ye flie diſputation. Ye were beſt to get ſome better cloake to hide you vnder, for theſe be but Fig-leaues, and couer not your ſhame.

Sarum.

I Proteſt before God, bring me but one ſufficient ſentence or authority in the matters I haue required, and afterwards I will gently and quietly confer with you farther at your pleaſure. Wherefore, foraſmuch as it is Gods cauſe, if ye meane ſimply deale ſimply; betray not your right, if ye may ſaue it by ſpeaking one word.

Cole.

If ye refuſe to inſtruct me vnleſſe I bring ſome proofe of my part, ye bid me to my coſt. Ye bid me to a feaſt, where while I ſhoul take on me to proue your doctrine naught, I were like to forfet my recogniſance, which ye guilefully allure me vnto.

The Reply. Sarum.

YE hide your ſelfe vnder your Recogniſance, and thinke ye walke inuiſible, as the Oſtrich, when he hath once couched his head vnder a little bough, though the reſt of his body, which is great and large, ſtand open and vncouered, yet he thinketh no man can eſpie him. Although ye be ſanded and ſet aground, yet ye kepe vp the ſaile ſtill, as if ye had water at your will.

Ye ſay ye may not diſpute leſt ye ſhould forfet your recogniſance. I would wiſh you to remember your ſelf, and to let the people vnderſtand the truth. Ye know ye are not bound in Recogniſance for diſputing with any man; but for that being required to diſputations by the Quenes moſt honorable Counſell, and the place appointed, and great and worthy audience aſſembled to the ſame, ye gaue ouer, as ye know, vpon the ſudden, and would not diſpute at all. And therefore for your diſobedience and contempt ye were bound in Recogniſance.

But I pray you were ye thus bound in Quene Maries time to, as well as now? Or if ye were not bound, how hapned it that ye neuer durſt alleage one ancient Doctour in theſe matters all that while? Remember your owne words: ye ſaid a little before, that ye brought more than we were able to anſwer, notwithſtanding it were, as ye ſaid, nor Scriptures nor Councels nor Doctors. And further I pray you, were, all the reſt of the Doctours of your ſide, Pighius, Eckius Hoſmaſterius, Bunderius, &c. bound in Recogniſance aſwell as you? Or if they were not bound, why were they ſo dainty of their Doctors, that in theſe matters they could neuer vouchſafe to alleage one? Looke better vpon your Recogniſance: I cannot beleeue ye ſhould be ſo free to ſcoffe and to ſcorne, more than either Diuinity, or good humanity would beare withall, and onely be forbidden to doe that thing, which of all good reaſon ye ought moſt to doe: Or that ye ſhould be reſtrained from the alleaging of S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Ambroſe, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Baſil, &c. and haue a priuiledge onely to alleage Ariſtotle Horace, the Decrees, the Decretals, the Gloſſe, Gerſon, Driedo, Royard, and Tapper, ſuch men as I neuer could haue thought had beene canonized and allowed for Doctors of the Church. Auguſtus Ceſar on a time, as he was paſſing thorow Rome, and ſaw certaine ſtrange women lulling Apes, and Whelps in their armes; What, ſaid he, haue the women of theſe countries none other children? So may I ſay vnto you that make ſo much of Gerſon, Driedo, Royard, and Tapper; Haue the learned men of your ſide none other Doctors? For alas, theſe that ye alleage are ſcarcely worthy to be allowed amongſt the blacke garde. Hilarius ſaith vnto the Arrians, Cedò aliud Euangelium. Shew me ſome other Goſpell; for this that ye bring helpeth you not. Euen ſo will I ſay to you, Cedò alios doctores, Shew me ſome other Doctors; for theſe that ye bring are not worthy the hearing. I hoped ye would haue come in with ſome freſher band. It muſt needes be ſome miſerable caſe, that can finde no better patrons to cleaue vnto. I know it was not for lacke of good will of your part: ye would haue brought other Doctors, if ye could haue found them.

Sarum.

THe people muſt needes thinke ſomewhat of your ſilence, and miſtruſt your doctrine, if it ſhall appeare to haue no maner of ground, neither of the Councels, nor of the Doctours, Doctours, nor of the Scriptures, nor any one allowed example of the Primatiue Church, to ſtand vpon. And ſo your fiftéene hundred yeres, with the conſent of antiquity and generality, ſhall come to nothing.

Cole.

GOd wot, I paſſe little in theſe matters what the poore ſilly ſoules déeme of my doings, wherin ye haue no cauſe to complaine, ſith they be edified towards you. Wiſe men, I doubt not, ſée what talk cauſe I haue to doe as I doe.

The Reply. Sarum.

NOw God wot, then are the poore ſilly ſoules little beholden to you, that haue béene ſo long and ſo worſhipfully maintained by the ſweat of their browes: and now ſéeing them, as ye ſay, deceiued, and periſh before your éies, ye can hold your peace and let all alone. S. Paul ſaid; Quis infirmatur, & ego non infirmor? quis offenditur, & ego non vror? Cupio Anathema eſſe à Chriſto, pro fratribus meis. And ſo would ye ſay to, if ye were ſo ſure of the matter, as S. Paul was, or if ye had the ſpirit of S. Paul. Wiſe men, ye ſay, know that ye haue iuſt cauſe to doe, as ye doe. Doubtleſſe: for he that can find nothing to ſay, hath a reaſonable cauſe to hold his peace: and yet I think, a meane wiſe man may ſée, that by the vertue of your Recogniſance ye might as well haue alleaged S. Auguſtine, and S. Hierome, as Royard and Tapper. But ye know, the matter is ſuch, that if ye once come to allegations, whatſoeuer ye ſay, it will be the worſe. As for my part, ſo that both the wiſe and the vnwiſe may ſée your errours, and how little ye haue to ſay for your ſelfe, I paſſe not greatly whether ye confeſſe the ſame by ſpeaking, or by holding your peace. For, Qui tacet conſentire videtur, as ye your ſelfs are wont to ſay. O maſter Doctour, deale ſimply in Gods cauſes, and ſay ye haue Doctours when ye haue them indeed: and when ye haue them not, neuer lay the fault in your Recogniſance.

Sarum.

WHere ye ſay, I am not altogether without enemies, I aſſure you, whoſoeuer he be that is enemy vnto me, I for my part am enemy vnto no man, but only wiſh that Gods truth may be knowen of all men. But he that is enemy vnto me in this behalfe, I feare me is enemy vnto ſome other, whom he would be loth to name. 46.

Cole.

YE would beare folke in hand, that they that agrée not in doctrine with you are not the Quénes friends, which ye gather by your owne ſide in Quéene Maries reigne. But I neuer brake amity with any man for diſſent in religion; I kéepe ſtill my old friends, be their religion good or bad.

The Reply. Sarum.

TO the firſt part thereof, I will not ſay ſo much as I were able; God ſone confound all them that be, or ſhalbe otherwiſe. If ye loue your friends, notwithſtanding their religion, ye are more charitable than ſome of your brethren. For ye remember how vnfriendly ſome of you haue vſed their friends, only for diſſent in religion, vnleſſe perhaps ye will ſay ye impriſoned them, and burnt them, euen for very loue.

Sarum.

YE ſuppreſſed, ye ſay, your firſt letters, for that they were to ſower. That had béen all one to me, for ſower words are not enough to quaile the truth. Howbeit, to my knowledge, I gaue you no ill words to increaſe that humour. But if ye ſtriue ſtill againſt nature, as ye ſay ye haue done now, and conquer the reſt of your affections to, I doubt not but we ſhall ſone agrée. 47

Cole.

AS though mine affection only cauſed me to diſſent from you in religion. Which argument may ſerue you well in Rhetorike, but no where els I wéene.

The Reply. Sarum.

WHen ye ſhall bring me any ſuch authority as I haue required of you, wherefore ye ſhould diſſent from vs in theſe points, then will I grant ye diſſent not only for affection. If ye be able to bring nothing, I truſt ye will pardon me to ſay, as I ſay. This argument, ye ſay, would ſerue me in Rhethorike, and no where elſe. Thus ye write to make your reader beleeue (as ye haue reported in places) that the ground of my Sermons is Rhetorike, and not Diuinity. Wherein yée were ſomewhat to blame for your ſo light credit. For if ye had heard me your ſelfe, as ye neuer did, I thinke ye might haue heard ſomewhat elſe than Rhetorike. But it appeareth ye hunt very narrowly for faults, that account learning for a fault. If I were ſkilfull in Rhetoriſke, as ye would haue me appeare, onely to diſcredit me with the people: yet can I not vnderſtand wherefore that thing ſhould be ſo faulty in me, that was ſometimes commendable in Saint Auguſtine, in Saint Chryſoſtome, in Saint Hierom, in Arnobius, in Lactantius, in Cyprian, in Tertullian, and in many other old godly Fathers: for all theſe, as ye know, were great Rhetoricians. But as in the booke of the Kings, the Aſſyrians when they were ouerthrowen by the Iewes, cried out, Dij montium, ſunt dij illorum; The gods of the hils, be their gods, as though Siluanus, or Pan, or Faunus, had conquered them, and not the true liuing God of Iſrael: Euen ſo ye at this time after ye ſée your ſelues ſcattered, and put to flight, cry out, It is Rhetorike and eloquence that hath ouerthrowen you, and not the force of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

Likewiſe was Porphyrius wont to ſay, that S. Paul perſwaded ſo far, and wone ſo many to the faith of Chriſt, not for that he had any truth of his ſide, but only for that with his eloquence and other ſubtilty he was able to abuſe the ſimplicity of the people. But, alas, ſmall Rhetorike would ſuffice to ſhew how little ye haue of your ſide to alleage for your ſelfe.

Sarum.

HEre I leaue, putting you eftſoones in remembrance, that being ſo oft, and ſo openly deſired to ſhew forth one Scripture, or one allowed example of the Primitiue church, or one old Doctour, or one ancient Councell, in the matters before named, yet hitherto ye haue kept backe and brought nothing. And that if ye ſtand ſo ſtill, it may be well thought yée doe it, conſcientia imbecillitatis, for that there was nothing to be brought.

Cole.

THis place is aboue anſwered.

DOubtleſſe by ſaying nothing, as all the reſt.

Cole.

NOw foraſmuch as ye make this a great foundation againſt vs, that we vary from the Primatiue church, and therefore make ſimple ſoules wéne that we were in the wrong ſide: Yéere, I pray you, ſhew me your opinion, whether we are bound to do all things which we find by ſufficient authority were in vſe in the Primitiue Church?

And becauſe ye ſhall not be herein ſquemiſh, I ſhall here my ſelfe begin to ſhew you mine. I am of the opinion that the Councell of Conſtance was in this matter. I thinke it an errour, I am bound to doe as the Primitiue church did. Where the Church cuſtomably vſeth the contrary, I recken an example, and no bond.

I deny not, but theſe examples were to be followed, and not to be broken at euery mans will, and pleaſure, vntill by common aſſent other order were taken.

But if ye ſéeke old writers, and finde me that the Church this ſix hundred yéeres obſerued not many things which were practiſed, and accounted for good, holeſome, and holy, in the Primitiue church, and thereby déeme vs in erroz, this were a wrong iudgement. For the Church of Chriſt hath his childhood, his manhood, and his hoare-haires: and as to one man that is méete to him in one age, is not méete for him in another; ſo were many things requiſite and neceſſary in the Primitiue church, which in our daies were like to doe more harme than good. This is no new deuiſed phantaſie, but vttered 1100. yéeres agoe by S. Ambroſe, without reproch. I ſhewed you, and read you the place at Weſtminſter, as ye may remember, and it were too long to make rehearſall of his words here. We might by taking contrary opinion herein, be led to thinke we ought to receiue the Sacrament euermore after ſupper, & not faſting. But S. Auguſtine ſaith, that Chriſt left this to his church, to take order how, and in what ſort the Sacraments ſhould be receiued and vſed. Wherein he ſaith, it is a marueilous inſolent kind of madnes to miſlike that, which is receiued in the Church, where the cuſtome is not againſt any commandement in Scripture. S. Peter cauſed (as Damaſus ſaith) a commandement, that no woman ſhould come bare faced to the Church. S. Clement toke order, that the Clergy ſhould haue all things in common, and ſo liue together, as in the late reformed order of Saint Benets Monkes, doth moſt godly appeare. And not many yeres ſince, the ſame order in all Cathedrall Churches was obſerued. Yet I wene it were an error to hold of neceſſity it ſhould be ſo ſtill. Or to ſay, the Church were in an errour, becauſe it hath ſuffered a contrary cuſtome to crepe in.

Then, if the cuſtome of the Church may breake that was in the Primitiue church commanded, it is no leſſe offence to leaue vndone that was at the beginning practiſed, and no commandement giuen for other to follow the ſame.

Thus much I thought to put you in remembrance of, for ſuch matters as ye touch in 1. 7. 42. 43. numbers.

The Reply. Sarum.

IN the concluſion ye take great aduantage to anſwer many things in one, wherein your words, becauſe they come flowing downe in abundance like a ſtreame, they carry away a great deale of ſlime and baggage with them.

Firſt, where ye grant that ye of your ſide haue varied, and doe yet vary from the cuſtom of the Primitiue church, I can not but commend your plainneſſe therein in telling the truth.

But where then is your antiquity become? Where be your ancient Doctors? Where be the fifteene hundred yeres that ye haue ſo much talked of? If ye would grant the ſame in the Pulpit openly before the people, that we require the vſe and order of the Primitiue church; and that ye, of your part, maintaine your priuate Maſſe, your Supremacy, your vnknowen prayers, and the moſt part of your religion, contrary to the ſame; that our doctrine is old, and that yours is new: If ye would but grant this ſimply and plainly before the people, we would deſire no more at your hands.

But ye ſay further, that the examples of the Apoſtles and Doctours binde you not: that in their time the Church was but an infant, and that many things that were good for her in that age, would be hurtfull to her in this age: And thereto, notwithſtanding your recognisance, ye alleage S. Auguſtine, and S. Ambroſe, wherein I haue cauſe ſomewhat to marueil at your doings, that now can ſo frankly bring in your Doctours to ſo ſmall purpoſe, and afore in matters of weight, touching the greateſt part of the contention that ſtandeth betweene vs, durſt not once name one Doctor for feare of your Recognisance. At the laſt ye conclude, that it were an error to ſay, we are bound of neceſſity to follow the vſe of the Primitiue Church.

To make you a full and a cleere anſwer hereunto, I muſt needes vſe this diſtinction: There were ſome orders in the Primitiue church commanded by God, and ſome other were deuiſed by men, for the better training of the people. Such orders as were commanded by God, may not be changed in any caſe, only becauſe God commanded them. For as God is euerlaſting, ſo is his word and commandement euerlaſting.

Of the other ſide, ſuch orders as haue beene deuiſed by men, may be broken, vpon ſome good conſideration, only becauſe they were men that deuiſed them: for as men themſelues be mortall, ſo all their wiſedomes and inuentions be but mortall. As, that the Communion ſhould be vſed in the morning, or at night. That women ſhould come to the Church either couered or open faced: wherein ye ſay, S. Peter toke order. That the Miniſters goods ſhould be all in common, or otherwiſe, &c. Theſe and other like, were things appointed and ordered by men, and therefore were neuer vſed in all places of one ſort, but as they were brought in by men, ſo might they be diſſolued and broken by men. In theſe things, I grant, the examples of the Doctours, or Apoſtles binde vs not. In theſe things it were an errour to ſay we are bound of neceſſity to follow the vſe of the Primitiue Church. Theſe and other like things they be, that Saint Ambroſe ſpeaketh of, whom ye at Weſtminſter alledged in the caſe ye then intreated of, directly making againſt your ſelfe. And we, when we heard you name him firſt, marueiled much what ye meant to meddele with him aboue all others. For as touching the common prayers to be had in a ſtrange tongue, (which matter we had then in hand) S. Ambroſe ſaieth of purpoſe to controll both you and your brethren, in maner one whole Chapter thorow, writing vpon the fourteenth Chap. 1. Cor. And farther, the examples that he vſeth in the place where ye alleaged him, are theſe: That the Deacon in the Primitiue church vſed to preach, & in his time preached not: & that women in the Primitiue church vſed to baptiſe, and in his time baptiſed not: and that in the Primitiue church the Sacrament of Baptiſme was miniſtred at all times indifferently, without difference of daies, and that in his time it was ministred only vpon certaine daies. And yet in your Church, contrary to the order of S. Ambrose, both women baptise, and Deacons preach, and children are baptised euery day without difference of time. Thus ye would faine to follow S. Ambrose, and yet alledge him in such places where your selfe most of all vary from him. But perhaps your minde was occupied, or ye had not then leasure to marke him better.

Hitherto, I thinke, we agree, that touching such things as haue béene ordained by men, we are not bound of necessity to the order of the Primatiue Church.

But of the other part, I say, that such things as God hath commanded precisely by his word, may neuer be broken by any custome, or consent. And such be the things that we now require at your handes, not deuised by men, but commanded by God to last for euer. Vnlesse ye will happily say, as Montanus did, that God hath reuealed both moe things, and also better things vnto you, than euer he did vnto his Apostles: or els, as Manichæus said, that the Apostle saw nothing, but only in speculo, & in enigmate: or as your Doctour Siluester Prierias saith: Indulgentiæ non habent authoritatem ex verbo Dei, sed habent authoritatem ab Ecclesia Romana, quia maior est: Pardons, saith he, haue no ground of Gods word, but they haue their ground of the Church of Rome, which is a great deale more. The cup which ye haue taken from the people, is not a ceremony, but a part of the Sacrament. And as good right as ye had to take that part away, so good right had ye to take away also the other, and so to leaue the people nothing at all. And therefore the old Father Gelasius saith: Aut integra percipiant, aut ab integris arceantur; Either let them receiue the whole Sacrament, that is to say, vnder both kinds, or els let them be put from the whole. By which words of the old Doctour Gelasius it may appeare, that vnlesse both parts of the Sacrament be receiued together, the Sacrament is mangled, and not whole.

Againe, to pray in such a tongue as the people may vnderstand, and thereby be edified, is not a ceremony to be changed at mans pleasure, but the commandement of God: for Paul, when he had spoken long thereof, concludeth at the end: Si quis est Propheta, aut spiritualis, sciat, quòd quæ scribo, domini sunt præcepta: If any man be a Prophet, or spirituall, let him well know, that the things that I write, are the commandements of God. Prayer in the vulgar and knowen tongue, S. Paul saith, is the commandement of God, and not an order taken by man.

Againe, for any one man to take vpon him to be vniuersall Bishop of the whole Church, S. Gregory saith, it is both against the Gospell of Christ, and also against the old Canons, and ancient orders of the Church: his words be these; Quis est iste, qui contra Statuta Euangelica, contra Canonum decreta, nouum sibi nomen vsurpare præsumit? What man is this that taketh vpon him this new fangled name, to be called the Vniuersall Bishop of the whole Church, contrary to the lawes of the Gospell, and contrary to the decrées of the Canons? And farther he saith: Consentire in hoc nomen est fidem amittere; To agree vnto this name, is to goe from the faith. These things, and other like, because they haue their foundation in Gods word, may not be changed by any order of the Church. For the Church, as she is Lady of her owne lawes, so is she but a handmaid to the Lawes of Christ.

But héere would I faine know what smatterer taught you to frame this argument:

The Church hath power to breake some orders:

Ergo, She hath power to breake all orders, where, and when she listeth.

As perfit a Logician as ye make your selfe, yet héere ye haue made a sophistication, A secundùm quid ad simpliciter; which, as ye know, in Logike is a foule error in reasoning.

But it is a world, to consider the reason ye vse to proue your purpose withall. For yée say, the Church in Christs and the Apostles time was but an infant, but now she is well stricken in age, therefore shée must be otherwise dieted now than she was then. This is not the handsomest comparison that I haue heard of. For I neuer heard before now that Christ and his Apostles were called infants. Or that euer any man before now toke vpon him to set them to schoole. Elay saith, that Christ should be Pater futuri seculi; that is, the Father of the world to come, which is the time of the Gospell. And Saint Hierom in your owne Decrées, calleth the Apostles, Patres, that is not infants, but the Fathers of the Church. And I beléeue, though ye would study and labour for it, yet would it be very hard for you, either to find out any good substantiall reason, wherefore ye with your brethren ought to be called the Fathers of Gods Church, or Christ and his Apostles ought to be called babes. O that ye would indifferently compare the one with the other! ye should find, that as like as ye and your Biſhops are to the Apoſtles, ſo like is your Church to the Apoſtles Church.

But if I would grant you your compariſon, that Chriſt and his Apoſtles are vnto you as children to old fatherly men; yet how could ye make this argument good by all your Logike?

The Church is now become old and ancient:
Ergo, The people muſt pray in a ſtrange language, they know not what.
Or this: The Church is old:
Ergo, The people muſt receiue the Sacrament but vnder one kind.
Or this: The Church is old:
Ergo, The people may not be exhorted to the holy Communion, but only content themſelues with a priuate Maſſe.

If theſe arguments ſeeme to be good in law, yet I aſſure you they ſeeme to me very weake, either in Logike, or in Diuinity: howbeit, of ſuch reaſons ye haue store enough, as I were able to ſhew you at large, if néede ſo required. As where ye ſay;

Extra de Maioritate, & obedietia, Cap. vnam Sanctam. Quæ ſunt poteſtates, à Deo ordinatæ ſunt: The powers that be are ordered by God:
Ergo, The Pope is aboue the Emperor.

Innocentius diſt. 82. Propoſuiſti. Roſſenſis. Durandus. Spiritualis à nemine iudicatur: The man that is ruled by Gods ſpirit, is iudged of no man:
Ergo, No man may iudge the Pope.

Sancti eſtote, quoniam ego ſanctus ſum: Be you holy, for I am holy, ſaith the Lord:
Ergo. No married man may be a Prieſt.

Chriſt ſaid vnto Peter, Solue pro me, & te: Pay the tribute money for me and thée:
Ergo, the Pope is head of the Church.

Eccleſiaſticus ſaith, In medio eccleſiæ aperuit os ſuum: He opened his mouth in the midſt of the congregation:
Ergo, The Prieſt muſt turne round at the midſt of the Altar.

Concilium Nicenum ſecundum ſub Iren. Fecit Deus hominem ad imaginem & ſimilitudinem ſuam: God made man to the image and likeneſſe of himſelfe:
Ergo, There muſt be Images in the Church.

Concilium Baſil. ſub Eugenio. Papa iuratur in fidem Apoſtolicam: The Pope is ſworne to the Apoſtles faith:
Ergo, The Church cannot erre.

Concilium Rom. ſub Siluestro. The Canoniſts. Durandus. Eckius. Doctor Cole at Weſtminſter. Non eſt diſcipulus ſupra magiſtrum: There is no ſcholar aboue his maſter:
Ergo, No man may iudge the Pope.

Papa eſt dominus omnium beneficiorum: The Pope is Lord of all benefits:
Ergo, He cannot commit Simony though he would.

Domini eſt terra & plenitudo eius: The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſſe thereof:
Ergo, the Communion cake muſt be made round.

Omnis ſpiritus laudet Dominum: Let all ſpirits praiſe the Lord:
Ergo, He muſt haue Organs in the Church.

Lac vobis potum dedi: Or, Ignorantia eſt mater pietatis: I gaue you milke to drinke: or, Ignorance is the mother of deuotion:
Ergo, The people muſt make their praiers in a ſtrange tongue.

Logike was good cheape when theſe arguments were allowed: but theſe, and a great many others, as good as theſe, haue béene made of your ſide, as ye know. But iudge ye whether they ſeeme to you to be of ſuch warrant, that vpon the ſight of them we may ſafely breake the commandements of God, or no. Very loth I was ſo much to open the weakneſſe of your ſide: but forasmuch as ye write, that maſter Caluins and maſter Bucers reaſons be ſuch, as none but yong folke and children will be moued with them; your importunity herein hath cauſed me to doe otherwiſe than I would: therefore out of a great number of like arguments of yours, I haue laid forth a few; and I beléeue, neither child, nor yong body, nor your ſelfe, will be greatly moued with them.

Where ye ſay, theſe things may not be broken by any priuate authority, but only by a generall conſent: this is but a dilatory plea to defraud your aduerſary. Ye know all the Princes of Chriſtendome are not ſo ſone brought together: in the meane while perhaps ye will ſay to your ſelfe, as ye know who ſaith, Interea fiet aliquid ſpero. But forasmuch as ye giue ſuch credit to a generall conſent, I would faine learne at your hand where this cuſtome of yours firſt began, or by what conſent it was euer allowed.

Steuen Gardiner, in his booke of the Diuels Sophiſtry, touching the Communion vnder one kind, imagineth that firſt ſome good deuout body, for reuerence he had to the ſacrament, thought himſelfe not worthy to receiue the cup, and ſo abſtained. And then followed another, & ſo another, & after another, & ſo at length it became, as he ſaith, a generall conſent.

Thus he imagineth, onely vpon his owne ghéſſe. For there was neuer any man that so wrote before him. Neither was he able to shew nor whence nor where this custome first began, nor how farre it went abroad. But if any one man began it first, and so another, why did not the Priests and Bishops then speake against it? Why did they suffer one singuler man onely upon a singuler fancy to breake the generall order, that was given by Christ, and observed by generall consent throughout the whole Church? If it had beene staied at the first in one, it had never past afterward to so many. If it be a wickednesse, as ye say, for one man of his owne vaine fantasie to alter the generall order of the whole Church, then ye see, even by Steven Gardiners confession, that your generall consent, whereunto ye leane so much, proceeded at the first onely of wickednesse: and being so, ye remember ye have a rule in your owne law: Quæ à principio malè inchoata fuit institutio, temporis tractu non convalescit: that is, The thing that was naught at the beginning, cannot be made good by processe of time.

O Maister Doctour, let us lay aside all selfewill and contention, and have recourse only unto the truth that God hath revealed to us in his holy word. For thereby shall ye be able to know whether the Church doe right or no. And thereby shall ye be able to reforme her, if she happen to doe amisse. For it is possible the Church may erre; but it is not possible the Scriptures may erre. And the Scriptures of God have authority to reforme the Church; but I never heard that the Church hath authority to reforme the Scriptures.

Thus Christ reformed the errours of the Church in his time, brought in by the Scribes and Phariseis, and said unto them, Scriptum est. Thus S. Paul reformed the Corinthians for misusing the holy Communion in his time, and told them: Quod accepi à Domino, hoc tradidi vobis: I delivered you that thing that I received of the Lord. Thus the old father Irenæus, to stay the errors of his time, bad the parties have recourse to the most ancient Churches, from whence religion sprang first. Thus saith Tertullian to redresse the errors of his time: Hoc contra omnes Hæreticos præiudicat; id esse verum, quodcunque primum; id esse adulterum, quodcunque posterius: This saying, saith he, prevaileth against all heretikes, that the thing that was first ordeined is to be taken for true: and whatsoever was devised afterward, is to be taken for false.

Thus saith S. Hierome, of the abuses of his time: Quæ absque testimonio Scripturarum, quasi tradita ab Apostolis asseruntur, percutiuntur malleo verbi Dei: The things that are fathered upon the Apostles, and have no testimony of the Scriptures, are beaten downe with the hammer of Gods word.

Thus saith Saint Cyprian to stay the schismes and sects of his time: Hinc Schismata oriuntur, quia caput non quæritur, & ad fontem non redditur, & cœlestis magistri præcepta non observantur: Hereof spring Schismes and divisions, for that we have no recourse to the first institution, and goe not backeward to the spring, and keepe not the commandements of the heavenly master.

Thus saith Saint Augustine to reforme the errours of his time: Ne audiatur hoc, Ego dico, hoc tu dicis: sed, Hæc dicit Dominus: Ibi quæratur Ecclesia. Let not these words be heard betweene us, Thus say I, or, thus say ye; but, Thus saith the Lord. And there let us seeke for the Church of God.

Thus saith Saint Cyprian: Si ad divinæ traditionis caput & originem revertaris, cessat omnis error humanus: If ye will returne to the head and beginning of Gods ordinance, all errors of man will soone give place.

Theodosius the Emperour pronounceth, that they onely are to be taken for Catholike, that follow the doctrine that Peter delivered at the first to the Church of Rome, and so examined he the matter by the originall.

Wherefore it standeth you now upon, to prove that your private Masse, your Communion under one kind, your prayers in an unknowen tongue, and your Supremacy was delivered at the first by Peter to the church of Rome. or else to confesse that these things be not Catholike.

To conclude, like as the errours of the clocke be revealed by the constant course of the sunne, even so the errours of the Church are revealed by the everlasting and infallible word of God.

But to say as some of you have said, the Church is the only rule of our faith, and whatsoever God saith in his word, she can never erre, is asmuch as if a man would say; Howsoever the sunne goeth, yet the clocke must needes goe true. For Gods truth is an everlasting truth, and hangeth not upon the pleasure or determination of men; but being once true, is true for ever. God open the eies of our hearts that we may see it, and rejoyce in it, that the truth may deliver us.

Thus much I thought it good to say to your Letters, before my departure hence; not for that I knew precisely they were yours, but only because they bare your name. If ye thinke I haue béene somewhat long, specially your answers being so shor, ye shall remember, that a little poison requireth oft times a great deale of triacle.

Heere once againe I conclude as before, putting you in remembrance, that thus long I haue desired you to bring forth some sufficient authority for proofe of your party; and yet hitherto can obtaine nothing. Which thing I must néedes now pronounce simply and plainly, because it is true, without if or and, ye doe Confitentia imbecillitatis, because as ye know, there is nothing to be brought. All these things considered, if I might be so bold with you, I would say friendly to you as S. Augustine saith to S. Hierome: Arripe seueritatem Christianam, & cane palinodiam.

18. May, 1560. IOHN SARVM.

THE COPIE OF A SERMON PREACHED BY THE BISHOP OF SARISBVRY AT PAVLES CROSSE

the second Sonday before Easter, in the yeare of our Lord GOD 1560. Whereupon Doctor Cole first sought occasion to encounter: shortly set forth, as neere as the Authour could call it to remembrance, without any alteration, or addition.

1. Cor. 11. vers. 23.

I haue receiued of the Lord, that thing which I also haue deliuered vnto you: that is, that the Lord Iesus in the night that he was betraied, tooke bread, &c.

SAint Paul after he was once appointed out by God to be his chosen vessell, to carry his name among all people, hauing occasion to make his abode for a long time in the City of Corinth, began there to instruct the people, to draw them from the follies and errors that they and their Fathers had long liued in afore time, and to lead them to the Gospel of Christ, which then God of his mercy had newly shewed vnto the world. And therwithal he deliuered vnto them the Sacrament or holy mystery of Christs last Supper, to be practised and continued amongst them, as a most certaine pledge and testimony of the same.

But after that, through the wickednesse of the Iewes, he was driuen to depart thence, and to saile into Syria, the false Prophets, men full of pride and vaine-glory, taking occasion at his absence, sought meanes to discredit whatsoeuer he had taught or done: and can-

ſed the people not only to miſlike the Goſpell of Chriſt, that they had receiued at S. Pauls hand, but alſo to miſſenſe the Sacraments. For as touching the Goſpel, they were fallen from it into ſundry great and horrible hereſies, concerning the reſurrection, and other ſpeciall points of Chriſts religion. And as touching the Sacraments, where as S. Paul had appointed them the holy myſteries of the breaking of Chriſts body, and ſhedding of his blod, that they ſhould all eat and drink together with feare and reuerence in remembrance of his death and paſſion, and ſo cleaue together in brotherly charity, as being all the members of one body, they forgetting the very vſe and inſtitution thereof, made ſmall account of Chriſts death, toke each man to himſelfe ſeuerally his owne ſupper, deſpiſed their poore brethren, rent and deuided the Church of God, and ſo made the holy Sacrament of loue and charity, to ſerue them as an inſtrument of diſcord and diſſenſion.

Therefore ſaith S. Paul vnto them: Shall I praiſe you for thus doing? in this thing ſurely I may not praiſe you. For I ſee your congregations and common meetings are not to the better, but to the worſe.

For a redreſſe hereof he calleth them backe to the firſt originall, and to the inſtitution of Chriſt, from whence they were fallen. For I, (ſaith he) being amongſt you deliuered you none other thing than that I had receiued of the Lord. That thing he thought meeteſt for you. And therefore with the ſame ought you alſo to be contented.

Thus, whenſoeuer any order giuen by God is broken or abuſed, the beſt redreſſe therof is, to reſtore it againe into the ſtate that it firſt was in at the beginning.

Thus when the Temple of God at Hieruſalem was ſo ſhamefully diſordered by the Prieſts and Leuites, that it was become a caue of theeues; Chriſt for reformation thereof, called them backe againe to the firſt erection of the Temple. Scriptum eſt: Domus mea Domus orationis vocabitur: It is written (ſaith Chriſt) in the Scriptures: My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of praier. Thus was the Temple of God vſed at the beginning, and thus ought it to be vſed now.

Thus when Chriſt was oppoſed by the Scribes and Phariſies in the caſe of diuorce, whether he thought it lawfull for a man to put his wife from him for euery light cauſe, and to marry another, he made them anſwer by the firſt inſtitution and ordinance of mariage: A principio non fuit ita. Scriptum eſt: Erunt duo in carne vna: It was not ſo (ſaith Chriſt) at the beginning. It is written; They ſhall be two in one fleſh: now therefore they are not two, but one fleſh. As if he ſhould haue ſaid; This is the ordinance of God my father, this may not be broken for our pleaſures ſake, but muſt remaine in ſtrength and laſt for euer.

This S. Paul, that the Corinthians might the better vnderſtand that they had vnreuerently miſſenſed the Lords ſupper, and be the more willing to redreſſe the ſame, laid Chriſts firſt inſtitution before their eies as a true patterne, whereby the ſoner they might redreſſe it. Loke (ſaith he) what thing I receiued of the Lord, the ſame thing I deliuered ouer faithfully vnto you. I gaue you not any phantaſie or deuiſe of mine owne, but that thing onely that Chriſt had before deliuered me. This rule is infallible, hereby your doings may beſt be tried. This I iudge to be the very true meaning of theſe words of Saint Paul. Now foraſmuch as in this laſt age of the world, the ſame holy Sacrament or myſtery of Chriſts laſt ſupper hath beene likewiſe ſtained with diuers foule abuſes; and ſpecially for that, notwithſtanding it hath pleaſed almighty God of his great mercy, in theſe our daies to remoue away all ſuch deformities, and to reſtore againe the ſame holy myſteries to the firſt originall: yet there be diuers that wilfully remaine in ignorance, and not onely be vnthankfull vnto almighty God for his great benefits, but alſo take pleaſure in the errors wherein they haue of long time beene trained; and that not onely the poore and ignorant, but alſo the rich, and ſuch as ſhould be learned and know God. I haue thought it good therefore at this time to ſtand the longer vpon the ſame words of Saint Paul: that we may the more clearely ſee the firſt inſtitution of the holy Sacrament, and how far in theſe latter daies we haue ſtraied from it. It was to be hoped, foraſmuch as the glorious light of the Goſpell of Chriſt is now ſo mightily and ſo farre ſpread abroad, that no man would lightly miſſe his way (as afore in the time of darkneſſe) and petith wilfully.

But we may remember when the Iewes were deliuered out of Egypt, and had beene wonderfully conducted thorow the red ſea, and ſet at liberty, and were paſſing quietly into the land of promiſe, a land flowing with milke and hony: yet were there diuers weary of their being there, and faine would returne againe into Egypt to be in bondage, in thraledome, and in miſery, as they had beene before. We may remember, when the Iewes were deliuered from Idolatry, wherein they and their fathers had long continued, and were brought to the true knowledge and worſhip of the euerliuing God of Iſracll, notwithſtanding they were indeede the people of God; yet were there many amongſt them that miſliked the time, and as it is reported by the Prophet Hieremy, cried out againſt him:

Sermonem, quem locutus es nobis in nomine domini, non audiemus ex te: ſed facientes faciemus omne verbum quod egreditur ex ore noſtro, vt ſacrificemus reginæ cœli, & libemus ei libamina: ſicut fecimus nos & patres noſtri, reges noſtri, & principes noſtri in vrbibus Iudæ, & in plateis Hieruſalem: & ſaturati ſumus panibus, & bene nobis erat, & malum non vidimus. That is, We will not heare the word that thou ſpeakeſt vnto vs in the name of the Lord, but we will do euery thing that ſhall proceed out from our owne mouth, as to burne incenſe to the Queene of Heauen, and to offer vp drinke offerings vnto her, as both we haue done, and our fathers and our Kings and our Princes in the City of Iuda, and in the ſtreets of Hieruſalem. For then had we plenty of victuals, and were well and felt no euill.

We remember when the Goſpell of Chriſt was preached by S. Paul at Epheſus, and the diuels mouth was thereby ſtopped, and all his force and power taken from him, yet there was a great number that roſe vp againſt Paul and violently withſtood his doctrine, and cried out with maine voice againſt him; Magna eſt Diana Epheſiorum: Great is Diana the Goddeſſe of the Epheſians.

Euen ſo in theſe daies, notwithſtanding the compariſon may happily ſeeme ſomewhat odious, whereas the holy communion is reſtored to the vſe and forme of the Primitiue Church, to the ſame order that was deliuered and appointed by Chriſt, and after practiſed by the Apoſtles, and continued by the holy Doctours and Fathers for the ſpace of fiue or ſix hundred yeares, thorow out all the whole Catholike church of Chriſt without exception, or any one ſufficient example to be ſhewed to the contrary; yet are there ſome this day that refuſe it and ſhun it, and vnaduiſedly and wilfully run headlong to the Maſſe, of a good zeale (I hope) but not according vnto knowledge. For alas they vnderſtand not what they doe, they know not neither the communion neither the Maſſe, neither will they hearken or inquire to come to knowledge. And ſo in the middeſt of the light they remaine ſtill in darkneſſe.

Wherefore as I ſaid afore, I haue thought it needfull to intreat ſomewhat hereof at this time, and haue good hope thorough Gods grace ſo to lay forth the whole matter, not with eloquence of words, but with ſimplicity of the truth, that it may be plaine both vnto them that haue forſaken the Maſſe, for what cauſe and how iuſtly they haue forſaken it; and alſo vnto them, that as yet delight in it, what maner of thing it is that they delight in.

I know ſome man will ſay, foraſmuch as the ſacrament is a holy thing, the ordinance of Chriſt, the high myſtery of his death and of our ſaluation, to remaine in the Church for euer; therfore it cannot poſſibly be abuſed; and all that we ſpeake this day in this behalfe, we ſpeake of malice, and not of truth.

True it is, the ſacrament is an holy thing, the ordinance of Chriſt, the myſtery of our ſaluation: yet is there nothing ſo good, no ordinance ſo holy, no myſtery ſo heauenly, but thorough the folly and frowardneſſe of man it may be abuſed.

The Serpent that was ſet vp by Moſes in the wildernеſſe was an holy thing, for it was a Sacrament, and a figure of Chriſt hanging on the Croſſe: yet was it abuſed. The Goſpell of Chriſt is an holy thing; yet S. Paul ſaith to the Philippians, there were ſome then that preached it for mallice and contention, doing therby ſeruice, not vnto Jeſus Chriſt, whom they profeſſed in their mouth, but vnto their owne belly. And thus being holy in it ſelfe, yet was it ſhamefully abuſed.

And what thing is there ſo holy as the name of God? and yet what thing is there ſo often taken in vaine, or ſo much abuſed?

But to come nere to our purpoſe: the ſacrament of Baptiſme is an holy thing, yet hath it bene abuſed, and that in the Church of God: yea, euen at the beginning of the Church, euen when the Apoſtles of Chriſt were yet aliue, and the blood of Chriſt, as yet freſh and greene before their eies.

In Saint Pauls time there were ſome that baptiſed for the dead: after that, there were ſome that baptiſed ſuch as were already dead: and ſprinkled them with water in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, laid their hands ouer them, and called them by their names, as if they had bene aliue. Which thing was reproued and forbidden in the Councell of Carthage.

Others there were that baptiſed children before they were borne, being as yet in their mothers wombe. Which thing is mentioned and reproued by S. Auguſtine.

All theſe, as may ſome appeare, were great abuſes.

Thus the Sacrament of Baptiſme, notwithſtanding it were a holy thing, yet was abuſed.

The Sacrament of the breaking of Chriſts body, and the ſheading of his blood is an heauenly uenly myſtery, and a holy thing; yet hath it often times bene abuſed, and that in the Primitiue Church, when the religion of Chriſt ſeemed to be in higheſt perfection.

In the time of Tertullian and of Saint Cyprian, which was a thouſand and foure hundred yeres agoe; women commonly toke the Sacrament home with them in their napkins, and laid it vp in their cheſts, and receiued a portion of it in the morning before other meates.

This was an abuſe of the Sacrament, and therefore was it broken. In Saint Cyprian and Saint Auguſtines time, yong babes, aſſone as they were baptiſed, receiued the Communion; but that was a great abuſe: For by the doctrine of Saint Paul, the holy myſteries ought to be giuen vnto none, but only vnto ſuch as be able to vnderſtand the meaning thereof, to iudge the Lords body, and to declare his death. And therefore now, infants when they be baptiſed, receiue not the Communion. In the time of Saint Hierom, ſome portion of the holy Communion was ſent from the Church to the new married man, and to his wife to be receiued at home.

This was a diſorder of the Sacrament, and therefore now is not vſed. Saint Irenæus ſaith, that one Marcus a Necromancer, was wont to enchant the cup of the Sacrament of Chriſts blood, ſo that the liquor ſhould ſeeme to increaſe and multiply, and from a little to grow to a great quantity. This alſo was an horrible abuſe of Chriſts holy Sacraments.

Some of late time haue receiued the Communion for their purgation to cleare themſelues againſt ſome notorious ſlander. And then the Prieſt changed the words which commonly be vſed at the miniſtration, (and ſaid thus:) Corpus domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti ſit tibi ad purgationem. Some others haue vſed to hang the Sacrament, as an Agnus Dei, before their breſts, for a protection againſt the aſſaults of the diuell, and all other worldly enemies. Saint Benet miniſtred the Communion vnto a woman that was dead; and it may well be thought that other did ſo as well as he: For it is forbidden by generall conſent in two Councels, the one holden at Antiſrodorum, the other at Carthage.

No man can lightly deny but theſe were great abuſes. For Chriſt appointed not the Sacrament of his laſt ſupper that women ſhould beare it home and keepe it in their cheſts: nor that it ſhould be ſent home to new maried men and women, to be receiued in ſeuerall: nor that it ſhould be miniſtred to babes & infants that knew not what it meant: nor that Inchanters or Necromancers ſhould therby auant their deteſtable practiſes: nor that men ſhould thereby diſcharge themſelues from ſlander: nor that it ſhould be hanged before mens breſts, and caried about as a ſhield againſt the Diuell: nor that it ſhould be miniſtred vnto dead men or women, and cloſed vp in their mouthes, and laid with them in their graues. But that ſuch as beare the name of Chriſt, and truſted to be ſaued by his blood, ſhould communicate together, and ſolace themſelues in the remembrance of his death.

Thus Chriſt himſelfe hath inſtructed vs; Do this, he ſaith, in remembrance of me. This is the very true and lawfull vſe of the holy Communion of Chriſts body and blood, and all others are abuſes.

We ſee therefore, that albeit the Sacrament be an holy thing, and an heauenly myſterie, yet that notwithſtanding it may many waies be abuſed.

But what nede we ſo many proues in a thing that is ſo euident? Saint Paul himſelfe ſaw the abuſes thereof in his time. S. Paul himſelfe, euen in the beginning of the Church, within forty yeres after Chriſts death, witneſſeth, that euen then there were abuſes crept into the Sacrament, and therefore reproueth the Corinthians. And for redreſſe thereof calleth them backe to the example and firſt inſtitution of Chriſt. That ſame ſelfe thing, (ſaith he) that I receiued of the Lord, that I deliuered vnto you, in ſuch ſort as I had receiued it. Let that be a patterne for you to follow.

Some man perhaps will here reply: notwithſtanding the Sacrament in it ſelfe, either through the wickednelle or through the folly of man, may be, and hath bene abuſed, yet neither was there euer, nor can there be any ſuch abuſe in the Maſſe. For it ſtandeth of foure ſpeciall parts; godly doctrine, godly conſecration, godly receiuing of the Sacrament, and godly praiers. In concluſion, it is ſo heauenly and ſo godly a thing, that no folly or wickednelle can enter into it.

Theſe things, good brethren, I know haue bene often times ſpoken out of ſuch places as this is, and ſtoutly anounched in your hearing. And therefore after that the Maſſe had bene once aboliſhed by the noble Prince of godly memory, King Edward the firſt; and the next Prince, for that ſhe knew none other religion, and thought well of the thing that ſhe had bene ſo long trained in, would nedes haue it put in vre againe throw all her dominions; it was forthwith reſtored, in like maner, in all points, as it had bene vſed before, without any kind of alteration or change: as I beléeue, that their very doings therein might ſtand for proſe ſufficient, that neither the Maſſe it ſelfe, nor any parcell or point thereof, had euer béene abuſed.

But alas, what if they that moſt of all other defend the Maſſe, themſelues finde faults and abuſes in the Maſſe? Marke (I pray you) what I ſay: What if the very maintainers and proctours of the Maſſe confeſſe plainly vnto the world in their bookes openly printed and ſet abroad, that there haue béene, and be, abuſes and errours in the Maſſe?

Albertus Pigghius, the greateſt pillar of that part, in a little treatiſe that he writeth of the Maſſe hath theſe words: Quodſi qui abuſus in rem ſacratiſſimam, & ſaluberrimam irrepſerunt, vt irrepſiſſe plerúſque non diffiteantur, ſcimus ad quem, & ad quos pertineat eoſdem corrigere. That is to ſay, If there haue certaine abuſes crept into that holy and holſome thing, that is, the Maſſe, as I grant, there haue crept in very many; yet we know to what man and men the redreſſe thereof doth appertaine. Here Pigghius granteth ſimply without colour that diuers abuſes haue at ſundry times priuily crept into the Maſſe. And yet I beléeue, he was no ſuch enemy to the cauſe, that he would euer haue granted ſo much, ſpecially againſt the ſelfe ſame thing that he defended, vnleſſe he had knowen it perfectly to be true. If any man doubt of this man Albertus Pigghius, and know not his authority, nor what he was; let him vnderſtand, that when I ſpeake of him, I ſpeake of all; for this is he that all the reſt haue choſen to follow, as their Captaine: The greateſt learned man, as it is ſuppoſed, and as he himſelfe thought, that euer wrot in that quarrell. He hath found out errours and abuſes in the Maſſe, and is not aſhamed openly to confeſſe the ſame.

Of theſe errours I haue intended ſomewhat to intreat at this time, not of all, for that would be an infinite labour, but of ſo many, and ſo farforth as the time ſhall ſuffer me.

I will not here enter to ſpeake either of Tranſubſtantiation, either of the Reall preſence, either of the Sacrifice, either of the Common ſale or Alterance, either of the ſuperſtitious ceremonies of the Maſſe, which are for the moſt part both very vaine, and alſo in maner without number.

Of theſe things I am content to diſaduantage my ſelfe at this time, and briefly to touch two or three points, as of the Latine tongue wherein commonly the Maſſe hath béen vſed: of the Communion vnder one kind: of the Cannon: of the adoration of the Sacrament: and of the priuate Maſſe. And of theſe things I intend to ſpeake, although not ſo largely, and with ſo many words as the cauſe would require: yet, by Gods grace, ſo ſimply and ſo truely, that who ſo will be moued with truth or reaſon ſhall ſone perceiue there haue béene abuſes in the Maſſe. And if there were but one of theſe abuſes in it, yet were it worthy to be ſpoken of and to be amended. But if we ſhall plainly ſée with our eies that all the errours and diſorders, beſides a great number elſe, which I willingly paſſe by, haue béene in the Maſſe, (O good brethren) let vs not then thinke, that ſo many godly men in theſe our daies, haue ſpoken againſt it without cauſe.

Firſt, as touching the vnknowen and ſtrange tongue that hath béen vſed in the Maſſe, Saint Pauls counſell and commandement is in generall, that whatſoeuer is done or ſaid in the congregation, ſhould ſo be done and ſaid, that the hearers may haue comfort thereby, and yéeld thankes vnto God, and ſay, Amen. But the ſame Saint Paul, ſaith, if thou make thy praier in the congregation with the ſpirit or noiſe of ſtrange words, how ſhall the vnlearned man thereunto ſay, Amen? For he knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. For notwithſtanding thy praier perhaps be good, yet hath the other no comfort or profit by it. And therefore (he ſaith) farther, I had rather vtter fiue words in the congregation with vnderſtanding of my meaning, ſo that the reſt may haue inſtruction thereby, than ten thouſand words in a ſtrange and vnknowen tongue.

Saint Auguſtine writing vpon the Pſalmes ſaith thus: Oportet nos humano more, non auicularum ratione cantare: nam & Merula, & Pſittaci, & Corui docentur ſonare quod neſciunt: We muſt (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) in the praiers that we make to God, not chirpe like birds, but ſing like men. For Popiniayes, and Rauens, and other birds are taught to ſing, they know not what.

Iuſtinian a Chriſtian Emperour made a ſtrait conſtitution, that all Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould pronounce the words of the miniſtration, with open voice, that the people might ſay, Amen.

And to paſſe by all other authorities and examples in this behalfe, before the Church grew to corruption, all Chriſtian men throughout the world made their common praiers, and had the holy Communion in their owne common and knowen tongue. But in the Maſſe, as it hath béene vſed in this latter age of the world, the Prieſt vttereth the holy myſteries in ſuch a language, as neither the people, nor often times himſelfe vnderſtandeth the meaning. And thus the death of Chriſt and his paſſion is ſet forth in ſuch ſort, as the poꝛe people can haue no comfoꝛt oꝛ fruit thereby; noꝛ giue thankes vnto God, noꝛ say, Amen. Of all that holy supper, and most comfoꝛtable oꝛdinance of Chꝛist, there was nothing foꝛ the simple soules to consider, but onely a number of gestures and countenances; and yet neither they, noꝛ the Pꝛiest knew what they meant. Thinke you this was Chꝛists meaning when he oꝛdained the communion first? Thinke you that S. Paul receiued these things of the Loꝛd and deliuered the same to the Corinthians? O good bꝛethꝛen, Chꝛist oꝛdeined the holy Sacrament foꝛ our sakes, that we might thereby remember the mysteries of his death, and know the pꝛice of his blod.

Touching the second abuse of the Communion vnder one kind, it would be long to say so much as the place would seeme to require. Foꝛ, besides the Institution of Chꝛist, and the woꝛds of S. Paul, which to a Chꝛistian man may seeme sufficient, it was vsed thoꝛowout the whole Catholike church, sꝛ hundꝛed yeares after Chꝛists ascension, vnder both kinds, without exception. But in one woꝛd, to say that may be sufficient foꝛ a wise man to consider; Gelasius, an old father of the Church, and a Bishop of Rome saith, that to minister the communion vnder one kind is open sacrilege. His woꝛds be these: Diuiso vnius eiusdémque mysterij fine grandi sacrilegio non potest peruenire. I trust I shall néd no further euidence to pꝛoue that the Masse, in this part, hath béne abused. The third point that I pꝛomised to speake of, is the Canon, a thing foꝛ many causes very vaine in it selfe, and so vncertaine that no man can readily tell on whom to father it. S. Paul saith, Scio cui credidi & certus sum: I know whom I haue beléeued, and I am certaine. And vnto Tymothy he saith; Permane in his quæ didicisti, sciens à quo didiceris: Stand steadfastly in such things as thou hast learned, knowing of whom thou hast learned them. Yet many men this day stand to the Canon as vnto the holiest part of all the Masse, and know not of whom they haue learned it. Some say Alexander the first made it; some say Leo; some say Gelasius, some say Gregorius the first; Gregorius saith, one Scholasticus; some others say, Gregorius the third: But Innocentius Tertius, to put the matter quite out of doubt, said plainly it came from Chꝛist, and from his Apostles. Howbeit, whosoeuer was the first deuiser of it, it foꝛceth not. The substance of it and the meaning is moꝛe materiall; and theꝛeof I thinke it néedefull to touch some part in as few woꝛds as I may. Foꝛ notwithstanding I haue small pleasure in opening such matters as may seeme odious, yet is it behoofeful foꝛ euery man to vnderstand of that thing that was counted so high and holy, what maner a thing it was, and what it contained.

First, the Pꝛiest in the Canon desireth God to blesse Chꝛists body, as though it were not sufficiently blessed already. Further he saith, that he offereth and pꝛesenteth vp Chꝛist vnto his father, which is an open blasphemy. Foꝛ contrariwise, Chꝛist pꝛesenteth vp vs, and maketh vs a swéet oblation in the sight of God his father.

Moꝛeouer, he desireth God so to accept the body of his sonne Jesus Chꝛist, as he once accepted the sacrifice of Abel, oꝛ the oblation of Melchisedech. It is knowen that Abel offered vp of the fruit of his flocke a lambe oꝛ a sheepe: and that Melchisedech offered vnto Abraham and his company, returning from the battell, bꝛead and wine. And thinke we that Chꝛist the Sonne of God standeth so farre in his Fathers displeasure, that he néedeth a moꝛtall and a miserable man to be his spokesman to pꝛocure him fauour? oꝛ thinke we that God receiueth the body of his only begotten Sonne no otherwise than he once receiued a sheepe oꝛ a lambe at the hands of Abel? oꝛ than Abraham receiued bꝛead and wine of Melchisedech? If no; Why then maketh the Pꝛiest this pꝛaier, in the Canon immediately after the consecration? Supra quæ propitio ac sereno vultu respicere digneris, & accepta habere, sicuti accepta habere dignatus es munera pueri tui iusti Abel, & sacrificium Patriarchæ nostri Abraham, & quod tibi obtulit summus Sacerdos tuus Melchisedech. That is to say, Loke downe with mercifull countenance vpon these Sacrifices, (that is, the body of Chꝛist thy Sonne, and the cup his blod) and vouchsafe to receiue them, as thou sometime vouchsafedst to receiue the oblations of thy child Abel the iust, and the Sacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham and that thing that was offered vnto the by thy high Pꝛiest Melchisedech. Besides this he desireth God, that an angel may come and carry Chꝛists body away into heauen. This is the pꝛaier that he maketh: Iube hæc perferri per manus sancti Angeli tui in sublime altare tuum. What a fable is this, that Chꝛist should be boꝛne vpon an Angell, and so carried vp away into heauen? I would not stand so long vpon these follies, if foꝛce dꝛaue me not thereunto. Theꝛefoꝛe I leaue to speake farther of the Canon, giuing you occasion by these few things, the better to iudge of the rest.

The fourth matter that remaineth to be touched, is the adoꝛation, a great matter full of danger, and full of ieopardy, and so much the moꝛe dangerous, foꝛ that it is an honour belonging onely vnto God, and yet without any warrant of Gods woꝛd. Chꝛist that best knew what ought to be done heꝛein, when he oꝛdained and deliuered the Sacrament of his body and bloud, gaue no commandement that any man ſhould fall downe to it, or worſhip it. Saint Paul that toke the Sacrament at Chriſts hand, and as he had taken it, deliuered it to the Corinthians, neuer willed adoration, or godly honour to be giuen vnto it. The old Doctours, and holy Fathers of the Church, Saint Cyprian, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Ambroſe, S. Hierom, S. Auguſtine, and others, that receiued the Sacrament at the Apoſtles hands, and as it may be thought, continued the ſame in ſuch ſort, as they had receiued it, neuer make mention in any of all their bookes of adoring or worſhipping of the Sacrament. It is a very new deuice, and as it is well knowen, came but lately into the Church.

About three hundred yeres paſt, Honorius being then Biſhop of Rome, commanded the Sacrament to be lifted vp, and the people reuerently to bow downe to it. After him, Vrbanus the fourth appointed a Holy day of Corpus Chriſti, and granted out large pardons to the keepers of it, that the people ſhould with better will reſort to the Church, and keepe it holy. This is the greateſt antiquity of the whole matter: about three hundred yeres agoe it was firſt found out, and put in practiſe; but Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, the holy Fathers in the Primitiue church, the Doctours that followed them, and other learned and godly men whatſoeuer for the ſpace of a thouſand and two hundred yeres after Chriſt, neuer heard of it. Once againe I ſay, for the ſpace of a thouſand and two hundred yeres after Chriſts aſcenſion into heauen, this worſhipping of the Sacrament was neuer knowen, or practiſed in any place within the whole Catholike Church of Chriſt throughout the whole world. But after it was once receiued and put in vſe, and the people began to worſhip the Sacrament with godly honour, the learned men, and Schole Doctours that then were, ſaw it could not ſtand without great danger, and confeſſed that the ignorant ſort thereby might ſone be led into Idolatry. Marke, I beſeech you, what I ſay, for I know, vnto ſome men it ſeemeth not poſſible that there may be any kind of danger in worſhipping the Sacrament of Chriſts body; and therefore ſome haue alleaged Saint Auguſtines words in this behalfe: Nemo manducat niſi prius adoret; No man eateth Chriſts body, but firſt he doth worſhip it. And againe; Non peccamus adorando, ſed magis peccaremus non adorando: We offend not in worſhiping the fleſh of Chriſt, but rather we ſhould offend, if we ſhould not worſhip it. But indeed the Schole-doctours, and learned men ſaw there might be danger in worſhipping the Sacrament, and therefore gaue warning of it.

Iohn Duns, and William Durand ſay thus, If there remained the ſubſtance of bread after conſecration, the people would therefore take occaſion of Idolatry, and in ſtead of Chriſt body, would giue godly worſhip vnto the bread; and therefore they thought it beſt to remoue away the bread, and to bring in Tranſubſtantiation, a word newly deuiſed, and neuer once heard, or ſpoken of, before the Councell of Laterane, holden at Rome, in the yere of our Lord 1215. But the old Doctours and Fathers which firſt planted the Church, and to whom more credit is to be giuen, write plainly, that in the Sacrament, after conſecration, there remaineth ſtill very bread and wine in nature and ſubſtance as before. And to alleage one or two in ſtead of many, S. Auguſtine ſaith in a Sermon ad infantes: Quod videtis in menſa, panis eſt: That thing that ye ſee vpon the table, is bread. Gelaſius alſo ſaith in like ſort: Non deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia panis, vel natura vini, ſed manent in ſua proprietate naturæ: It leaueth not to be the ſubſtance of bread, or the nature of wine, but they remaine in the property of their owne nature.

Theodoretus, an old Doctour of the Church, likewiſe ſaith: Chriſtus ea ſymbola, quæ videntur, corporis & ſanguinis ſui appellations honorauit, non naturam tranſmutans, ſed naturæ addens gratiam: Chriſt, ſaith Theodoretus, honoured the bread and wine which we ſee, with the names of his body and bloud, not changing the nature thereof, but vnto the ſame nature ioyning his grace. I know not what may be more clearely ſpoken. S. Auguſtine ſaith, it is bread: Gelaſius ſaith, it leaueth not to be the ſubſtance and nature of bread and wine: Theodoretus ſaith, Chriſt honoured the bread and wine with the natures of his body, and bloud, but yet changed not their nature. Thus the old godly Biſhops and Fathers of the Church, acknowledge, and affirme, that bread remaineth in the Sacrament after conſecration. But Duns, and Durand, and ſome others of the yong Fathers and Doctours ſay, If the people worſhip the Sacrament, and bread remaine, then muſt they needes be in great danger of Idolatry. Wherefore we may well conclude of them both, for as much as it is cleare by the old Doctours that bread remaineth, that the people reſorting to the Maſſe, and their worſhipping the Sacrament, muſt needes be in danger of Idolatry.

Farther they ſay, Idolatry may be done to the Sacrament, if a man happen to worſhip the accidents of the bread (that is to ſay,) the whitnes, or roundnes, or other ſuch outward ward formes, or shewes of bread, as he seth with his eie, and giue the honour vnto that in stead of Christs body. O miserable people, that thus is led, to worship they know not what! For alas, how many of them vnderstand these distinctions, or care for them? How many of them vnderstand after what sort accidentia may be sine subiecto? Or how whitenesse is founded in the Sacrament? Or what is the difference betweene substantia and accidens? Or what Priest, when he went to Masse, euer taught the people to know these things, and to auoid the danger? Undoubtedly, I could neuer yet perceiue, by any reading, either of the Scriptures, or els of other prophane writings, but that the people of all ages hath euermore bene readier to receiue Idolatry, than to learne the distinctions and quiddities of Logike or Philosophy.

Thus we se, euen by the confession of Duns and Durand, and other their owne Doctours, that he that goeth to the Masse, and worshippeth the Sacrament, vnlesse he be learned, and take good heed, may sone commit Idolatry. The doctrine of it selfe is new, the prophet of it such, as the Church of God for the space of twelue hundred yeres was well able to be without it; the ieopardy of it great and horrible, and scarsely possible to be auoided. I speake not these things (good brethren) to the intent to spoile Christ of the honour that is due vnto him. I know, and confesse, that Christs blessed body is most worthy of all honour. I know that the flesh of the Sonne of God, is not therefore the lesse honourable, because it is now become glorious, and sitteth in heauen, at the right hand of God his Father. The body of Christ, sitting aboue all Heauens, is worshipped of vs, being here beneath in earth. Therefore the Priest at the Communion, before he enter into the holy mysteries, giueth warning vnto the people, to mount vp with their mindes into heauen, and crieth vnto them, Sursum corda: Lift vp your hearts; according to the doctrine Coloss. 3. of Saint Paul, Si vnà surrexistis cum Christo, eaque sursum sunt quærite, vbi Christus est sedens ad dextram patris: If ye be risen againe with Christ, seke for those things that be aboue, where as Christ is sitting at the right hand of his Father. And againe: Nostra
Philip. 3. conuersatio est in cœlis, vnde Saluatorem expectamus: Our conuersation, or dwelling is in heauen, from whence we loke for our Sauiour. Therefore Saint Augustine spake the words that I before alleaged: Nemo manducat nisi prius adoret: No man eateth Christs flesh, but first he doth worship it. The eating thereof, and the worshipping must ioyne together. But where we eat it, there must we worship it: Therefore must we worship it sitting in Heauen. So saith the old Doctour and Father Saint Chrysostome: Vbi cadauer, ibi aquilæ; Cadauer, domini corpus est: Aquilas autem nos appellat; vt ostendat, oportere illum ad alta contendere, qui ad hoc corpus accedit. Aquilarum enim non graculorum est hæc mensa. That is to say, Wheresoeuer is the carcase, there be the Eagles: The carcase is Christs body: vs he calleth the Eagles; to declare, that, whosoeuer will approch nere to that body, must get aloft. For this is a banket for Eagles, that soare a high; not for Iayes, that kepe the ground. Christs body is in Heauen: Thither therefore must we direct our hearts: there must we feed: there must we refresh our selues: and there must we worship it.

Ad Hebidiam. So saith S. Hierom: Ascendamus cum eo in cœnaculum magnum stratum: ibi accipiamus ab eo sursum calicem noui testamenti: Let vs get vp, saith S. Hierom, with him into the great dining Chamber that is already prepared, and there let vs receiue of him aboue, the cup of the new Testament.

In Lucam Ca. 2. 4. So saith S. Ambrose: Non super terram, nec in terra, nec secundùm terram requirere debemus, si volumus inuenire: We may not seke for thē, neither vpon the earth, nor in the earth, nor about the earth, if we list to find thē. And to conclude, so saith Eusebius Emissenus: Exaltata mente adora corpus Dei tui: that is, Lifting vp thy mind vnto heauen, there worship and adore the body of thy God.

Thus did the old Catholike Fathers worship the body of Christ. Thus may we also worship it safely, and without perill.

But to giue Gods honour to the Sacrament, is a thing both lately brought into the Church, vnknowen and strange to the ancient Doctors; and as the Schoolemen, and the greatest maintainers of it haue themselues confessed, an occasion of Idolatry, and full of danger.

For what if the Priest happen not to consecrate? What if he leaue out the words of consecration, and neuer speake them? as it is knowen that some Priests haue done many yeres together. Or what if the Priest haue no intention or mind to consecrate? What case standeth the poore people then in? Or what thing is it that they worship? Christs body cannot be there without consecration: Consecration there can be none, as they themselues haue taught, if there misse either pronuntiation and vtterance of the words, or else purpose to consecrate and intention. And how can the people know, with what intention or minde the Prieſt goeth to the Maſſe? Or whether he hath duly pronounced the words? Or whether he hath conſecrated or no? And knowing none of theſe things, which in very deede is not poſſible for them to know, how can they be well aſſured, that it is the body of Chriſt that the Prieſt holdeth vp? and whereunto they fall downe, and giue godly honor? Thus, by their owne learning, the people muſt néeds ſtand ſtill in doubt, and neuer know certainly what they worſhip? O good people, thinke not that I imagine theſe things of my ſelfe. Our owne aduerſaries that ſtand againſt vs in this cauſe, euen the famouſt, and beſt learned of them all, haue ſéene, and written, and confeſſed the ſame.

Alexander, a Biſhop of Rome, writing vpon the Maſter of the Sentences, taketh vp the matter on this ſort: For as much as the Prieſts purpoſe, and his priuy doings about the conſecration cannot be knowen, that therefore no man ought to worſhip the Sacrament, when it is holden vp, but with this condition, Si ille conſecrauerit, that is, If the Prieſt hath conſecrated. That is to ſay; When ye ſée the Sacrament lifted vp, ye muſt ſay or thinke thus with your ſelfe; If this Prieſt hath conſecrated, then doe I worſhip it: If he hath not conſecrated, then doe I not worſhipt it. Thus ſaith Alexander a Biſhop of Rome.

But Thomas of Aquine leaueth the matter a litter more at large. He ſaith; Iſta conditio non ſemper actu requiritur: ſatis eſt habere habitum: That is to ſay, It ſhall not be needfull at euery time to ſay or to thinke thus whenſoeuer ye knéele downe to worſhip: but it ſhall be ſufficient if ye haue a certaine readines in your mind to ſay or to thinke ſo. Yet Holcot, writing likewiſe vpon the Maſter of the Sentences, ſaith thus: Laicus adorat hoſtiam non conſecratam: iſta fides ſufficit illi ad ſaluationem: tamen eſt erronea. The lay man, ſaith he, as it may ſometimes happen, worſhippeth a wafer that is not conſecrate: this faith is ſufficient vnto him to his ſaluation, and yet is it a falſe faith, and erroneus. And farther he concludeth in this ſort: Homo poteſt mereri per fidem erroneam; etiamſi contingat, vt adoret diabolum. By theſe words, we may ſée, ſuch as will not content themſelues to be ordered by Gods wiſdome, how dangerouſly they runne headlong at the laſt.

Holcot was not the worſt learned man amongſt them, yet to vphold the errour that he had once taken in hand to defend, he was driuen to confeſſe, that a man may méede at Gods hand by an erroneous and falſe faith, yea although he worſhip the Diuell.

This is the certainty of the doctrine that the people of God of long time hath béene led in. In the higheſt and heauenlieſt point of religion, that is, in the worſhipping of God, they themſelues know not what they doe. It is true of them that Chriſt ſaith to the woman of Samaria, Ye worſhip ye know not what.

Alas, is this the honour that is due to Chriſt? Is this the worſhipping of God in ſpirit and truth? Is this the ſeeking of Chriſt in heauen? But ſome man will ſay, Theſe be triſling and light matters, and proue nothing. Such reports, I know are giuen abroad of all that is preached and taught this day, that whatſoeuer is ſpoken by any of vs, is light, and childiſh, and not worth the hearing. But the reporters hereof are they, to whom the authority of the old Doctours, the authority of the Primitiue church, the authority of the Scriptures, the authority of Chriſt himſelfe ſeemeth light, and not greatly worth the hearing.

Loth I am héere to rip vp, and to open vnto you the high myſteries, and ſecrets of their learning, and the force and ſtrength of their reaſons. Yet at this time the importunity of them forceth me ſo to doe, that after ye haue once taken aſwell ſome taſte of their argments, as ye haue of ours, ye may the better, and more indifferently iudge of both. And let not them that priuily and vntruly find fault with our reaſons be agréeued if they heare openly and truely ſomewhat of their owne. And firſt to begin with the head, marke ye well and waigh this argument. God made two lights in heauen, the greater light to rule the day, the leſſe light to rule the night: Ergo, there be two powers to rule the world, the Pope, that reſembleth the Sun, and the Emperor, that is faireſſe than he, and is likened vnto the Mone. And how much the Emperour is leſſe, the gloſſe declareth by Mathematicall computation, ſaying, that the Earth is ſeuen times greater than the Mone, and the Sunne eight times greater than the Earth: So followeth it, that the Popes dignity is fiue and fifty times greater than the dignity of the Emperour. This is an argument of theirs, vſed by Innocentius Tertius, vnto the Emperour of Conſtantinople: In principio creauit Deus cœlum & terram, non in principijs: God created Heauen and Earth in the beginning, as in one, not in the beginnings, as in many: Ergo, the Pope hath the ſouraigntie ouer all Kings and Princes. This is an argument alſo of theirs vſed by Pope Bonifacius the eight: Extra de maioritate & obedientia: vnam ſanctam. Cum tranſierit ad Dominum tolletur velamen: That is, When the Infidell ſhall come to Chriſt, the veile of darkneſſe ſhall be taken from his heart: Ergo, he that becommeth a Prieſt, muſt shaue his crowne. This is an argument of theirs, to be found in Isidorus. There is but one only God: Ergo, all nations throughout the world must pray to him in one tongue. This is an argument of theirs, made by Gerson sometime Chancellour of Paris. Ecce duo gladij hic: Behold here be two swords: Ergo, the Bishop of Rome hath power of both swords, both spirituall, and temporall. This is an argument of theirs used by Bonifacius the eight; Extra de maioritate, & obedientia, as aboue. The Bishop of Rome graunteth out Pardons: Ergo, there must needes be a Purgatory. This is an argument of

Esa. 52. theirs used by Iohn Fisher Bishop of Rochester; Euntes docete omnes gentes: Goe and teach all nations. And againe: Quàm speciosi pedes euangelizantium pacem, euangelizantium bona! O, how beautifull be the feete of them that preach peace, of them that preach good Ephes. 6. things! And againe: Calciati pedes in præparationem Euangelij pacis: Hauing your feet shod to the preparation of the Gospell of peace: Ergo, the Bishop must weare purple sandales. Aspergam super vos aquam mundam: I will sprinkle vpon you cleane water: Ergo, the Priest must sprinkle the people with holy water. Sine me nihil potestis facere: Without me you can doe nothing: Ergo, the Bishop onely must consecrate the Church, and no man else. All these, with a number more of the like, be their arguments, used by William Durand in his Rationali diuinorum. But let vs come nere, and see the arguments whereupon the Masse is built: Nolite sancta dare canibus: Giue not holy things to dogs: Ergo, the Priest at Masse, and other where, may not speake to the people, but in a strange tongue. The title of Christs death was written vpon the Crosse in Greeke, Hebrew, and Latine: Ergo, all common prayers in the Church must be used in one of the same tongues, that is, either in Greeke, or in Hebrew, or in Latine. These arguments haue been used by many, deuised first, as may be thought, by Master Eckius.

Christ was buried in a shroud of linnen cloth: Ergo, the Corporall must be made of fine linnen. This argument may be found in Sylueſter.

Many of the lay people haue the palsey, and many haue long beards: Ergo, they must all receiue the Communion vnder one kind. This is a common argument, used in maner by all them that haue written in this behalfe: Petra erat Christus: Christ was the rocke: Ergo, the altar must be made of stone.

Domini est terra, & plenitudo eius: The Earth is the Lords, and the fulnesse therof. And, Veritas tua in circuitu tuo: Thy truth is in thy compasse. The money for which Iudas sold Christ was round: Ergo, the Host or the Sacramentall bread must be round. Calix aureus Babylon in manu mea: Babylon is a cup of Gold in my hand, saith the Lord: Ergo, the chalice must be of siluer or gold. This is an argument of theirs used by Master William Durand. When Virgill saith, Cum faciam vitula, he useth facere, for sacrificare. That is, he useth this word doing, for this word sacrificing: Ergo, when Christ said to his Disciples, Hoc facite in mei memoriam, Do this in remembrance of me, he meant, sacrifice this in the remembrance of me. This argument is fashioned out by M. Clitouey. And to be short, the Angell looked into the graue: Ergo, the Priest must take off the paten, & looke into the Chalice. Pilate washed his hands before the people: Ergo, the Priest must likewise wash his hands when he is at Masse. Iudas kissed Christ: Ergo, the Priest must kisse the Altar. The theefe on the Crosse repented himselfe of his wicked life: Ergo, the Priest at Masse must fetch a sigh, and knocke his breast. These, and other like be their reasons, and whoso liketh to see them, may find them, and other more as good as these in William Durand. Now good people, iudge ye in your conscience indifferently, vs both, whither of vs bringeth you the better and sounder arguments. We bring you nothing but Gods holy word, which is a sure rocke to build vpon, and will neuer fleet, or shrinke. And therefore are we able truly to say with S. Paul, Quod accepimus à Domino, hoc tradidimus vobis: We haue deliuered vnto you the same things that we haue receiued of the Lord.

For concerning the last matter that I promised to touch, it cannot be denied by any man be he neuer so wilful, but Christ in his last Supper ordeined a Communion, & shewed no manner token of a priuate Masse, as may plainly appeare both by the words that he spake, and also by the order of his doings. For he toke the bread, brake it, diuided it, and gaue it to his disciples, and said, Eat ye all hereof, not vnto one alone, but vnto the whole. He said farther, by way of charge, Do this: that is to say, Practise this that I haue here done, and that in such forme and sort, as ye haue seene me doe it.

S. Paul likewise, when he saw that the vse of the Sacrament was growen to disorder, that euery man toke his owne supper priuately to himselfe, and that thereby, both the holy Communion, and also brotherly loue and vnity was despised, as it hath been in the West part of the Church, now a great many of yeares, in this latter times, he called them backe againe, to the beginning thereof, and to the institution of Christ, as giuing them thereby to vnderstand, that the Sacrament cannot be better vsed, than

Christ

Christ himselfe vsed it. Thus he saith: Cum conueneritis in vnum locum, non potestis dominicam cœnam manducare; vnusquisque enim præsumit cœnam suam: When ye resort together into one place, ye cannot eat the Lords Supper; for euery one of you eateth his owne supper afore hand. Therefore he saith vnto them; Alter alterum expectate: Tary ye and wait one for another, and so receiue the holy Communion all together. For this is it that I deliuered vnto you, and the same selfe thing I receiued of the Lord.

Here haue I briefly shewed the disorder of the priuate Masse, by the first institution of the Sacrament, and by the commandement and authority of S. Paul. Now will I, by Gods grace, also declare, and open the same, by the examples, and whole practise of the Primitiue Church, and by the ancient Doctours, and other learned Fathers that followed after the Apostles time, for the space of six hundred yeres, or more; and I trust, ye shall clerely see, that for so long time, there was no priuat Masse in the Catholike Church of Christ in any country or coast throughout the world. For all the writers that were within the compasse of that time, haue left behind them witnesse sufficient of a Communion; but not one of them all could euer tell vs of any priuate Masse.

Clemens, who, as they say, was Scholar to S. Peter, writeth thus in an Epistle to Saint Iames: Tot in altare holocausta offerantur, quot populo sufficere debeant: Let there be so many hostes offered vpon the altar, as may be sufficient for the people to receiue.

Dionysius an ancient writer, and, as some haue thought, disciple vnto S. Paul, (although the contrary may appeare plainly by his owne words) in a little booke that he hath made of the whole order of the Church in his time, setting forth the maner of the Lords Supper, writeth thus: Tum Sacerdos ad sacram communionem, & ipse conuertitur, & reliquos, vt vna communicent hortatur: that is, The Priest both turneth himselfe to the Communion, and also exhorteth the rest to communicate, and receiue with him.

And farther he saith: Sumpta demum atque omnibus tradita communione diuina, gratias referrens, finem mysterijs imponit: that is, The Priest, when he hath receiued himselfe, and deliuered the holy Communion to all the people, giueth God thankes, and maketh an end of the mysteries. Hitherto we find plaine tokens of a Communion, but not one word of the priuate Masse.

Iustinus Martyr, in his Apology, or defence of the Christian faith, sheweth in what sort the Lords Supper was vsed in his time. Diaconus (saith he) hortatur populum, vt illorum, quæ proposita sunt, velint esse participes: that is, The Deacon exhorteth the people, that they will be partakers of those things that be laid forth before them.

Farther he saith: Diaconi distribuunt, ad participandum præsentium vnicuique, ex consecrato pane, & vino & aqua: illis verò, qui non adsunt, deferunt domum: that is, The Deacons deliuer of the consecrate bread and wine and water, to euery one that is there present. And if there be any away, they carry it home to them. Here also we find a Communion, but no priuate Masse.

S. Ambrose rebuketh his people that were then growen negligent in receiuing the Lords Supper, and vsed to excuse the matter for that they thought themselues not worthy. Si non es dignus quotidie, ergo nec semel dignus es in toto anno: If thou be not worthy, saith S. Ambrose, euery day, then art thou not worthy once in a yere.

And againe, the same S. Ambrose expounding these words of S. Paul, Alius alium expectate, writeth thus: Expectationem dicit, vt multorum oblatio simul celebretur, & omnibus ministretur: that is, he commandeth them to tary one for another, that the oblation of many may be celebrate, or done together, and so be ministred vnto them all. These words also sauour altogether of a Communion, and nothing of a priuate Masse.

S. Hierom, S. Augustine, and the Ecclesiasticall history witnesseth, that vntill that time commonly euery where (but specially in Rome) the people vsed to communicate euery day. Leo writing vnto Dioscorus the Bishop of Alexandria, gaue him this aduise, that where the Church was so little that it was not able to receiue all the whole people to communicate all together; then the Priest should ministre two or three Communions in one day, that as the people came in, and had once filled the Church, so they should receiue the Communion, and afterward giue place to others.

S. Hierom, writing vpon the eleuenth Chapter of the first to the Corinthians, hath these words: Cœna dominica omnibus debet esse communis, quia ille omnibus discipulis suis qui aderant, æqualiter tradidit sacramenta: that is, The Supper of the Lord must be common to all the people, for Christ gaue his Sacraments to all his disciples, that were present. I leaue out other authorities for shortnes sake; for it would be too long to say asmuch herein as might be said. All these holy Doctours, and godly Fathers, giue vs most perfit euidence of a Communion, without mention making of any priuate Masse.

Thus the Catholike Church of Christ vsed the holy Communion at the beginning.

And euen thus, the moſt part of Chriſtian people, throughout the whole world, the Indians, the Mauritanians, the Egyptians, the Perſians, the Arabians, the Armenians, the Grecians, and as many as beare the name of Chriſt, haue kept and continued the ſame amongſt themſelues, from the firſt time they receiued the Goſpell, vntill this day: And neuer receiued, or vſed the Priuate Maſſe.

But what better witneſſe may we vſe in this behalfe, than the very Maſſe-booke it ſelfe which is the rule and direction of the Maſſe? If the Maſſe-booke it ſelfe beare witneſſe againſt the Priuate Maſſe, then I truſt our cauſe ſhal appeare ſomewhat better than it hath bene taken heretofore.

Firſt by the way, before I enter nere into the matter, the prayers that be vſed in the Maſſe, be common, aſwell to the people, as to the Prieſt. The Prieſt ſaith, Oremus, Let vs pray, and ſo goeth forth in his Collect; and at the end thereof the whole people by the Maſſe-booke are taught to ſay, Amen. The Prieſt ſaith, The Lord be with you; the people by the Maſſe-booke is taught to anſwer, And with thy ſpirit. The Prieſt ſaith, Lift vp your hearts; the people by the Maſſe-booke ſhould anſwer, We lift them vp to the Lord. The Prieſt turneth him to the people, and ſaith, Orate pro me fratres, & ſorores: Pray for me brothers, and ſiſters. And, by the very order of the Maſſe-booke, the people ſhould know what he ſaith, and at his requeſt ſhould pray for him. Hereby we ſee, that whatſoeuer prayers be vſed about the miniſtration of the Sacrament, ought to be the common requeſts of all the people. Therefore ſaith Iuſtinus, an old godly Father, and a holy Martyr: Vbi gratias egit præpoſitus, vniuerſus populus acclamat, Amen. That is, When the Prieſt hath giuen thankes, the whole people ſay, Amen. And Chryſoſtome likewiſe ſaith: Ne mireris, ſi populus in myſteriis noſtris, cum Sacerdote colloquatur: Marueil not, ſaith Chryſoſtome, though the people and the Prieſt, in our myſteries, talke together. For in the common prayers that be vſed about the miniſtration, the Prieſt and the people both in voice and heart ſhould ioyne together: and when the Prieſt hath once done the Conſecration, and the people ſhould at his hand receiue the Communion, the Maſſe booke it ſelfe biddeth him to breake the bread in three parts: and thereof haue idle heads of late time phanſied out many myſticall follies: as though one part thereof were offered for them that be in Heauen: the other for them, that, they ſay, be in Purgatorie: the third for them that be aliue. Theſe be fantaſies, and verie follies, without any ground either of the holie Scriptures, or of the Doctors, or of the old Catholike Church. But in verie deed, the breaking and diuiding of the bread is a remainent of the true, and the old Communion, that was in vſe in the time of the Doctors of the Church, and of the holy Catholike Fathers; for to that end the bread is broken, that it may be diuided among the people, and therefore the Supper of the Lord is called, Fractio Panis, that is, The breaking of bread.

Moreouer, the Prieſt by the Maſſe-booke is taught to ſay, Accipite, edite, Take ye, eat ye. And, Habete vinculum charitatis, vt apti ſitis ſacroſanctis myſteriis: That is, Haue ye the band of charitie, that ye may be meet for the holie myſteries. And to whom ſhall we thinke the Prieſt ſpeaketh theſe words? It were too vaine a thing for him in the open congregation, to ſpeake to himſelfe, and ſpeciallie in the plurall number. Yet were it a great deale more vaine for him, to ſpeake the ſame words, to the bread and wine, and to ſay vnto them, Take ye, eat ye, or haue ye the band of charity, that ye may be meet for the holy myſteries. Therefore it is euident, that theſe words ſhould be ſpoken to the people, and that in ſuch ſort, as they might well vnderſtand them, and prepare themſelues to the Communion.

And to conclude, the Prieſt by his owne Maſſe-booke is bidden to ſay theſe words immediately after the Agnus Dei: Hæc ſacroſancta commixtio, & conſecratio corporis, & ſanguinis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, fiat mihi & omnibus ſumentibus, ſalus mentis, & corporis. That is to ſay, This commixtion and conſecration of the bodie and bloud of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be vnto me, and to all that receiue it, health of bodie and ſoule. Thus in the Maſſe-booke it ſelfe, which, as I ſaid afore, is the very rule and direction of the Maſſe, if it were vſed accordinglie, we finde a Communion for the whole congregation to receiue together, and no priuate Maſſe. Perhaps there may be ſome that will ſay, We grant theſe things be ſpoken of the communion in the old Doctors: but there be as many things or mo ſpoken by them of the priuate Maſſe, and all that you diſſemble and paſſe by.

I know, ſuch replies haue bene made by diuers: But, good brethren, I will make it plaine vnto you through Gods grace, by the moſt ancient writers that were in and after the Apoſtles time, and by the order of the firſt Primitiue church, that then there could be no priuate Maſſe, and that whoſo would not communicate with the Prieſt, was then commanded out of the congregation. In the Canons of the Apoſtles, there is a decree made againſt all ſuch as would be preſent at the communion, and yet not receiue the ſacrament:

the words be theſe: Fideles qui in Eccleſiam ingrediuntur, & Scripturas audiunt, & communionem ſanctam non recipiunt, tanquam eccleſiaſticæ pacis perturbatores, à communione arceantur: That is, Such Chriſtian men as come to the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and receiue not the holy Communion, let them be excommunicated, as men that diſquiet the whole Church.

Calixtus a Biſhop of Rome, not long after the Apoſtles time, giueth out the like commandement in the ſame behalfe: His words be theſe: Peracta conſecratione, omnes communicent, qui noluerint carere eccleſiaſticis liminibus: ſic enim Apoſtoli ſtatuerunt, & ſancta Romana tenet eccleſia: That is, When the conſecration is done, let euery man receiue the Communion, vnleſſe he will be put off from the entry of the Church: For this thing haue the Apoſtles ordeined, and the holy church of Rome continueth the ſame. Saint Chryſoſtome, vpon the Epiſtle of Saint Paul to the Epheſians, ſharply rebuketh the people, for refraining the holy Communion. Thus he ſaith: Non eſt dignus communione: ergo nec precibus: Qua ratione preces dicit, Abite; tu vero impudenter perſtas. Thou wilt ſay (ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome) that thou art not worthy to receiue the Communion. Then art thou not worthy to be preſent at the common prayers. The Deacon ſaith vnto you that will not communicate, Get you hence: and yet thou like an impudent man ſtandeſt ſtill.

Saint Gregory in his Dialogues, ſhewed the maner of the Communion in his time, to the like purpoſe: Diaconus clamat, Si quis non communicat, exeat, & locum cedat alteri: The Deacon, ſaith Saint Gregory, ſpeaketh out aloud; Who ſo will not Communicate, let him depart away and giue place to others. This was the order of the old time: The Deacon gaue warning to the people: Exeunto catechumeni: Exeunto pœnitentes: Let ſuch as be yong nouices in the faith goe forth: let ſuch as are in their penance goe forth. That they that might not communicate with the reſt, ſhould depart from the Church, and not be preſent at the Communion. And this order continued ſtill, vntill the time of Saint Gregory, which was ſix hundred yeares after Chriſt. Who was there then that conſecrated the bread and wine, and receiued altogether to himſelfe alone? where then was the priuat Maſſe? where then was the ſingle Communion all this while?

Yet are there ſome that whiſper in corners, that the Maſſe is a bleſſed and a Catholike thing, and that the holy Communion, which now God of his great mercie hath reſtored to vs, is wicked and ſchiſmaticall, and therefore they murmur againſt it, therefore they refraine it, and will not come to it.

O mercifull God, who would thinke there could be ſo much wilfulneſſe in the heart of man! O Gregory! O Auguſtine! O Hierome! O Chryſoſtome! O Leo! O Dionyſe! O Anacletus! O Sixtus! O Paul! O Chriſt! If we be deceiued herein, yet are they that haue deceiued vs. You haue taught vs theſe ſchiſmes and diuiſions, yea haue taught vs theſe hereſies.

Thus ye ordred the holy Communion in your time, the ſame we receiued at your hand, and haue faithfully deliuered it vnto the people. And that ye may the more marueil at the wilfulneſſe of ſuch men, they ſtand this day againſt ſo many old Fathers, ſo many Doctors, ſo many examples of the Primitiue Church, ſo manifeſt and ſo plaine words of the holy Scriptures, and yet haue they herein, not one Father, not one Doctor, not one allowed example of the Primitiue Church to make for them. And when I ſay, no one, I ſpeake not this in vehemency of ſpirit, or heat of talke, but euen as before God, by the way of ſimplicitie and truth, leſt any of you ſhould happily be deceiued, and thinke there is more waight in the other ſide, than in concluſion there ſhall be found. And therefore once againe I ſay; Of all the words of the holy Scriptures; of all the examples of the Primitiue Church; of all the old Fathers; of all the ancient Doctors; in theſe cauſes they haue not one.

Here the matter it ſelfe that I haue now in hand, putteth me in remembrance of certaine things that I vttered vnto you, to the ſame purpoſe, at my laſt being in this place. I remember I laid out then, here before you, a number of things that are now in controuerſie, whereunto our aduerſaries will not yeld. And I ſaid, perhaps boldly, as it might then ſeeme to ſome man; but as I my ſelfe, and the learned of our aduerſaries themſelues doe well know, ſincerely and truely, That none of all them, that this day ſtand againſt vs, are able, or ſhall euer be able to proue againſt vs, any one of all theſe points, either by the Scriptures, or by example of the Primitiue church, or by the old Doctors, or by the ancient generall Councels.

Since that time it hath beene reported in places, that I ſpake then more than I was able to iuſtifie and make good. Howbeit, theſe reports were onely made in corners, and therefore ought the leſſe to trouble me. But if my ſayings had been ſo weake, and might ſo eaſily haue beene reproued, I marueil that the parties neuer yet came to the light, to take the aduantage. For my promise was, and that openly here before you all; That if any man were able to proue the contrary, I would yeld and subscribe to him; and he should depart with the victory. Loath I am to trouble you with rehersall of such things as I haue spoken afore; and yet because the case so requireth, I shall desire you that haue already heard me, to beare the more with me in this behalfe. Better it were to trouble your eares with twice hearing of one thing, than to betray the truth of God. The words that I then spake, as neere as I can call them to minde, were these: If any learned man of all our aduersaries, or if all the learned men that be aliue, be able to bring any one sufficient sentence out of any old Catholike Doctor, or Father; Or out of any old generall Councell; Or out of the holy Scriptures of God; Or any one example of the Primitiue Church, whereby it may be clerely and plainly proued that there was any priuate Masse in the whole world at that time, for the space of six hundred yeares after Christ: Or that there was then any Communion ministred vnto the people vnder one kind: Or that the people had their Common Praiers then in a strange tongue, that they vnderstood not: Or that the Bishop of Rome was then called an vniuersall Bishop, or the head of the vniuersall Church: Or that the people was then taught to beleeue that Christs body is really, substantially, corporally, carnally or naturally in the Sacrament: Or that his body is, or may be in a thousand places, or moe, at one time: Or that the Priest did then hold vp the Sacrament ouer his head: Or that the people did then fall downe and worship it with godly honour: Or that the Sacrament was then, or now ought to be hanged vp vnder a canopie: Or that in the Sacrament after the words of consecration there remaineth only the accidents and shewes without the substance of bread and wine: Or that the Priest then diuided the Sacrament in three parts, and afterward receiued himselfe all alone: Or that whosoeuer had said the Sacrament is a figure, a pledge, a token, or a remembrance of Christs body, had therefore beene iudged for an heretike: Or that it was lawfull then to haue xxx. xx. xv. x. or v. Masses said in one Church, in one day: Or that Images were then set vp in the Churches, to the intent the people might worship them: Or that the lay people was then forbidden to read the word of God in their owne tongue. If any man aliue were able to proue any of these articles, by any one clere or plaine clause or sentence, either of the Scriptures, or of the old Doctours, or of any old generall Councell, or by any example of the Primitiue Church: I promised then that I would giue ouer and subscribe vnto him.

These words are the very like, I remember, I spake here openly before you all. And these be the things that some men say, I haue spoken and cannot iustifie. But I for my part will not onely not call in any thing that I than said, (being well assured of the truth therein) but also will lay more matter to the same: That if they that seeke occasion, haue any thing to the contrary, they may haue the larger scope to reply against me.

Wherefore, besides all that I haue said already, I will say further, and yet nothing so much as might be said. If any one of all our aduersaries be able clerely and plainly to proue by such authority of the Scriptures, the old Doctors, and Councels, as I said before, that it was then lawfull for the Priest to pronounce the words of consecration closely and in silence to him selfe: Or that the Priest had then authority to offer vp Christ vnto his Father: Or to communicate and receiue the Sacrament for another as they doe: Or to apply the vertue of Christs death and passion, to any man by the meane of the Masse: Or that it was then thought a sound doctrine, to teach the people, that the Masse ex opere operato, that is, euen for that it is said and done, is able to remoue any part of our sinne: Or that then any Christian man called the Sacrament his Lord and God: Or that the people was then taught to beleeue that the body of Christ remaineth in the Sacrament as long as the accidents of the bread remaine there without corruption: Or that a mouse or any other worme or beast, may eat the body of Christ: (for so some of our aduersaries haue said and taught) Or that when Christ said, Hoc est corpus meum, this word, Hoc pointeth not the bread, but Individuum vagum, as some of them say: Or that the accidents, or formes, or shewes, or bread and wine, be the Sacraments of Christs body and blod, and not rather the very bread and wine it selfe: Or that the Sacrament is a signe or token of the body of Christ that lieth hidden vnderneath it: Or that ignorance is the mother and cause of true deuotion and obedience: These be the highest mysteries, and greatest keies of their Religion, and without them their doctrine can neuer be maintained and stand vpright. If any one of all our aduersaries be able to auouch any one of all these articles, by any such sufficient authority of Scriptures, Doctors, or Councels, as I haue required, as I said before, so say I now againe, I am content to yeld vnto him, and to subscribe. But I am well assured that they shall neuer be able truely to alleage one sentence. And because I know it, therefore I speake it, lest ye happily should be deceiued.

All

All this notwithſtanding ye haue heard men in times paſt alleage vnto you Counſels, Doctors, antiquities, ſucceſſions, and long continuance of time, to the contrary. And an eaſie matter it was ſo to doe, ſpecially before them, that lacke either leaſure, or iudgement, to examine their proofes. On a time Mithridates, the king of Pontus, laid ſiege to Cyzicum, a towne ioyned in friendſhip to the Citie of Rome. Which thing the Romans hearing, made out a gentleman of theirs, named Lucullus, to raiſe the ſiege. After that Lucullus was within the ſight of the towne, and ſhewed himſelfe with his company vpon the ſide of an hill, thence to giue courage to the Citizens within, that were beſieged: Mithridates to caſt them into deſpaire, and to cauſe them the rather to yeeld to him, made it to be noiſed, and bare them in hand, that all that new company of ſouldiers was his, ſent for purpoſely by him, againſt the Citie. All that notwithſtanding, the Citizens within kept the walles, and yeelded not. Luculls came on, raiſed the ſiege, vanquiſhed Mithridates, and ſlew his men. Euen ſo, good people, is there now a ſiege laid to your walles, an army of Doctors and Councels ſhew themſelues vpon an hill; the aduerſary that would haue you yeeld, beareth you in hand, that they are their ſouldiers and ſtand on their ſide. But keepe your hold, the Doctours and old Catholike Fathers, in the points that I haue ſpoken of, are yours, ye ſhall ſee the ſiege raiſed, ye ſhall ſee your aduerſaries diſcomfeited, and put to flight. The Pelagians were able to alleage Saint Auguſtine, as for themſelues; yet when the matter came to proofe, he was againſt them. Heluidius was able to alleage Tertullian, as making for himſelfe; but in triall he was againſt him.

Eutyches alleaged Iulius Romanus for himſelfe; yet indeed was Iulius moſt againſt him. The ſame Eutyches, alleaged for himſelfe, Athanaſius, and Cyprian; but in concluſion they ſtood both againſt him. Neſtorius alleaged the Councell of Nice, yet was the ſame Councell found againſt him.

Euen ſo they that haue aduanced themſelues of Doctours and Councels, and continuance of time in any of theſe points, when they ſhal be called to triall to ſhew their proofes, they ſhall open their hands and finde nothing. I ſpeake not this of arrogancy, (thou Lord knoweſt it beſt, that knoweſt all things): but for aſmuch as it is Gods cauſe and the truth of God, I ſhould doe God great iniury if I ſhould conceale it. But to returne againe to our matter. There be ſome that ſay, that no Maſſe is priuate, or to be taken as the action of one priuate man. For they ſay, the Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe here, doth communicate with another Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe ſome other where, whereſoeuer it be, the diſtance being neuer ſo great. This commiſſion ſemeth very large. For ſo may the Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe in England or Scotland, communicate with the Prieſt that is in Calicute, or in the farthermoſt part of India. And by this meanes ſhould there be no excommunication at all, for the partie excommunicate might ſay, he would communicate with the Prieſt whether he would or no. But Saint Paul gloſſeth not the matter on this ſort, but ſaith: Alter alterum expectate: That is, Tarry ye one for another. And againe he ſaith; When ye come together, ye cannot eat the Lords Supper, for euery one of you taketh his owne ſupper afore hand.

Some others ſay, the Prieſt may communicate for the people, and that is as meritorious vnto them, as if they had communicated themſelues. But what commiſſion hath the Prieſt ſo to doe? or from whom? or what certaine knowledge hath he, that his receiuing of the Communion ſhall be auaileable for the people? for if it be ſo, what needed it then Chriſt to ſay, Accipite, bibite ex hoc omnes? Or if we may receiue the Sacrament of Chriſts body one for another, why may not we aſwell be baptiſed one for another? Why may we not aſwell confeſſe our faults before the congregation, and receiue abſolution one for another? Why may we not heare the Goſpell, and beleeue one for another? O that theſe follies, ſo weake and ſo vaine, without ſhew or ſhadow of any truth, ſhould euer ſinke into a Chriſtian heart, or take place in Gods religion! Saint Paul ſaith: Qui manducat, & bibit indigne, iudicium ſibi manducat, & bibit: Whoſo eateth or drinketh vnworthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement, not vnto others (ſaith Saint Paul) but to himſelfe. Againe, Saint Paul ſaith, whoſe beleeueth in him that iuſtifieth the wicked, not the faith of any other man, but his owne faith is reckned to him vnto iuſtice. Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith; It is the hereſie of the Marcionites, to thinke that any one man may receiue the Sacrament for another, and therefore hee maketh light of ſuch diſorder of the Sacraments, and calleth them Sacramenta vicaria. Origen ſaith: Ille eſt Sacerdos & propitiatio, & hoſtia. Eſt enim Agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi: Quæ propitiatio ad vnumquemque venit, per viam fidei: He is our Prieſt, ſaith Origen, he is our attonement, he is our ſacrifice. For he is the lambe of God that taketh away the ſinnes of the world. Which attonement, (ſaith he) commeth vnto vs, (not by the application of the Maſſe,) but by the way of faith.

If we forget not the Sauiour of the world, Christ is euery day sacrificed vnto vs. Euen by the remainants of our cogitations, that is, by our remembrance of his death, Christ is made a sacrifice vnto vs euery day. It is not therefore neither the faith, neither the doing of the Priest, but our owne doing, and our owne faith, that applieth vnto vs the vertue and merits of Christs death. Some other say, that Saint Peter said Masse at Rome, and Saint Iames at Hierusalem. And why say they not rather, that Christ himselfe said Masse? for that were the nere way to bring the Masse into credit. Or why say they not sooner, that Aaron and his Chaplains said Masse? For indeed, as it hath bene vsed, the church hath had much more of the robes, of the ceremonies, and of the Sacrifices of Aaron, than of the institution or ordinance of Christ. But this haue men told you, and with such things, as they haue found out themselues, they haue infeoffed and fathered the Apostles of Christ. So commonly, coniurers and sorcerers make their vaunts, that they haue all their bookes and their cunning from Athanasius, from Moses, from Able, from Adam, from Raphael the Archangell.

Thus the people of God is deceiued and mocked, and in stead of pretious stones, driuen to take cuonterfets. For I assure you, brethren, in the time of Peter and Iames, neither was there any man that euer heard the name of Masse (for Missa was neuer named vntil foure hundred yeres after Christ: And yet then was it no priuate Masse neither, but a Communion) nor yet were the peces and parts of the Masse, as we in our time haue sene them set together. And what Masse could that be, that as yet had neither her owne name nor her parts? But forasmuch as they affirme so constantly that S. Iames said Masse at Hierusalem, and whatsoeuer it were that he said, will nedes haue it called by the name of a Masse; let vs compare their Masse & S. Iames Masse both together. S. Iames said his Masse in the common tongue, as the people might vnderstand him: They say their Masse in a strange Latine tongue that the people should not know what they meane. S. Iames spake out the words of consecration distinctly & plainly: They in their Masse suppresse the same words and kep them close. S. Iames in his Masse ministred the Communion vnto the people: They in their Masse receiue themselues all alone. S. Iames in his Masse ministred the Sacrament vnto the people vnder both kinds: They in their Masse minister the Sacrament vnto the people in one kind onely. S. Iames in his Masse preached and set forth the death of Christ: They in their Masse haue only a number of dumbe gestures and ceremonies, which they themselues vnderstand not, and make no manner mention of Christs death. S. Iames Masse was full of knowledge: Their Masse is full of ignorance. S. Iames Masse was full of consolation: Their Masse is full of superstition. When S. Iames said Masse, the people resorted to receiue the Sacrament: When they say Masse, the people resorteth to loke vpon onely, and to behold the Sacrament. And to conclude, S. Iames in his Masse had Christs institution: They in their Masse haue welnere nothing else but mans inuention.

Such difference ye may se betwene Saint Iames Masse and theirs. O that Saint Paul were now aliue and saw the behauiour and order of the Priest at their Masse! Thinke ye that he would take it and account it for the Lords Supper? When he had espied, but one fault in the holy Communion amongst the Corinthians, straightway he rebuked them, and called them backe to Christs institution. This (saith he) I receiued of the Lord, and the same I gaue ouer vnto you.

But if he saw the disorder that we haue sene, would he not be moued asmuch against vs now, as he was sometime against the Corinthians? Would he not pull vs backe to the institution of Christ, as he did them? Would he not say vnto vs; Did I euer teach you to minister the holy Communion in a strange language? Did I euer teach you to receiue the Communion priuately to your selues alone, and so to disdaine and to despise your brethren? Did I euer teach you to minister the Communion to the people in one kinde? Did I euer teach you to say Masse or to receiue the Sacrament for the people? Did I euer teach you the idle follies of your canon? Did I ever teach you to offer vp the Sonne of God vnto his Father? Did I euer teach you any other propitiatory sacrifice for sinne, than that Christ once offered vpon the Crosse? Did I euer teach you to minister the Lords Supper wherein the people should nothing else but loke vpon and behold your doings, without any kind of knowledge or comfort? Did I euer teach you to lift the Sacrament ouer your head? Did I euer teach the people to fall downe thereto; and to worship they know not what? Be these the things that I deliuered you? Be these the things that I receiued of the Lord? This would Saint Paul say vnto vs, if he were now aliue. Thus would he reproue vs, and call vs to the standard and originall of the first appointing of the holy Sacrament.

Our

Our owne inuentions and phantasies wherewith we had filled the Masse, were so many and so grosse, that they quite couered and shadowed the death of Christ, and the holy mysteries of our saluation. Therefore we could not truly say, these things Paul deliuered vnto vs, or these things Paul receiued of the Lord.

Wherefore, good people and derely beloued brethren, forasmuch as we see there haue bene great and euident abuses and errours in the Masse, so plaine and so manifest, that no man that hath reason, and will consider them, can deny it; let vs follow the counsell of Saint Paul, let vs returne to the ordinance of Christ, vnto the true standard that cannot faile vs.

As it is not in the power of man to appoint Sacraments: so is it not in the power of man to alter or change Sacraments. God will not be worshipped after our phantasies, and therefore so often times he chargeth vs in the Scriptures: Non facietis quod bonum videtur in oculis vestris: Ye shall not doe that thing that seemeth good to you in your owne sight: Ye shall not turne neither to the left hand nor to the right: But what thing soeuer I bid you doe, that onely shall ye doe. Your thoughts be not my thoughts, neither be your waies my waies. For as far as heauen is from the earth, or the East from the West, so far off be your thoughts from my thoughts, and your waies from my waies, saith the Lord. It is a dangerous thing for a mortal man to controll or find fault with the wisdome of the immortall God.

Tertullian, an old Father of the Church, sheweth vs the wilfulnesse of mans heart, after it hath once enterprised to presume a little against Gods truth and ordinance: Praeter scripturas faciunt, vt post audacius contra scripturas faciant: First, saith he, they attempt somewhat beside the Scriptures, to the intent, that afterward they may gather courage and boldnesse to doe contrary to the Scriptures. At the end they proceed as farre as the Scribes and Pharises, that for maintenance of their owne traditions, despised and brake the commandements of God. For redresse therein, there is no better way than to follow S. Pauls counsell here, and to haue recourse to Gods holy word.

S. Ambrose saith: Interrogemus Petrum & Interrogemus Paulum, si verum volumus inuenire: If we will finde out the truth, and be put out of doubt, saith S. Ambrose, let vs hearken what Peter and Paul will say vnto vs.

S. Cyprian saith: Hinc schismata oriuntur, quia caput non quæritur, & ad fontem non redditur, & cælestis magistri præcepta non seruantur: Hereof, saith S. Cyprian, arise schismes and diuisions, for that we seeke not to the head, nor haue recourse to the spring, nor keepe the commandements of the heauenly master.

Tertullian saith: Hæc ratio contra omnem hæresim valet, hoc verum est, quod primum fuit: This reason, saith he, is able to confound all maner heresies. That thing is true that was first appointed.

O that our aduersaries, and all they that stand in defence of the Masse this day, would content themselues to be iudged by this rule! O that in all the controuersies that lie betweene vs and them, they would remit the iudgement vnto Gods word! So should we soone agree and ioyne together: So should we deliuer nothing vnto the people but that we haue receiued at Gods hand.

And if there be any here that haue had, or yet haue any good opinion of the Masse, I beseech you for Gods sake, euen as ye tender your owne saluation, suffer not your selues wilfully to be led away, run not blindly to your owne confusion. Thinke with your selues, it was not for nought that so many of your brethren rather suffered themselues to die and to abide all manner extremity and cruelty, than they would be partakers of that thing that you reckon to be so holy. Let their death, let their ashes, let their bloud, that was so abundantly shed before your eies, somewhat preuaile with you, and moue you. Be not ruled by your wilfull affections. Ye haue a good zeale and minde towards God. Haue it according vnto the knowledge of God. The Iewes had a zeale of God, and yet they crucified the Sonne of God. Search the Scriptures; there shall ye find euerlasting life. There shal ye learne to iudge your selues, and your owne doings, that ye be not iudged of the Lord. If euer it happen you to be present againe at the Masse, thinke but thus with your selues; What make I here? What profit haue I of my doings? I heare nothing: I vnderstand nothing: I am taught no thing: I receiue nothing: Christ bad me take; I take nothing: Christ bad me eat; I eat nothing: Christ bad me drinke; I drinke nothing. Is this the institution of Christ? Is this the Lords supper? Is this the right vse of the holy mysteries? Is this it that Paul deliuered vnto me? Is this it that Paul receiued of the Lord? Let vs say but thus vnto our selues, and no doubt God of his mercy will open our hearts, we shall see our errours, and content our selues to be ordered by the wisdome of God: to doe that God will haue vs to doe: to beleeue that God will haue vs to beleeue, to worship that God will haue vs worship. So shall we haue comfort of the holy mysteries: So shall we receiue the fruites of Christs death: So shall we be partakers of Christs body and blood: So shall Christ truly dwell in vs, and we in him: So shall all errour bee taken from vs: So shall we ioyne all together in Gods truth: So shall we all be able with one heart, and one spirit, to know and to glorifie the onely, the true, and the liuing God, and his onely begotten Sonne Iesus Christ:

to whom both, with the holy Ghost, bee all honour and glory for euer, and euer,

Amen.

TO THE MOST VERTVOVS, AND NOBLE PRINCESSE, QVEENE ELIZABETH, BY THE Grace of God, Queeene of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

IT had beene greatly to be wished, most gratious Soueraigne Ladie, that, as God of his mercy hath giuen vs, euer sithence the first time of your Maiesties most happie gouernment, such successe in all ciuill affaires, such concord and quietnesse in all estates, as our fathers seldome haue seene before; so our hearts with like felicitie might thorowly haue consented in the profession of one vndoubted Trueth, and all our willes, which now are so violently rent asunder, and so farre distracted, might fully haue ioyned together in the Will of God: that all quarrels and contentions set apart, we might with one mouth and one minde glorifie God the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. Howbeit, it appeareth by the continuall story & whole discourse of the holy Scriptures, that almighty God, of his deepe iudgements and secret prouidence, suffereth some men oft times to delight in darknesse, to withstand the Gospell, to seeke occasions, and wilfully to set themselues against the knowledge and Trueth of God. I write not this, most gracious Lady, to the intent to make them odious in your Maiesties sight, that this day are the procurers of all these troubles. God is able euen of the hard vnsensible stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham, and to make them the vessels of his Mercy. Neuertheless, as S. Paul teacheth vs, such men there haue beene in times past, that haue had their consciences burnt with hot irons, speaking and mainteining lies in hypocrisie; that haue giuen themselues ouer into reprobate and wilfull mindes, and haue despised the Wisdome of God within themselues. And notwithstanding such battels and dissentions, specially in the Church of God, which is called The House of Vnitie, be offensiue and grieuous vnto the godly, & therefore worke great hinderance vnto the due passage of the Gospel of Christ, yet in the end the trouble heereof in Gods Elect is recompensed abundantly with great aduantage. For Gods Truth is mightie and shall preuaile: Dagon shall fall downe headlong before the Arke: the Darknesse shall flee before the Light: and the more fiercely mans wisdome shall withstand, the more glorious shall God be in his victory.

But, shortly to discourse vnto your Maiestie the particular occasions hereof from the beginning: after it had pleased almightie God, at the first entrie of your Maiesties reigne, by a most happie exchange, and by the meanes of your Maiesties most godly trauels, to restore vnto vs the light and comfort of his Gospell, there was written and publiſhed by vs a little Booke in the Latine tongue, entituled, An Apologie of the Church of England, conteining the whole ſubſtance of the Catholike Faith now profeſſed and freely preached thorowout all your Maieſties Dominions; that thereby all forren Nations might vnderſtand the conſiderations and cauſes of your Maieſties doings in that behalfe. Thus in old times did Quadratus, Melito, Iuſtinus Martyr, Tertullian, and other godly and learned Fathers, vpon like occaſions, as well to make knowen the truth of God, and to open the grounds of their Profeſſion, as alſo to put the Infidels to ſilence, and to ſtop the mouthes of the wicked.

This Apologie being thus written firſt in Latine, and afterward, vpon the comfortable report of your Maieſties moſt godly enterpriſes, tranſlated into ſundrie other tongues, and ſo made common to the moſt part of all Europe, as it hath beene well allowed of and liked of the learned and godly, as it is plaine by their open teſtimonies touching the ſame, ſo hath it not hitherto, for ought that may appeare, beene any where openly reproued either in Latine or otherwiſe, either by any one mans priuate writing, or by the publike authoritie of any Nation.

Only one M. Harding, not long ſithence your Maieſties ſubiect, now miſliking the preſent State, and reſiant in Louaine, hath of late taken vpon him, againſt the ſaid Apologie, with the whole doctrine and all the parts of the ſame, to publiſh an open Confutation, and to offer the ſame vnto your Maieſtie: wherein hee ſheweth himſelfe ſo vehement and ſo ſharpe, and buſie in finding faults, that he doubteth not to ſeeke quarrels againſt vs, euen in that wee mainteine the Baptiſme of Chriſtian Infants, the proceeding and Godhead of the Holy Ghoſt, the Faith of the holy and glorious Trinitie, and the Generall and Catholike profeſſion of the common Creed. Thus, for that he hath once ſeuered himſelfe from vs, he beareth now the world in hand, wee can beleeue nothing without an errour.

Conf. fol. 334. b The maine ground of his whole plea is this, That the Biſhop of Rome, whatſoeuer it ſhall like him to determine in iudgement, can neuer erre: that hee is alwaies vndoubtedly poſſeſſed of Gods Holy Spirit: that at his only hand we muſt learne to know the Will of God: that in his onely holineſſe ſtandeth the Vnitie and ſafetie of the Church: that whoſoeuer is diuided from him, muſt be iudged an Heretike: and, that without the obedience of him there is no hope of ſaluation. And yet, as though it were not ſufficient for him, ſo vainly to ſmooth a matter in open errors, he telleth vs alſo ſadly and in good earneſt, that the ſame Biſhop is not only a Biſhop, but alſo a King: that vnto him belongeth the authoritie and right of both ſwords, as well Temporall as Spirituall: that all Kings and Emperours receiue their whole power at his hand, and ought to ſweare obedience and fealtie vnto him. For theſe be his words, euen in this Booke ſo boldly dedicate vnto your Maieſtie: It is a great eie-ſore, ſaith M. Harding, to the Miniſters of Antichriſt, to ſee the Vicar of Chriſt aboue Lords and Kings of this world, and to ſee Princes and Emperours promiſe and ſweare obedience vnto him. And whereas Pope Zacharie, by the conſent or conſpiracie of the Nobles of France, depoſed Chilperichus the true, naturall, and liege Prince of that Realme, and placed Pipinus in his roome; Lo, ſaith M. Harding, ye muſt needs confeſſe, that this was a Diuine power in the Pope: for otherwiſe he could neuer haue done it. Thus much he eſteemeth the diſhonours and ouerthrowes of Gods Anointed.

Whereas alſo Pope Boniface the Eighth, for that he could not haue the Treaſurie of France at his commandement, endeuoured with all his both Eccleſiaſticall and Worldly puiſſance, to remooue Philip the French King from his eſtate, and vnder his Bulles or Letters Patents, had conueied the ſame ſolemnly vnto Albertus the King of Romans; M. Harding heere telleth your Maieſtie, that all this was very well done, to the intent thereby to fray the King, and to keepe him in awe, and to reclaime his minde from diſobedience. Now, touching your Maieſties moſt noble Progenitours, the Kings of this Realme, whereas we, as our loyaltie and allegiance bindeth vs, iuſtly complaine, that Pope Alexander the third, by violence and tyrannie forced King Henrie the Second to ſurrender his Crowne Imperiall into the hands of his Legate, and afterward for a certaine ſpace to content himſelfe in Priuate eſtate, to the great indignation and griefe of his louing ſubiects: and that likewiſe Pope Innocentius the third ſtirred vp the Nobles and Commons of this Realme againſt King Iohn, and gaue the inheritance and poſſeſſion of all his Dominions vnto Ludouicus the French King, (as for the miſuſing of your Maieſties moſt deare Father of moſt noble memorie, King Henrie the Eighth, foraſmuch as the ſmart thereof is yet in freſh remembrance, I will ſay nothing): To theſe and all other like tyrannicall iniuries, and iuſt cauſes of griefe, M. Harding ſhortly and in light maner thinketh it ſufficient to anſwer thus: What though King Henry the Second were ill intreated of Pope Alexander the third? What though King Iohn were ill intreated of that zealous and learned Pope Innocentius the third? What though King Henrie the Eighth were likewiſe intreated of the Popes in our time? I know right well, moſt Soueraigne Ladie, the goodneſſe of your gracious nature delighteth not in ſuch rehearſals. Neither do I make report hereof, for that ſuch things ſometimes haue beene done: but for that the ſame things euen now at this time, either ſo lightly are excuſed, or ſo boldly are defended. Such humble affection and obedience theſe men, by their open and publike writings, teach your Maieſties true ſubiects to beare towards their naturall Prince. It ſhall much warrant the honour and ſafety of your royall eſtate, if your Maieſtie ſhall ſometimes remember the diſhonors and dangers that other your noble Progenitours haue felt before you. M. Harding fol. 340. b.

But concerning the Maieſtie and right of Kings and Emperours, M. Harding telleth vs, They haue their firſt authoritie by the poſitiue Law of Nations, and can haue no more power, than the people hath, of whom they take their temporall Iuriſdiction: as if he would ſay, Emperours and Kings haue none other right of gouernment, than it hath pleaſed their ſubiects by compoſition to allow vnto them. Thus hee ſaith, and ſaith it boldly; as if God himſelfe had neuer ſaid, Per me Reges regnant: By me, and my authoritie, Kings beare rule ouer their ſubiects: Or, as if Chriſt our Sauiour had neuer ſaid vnto Pilate the Lord Lieuetenant, Thou ſhouldeſt haue no power ouer mee, were it not giuen thee from aboue. Or, as if S. Paul had not ſaid, Non eſt poteſtas, niſi à Deo: There is no power, but only from God. And yet further, as if their whole ſtudie were fully bent, in reſpect of the Pope, to deface the Authoritie and Maieſtie of all Princes, euen now one of the ſame companie doubteth not to teach the world, That the Pope is the head, and Kings and Emperours are the feet. Like as alſo another of the ſame faction ſaith, The Emperours Maieſtie is ſo farre inferiour in dignitie to the Pope, as a creature is inferiour vnto God. Wee deuiſe not theſe things of malice, moſt gracious Ladie, but report the ſame truly, as we find them proclaimed and publiſhed this day by their vaine and dangerous writings, which notwithſtanding they would ſo faine haue to bee taken as Catholike. If this doctrine may once take root, and be freely receiued amongſt the ſubiects, it ſhall bee hard for any Prince to hold his right. As for your Maieſtie, for that it hath pleaſed Almightie God in his Mercy, to make you an inſtrument of his Glorie, as in old times he made many other godly and noble Princes, to reforme his Church from that huge and loathſome heape of filth, and rubbiſh, that either by violence or by negligence had been throwen into it; therfore M. Harding euen in this ſelfe ſame Booke, vnder certaine generall threats, chargeth you with diſordered preſumption, by the example of Ozias the wicked King, Vpon whom, as he ſaith, God ſent his vengeance for the like. For be the abuſes and errours of the Church neuer ſo many, bee the falles and dangers neuer ſo great, be the Prieſts and Biſhops neuer ſo blinde, yet by this doctrine it may neuer be lawfull for the Prince, be he neuer ſo learned, or ſo wiſe, or ſo zealous in Gods cauſe, to attempt any maner of Reformation. And therefore thus he ſaith M. Harding fol. 318. b. Prouerb. 8. Iohan. 19. Roman. 13. Dorman. fo. 15 Staniſlaus Orichouius in Chimæra, fol. 97. M. Harding fol. 298. a.

vnto your Maiestie, and with all his skill and cunning laboureth to perswade your Maiesties subiects, if any one or other happily of simplicitie will beleeue him, that the godly Lawes, which your Maiestie hath giuen vs to liue vnder, are no Lawes; that your Parliaments are no Parliaments; that your Clergie is no Clergie: Our Sacraments, no Sacraments; our Faith, no Faith. The Church of England, whereof your Maiestie is the most Principall and Chiefe, he calleth a Malignant Church, a new Church erected by the Diuell, a Babylonicall Tower, a Heard of Antichrist, a Temple of Lucifer, a Synagogue and a Schoole of Sathan, full of Robbery, Sacrilege, Schisme, and Heresie. And al this he furnisheth with such libertie of other vncourteous and vnseemely talkes, as if hee had beene purposely hired to speake dishonour of your Maiesties most godly doings.

Of all these and other like Tragicall fantasies, forasmuch as he hath so boldly aduentured to make a Present vnto your Maiestie, wee haue great cause to reioice in God, for that our controuersies are brought to be debated before such a personage as is able so well and so deeply to vnderstand them. For I haue no doubt, but as by your great learning and maruellous wisdome you shall soone see the difference of our pleadings; so of your Maiesties gracious inclination vnto all godlinesse you will readily finde out the Falshood, and giue sentence with the Truth. Verily, after that your Maiestie shall haue thorowly considered the manifest Vntruths and Corruptions, together with the Abuses and Errours of the contrarie side, the Weakenesse of the Cause, the Boldnesse of the Man, and the immoderate bitternesse of his speech; I haue good hope, the more aduisedly you shall behold it, the lesse cause you shall finde wherefore to like it. For the discouerie hereof, for my poore portion of learning, I haue endeuoured to doe that I was able: and the same heere I humbly present vnto your Maiestie, as vnto my most gracious and Souereigne Liege Ladie, and, as now, the onely Nurse and Mother of the Church of God within these your Maiesties most Noble Dominions. It may please your Maiestie graciously to weigh it, and to iudge of it, not according to the skill and abilitie of the Writer, which is but simple, but according to the weight and worthinesse of the cause. The poore labours haue beene mine; the cause is Gods. The goodnesse of the one will be alwaies able to counteruaile the simplicitie of the other.

God euermore enflame and direct your Maiestie with his Holy Spirit, that the Zeale of his House may thorowly deuoure your gracious heart; that you may safely walke in the waies of your Father Dauid; that you may vtterly abandon all Groaues and Hill Altars; that you may liue an old Mother in Israel; that you may see an end of all dissensions, and stablish Peace and Vnitie in the Church of God. Amen.

Your Maiesties most humble subiect

IOHN SARISBVRIE.

Good Chriſtian Reader, I doubt not, but the very Title and firſt entrie of M. Hardings laſt Booke is ſufficient to aſtonne thy ſenſes. For thus he beginneth: A Detection of Lies, Cauils, Slanders, &c. As if Hercules Furens, or Aiax Maſtigophorus were newly turned into Engliſh. If I ſhould quit him, either with number of Bookes, or with courteſie of ſpeech, I ſhould be like vnto him, and incumber the world with needleſſe labors. Wherefore being moued eftſoones to print my late Booke, intitvled, The Defenſe of the Apologie of the Church of England, I thought it good by a ſhort Augmentation, to diſcharge all ſuch quarrels as M. Harding in his ſaid Detection hath moued againſt certaine parcels of the ſame: and therein to vſe ſuch temperance of words, not as may beſt anſwer M. Hardings eloquence, but as may bee comely for the cauſe. 1.

Now if thou ſhalt vouchſafe to examine our doings, I beſeech thee to iudge vprightly, and not to ſuffer thy ſelfe by ſhewes and ſhifts to be beguiled. What man would ſeeme to deale ſo plainely, as a Iuggler? hee will ſtrike vp his ſleeues, and make bare his armes, and open his hands and fingers, and lay all things before thee, and bid thee behold: and thou wilt thinke him to be a good plaine man, and maruell that thou ſhouldeſt poſſibly bee deceiued. And yet indeed his whole ſkill and ſeeking is nothing elſe, but to deceiue thee: and the more ſimply and plainly he would ſeeme to deale, ſo much the ſooner he will deceiue thee: otherwiſe he were no Iuggler. Thou ſhalt thinke thou ſeeſt all, and yet ſeeſt nothing. Thou ſhalt thinke, thou feeleſt it ſenſibly with thy Fingers, that thou holdeſt it faſt, and canſt not loſe it: And yet ſhalt thou open thy hands, and finde nothing. So eaſie a thing it is to inueigle thy ſenſes.

When thou hearеſt a Counſellour pleading for his Client at the Barre, perhaps thou wilt thinke it is all Law that he ſpeaketh, and that the caſe is plaine, and nothing to be ſaid to the contrary. But when another Counſellour ſhall ſtand forth, and reply againſt him, and rip vp his tale, and weigh his reaſons, and diſcloſe the errours, and weakneſſe of his pleading, then wilt thou begin to miſlike that thou likedſt before, and wonder at thine own ſimplicity, that euer thou wert ſo fond to beleeue the former. Yea the Iudge himſelfe, notwithſtanding vpon ſome good likelihood of the cauſe, he bee inclined to fauour the one ſide, yet ſometimes by weight and force of better reaſon, he changeth his opinion, and giueth ſentence with the other. There is great darkneſſe in mans wiſdome. Often times it is true, that we take to be falſe. Our phantaſie is no right meaſure of Gods cauſes.

But M. Harding telleth thee that I falſifie all that I take in hand. That I forge and counterfet, and leaue out, either the beginning, or the middle, or the end, and report nothing as I finde it: Briefly, that all my writings are fraught with lies. It is no hard matter for M. Harding thus to ſay. It were more maruell if he would ſay otherwiſe. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Qui mendax eſt, neminem putat verum dicere. He is a partie, and would be loth to yeeld to any thing againſt himſelfe. 2. Chryſoſt. in Matt. hom. 19.

For thy better ſatisfaction in theſe caſes, good Reader, I haue heere laid forth before thee, a few ſuch examples, as wherein M. Harding would ſeeme to haue found moſt aduantage.

uantage. This haue I done in as few words, and as briefly, as the cause would beare: and yet, I trust, so openly and so plainly, that thou maist easily see the truth and vprightnesse of his dealing. And although perhaps thou be his friend, and for some particular affection wish fauourably vnto his side, yet I will not refuse to make thee Iudge betweene vs both.

First therefore to beginne with that thing, whereof M. Harding and certaine his Welwillers haue made greatest triumph: Where I say, that one Eupsychius, being within holy orders, and the Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, married a wife, and shortly after, being as yet but newly married, was put to death for the name of Christ, and died a Martyr, M. Harding hereunto answereth thus: M. Iewel most falsely corrupteth the Reporter of this Storie: Behold the falshood of this man: Sozomenus nameth him: Εὐψύχιον Καππαδόκων τῶν Εὐπατριδῶν. As much as, Eupsychium, one of the Lords, or one of the Nobilitie of the Citie of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. M. Iewell was so bold to falsifie the place, and to put in of his owne, this word, Episcopum, to helpe his matter. Thus he taketh vpon him, to make him a Bishop, who was a Laie man, as well a Bishop, as he himselfe is, &c. Herein therefore, good Reader, standeth the strife. I say, Eupsychius was a Bishop: M. Harding saith, he was a meere Lay man, and no Bishop. The issue is this, Whether this Eupsychius were a Bishop, or no. And as thou shalt finde him true herein, so maist thou trust him in the rest. First in the Second Councell of Nice this selfe same Eupsychius is called Eupsychius Presbyter Cæsareæ: Eupsychius, a Priest of the Church of Cæsarea. Here maist thou see that Eupsychius was a Priest, that is, I trow, somewhat more than a meere Laie man, and in some possibilitie to be a Bishop, all M. Hardings waste words, of Lords, and Noble men, notwithstanding. If this authoritie suffice him not, let him further be aduised by that Ancient, and godly learned Father Athanasius, whom Socrates called the great Starre of Ægypt. He will tell him by plaine words, that Eupsychius, and this selfe same Eupsychius in very deed was a Bishop. Thus he saith of him: Scripta Leontij, & Eupsychij Episcoporum Cappadociæ: The writings of Leontius, and Eupsychius Bishops of the Kingdome of Cappadocia. Marke, good Reader, and tell M. Harding, Athanasius saith not, Eupsychius the Lord, or Noble man, but Eupsychius the Bishop. He was the Bishop of Cæsarea: and Cæsarea was the chiefe Citie of Cappadocia. This is plaine dealing. I leade thee not about, as M. Harding doth, with coniectures, and ghesses. I shew thee by expresse and plaine words, that Eupsychius was a Bishop, and that I proue by sufficient authoritie of ancient Fathers. Here thou hast the same Countrie Cappadocia, the same Citie of Cæsarea, the same time of persecution vnder Iulianus Apostata, the same man, the same Martyr, and the same name. If this bee true, as indeed it is, what maist thou then thinke of M. Harding, that saith, It is false? what maist thou then thinke of him, that so boldly telleth thee, that this Eupsychius was neuer, neither Bishop of Cæsarea nor of any other place else, no not so much as a Priest, or Deacon, or Subdeacon? What maist thou then thinke of him, that blusheth not, thus vainely to blot his papers, and thus to tell the world: M. Iewel hath fathered a shamefull lie vpon Cassiodorus: M. Iewel hath belied and falsified Sozomenus, and his Translator? What maist thou then thinke of him, that so impatiently crieth out without cause, Fie vpon such shamelesse liers: O lamentable state, where the people of God is compelled to heare such Prophets. It were better for M. Harding to be wise and sober, than thus to fare.

Whereas against the inordinate ambition and pride of the Bishops of Rome, I allege these words out of the Booke called Opus Imperfectum, bearing the name of Chrysostom, Whoso desireth Primacie in Earth, shall in Heauen finde confusion, M. Harding answereth: These words are not, neither in Opere Imperfecto, nor in any other booke of Chrysostome: Chrysostome hath no such saying: It is a forgerie, and that you know well enough: yet yee are not ashamed to deceiue the ignorant. Heere haue wee a very peremptorie Negatiue boldly presumed. And a man would thinke, that a Doctour of Diuinitie would not so stoutly warrant a matter, vnlesse he knew it. For so perhaps he might be found ignorant, and be deceiued. But, good Reader, if thou happen at any time to haue accesse vnto him, I beseech thee, euen as thou hast affiance in his word, and tendrest his credit, desire him to open his Booke, called Opus Imperfectum, and to turne to the fiue and thirtieth Homilie of the same. There shalt thou finde these selfe same words which he so constantly telleth thee can neuer bee found in all the World: Quicunque desiderauerit Primatum in Terra, inuenier in Cœlo Confusionem: Whosoeuer ambitiously desireth Primacie in Earth, hee in Heauen shall finde Confusion. These words, I say, M. Harding shall find, not only in his owne Gratian, which thing vnto him had beene sufficient, but also in the Author himselfe. Aske him therefore, what he meant, so out of season to talke of forgerie. Aske him, what so hainous offence M. Iewel hath committed heerein, whereof he ought to be ashamed.

Where I say, Pope Zosimus, the better to maintaine his ambitious claime, corrupted the holy Councell of Nice, M. Harding answereth: Neuer did any honest man say so from the beginning ginning of the world. God Reader, I beſeech thee euen for the truths ſake, hearken aduiſedly what I ſhall ſay. The caſe is cleere: thus it ſtandeth: About eleuen hundred yeres agoe Pope Zoſimus began to claime ſuperiority, and Iuriſdiction ouer all the Churches and Biſhops of Aphrica. The Biſhops of that Countrey, to the number of two hundred and ſeuenteene aſſembled together in the Aphricane Councell, miſliked the ſtrangeneſſe of his attempt, and openly refuſed him, and told him plainly, They knew of no ſuch authoritie that he had ouer them. Pope Zoſimus for his warrant, alleaged a Decree or Canon, that he himſelfe or ſome other his Predeceſſour, had forged vnder the name of the Counſell of Nice. The Biſhops anſwered him, that they themſelues alſo had Copies of the ſame Nicene Councell: But any ſuch Canon, touching ſuch Superiorities of the Pope, they found none there. The Pope ſaid their Copies were corrupted: and they ſaid the like of the Popes. For triall of the matter, they agreed together to ſend vnto the moſt famous Churches of all the Eaſt, vnto Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch: and from thence they receiued the true Copies of the Greeke Originals, vnder the Authenticall Seales of the Patriarches there. By conference whereof it was euident vnto all the world, that the Popes onely Copie diſagreed from all the reſt, and was fouly corrupted to ſerue his turne; and ſo conſequently, that the Pope was a Falſifier, and a Forger of Councels. Thus ſtandeth the very true Storie of this whole matter, as it is euident by the Counſell of Aphrica. Conci. Aphrica. ca. 102. 103 In Graco. pa. 82.

And therefore Marcus the Archbiſhop of Epheſus, together with Ioſephus the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, Beſſarion the Archbiſhop of Nice, and Iſidorus the Metropolitane of Syria with others moe, Archbiſhops, and Metropolitans of great Prouinces and Countries, and a great number of other inferiour Biſhops, ſaid thus openly in the late Councell of Florence by way of proteſtation againſt the Pope: Nónne vides, Reuerende Pater, Summum Pontificem (Zoſimum) falſum Decretum, & non in Synodo promulgatum, ad tantum Concilium pro re tam magna miſiſſe? And ſee you not, Reuerend Father, that Pope Zoſimus, being then the higheſt Biſhop, for a matter of great weight, ſent vnto that worthy Councell of Aphrica, a falſe, or a falſified Canon, ſuch as neuer was publiſhed in the Councell of Nice? Bid M. Harding marke well theſe words. This Canon (ſay they) is falſe, and falſified: and ſuch as neuer was decreed in the Councell of Nice. As if they would ſay, Will you beare vs down, or aduance your Authority by this Canon? It is well knowen to be a forgery. What can there be more plainly ſpoken? They ſay expreſly, euen as we ſay, This new Canon was forged and falſified, and that either by Pope Zoſimus, or by ſome other Pope his predeceſſour. And yet, can M. Harding ſo ſadly tell vs, That neuer honeſt man ſaid ſo from the beginning of the world? Or, can he make vs beleeue, that of all theſe Metropolitanes, Archbiſhops, and Patriarkes in the Councel of Florence, and of the other two hundred and ſeuentéen Biſhops in the Councel of Aphrica, among whom was Alypius, and S. Auguſtine, there was not one honeſt man? D. Tonſtal in his Sermon pronounced openly before king Henry, diſcloſed, and reproued the ſame falſhood. Likewiſe Doctor Redman in open writing acknowledged, and confeſſed the ſame: yet were they not vnhoneſt men. Concil. Florен. Seſſione 20.

Whereas I ſay, It was ſpecially prouided by the Councel of Carthage, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould not be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop, Ne Romanus Epiſcopus appelletur Vniuerſalis, M. Harding anſwereth, A ſhameleſſe man: An impudent Gloſſer: Three impedent Lies: Theſe be not the words of the Councell of Carthage: They are to be referred to the third part of the Diſtinction, that followeth afterward. If theſe be not the words of the Councel of Carthage, yet at leaſt they are Gratians words, reporting the words of the Councel of Carthage. Verily, whoſe words ſo euer it ſhall pleaſe M. Harding to make them, by his owne confeſſion, they are none of mine. The words be plaine: Vniuerſalis autem nec etiam Romanus Epiſcopus appelletur: Let not the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. And this, ſaith M. Harding, is the very meaning of Pope Pelagius, that followeth next afterward in the ſame Diſtinction. Now if theſe be the expreſſe and plaine words of Gratian; if they be eſtſoones vttered, and confirmed by the Gloſſe; if by implication and meaning they be the words of the Councel of Carthage, and of Pope Pelagius, to be ſhort, if they be no words of mine; was not then M. Harding wel occupied, ſo vainly to crie out, Three impudent Lies: A ſhameleſſe man: An impudent Gloſſer? A ſober man would be better aduiſed what he ſpeaketh. M. Hard. fol. 190. b. 191. Diſt. 99. Prima.

Where I ſay, Pope Liberius was an Arian Hereticque, M. Harding anſwereth, Or els ye are an errant Slanderous Lier. Iudge thou betweene vs indifferently, good Chriſtian Reader: and let the Lier haue his meed. This is not my iudgement of Pope Liberius: it is written, and reported by ſundry others, euen by ſuch, as M. Harding may not iuſtly condemne for errant Liers. Heere will I ſpeake nothing of S. Hierome. For M. Harding vtterly refuſeth his iudgement in this behalfe, and ſaith, he was much deceiued. Howbeit, M. Hard. fol. 249. b.

errant Lier, I trow, he will not call him, for his Authorities sake. But Sabellicus saith, Liberius, vt quidam scribunt, ex confesso factus est Arianus: Pope Liberius, as some men say, by open profession became an Arian. Alphonsus de Castro saith in plaine words: De Liberio Papa constat, fuisse Arianum: As for Pope Liberius, it is well knowen, he was an Arian Heretike. The same is auouched by Rhegino, by Platina, by Cardinall Cusanus, by Anselmus Rid, and by others, as afterward it shall be alleaged in place conuenient more at large. All these, and others moe, haue reported, that Pope Liberius was an Heretike. Therefore, good Reader, bid M. Harding to be better aduised, what, and how many they be, whom he so rashly condemneth for errant Liers.

Alphon. contra Haref. Lib. 1. cap. 4.

Whereas I say, Pope Cœlestinus was a Nestorian Heretike, M. Harding answereth, Who euer heard such an impudent man? A most impudent Lier: A wicked Slanderer. All this paine winde is some blowen ouer. Laurentius Valla, a Canon of the Church of Rome, saith thus: Papa Cœlestinus sensit cum Hæretico Nestorio: Pope Cœlestinus agreed in iudgement with the Heretike Nestorius. Now iudge thou, good Christian Reader, who is impudent, and who is a Lier. And bid M. Harding to construe these words, and to be better assured, before he speake. For rash iudgement argueth some follie.

Laurent. Val. de Donatione Constant.

Where I say, Pope Bonifacius 2. condemned S. Augustine, and all the whole Councel of Aphrica, and said, they were all led by the Diuell, for that they withstood the Ambition of the Church of Rome, M. Harding answereth, Heere is Bonifacius 2. souly belied: It is an impudent Lie: This man is not ashamed to lie. Pope Bonifacius 2. neuer condemned S. Augustine by name, nor the Councel of Aphrica by any solemne sentence. A man would thinke, so many great words should beare some weight. How solemne the Pope was in his sentence, it forceth not greatly. Certaine it is he condemned Aurelius the Bishop of Carthage, with all others his fellow Bishops, and said they were all entised, and led by the Diuell: and one of his said fellow Bishops was S. Augustine the Bishop of Hippo, as it is most euident by the Subscription of the Councel of Aphrica. The words of the said Pope Bonifacius be these: Aurelius Carthaginensis Ecclesiæ olim Episcopus, cum collegis suis, instigante Diabolo, superbire cœpit contra Romanam Ecclesiam. Therefore, good Reader, once againe thou maist tell M. Harding, that Pope Bonifacius the second, indeed and vndoubtedly condemned S. Augustine, and said, He was led by the Diuell, onely for that he would not yeld to his Predecessours ambitious follie. This is neither Impudencie, nor Lie, but manifest Truth.

Where I say, your Fathers in the Councel of Basil, and your friendes in the late Councel of Trident, yelded, and gaue place to the Bohemians, and to such others, as you call Heretikes, M. Harding answereth: This Lie is so cleare, and so euident, that our Confutation is needlesse. Whether this lie be so clere, and so euident, as here it is told vs, or whether it be any Lie at all, let M. Harding himselfe be the Iudge. In the Councel of Basil it is written thus: Indultum Liberationis Communionis sub vtraque specie: The grant of deliuering the Communion vnder both kinds. The like thing M. Harding might haue found recorded by Cardinall Cusanus, that was present at the Councel of Basil. For thus he writeth to the Bohemians: Scribitis, nos Compactionis ignorare: Yee say, that we know not the Agreement, or Composition. Where also he expressely maketh mention of that parcell of the Agreement, wherein the Libertie of the Communion vnder both kinds was conteined: and calleth it Caput de Libertate Communionis. Aske therefore M. Harding, what cleare eies he had to see this Lie to be so euident.

Where I say, The Gospell was preached in this Realme, either, as Theodoretus saith, by S. Paul the Apostle, passing this way into Spaine, or by Simon Zelotes, as saith Nicephorus. M. Harding answereth, Heere M. Iewel extremely belieth Theodoretus, and Nicephorus. Good Reader, notwithstanding the report hereof were vntrue, yet, as thou seest, it conteineth not any such extremitie, or horror of Lying. Whether S. Paul were here, or no, it is no Article of our Faith. We may well either receiue it, or refuse it without danger. It were great follie, to be ouer earnest in so small a matter.

Howbeit, touching S. Pauls being, and preaching within this Realme, three learned men of our time, Matthias Flacius Illyricus, Iohannes Wigandus, and Matthæus Iudex haue written thus: Theodoretus Libro nono de curandis Græcorum affectibus inditat, Paulum è priori captiuitate Roma dimissum, Britannis, & alijs in Occidente Euangelium prædicasse. Idem ferè tradit Sophronius Hierosolymitanus Patriarcha: Theodoretus in his ninth Booke, De curandis Græcorum affectibus, sheweth vs, that S. Paul being set at libertie after his first imprisonment in Rome, preached the Gospell to the people of the Iland of Britaine (now called England) and to other Nations of the West. But perhaps M. Harding will yeld small credit to these three men, notwithstanding their Learning. Therefore, for his better satisfaction, may it like him rather to beleeue Theodoretus himselfe. These be his words: Nostri illi Piſcatores, & Publicani, Sutorque ille noſter (Paulus) cunctis Nationibus Legem Euangelicam detulerunt: Neque ſolùm Romanos, quique ſub Romano viuunt Imperio, ſed Scythas quoque & Sauromatas, Indos præterea, Æthiopes, Perſas, Seras, Hyrcanos, Britannos, Cimmerios, & Germanos, vtque ſemel dicam, omne hominum genus, Nationéſque omnes induxerunt Crucifixi Legis accipere: Our Fiſhers, and Publicans (that were the Apoſtles) and our Cobler (S. Paul) carried the Law of the Goſpell to all Nations. And they forced, not only the Romanes, and others liuing vnder the Romane Empire, but alſo the Tartarians, the Sarmatians, or Polonians, the Indians, the Ethiopians, the Perſians, the Serians, the Hyrcanians, the people of Britaine now called England) the Cimmerians, and the Germanes, and to bee ſhort, all kinds, and Nations of men to receiue the Lawes of Chriſt crucified. Here haue we the people of Britaine: Here haue we S. Paul the Apoſtle, whom Theodoretus calleth a Cobler, for that by his occupation he ſewed ſkinnes together to make Tents. I ſay, what may be M. Hardings anſwer. But if he will ſay, S. Paul came neuer into this Iland, then let him tell vs, what other of the Apoſtles came euer hither. For that one of them came hither, and here preached the Goſpell, by Theodoretus words it ſeemeth euident. Actor. 18.

Touching Simon Zelotes, Nicephorus ſaith thus: Simon Zelotes Doctrinam Euangelij ad Occidentalium Oceanum, Inſulaſque Britannicas perfert. Therefore for M. Harding ſo vainely, and ſo vnciuilly to crie out in ſo light a matter without cauſe, I will not call it, Extreme Lying. But verily ſome man may well call it, Extreme Folly. Niceph. Lib. 2 cap. 40.

Whereas I ſay, Pope Hildebrand, as he was charged by the Councell of Brixia, was an Aduouterer, a Churchrobber, a periured man, a Mankiller, a Sorcerer, and a Renegate of the Faith, M. Harding anſwereth, I know that you Lie, I may ſay it ſauing my charitie, rather than your worſhip. For Pope Hildebrand was a very holy man. You ſhall find your ſelfe a Lier, and Pope Hildebrand a vertuous man. Marke this thing, I beſeech thee, good Reader: In all this whole place, touching Pope Hildebrand, I alleage not one word of mine owne: but onely report the words of the Councell of Brixia. Be the report of the Councell true, or falſe, certainly my report is true. For I report only that I finde. The Councell in moſt plaine wiſe calleth Pope Hildebrand, Virum procaciſſimum, Sacrilegia, & Incendia prædicantem, Periuria, & Homicidia defendentem: Hæretici Berengarij Antiquum Diſcipulum, Diuinationum, & Inſomniorum Cultorem, Manifeſtum Necromanticum, Pythonico Spiritu Laborantem, & à Vera Fide exorbitantem. If thou doubt the credit of this Councell, Nauclerus, Lambertus Scaphnaburgenſis, Anſelmus Rid, Sigibertus Gemblacenſis, and others haue confirmed the ſame. M. Hard. fol. 256. b. Abbas Vrſper.

Nauclerus hereof writeth thus: The Clergie ſaid, that Pope Hildebrand had defiled the Apoſtolike See with Simony, Hereſie, Murder, and Aduouterie: that he was a Renegate, and had forſaken the Faith of Chriſt: and that therefore he was for good cauſes, and iuſtly excommunicate by all the Biſhops of Italie. Nauclerus Generatio. 36.

Sigebertus Gemblacenſis ſaith: Pope Hildebrand in his time troubled all the ſtates of Chriſtendome, and for his outrage and crueltie being baniſhed, and driuen out of Rome: in the end, when he ſaw death approch, hee made his confeſſion to one of his Cardinals, that hee had abuſed his Paſtorall Office, and that he had troubled mankind with malice and miſchiefe, by the counſell and procurement of the Diuell. Sigibertus Gemblacenſis. Se, ſuadente Diabolo, contra humanum genus odium, & iram concitaſſe.

All this notwithſtanding, M. Harding ſaith, Pope Hildebrand was a very vertuous, and a Holy man: and ſo conſtantly telleth vs, I know, that you Lie: you ſhall finde your ſelfe to be a Lier.

Whereas I alleage a Dialogue, of Anſelmus, ſometime Archbiſhop of Canterburie, to proue, that in his time, it was not thought vnlawfull for Prieſts to marrie, their Holy Orders notwithſtanding, M. Harding anſwereth: This is none of Anſelmus Dialogues: It is a rifferaffe: It is a forgerie; I will not call it plaine Lying. Good Reader, here M. Harding ouer boldly preſumeth, as his wont is, before he know. If he knew more, he would ſay leſſe. Indeed it is one of Anſelms dialogues. I haue ſeene it, and read it in Authenticall Copies: as otherwhere I haue proued more at large. And the words of the ſaid Dialogue are euen as I haue alleged them. M. Hard. fol. 308. a. b.

Deſideramus certificari tua ſolutione, ſuper vulgari toto Orbe quæſtione, quę ab omnibus penè quotidiè ventilatur, & adhuc lis celatur indiſcuſſa. But often times he is hardieſt man to ſpeake, that hath leaſt to ſay. Pagina 564. & 565. 5. An. Do. 1109.

Laſt of all, whereas I allege an Authority of Damaſus, taken out of Gratian, to proue, that ſundry Popes were Prieſts Sonnes, O, ſaith M. Harding, who euer ſaw ſo impudent a man? what ſhall I ſay to this fellow? Fie for ſhame man: A miniſter of Fables: A miniſter of Lies: Fooliſh ignorance: M. Hard. fol. 167.

ignorance: Shameleſſe malice: So ignorant: So witleſſe: How could Damaſus write of ſo many Popes ſo long to come after his death?

6. So terrible is M. Harding in his dealing. But be not afraid, good Reader, of all this ſmoke. Thou ſhalt ſee it ſuddenly blowen all to vanity, from whence it came. Firſt of all, as touching the very truth of the ſtorie, euery of theſe Popes by Gratian alleged was indeed a Prieſts Sonne. And this only was it I had to ſay. And now the ſame I ſay againe:

Pag. 207. Euery of theſe Popes was a Prieſts Sonne, not one excepted, as in place it ſhall be proued. What cauſe then had M. Harding, ſo vainely to diſquiet himſelfe, and thus to cry out vpon poore Miniſters, of Lies, and Fables? That I ſay is true: and Truth is no Lie: Truth is no Fable.

But you will ſay, Damaſus was dead long before theſe Popes were borne. How then could he know, who were their Fathers? Herein I grant, there is an error. But, good Reader, it is Gratians error: It is not mine. I report Gratian only as I finde him. I put not to him: I take not from him. I alter not one Letter of all his words. Therefore tell M. Harding, it is Gratian his own Doctor and Dearling, that thus hath written. Bid him call Gratian Ignorant, Foliſh, Shameleſſe, and Witleſſe, and what him liſteth, and let

M. Har. Confut. a. 340. a. him not ſpare. Let him boldly, ſtrike him that did him hurt. For M. Harding hath told vs otherwheres, that whoſo ſtriketh one man for another, is but a Fole.

Thus, good Chriſtian Reader, thou ſeeſt one whole Iurie of M. Hardings greateſt Untruths, wherein he repoſeth his greateſt truſt, is clerely attainted. As he hath dealt vprightly herein, ſo maiſt thou truſt him in all the reſt. By a ſmall draught of Sea water thou maiſt iudge the verdure of the whole.

M. Hard. fol. 408. 409. But O good God, what ſtirre keepeth M. Harding amongſt other his little prætie petite quarrels! He telleth thee, I haue named Iohannes Camotenſis for Iohannes Carnotenſis: And therein, as in a matter of great weight, he hath beſtowed great ſtore of void words, and foure whole Pages of his Booke. Verily a ſimple treſpaſſe, whereof to ground ſo great a battell. It is too light a labour, to ſtriue for names. If he like not the one, let him boldly take the other. Certainly Gheſnerus in his Epitome, and Cornelius Agrippa call him plainly, as I doe, Iohannes Camotenſis. But be it Camotenſis, be it Carnotenſis, or what you will, his words be euen as I allege them: In Eccleſia Romana ſedent Scribæ, & Phariſæi. Ipſe Papa iam factus eſt intolerabilis: Papæ Pompam, & Faſtum nullus Tyrannorum vnquam æquauit: Papæ Legati ſic Bacchantur in Prouincijs, acſi ad flagellandam Eccleſiam Satan egreſſus ſit à facie Domini. Vim faciunt Scripturis, vt habeant plenitudinem poteſtatis. Let M. Harding grant thus much, and vſe the names at his pleaſure.

Gheſnerus. Cornel. Agrip. de Vanitate Scientiarum.

Againe he ſaith, I haue named Zarabella for Zabarella: Heruæus, for Iohannes Pariſienſis; Iohannes Pariſienſis, for Heruæus, and Petrus à Scoto, for Dominicus à Scoto. He ſaith I allege Heruæus by Chapters, whereas Heruæus is diuided by certaine other Diſtinctions, and not by Chapters. He ſaith, I haue named Pius Secundus by the name of Pope Pius, a yeare, or a moneth, or ſome certaine time before he was Pope. No doubt, a perilous caſe. The man was one, and his words were one, but his name was changed. In one place, he ſaith, I haue left out Enim: In another place, I haue left out Hoc: In another place, my Printer hath miſplaced Schemate, for Schiſmate: Pighius, for Pighius: and I know not what. Such waighty cauſes hath M. Harding pickt out, to make vp his tale. Heereat he lightneth, and thundreth, and ſhaketh ſand and Sea together. Heereat, and at other matters of like force he crieth out, Leaud wretches, Iewiſh, Heatheniſh, Shameleſſe, Blaſphemous Villaines: As if it were lawfull for a Doctor of Louaine to ſay what him liſteth. If he eſpy any ſuch ſimple ouerſight, as I haue ſhewed, or any Sentence miſalleged, or any one Author miſnamed, or any thing els, that may be wreſted from the purpoſe, he braieth amaine, False Miniſters: False Harlots: Ye bragge: Yee beaſt: Yee Lie falſly: Ye Lie for aduantage: Ye are impudent Liers: Leaud Lies: Heapes of Lies: Nothing but Lies, And all is Lies. With as great wiſdome, and diſcretion, as did ſometime Anaxagoras, the Philoſopher of Græcia: who, when he had ſeene a little Pebble ſtone fallen downe from Heauen, imagined therefore, that the Sunne, the Moone, the Starres, and all the whole Heauens were made of Stones. By theſe prety poſies, and flowers of ſpeech, we may eaſily deſcry M. Harding from all his fellowes. Howbeit, herein I truſt to be ſo vnlike vnto him, as he is like vnto himſelfe. Neither can our cauſe appeare the worſe in the iudgement of the wiſe, for that M. Harding hath ſo good a grace to ſpeake ill. Ill ſpeech is not alwaies proofe ſufficient of good matter. Maxentius ſaith, Hæretici cùm peruerſitatis ſuæ non poſſunt reddere rationem, ad maledicta conuertuntur: Heretikes, when they finde themſelues not able to yeeld a reaſon of their wilfulneſſe, ther they fall to plaine railing, Diogen. Laertius.

But one thing ſpecially much miſliketh M. Harding aboue all the reſt, that, the better to diſcloſe the deformities, and weakneſſe of his Doctrine, I haue alleged ſo many Canoniſts niſts and Schoole Doctors. For all them he weigheth no better now, than Æſopes Fables. And therefore he ſaith, As for the gewgawes of the Schoolemen, and Canoniſts, I deſpiſe them vtterly. What then? Would M. Harding that we ſhould rather alleage S. Auguſtine, S. Ambroſe, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Baſil, and others the Ancient, and Learned Fathers, touching his Priuate Maſſes, his Halfe-communions his Dumbe praiers in a tongue vnknowen, and other like diſorders of the Church of Rome? Did euer any of theſe Fathers, either vſe alone the Holy Sacrament himſelfe alone, the whole people looking on him? Or miniſter the Communion vnto the people in one only kind: or ſay the publike praiers in a ſtrange tongue, the people not knowing, what he ſaid? Would any of theſe Fathers euer haue ſaid, The Pope hath Vniuerſall power ouer all the world: we all receiue of the Popes fulneſſe: The Pope cannot erre: The Pope is aboue all Generall Councels: The Pope hath power ouer the Angels of God: Kings, and Princes hold their Crownes, and Dominions of the Pope? Alaſſe theſe good Fathers were dead many hundred yeres, before theſe, and other like vanities were knowen in the world. Detect. 277. b.

But may it not be lawfull for vs, with M. Hardings good fauour, to alleage ſuch witneſſes, as beſt know the cauſe? Or was there euer any man iuſtly reproued before any indifferent and reaſonable Iudge, for producing of honeſt, and lawfull witneſſes? Or, are all the Schoole Doctours, and Canoniſts, now become Inteſtabiles, that is to ſay, ſo far out of Credit, ſo infamous, and ſo vile, that they may not be allowed to beare witneſſe? Whoſe then are they? Of whether ſide ſtand they? Are they not all M. Hardings owne Doctors? Is he now aſhamed of his owne? Are they not all ſworne to the See of Rome? And what were they? What roomes bare they in the Church? Were they not Abbats, Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Cardinals, Saints, and Popes? Was not Panormitane an Abbat? was not Albertus Magnus a Biſhop? was not Antoninus an Archbiſhop? was not Holcote a Cardinall? was not Caietanus a Cardinall? Is not Bonauentura a Saint? Is not Thomas a Saint? was not Innocentius 2. a Pope? was not Adrianus a Pope? Did not Pope Gregory 9. write the Decretals? Did not Pope Bonifacius 8. write the Sextus? Did not Pope Clemens write the Clementines? Did not Pope Iohannes 22. and other Popes write the Extra Vagantes? Were not theſe Chriſts Vicars? Were they not Peters Succeſſors? Were they not the light of the world? Bare they not the Keies of the Kingdome of heauen? Is not Gratian called Fundamentum Iuris Canonici, and that euen by Eugenius 3. the Pope himſelfe? Were not theſe for the ſpace of fiue hundred yeres together the only Rulers of the Church of God? Were not their words holden for Lawes? Were there any others better, or better learned, or at all any other Doctors in the Church? Of the Schoole Doctours, was not one called Subtilis, another Solennis, another Irrefragabilis, another Angelicus, another Seraphicus? What warrant had we then of the faith of Chriſt, what Doctrine, what Sacraments, what Diſcipline, what Correction, what Order, what Comfort, but at their hands? How could any Counſell be holden, how could any man recouer his right, how could the Pope himſelfe maintaine his Vniuerſall power, and his Triple Crowne, but only by them?

And yet will M. Harding ſuddenly condemne them all, euery one, by one Sentence, Abbats, Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Decrees, Decretals, Cardinals, Saints, and Popes, and all together? Will he make them all vnable to beare witneſſe? will he thus deſpiſe them, and call them Gewgawes, as if they were all Tinkers, and Coblers, and no better?

I trow M. Harding was not very well informed, when he ſuffered theſe things, ſo vnaduiſedly to paſſe from him. Otherwiſe, to ſeeke reueng vpon his Aduerſaries, he would not ſo ſturdily haue plaid Samſons part, and ſo raſhly haue cruſht the Pillars, whereby he leaned, and haue ſhaken downe the whole houſe vpon himſelfe. For, I beſeech thee, aſke M. Harding, what hath the Pope to ſtand vnto, when the Schoole Doctours, and Canoniſts be gone from him? What Old Father, what Ancient Doctor, what Counſel, what Scripture is there left him? what will he ſay to the Doctors of our ſide, that ſo peremptorily, and ſcornefully deſpiſeth his owne, and calleth them Gewgawes? It might haue pleaſed him to haue ſuffered them, as witneſſes, quietly to haue told their tales, ſpecially in ſuch caſes, as no other man could know ſo well as they. For by them, and by them only, and by none elſe, we may ſee that great and horrible blindneſſe and miſery that Satan had brought into the Church of God. For although it be now remoued from our eies, yet in theſe Canoniſts and Doctors bookes, as in publike Records it remaineth ſtill. Gods holy name be praiſed for euer, that of his great mercy hath deliuered vs by the clearenceſſe and glory of his Goſpell.

Verily S. Paul, to aduance the Truth of God, and to confound his enemies, thought it no reproch to take witneſſe of the Heathen Poets, Menander, Epimenides, and Aratus. The learned Fathers, Tertullian, Clemens, Euſebius, Arnobius, take witneſſe of the godlesse Philosophers: S. Augustine of the Sibylles: Lactantius of Apolloes Oracles. Yea, M. Harding himselfe, when he is able, and when neede so requireth, is contented to take witnesse of Leontius, of Abdias, of Amphilochius, of Homer the Greeke Poet, of Priscian the poore Grammarian, of Scholasticall Doctours, of Canonists, of Decrees, of Decretals, of Glosses, and Margins, and spareth nothing. Yet now must they be despised altogether, and goe for Gewgawes, for children to play withall.

But we must pardon M. Harding, he dealeth indifferently, and is nothing partiall. For euen with like reuerence he vseth all the ancient Doctors of the Church, and others of later time, that fight of his side, and are allied vnto him. Tertullian (he saith) was an Heretike, and wrote this, and that, in defence of his Heresie. S. Cyprian (he saith) stood in an ill cause and defended a falshood, and was driuen to the very same shifts, whereunto all Heretikes are driuen. Againe he saith: We neuer tooke our selues bound to any priuate opinion of whatsoeuer Doctor. If in a secret point of learning S. Augustine or S. Cyprian teach singularly, we follow them not. It seemeth (saith he) S. Hierome was deceiued by a rumour, as being farre from the places where the truth might be knowen. We binde not our selues (saith he) to maintaine whatsoeuer Albertus Pighius hath written. Cardinall Caietanus (saith he) hath his errours: Erasmus and Agrippa be men of small credit: Alphonsus de Castro, Beatus Rhenanus, Platina, Appendix Concilij Basiliensis, are stuffe little worth. Againe, Iohannes Gerson, the greatest learned man of his time, and the only Doctour and Leader of the Councell of Constance, whom Trithemius calleth Theologorum sui temporis longè Principem, is no better than good plaine Father Gerson. To be short, Nilus, a Greeke Writer, and the Archbishop of Thessalonica, if it like M. Harding, must beare the bable.

Thus we see, M. Harding hath a commission, to controll all maner of Doctours, whatsoeuer, Greekes, Latines, Old, New, his owne, and others, if they come not readily to his purpose. Nicolaus Cusanus saith, Papa Eugenius dicit, hoc verum esse, si ipse velit, & non aliter: Pope Eugenius telleth vs, this thing is true, if his Holinesse will haue it true: And that otherwise it is not true. Such a power, I trow, M. Harding would claime vnto himselfe, that nothing may be taken for true or false without his liking. Marcolphus will not lightly find a fit tree to hang himselfe on.

Nicol. Cusan. de Concordan. Li. 2. Cap. 20.

But M. Harding saith, I alleage great troupes of Doctours, and other Writers: But vse no maner discourse of wit, as he himselfe doth, to enlarge my matters: As though, whoso hath most words, spake alwaies best to purpose. The learned Father Tertullian said sometime vpon like occasion: Rhetoricari quoque nos prouocant Hæretici: These Heretikes would haue vs play the Rhetoricians, to embosse out our matters with shew of words, and of a Mole-hill to make a Mountaine, as they doe. As for M. Harding, what discourses he vseth, it may easily appeare, by that in his last Detection, he hath discoursed vs two hundred, and six whole sides of Paper onely in Preambles, and Prefaces, before he once stept into his matter. And good reason is it, that, when Scriptures and Doctours will not serue, then discourse of Wit should hold the Plough. Although M. Harding want weight of matter, yet at least he hath words at will. They cost him but little. Vessels neuer giue so great a sound, as when they be emptie. A Courtegian of Rome will pranke her selfe more trimly, than a Vertuous Lady. It is an easie matter, with Maskes, and Visards, and long Discourses, to fray the simple. The poore Asse will roare out sometimes like a Lion.

I goe directly, and shortly to the matter, and delight not, as M. Harding doth, to set my words to sale by discourse of speech: But thinke it sufficient only to alleage the words, and Authorities of the Ancient Fathers. Of the other side, M. Harding out of the Ancient Fathers alleageth, either nothing at all, or very little, or little to the purpose: but furnisheth vs with words enough of his owne, that is to say, (and let him pardon my plainenesse) not with the best, or wisest words, that might be spoken.

The Protestants (saith he) are diuided, and scattered into Sects, and factions, not one of them agreeing with the other. They haue twenty sundry opinions touching Iustification: They haue six and thirty opinions touching the Communion in both kinds. So precisely M. Harding keepeth his reckenings. And yet perhaps if he were called suddenly to an Audit, of all these fiue and fifty sundry opinions, he were not able to recken foure. But Master Harding may lawfully discourse at pleasure, as a man liking well his owne wit, and in respect thereof misliking all others.

7. Detection fol. 34. a. Detect. 33. b. Detect. 82. b. Detect. 139. a. Ad Henricum 8. lib. 3. Copus Dial. 6. Pap. 878.

Againe he saith: The Protestants haue forsaken Christ: The Protestants are become Iewes: The Protestants will be circumcised according to Moses Law: The Protestants require to haue the Paschall Lambe: The Protestants tell their people, there is no Hell at all: The Protestants teach vs, that God is bound to obey the Diuell: The protestants at their next proceeding will vtterly deny God. So likewise saith Cardinall Poole a man, that would highly be commended for his modestie: The Protestants (saith he) will shortly denie, that Christ is Messias, the Anointed of God. Another of them saith with like discretion: The Protestants deny, that Christ euer appeared red in the flesh. And againe he saith, Peter Martyr denied, that Christ is our Intercessour. There is no tale so vnlikely, but by such prety discourses it may be proued. Copus Dial. 3. Pag. 331.

Againe, throughout the whole discourse of all his Bookes, he telleth vs, that the blessed Succession of Peter shall neuer faile. That the Popes Chaire is the very knot of Christian Vnity; That the Church of Rome is the Vniuersall Church of God; That the Pope is the only Vniuersall Gouernour of all the world; That the Pope may not be controlled, or iudged by any power: That the Pope is aboue all Generall Councels; That the Pope hath Authorite ouer the Soules in Purgatory; And ouer the Angels of God; That S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Ambrose, S. Chrysostome, and all other the Doctours, and Holy Fathers might erre: But the Pope only can neuer erre. 8.

If thou tell him, that many Popes haue erred, and shamefully erred, as it is euident, and easie to proue, he will answer thee, They erred only as men, but not as Popes. For the Pope hath sundry Capacities in one person: Sometimes we must take him as a man, and sometimes as no man. 9.

If thou tell him, that Popes haue erred, euen as they were Popes, then will he answer thee, that the Pope may erre, and hath erred in some certaine particular cause, or question. But in Faith, or Doctrine he cannot erre:

If thou tell him, that sundry Popes haue maintained open, and knowen Heresies, and therefore haue vndoubtedly erred in Faith, and Doctrine; then will he tell thee, that they maintained such Heresies, only as their owne priuate opinions, but not as Doctrine for the Church. Againe, if thou tell him, that certaine Popes haue published, and preached, and taught Heresies, and sent abroad Preachers, to confirme the same; then will he tell thee, that although they preached, and confirmed Heresies, yet they neuer confirmed them by publike Decree, and open Sentence in their Consistories: as if the Popes Consistory were of greater weight in matter of Doctrine, than his Pulpit.

Thus M. Harding discourseth about the fields, A primo ad Vltimum, from Errour, to Man: from Man, to Pope: from Pope, to Iudgement: from Iudgement, to Faith: from Faith, to Opinion: from Opinion, to Preaching: from Preaching, to Decree: And so from one thing to another: And whereas one thing will not serue, by discourse of wit he fetcheth a better.

All these Songs he sang vs before, in his Answer, in his Reioinder, and in his Confutation. And now, when all is done, as a silly Minstrell, is faine to fall to Discoursing, and to sing the same about againe. Otherwise he should lacke worke for his Printer.

To shadow the notorious Ambition of the Church of Rome, openly condemned in the great Councell of Aphrica, and called the smoky pompe of the world either ignorantly, or guilefully he corrupteth the plaine Text, and turneth Petentes, into Potentes, that is to say, he turneth poore Suiters, into Princes. God Reader, turne to the place, and consider the Answer that I haue made hereto: and then aske of M. Harding, what Discourse, or what wit was this, to corrupt his Translation, to falsifie the sense, to turne Pe, into Po, and one word into another? Aske of him, what he meant, with so sensible forgery to seeke to mocke thee. Quibuscunq; Petentibus. Quibuscunq; Potentibus. πᾶν διπούντων. Pagin. 123.

Againe, whereas S. Basil writeth thus vnto Athanasius the Patriarke of Alexandria, Visum est vtile, vt scribatur ad Episcopum Romanum, vt consideret res nostras, & det Consilium: It seemeth good we write to the Bishop of Rome, that he consider of our case, and giue vs Counsel. M. Harding by his proper discourings hath thought it better, thus to English the same words: It hath seemed good, that we write to the Bishop of Rome, that he visit vs, and determine the matter by his Sentence. That the Bishop of Rome consider our case, saith S. Basil: That the Bishop of Rome visit vs, saith M. Harding: That the Bishop of Rome giue vs counsell, what we may doe, saith S. Basil: That the Bishop of Rome determine the matter by his Sentence, saith M. Harding. Thus by his discoursing he hath changed, Considering, into Visiting, and Giuing of Counsel, into Sentence in iudgement. Basil. in Epist. ad Athanasium. M. Harding. Detect. 179. b. Defence 129. Vt Consideret res nostras. Vt det Consilium.

But aske him, I pray thee, what discourse of wit moued him to change all the Latine Translations of S. Basil, that euer he saw, and to forge vs a new Translation of his owne. Aske him wherefore this Greeke word, Ἐποχὰ ποιεῖ, may not well be Englished, To consider. Aske him wherefore these Greeke words, δοῦναι γνώμην, may not well be Englished, To giue Councell. Aske him, where he euer read, in any allowed Greeke Writer, these words, δοῦναι γνώμην, vsed for a Decree, or Sentence in Iudgement. Aske him, what made him so bold, to shape vs new Greeke words of his owne, such as no Grecian euer heard before. Ἐποχὴν, saith M. Harding, and againe, Ἐποχὴν, twice together in one place. But bid him leaue his long discourses, and shewes of wit, and plainly to tell thee, euen as he wil be counted a Grecian, in what Historiographer, in what Oratour, in what Philosopher, in what Poet, he euer heard of this word Ἐποχὴν. Tell him, good Reader, tell him, This Verbe is not Επσχέπτω, as he imagineth, but Επσχέπτομαι. And bid him, not to truſt to his Dictionary, for it will deceiue him. Επσχέπτομαι, I ſay, is the Originall Verbe, and not Επσχέπτω. And therefore the firſt Indefinite, is not Επσχέψα, as M. Harding telleth thée, but Επσχέψαδαι. It was ſufficient for him, to mocke thée with Latine, and Engliſh. But of himſelfe to deuiſe new Greéke words, and new Grammers, wherewith to mocke thée, it was too much.

Detection 67. Defenſe. By his diſcourſes he is able to defend theſe words of Hoſtienſis; Deus, & Papa faciunt vnum Conſiſtorium: Excepto Peccato, Papa poteſt quaſi omnia facere, quæ poteſt Deus: God, and the Pope haue one Iudgement Seate: And, Sinne onely excepted, the Pope can doe in a maner all things, that God can doe. Whereby, I trow, is meant, that, as God is omnipotent, ſo in a maner is the Pope.

Detection 358 By his diſcourſes he is able to defend that moſt horrible and blaſphemous Prayer, deuiſed and vſed in the Church of Rome, Tu per Thomæ Sanguinem &c. to the manifeſt preiudice, and derogation of the Blood of Chriſt. By his Diſcourſes, he is able to defend theſe words of Catharinus, lately pronounced in the Councel of Trident; Our Lady is Chriſts moſt faithfull fellow, making a Creature equall and fellow with Chriſt the Creator, which is God bleſſed for euer.

To be ſhort, by his Diſcourſes, he is well able to defend theſe moſt vile and filthy words, touching Prieſts Concubines, vttered to moſt vile and filthy purpoſe; Sinon caſtè, tamen cautè; If they cannot liue chaſtly, yet let them deale charily. The circumſtance conſidered ſaith M. Harding) all this may ſeeme, to be well, and diſcreetly (and chaſtly) ſaid, and to giue vs very good counſell. O mercifull God, whether will M. Harding lead vs at laſt with his Diſcourſes! Such diſcreét and holeſome counſell he might haue learned of Mitio in the Heathen Comodie; for thus he ſaith; Non eſt flagitium, mihi crede, adoleſcentem Scortari.

Detection fol. 399. b. 400.

Yet further to proue, that he hath a ready wit to courſe at pleaſure, he ſaith vnto vs frankly, and by way of grant; What if ſome haue written, that poiſon was miniſtred in the Bleſſed Sacrament? What if the Pope ſuffred Franciſcus Dandalus, the Venetians Embaſſadour, to lie vnder his Table like a dogge, while he was at dinner? What if Popes haue ſuffered great Princes, and Monarks, to kiſſe their fét, to hold their ſtirrops, and to lead their horſes? What if Pope Alexander vſed Frederike the Emperour more proudly, than became a man of his calling, treading him downe to the ground, and ſetting his foote on his necke? Be theſe things neuer ſo true, neuer ſo tyrannicall, and neuer ſo horrible, yet if M. Harding once ſay, What if, by diſcourſe of his wit, they may ſone be ſalued.

M. Harding in his Preface to the Reader.

By ſuch Diſcourſes he is able to proue his Priuate Maſſes, his Dimi Communions, his Primacies, his Pardons, his Purgatories, and what thing ſoeuer ſhall come to hand. When Scriptures faile, then diſcourſe of wit muſt come in place: And when wit and diſcourſe will not ſerue, then good plaine round railing muſt ſerue the turne. Then, (ſaith he) Ye are proud, ye are Luciferlike, ye ſerue the Diuell. Then he telleth the world, M. Iewell is worſe than Ananias, that condemned S. Paul: M. Iewel plaieth the part of Antichriſt: M. Iewel is the open enemy of the Church: M. Iewel is the enemy of God: M. Iewel honoureth that Idol Caluine more than Ieſus Chriſt: M. Iewel is Meſſias: M. Iewel is Chriſt: M. Iewel is better than Chriſt. Then he diſcourſeth, and flingeth now at his Lutherans: now at his Huguenotes: now at Browne: now at the Puritans: now at Bale: now at Illyricus.

M. Harding Detect. 39. b. Detect. 210. 245. Detect. 40. Detect. 359. Detect. 210. Detect. 212.

Thus he iumpeth, and courſeth this way, and that way, as a man roning without a marke, or a Ship fléeting without a Rither. Thus he ſheweth vs a mountaine of words without ſubſtance, and a houſe full of ſmoke without fire: and imagineth, that his little Elder Pipe, by diſcourſe of wit, will reſemble the ſound of a double Canon. When all is done, we may ſay of him, as the poore man ſaid that ſhoare his Sow, Yéere is great crie, and litle woll.

God Reader, Truth is plaine, and homely, and hath no néede of theſe Pablements. But whoſo will take vpon him to maintaine Vntruth, muſt néedes be forced to diſcourſe about with long vagaries, to lead his Reader from the purpoſe, to fée̊de him with words for want of matter, and briefly to doe, euen as héere M. Harding doth.

I cannot imagine, that any my poore labours ſhall be able to end theſe quarrels. For a contentious man will neuer lacke words. Notwithſtanding in this Augmentation I haue endeuoured for my ſimple part, to ſay ſo much, as to a reaſonable man may ſéeme ſufficient. I haue cleared ſuch places as ſéemed darke: I haue ſupplied ſuch things, as ſéemed to want: I haue reformed ſo much, as reaſon required: Briefly, I haue anſwered the ſubſtance of all M. Hardings long Diſcourſes. If any thing be left vnanſwered, either it was nothing, or nothing worth.

May

May it please thee, good Christian Reader, to peruse both, and to iudge vprightly. Endeuour thorowly to know the cause. An ignorant iudge was neuer indifferent. M. Harding would haue thee only to follow the example of thy late deceiued Fathers, and further to search, and know nothing. And oftentimes thine ignorance maketh him bold. He leadeth thee into the darknes of Death, and yet would haue thee beleeue thou art in Paradise. The blind man is led he knoweth not whither. But search thou the Scriptures, as Christ himselfe biddeth thee: Learne to know the will of God, as S. Paul aduiseth thee; Haue pleasure in Gods Holy word, as the Prophet Dauid warneth thee; and thou shalt neuer be deceiued: Whereas building vpon the sand of witty Discourses, and the variable weakenes of mens iudgements, sometimes allowed, and sometimes reproued, thy House must needs come to ground.

Tell M. Harding, It shall be hard for him to kicke still against the prick. God hath sowed the seed of life. No power is able to rote it out. God hath disclosed the man of Sin: No Cloke is able to hide him longer. Heauen and earth shall passe: But Gods word shall neuer passe. God open the eies of thy heart, that thou maist haue comfort in his light, and reioyce in his Mercies, and patiently wait for that blessed Hope, that is laid vp for thee, and continue faithfull vnto the end. Amen.

TO THE CHRISTIAN Reader.

IT pitieth me in thy behalfe, good Christian Reader, to see thy conscience thus assaulted this day with so contrary Doctrines of Religion: and specially if thou haue a zeale to follow, and seek not what: and wouldest faine please God, and knowest not how: nor findest thy selfe sufficiently armed with Gods holy Spirit: nor able either to discerne thy meat from poison, or to vnwind thy selfe out of the snares. For Satan transformeth himself into an Angel of light: The wicked is more watchfull, and vehement, than the godly: and Falshood is often times painted, and beautified, and shineth more glorious than the Truth. 2. Corin. 11.

These be the things, that, as S. Paul saith, worke the subuersion of the Hearers: and by meane whereof, as Christ saith, If it were possible, the very Elect of God should be deceiued: Howbeit, God knoweth his owne, and no Power can pull them out of his hand. God is able to worke comfort out of confusion, and to force his Light to shine out of darknesse. All things worke vnto good, vnto them that be in Christ Iesus. Be falshood neuer so craftily coloured, yet in the end the Truth will conquere. 2. Tim. 2. Mat. 24. 2. Tim. 2. Iohan. 10. Roman. 8.

Notwithstanding, God in these daies hath so amazed the Aduersaries of his Gospell, and hath caused them so openly, and so grossely to lay abroad their follies, to the sight and face of all the world, that no man now, be he neuer so ignorant, can thinke, he may iustly be excused. They deale not now so suttlely, as other Heretikes in old times were wont to doe: they hide not the lothsomnesse of their errors: they cloke not themselues in Sheepe-skinnes: they dissemble nothing; they excuse nothing: but, without either shame of man, or feare of God, they rake vp those things, that before were buried, that themselues had forsaken, the wise had abhorred, the world had lothed. It had beene more policy for them to haue yeelded in somewhat, and to haue staied in the rest. So there might haue appeared some plainenesse in their dealings.

But this is Gods iust iudgement, that they, that wilfully withstand the Truth, should be giuen ouer to maintaine Lies, as being the Children of Vntruth, Children, that will not heare the Law of God. Esay 30.

For triall whereof, I beseech thee, good Reader, aduisedly to peruse these few notes, truely taken out of M. Harding late Confutation. Iudge thereof, as thou shalt see cause. Let no affection or fantasie cause things to seeme otherwise, than they be.

The two principall Grounds of this whole Booke are these: First, That the Pope, although he may erre by personall errour, in his owne Priuate Iudgement, as a man, and as a particular Doctour in his owne opinion: yet as he is Pope, as he is the Successour of Peter, as he is the Vicar of Christ in Earth, and as he is the Shepheard of the Vniuersall Church, in Publike Iudgement, in deliberation, and definitiue Sentence, he neuer erreth, nor neuer erred, nor neuer can erre. As if he would say, The Pope walking in his Gallery is one man, and sitting in his Consistory, or in Iudgement, is another: Which thing to hold Alphonsus de Castro, saith, it is meere folly. Yet is this M. Hardings chiefest, or rather, as I might in manner say, his onely ground. M. Harding. fol. 334. b. Alphons. lib. 1. cap. 4.

The Second is this: The Church of Rome is the whole, and onely Catholike Church of God: and whosoeuer is not obedient vnto the same, must be iudged an Heretike. These two grounds being once well and surely laid, he may build at pleasure, what him listeth. Confut. fo. 16. b. fol. 261. b.

As for the Pope, the better to countenance his estate, he saith, that Peter receiued Power Ordinarie Confu. fol. 48. b

Confu. f. 335. a & 48. b. Ordinary, to himſelfe, and to his Succeſſors for euer: but his Fellowes had power only by Diſpenſation; That Peter was the Shepheard, and the Apoſtles the Sheep: and that the Apoſtles were ſubiect vnto Peter, as the Sheep are ſubiect to the Shepheard: And that Iames the Apoſtle was a member of Peter. For better warrant whereof Pope Leo ſaith: Petrum Chriſtus in Conſortium Indiuiduæ Vnitatis aſſumptum, id, quod ipſe erat, voluit nominari: Chriſt receiuing Peter into the company of the Indiuiſible Vnity, would him to be called the ſame, that he was himſelfe.

Iacob. Nanclantus in Epiſt. ad Rom. Cap. 1.

Iaco. Payua, Lib. 9. Polydor. de Inuentorib.

Upon affiance and truſt of theſe words, M. Hard. endoweth the Pope with Chriſts only Prerogatiue, and calleth him by Chriſts principall Title, The Prince of Paſtors. And further he ſaith, Of the Pope hangeth the ſafety of the whole Church of God: That vnto the Pope is giuen all maner of power, as well in Heauen, as in Earth: And that, if any man ſay, The Pope hath Authority to command the Angels, and Archangels of God, to come, to go, to wait, to run, to carry, to fetch, we may not be ſcrupulous, (for theſe be his words) in any ſuch matters: That neither King, nor Emperor, nor Clergy, nor Counſel, nor any power aliue can haue Authority to iudge the Pope, be his Life neuer ſo vile: That the Pope is endued with a Diuine, or a Godly Power, and that by the ſame he is able to Depoſe Kings: That the Pope, euen by the inſtitution of Chriſt, is a Temporall Prince, and hath the right, and intereſt of both Swords, as well Temporall, as Spirituall: That all Kings, and Emperors, by the commandement of Chriſt, receiue their whole power, and authority from the Pope: That the Pope in a right good ſenſe may be called the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: Like as alſo in ſome good ſenſe, he may be called our Lord, and God: (And therfore one of M. Hard. fellowes ſaith: The Pope is the Head, and Kings and Princes are the Feet:) That the Pope, whatſoeuer he be, is alwaies a Chriſtian man, by the Nature of his Office: And therfore another of them ſaith: Iudaſne ſit, an Petrus, an Paulus, Deus attendi non vult: ſed ſolum hoc, quòd ſedet in Cathedra Petri: Whether the Pope be Iudas (the Traytor) or Peter or Paul, therof God neuer had vs be carefull. This only is ſufficient for vs, that he ſitteth in Peters Chaire. Likewiſe M. H. ſaith: It ſhal be ſufficient for vs, to doe, as Peters Succeſſors bid vs to doe: Chriſt (ſaith M. Hard.) now requireth not of vs to obey Peter or Paul, but him that ſitteth in their Chaire.

Again he ſaith, The whole church of God is the Popes Vineyard: The Pope is the Head, and all the Faithful of Chriſt be his Members: The preſeruation of the whole Church ſtandeth in the Vnity of the Pope: And therefore Hoſius ſaith, Abſq; Vno (Papa) Eccleſia Vna eſſe non poteſt: Without One Pope the Church of God cannot be One. To conclude M. Hard. ſaith, Without the obedience of the Pope, there is no hope of Saluation. Thus much hath M. Har. taught vs as moſt ſound, & moſt Catholike doctrine, touching the Authority of the Pope.

Of the other ſide he ſaith, The Church of Rome is the Vniuerſal, and only Church of God: and that whatſoeuer Doctrine hath bene taught in the ſame, ought to be taken, as godly, and Catholike: And that all other Churches of the other Apoſtles might erre, and faile: but the Church of Rome, euen by Gods eſpecial promiſe, whatſoeuer ſhe teach, can neuer erre.

He fighteth as ſtrõgly for his Pardons, and Purgatories, as he could do for the Faith of the Holy Trinity. Nathan ſaid vnto Dauid, Our Lord hath put away thy ſin: Thou ſhalt not die: Againe S. Paul ſaith: Beare one of you anothers burthens: Hereby (ſaith M. Har.) it is plaine, that the Pope hath power to giue Pardons: and Chriſt gaue S. Peter ſpeciall authority to beſtow the ſame. But the Determination, and full diſcuſſion of theſe great matters, of Pardons, and Purgatory, he ſaith, is very hard, and maruellous intricate.

Whereas they, not without manifeſt blaſphemy, haue vniuerſally taught the people, thus to call vpon the bleſſed Virgin, the Mother of Chriſt, Thou art the Lady of Angels: Thou art the Queene of Heauen: Giue commandement vnto thy ſonne: Let him know, thou art the Mother: Wherein alſo another of them ſaith, Our Lady is Gods moſt faithfull fellow, Fideliſſima eius ſocia, thus making a creature equall in fellowſhip vnto God: All this (ſaith M. Harding) is nothing elſe, but a (prety kind of) Spirituall dalliance: and he is moſt impious, and impudent, that findeth fault with it.

And notwithſtanding euen now they teach the people to fall downe, and to worſhip the Image of Chriſt, not as they were wont before to ſay, giuing the whole honour vnto Chriſt, that is ſignified by the Image, but euen with the ſelfe ſame honour, that is due to Chriſt himſelfe, and that without any ſcruple, or doubt of Conſcience: notwithſtanding alſo ſome of his owne company ſay, The ſelfe ſame kind of Deuotion that is now done to Images, differeth but little from open wickedneſſe: Yet M. Harding ſaith, We know no kind of Idolatry euer vſed in the Church of Rome: Neither is there any Idolatry committed by vs, in Worſhipping of Saints, in Praying to them, or in the Reuerence, we exhibit vnto their Images. Notwithſtanding ſundry others the beſt learned, and wiſeſt of his ſide, haue plainely confeſſed diuers great errours, and deformities in their Church: Notwithstanding the Pope, his Cardinals, and his Bishops slugge, and slepe, and doe nothing: notwithstanding Gods euerlasting Light, as much as in them lieth, be hid vnder the bushell: notwithstanding the Watchmen be blind, the Dogs be dumbe, the Salt be vnsauoury: the people of God sit in darknesse, and in the shadow of death, and know neither their owne profession, nor the vse, and meaning of their Sacraments, nor what they beleeue, nor what they hope, nor what they worship, nor what they pray: (As for his offering vp of Formes, and Accidents in a Sacrifice vnto God, for so fondly he writeth, I trow, to relieue both the quicke, and the dead, with other errors of greater importance, wherewith he may more easily astonie the people, I will say nothing.) All this notwithstanding, M. Harding doubteth not to say, If Christ himselfe, or his Apostles were alliue againe, the Word, that is to say, the Doctrine of our beleefe, now preached, and receiued in the Catholike Church (of Rome) neither should be altered, nor could be better'd. Lib. 6. Cap. 13. Hæc pars Pietatis differt non multum ab Impietate. Conf. fo. 292. b Reioin. fo. 23. b Confu. 234. a

And therefore, he saith further: Such wicked changes in Religion, as yee haue made, it is vnlawfull to make, neither with a Councell, nor without a Councell. Againe: Our Doctrine hath beene too long approued, to be put in daying in these daies: And therefore againe, for a finall conclusion he saith thus: Set your hearts at rest: It shall not be so. Confu. 274. a. Confu. 271. Confu. 331.

These be the speciall Contents, and Implements of M. Hardings whole Booke of Confutation: which he wisheth vs to receiue, vnder his warrant, as the whole, and only Catholike faith of Christ: by force whereof he thinketh himselfe able to subdue, and bind the whole world. If the things, that he maintaineth be so found, what may we then thinke of other things, that he denieth?

Now, what substance of Learning, out of the Scriptures, Councels, and Doctours truely alleaged, he hath brought vs forth for better furniture of the same, I leaue it wholly to be weighed by others. Verily, vtterance, and eloquence, and sound of words, and boldnesse of speech he wanteth none. Howbeit, oftentimes in the fairest rose thou maist finde a canker.

But here good Christian Reader, our Bookes thus laid in the middest before thee, I beseech thee to consider, with what indifferent iudgement M. Harding would haue thee to passe betweene vs.

First he saith: What should we seeke for Truth? Let vs only behold the custome of the Church. Againe: What Arguments, what Allegations, what shew of disproofe soeuer he bring against these things, we ought to make small account thereof. Againe: I would blesse my selfe from him, as from the Minister of Satan, and as from the disciple of Antichrist, and as from Gods open, and professed enemy. Againe: M. Iewels Replie, and other like heretical bookes, are vnlawfull to be read, by order of the Church, without speciall licence: and are vtterly forbidden to be read, or kept vnder paine of Excommunication. And againe: As for the Replie, none other may well serue, but to throw all into the fire. *Reioind. in the Preface to the Reader. * iij. b. * iiij. a. * iiij. b.  ij. a.*

Of the other side, touching the word of God, with most terrible words he fraieth thee from it, and biddeth thee to consider of other things, and to behold, I know not what. Yee prostitute the Scriptures (he saith) as Bawds doe their Harlots, to the Vngodly, Vnlearned, Rascall people. Againe: Prentises, light Persons, and the rifraffe of the people. And againe: The vnlearned people were kept from the reading of the Scriptures by the speciall prouidence of God, that precious stones should not be throwne before Swine. In such regard these men haue, as well the Holy Scriptures, as also the People of God. The Scriptures they resemble to common Ballets, and the vilest creatures of the stewes. The people of God they call, Vngodly, Rascals, Rifraffe, and filthy Swine. Reioind. in the Preface to M. Iewel. A. i. Confu. 213. a. Reioind. in the Preface to the Reader. M. Hard. in his answer, Artic. 15. Diuis. 7.

Thus he suffereth thee not to read, either my poore Booke, whereof thou shouldest iudge: or the Holy word of God, whereby thou mightest be able to iudge: but only biddeth thee to follow him, and to say, as he saith: and all is safe. Thus, first he blindeth thine eies, and then willeth thee to looke about, and to condemne the thing, thou neuer knewest. So saith S. Hierome: Isti tantam sibi assumunt Authoritatem, vt siue dextra doceant, siue sinistra, id est, siue bona, siue mala, nolint Discipulos ratione discutere, sed se Præcessores sequi: These men take so much vpon themselues, that whether they teach with the right hand, or with the left, that is to say, whether they teach good things or bad, they will not haue their Hearers, or Learners, to enquire causes, wherefore they should doe this, or that: but only to follow them, being their Leaders. Hieron. in Esaiam. Lib. 9. Cap. 30.

But beware, I beseech thee, good Christian Reader. A simple eie is soone beguiled. It is very course Woll, that will take no colour. It is a desperate cause, that with words, and eloquence may not be smothed. Be not deceiued. Remember of what matters, and with what Aduersaries thou hast to deale. With feare, and reuerence be carefull of thine owne saluation. Lay downe all affection, and fauour of parties. Iudge iustly of that shall be alleaged. Vnlesse thou know, thou canst not iudge: Vnlesse thou heare both sides, thou canſt not know. If thou like ought, know, why thou likeſt it. A wiſe man in each thing will ſearch the cauſe. He that cannot iudge Gold by ſound, or in ſight, yet may trie it by the Poiſe. If thou canſt not weigh theſe matters for want of Learning, yet ſo ſenſible, and ſo groſſe they are, thou maieſt feele them with thy fingers. Thou maieſt ſone find a difference betweene gold and braſſe: betweene Iacob, and Eſau: betweene a face, and a viſard: betweene a full body, and an empty ſhadow.

Say not, thou art ſetled in thy Beliefe, before thou know it. Vaine faith, is no faith. S. Auguſtines counſell is good: Beleeue no more of Chriſt, than Chriſt hath willed thee to beleeue: Nemo de Chriſto credat, niſi, quod de ſe credi voluit Chriſtus. Likewiſe he ſaith: Fides ſtulta non prodeſt, ſed obeſt: Fond faith is hurtfull, and doth no good. S. Hilary ſaith: Non minus eſt, Deum fingere, quàm negare: To deuiſe fantaſies of God, it is as horrible, as to ſay, there is no God. The ancient Father Tertullian, ſpeaking of the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt, that diſdained to ſubmit their wils to the will of God, ſaith thus: Amant ignorare, cùm alij gaudeant cognouiſſe. Malunt neſcire, quod iam oderunt. Adeò quod neſciunt, præiudicant id eſſe, quod, ſi ſcirent, odiſſe non poſſent: They deſire to be ignorant, whereas other folkes deſire to know. They would not know the Truth, becauſe they hate it. (Whatſoeuer it be) they imagine it to be the ſame thing, that they hate. But if they knew it indeed, they could not hate it. Let reaſon lead thee: let authority moue thee: let truth enforce thee.

Eccle. 8. The Wiſeman ſaith, Who ſo feareth the Lord, will not be wilfull againſt his Word. God of his mercy confound all Errours: giue the Victorie to his Truth: and glory to his Holy name. Amen.

A CONFVTATION OF THE APOLOGY OF THE Church of ENGLAND.

The Title of the Apologie.

AN Apologie, or Answer, in defence of the Church of England, with a briefe and plaine Declaration of the true Religion professed, and vsed in the same.

The Confutation by M. Harding.

WHereas these Defenders take vpon them the name of the Church of England, setting foorth thereby a face of Authority, they doe much like the Asse that Esope telleth of, which, to make the beasts afrayd, had put on him a Lions skin, and therewith ietted abroad terrible. For as the Lions skinne was but lapped about him, and grew not to his bodie; so they being indeed no liuely members nor part of the Church, couer themselues vnder the title and name of the Church, the rather to beguile the simple. And verily herein they follow the wont of all Heretikes. For neuer was there any sect of Heretikes hitherto, which hath not claimed to be accounted and called the Church. For which cause, of certaine ancient Fathers, they haue beene likened to Apes; whose property is, though they be Apes, yet to counterfeit men, and to couet to seeme men. Nouatianus, as saith S. Cyprian, after the manner of Apes, would challenge to himselfe the authority of the Catholike Church: and whereas himselfe was not in the Church, but contrariwise, a Rebell against the Church, tooke vpon him to affirme, That all other were Heretikes: and presumed to vphold, The Church was on his side. Ireneus and Tertullian, who were before him, write, That Heretikes made so much adoe to perswade, That the Church was among themselues onely: That they feared not to call the Right-beleeuing and Catholike Church, Hereticall and Schismaticall. S. Hilary declaring how patiently hee demeaned himselfe towards the Arians his enemies, by whom he was banished, writeth, That in fiue yeeres space, whiles he liued in banishment, he neuer spake nor wrote euill word against them, which falsly said, themselues to be the Church of Christ, and were the Synagogue of Antichrist. The Donatists, against whom Saint Augustine wrote much, said, That the Christianity was quite lost and gone out of so many Nations that bee in the world, and remained onely in Afrike, and that the Church was only there. In S. Bernards time also, the Heretikes who would be called Apostolikes, as they of our time call themselues Gospellers, said, That they were the Church.

In Epist. ad Iubaianum de hæreticis baptizandis. De præscript. hær. Contra Constantium. Aug. contr. Epist. Parmen. lib. 2. cap. 1. Bernar. in Can. Serm. 66. Apostolici.

But what meane all Hereriks (may we iudge) by coueting so much to be seene that which they are not? Forsooth they meane none other thing then their father the Diuell meaneth, when he goeth about to beguile man: for then what doth he? Vseth he not this policy? To change his vgly hew, and put himselfe in goodly shape of an Angel of light. For hee is not vnwitting, that if hee shewed himselfe in his owne forme, ſuch as he is, that euery one would fly from him, and none lightly would be deceiued by him. Heretikes do the like: Although they hate the Church neuer ſo deadly, yet to haue the more opportunity to hurt it, pretend themſelues to be of the Church. For they be not ignorant, how great the authority of the Church is. Of whoſe Gouernors Chriſt ſaid, He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. And againe, Tel the Church. They conſider in what credit the Church is with al chriſtian people: how they ſtay themſelues by it, as being the pillar & ground of the Truth: how they loue her, euen as their common Mother: how they honour it, as the Body and fulnes of Chriſt, as the Spouſe of Chriſt, through Faith, according to that is written, I wil deſpouſe thee to me in Faith: as the true Sion, which our Lord hath choſen to be his habitation & his reſting place for euer: as the ſafe Arke to keepe vs from drowning in the dangerous ſeas of this world, out of which no let ſethen once out of the Arke of Noe, is no ſaluation. Againe, they know the Church muſt needs bee greatly eſteemed among all the godly, for the ſingular promiſes Chriſt hath made to it: That he would be with it all daies to the end of the world: That he would pray to his Father for the holy Ghoſt to be giuen to it: The ſpirit of truth to remaine with it for euer. But as Heretikes impugne the Law by the words of the Law, as S. Ambroſe ſaith; ſo to ouerthrow the Church, they preſume to take vnto them the name of the Church. But what doe Heretikes when they are vrged and wrung, when by force of arguments they are ſtraited, and as it were driuen to the wall? when it is plainly proued to their face, which is ſoone done, that they be not in nor of the Church, ſpecially being of Hereſie openly denounced, and by the iuſt Excommunication cut off from the Church? In this caſe the practiſe of the Goſpellers is, vtterly to ſet the Church at nought, and with a hot raging ſpirit to defie it, and to ſay, That themſelues be the Catholike Church, and that the Catholikes be the Papiſticall Church, the Church of Antichriſt, the whore of Babylon, a den of Theeues, and I cannot tell what.

The Anſwer of the Biſhop of Sarisbury.

I Anſwer M. Harding to euery parcell of his Booke, being ſo long, it would bee too tedious. Wherefore leauing many his impertinent ſpeeches, and other vnneceſſarie and waſte words, which ſundry his friends thinke hee might better haue ſpared, I will touch onely ſo much thereof, as ſhall beare ſome ſhew of ſubſtance, and may any way ſeeme worthy to be anſwered.

1. Tim. 3. 15. Epheſ. 1. 23.

First, touching the Church of God, we beleeue and confeſſe all that M. Harding hath heere ſaid, or otherwiſe can be ſaid. It is the Pillar of the Truth, the Body, the Fulneſſe, and Spouſe of Chriſt. All theſe words are vndoubtedly true and certaine. And therefore M. Harding, you are the more blame-worthy, that of the Houſe of God, being ſo glorious, haue made a caue of Theeues: and haue turned the beautie of Sion into the confuſion of Babylon.

True it is, that Heretikes haue euermore apparelled themſelues with the name of the Church: as Antichriſt alſo ſhall procure himſelfe credit vnder the name of Chriſt. Thus did your Fathers, M. Harding, long agoe. They ſaid then, euen as you ſay now, Wee are the Children of Abraham: wee are the Inheritours of Gods promiſes: we haue the Temple of God, the Temple of God. The Law ſhall neuer paſſe from the Prieſt, nor Counſell from the Wiſe, nor the Word from the Prophet. Thus continuing wilfully in the open breach of Gods commandement, neuertheleſſe they cheriſhed themſelues then, as you do now, only with the bare title of the Church: in whoſe name whatſoeuer credit ye can any wiſe winne, your meaning is, ſkilfully to conuey the ſame ouer wholly to the Church of Rome: as if that Church onely were the Church of God, and without that, there were no hope of ſaluation. And therefore you defend, and hold for truth, That your Church hath authoritie aboue Gods Word. And Pope Nicholas ſaith, Whoſo denieth the Priuilege and Supremacy of the See of Rome, hath renounced the Faith, and is an Heretike. And thus, as Leo ſaith, Eccleſiæ nomine armamini, & contra Eccleſiam dimicatis: Yee arme your ſelues with the name of the Church, and yet you fight againſt the Church. Likewiſe ſaith S. Cyprian: Diabolus excogitauit nouam fraudem, vt ſub ipſo nominis Chriſtiani titulo fallat incautos: The Diuell hath deuiſed a new kinde of policie, vnder the verie title of the name of Chriſt to deceiue the ſimple.

Cypr. De Simplicitate Prælat.

Now concerning that hot raging ſpirit, wherewith M. Harding ſaith, the Goſpellers defie the Church, and ſet it at nought, verilie, I thinke it a hard matter for any Goſpeller, bee hee neuer ſo hot, in ſuch kinde of eloquence to match M. Harding. Neither yet may hee well condemne all ſuch, as in the like caſes haue beene hot and earneſt. Eſay the Prophet ſaith, O yee Princes of Sodome, and yee people of Gomorrha. Iohn the Baptiſt ſaith to the Scribes and Phariſes, O yee Serpents, yee generation of Vipers and Adders. Chriſt ſaith vnto them, Woe be vnto you, ye Scribes and Phariſes, ye Hypocrites: Ye are of your father the Diuell. In theſe examples we ſee, the Spirit of God can ſometimes be hot and earneſt againſt the Deceiuers of the people, and the profeſſed enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt.

Eſai. 1. 10. Matth. 3. 7. Matth 23. 13. Iohan. 8. 44.

Neither

Neither did either Esay the Prophet, or John the Baptist, or Christ, defie the Church of God, and set it at naught, as M. Harding imagineth of vs: but rather by these feruent speeches vttered the vehement zeale, and iust griefe, they had conceiued against them, that vnder the name of the Church abused Gods people, and defaced the Church.

For they are not all Heretikes, M. Harding, that this day espie your grosse and palpable errours, and mourne to God for reformation. S. Augustine saith, Non debet Ouis pellem suam deponere, quòd Lupi aliquando se ea contegant: It is no reason, the Sheepe should therefore leaue off his fleece, for that he seeth the Woolfe sometime in the same apparell. Likewise, it is no reason, that we should therefore giue ouer the right, and inheritance, we haue in the Church of God, for that you by intrusion, and vniust meanes haue intituled your selues vnto the same. It behoueth vs rather to search the Scriptures, as Christ hath aduised vs, and thereby to assure our selues of the Church of God. For by this triall onely, and by none other, it may bee knowne. Therefore S. Paul calleth the Church, the Spouse of Christ, for that she ought in all things to giue eare to the voice of the Bridegroome. Likewise he calleth the Church the Pillar of the Truth, for that shee staieth her selfe onely by the Word of God: without which Word the Church, were it neuer so beautifull, should be no Church. The ancient Father Irenæus saith, Columna & firmamentum Ecclesiæ est Euangelium, & spiritus vitæ: The pillar and buttresse of the Church is the Gospell, and the Spirit of life. S. Augustine saith, Sunt certi Libri Dominici, quorum authoritati vtrinque consentimus. Ibi quæramus Ecclesiam: ibi discutiamus causam nostram: There be certaine Bookes of our Lord, vnto the authority whereof each part agreeth. There let vs seeke for the Church: thereby let vs examine and trie our matters. And againe, Nolo humanis documentis, sed Diuinis oraculis sanctam Ecclesiam demonstrari: I will, ye shew me the holy Church, not by decrees of men, but by the word of God. Likewise saith Chrysostome, Nullo modo cognoscitur, quæ sit vera Ecclesia Christi, nisi tantummodò per Scripturas: It can no way be knowne, what is the Church, but onely by the Scriptures. And againe, Christus mandat, vt volentes firmitatem accipere Veræ Fidei, ad nullam rem fugiant, nisi ad Scripturas. Alioqui si ad alia respexerunt, scandalizabuntur, & peribunt, non intelligentes, quæ sit vera Ecclesia. Et per hoc incident in abominationem Desolationis, quæ stat in Locis sanctis Ecclesiæ: Christ commandeth, that whoso will haue the assurance of True Faith, seeke to not hing else, but vnto the Scriptures. Otherwise, if they looke to any thing els, they shall be offended, and shall perish, not vnderstanding, which is the true Church. And by meane hereof they shall fall into the Abomination of Desolation, which standeth in the Holy Places of the Church.

Iohan. 5. 39. Ephes. 1. 23. 1. Tim. 3. 15. Iren. lib. 3. cap. 11. August. De vnit. Eccle. c. 3. August. in eodem cap. Chrysost. in Opere imperfecto, hom. 49. Chrysost. in eadem hom. Daniel 9. 27. Matth. 24. 15.

By these ancient learned Fathers it is plaine, that the Church of God is knowne by Gods word onely, and none otherwise. And therefore M. Harding, you so carefully flée the same, and condemne it for Heresie, and often burne it, lest thereby the deformities of your Church should be known. For the ill doer flieth the light. Iohan. 3. 20.

Now, whereas it so well liketh M. Harding to call vs all Heretikes, and for his pleasures sake to liken vs to Apes, to Asses, and to the Diuel, notwithstanding we might safelie returne the same whole from whence it came, yet I thinke it not semely, nor greatly to purpose, to answere all such intemperate humors. Salomons aduice is good, Answer not folly with like folly. Notwithstanding, the poore simple Asse, vnto whom we are compared, was able sometime to see the Angell of God, and to open his mouth, and to speake, and to reproue the leaud attempt of Balaam the false Prophet. Whatsoeuer account it pleaseth M. Harding to make of vs, by the grace of God wee are that we are. If wee be able to beare Christ with his Crosse, it is sufficient. Prouer. 26. 4. Numer. 22.

But who they be, that haue of long time ietted so terribly vnder the Lions skin, and onlie with a painted Visard, or emptie name of the Church, haue feared all the cattel of the field, it is needlesse to speake it: the world now seeth it: it can no longer be dissembled. Euen he, that lately bare himselfe as the Lion of the tribe of Juda, and called himselfe [a] King of Kings, and [b] said he had power ouer the Angels of God, and amazed the hearts of the simple with the terrour of his Lions pelt, only for that he sate in Peters Chaire, is now reuealed and better knowne, and esteemed as he is worthy: he may now iet vp and downe with more ease and lesse terrour. And why so? These poore Asses, whom M. Harding so much disdaineth, haue stript off his counterfeit skin, that made him so hardy, and haue caused him to appeare euen as he is.

IT hath been an old complaint, euen frō the first time of the Patriarks and Prophets, and confirmed by the writings & testimonies of euery age, that the Truth wandreth here & there as a stranger in the world, and doth readily find enemies & slanderers amongst those that know her not. Albeit perchance this may seem vnto some a thing hard to be beleeued, I meane to such as haue scant wel and narrowly taken heed thereunto, specially seeing all mankinde of Natures very motion without a Teacher doth couet the Truth of their own accord: and seeing our Sauior Christ himselfe, when he was on earth, would be called the Truth, as by a name most fit to expresse all his diuine power: Yet we, which haue beene exercised in the holy Scriptures, and which haue both read and seene, what hath hapned to all godly men, commonly at all times; what to the Prophets, to the Apostles, to the holy Martyrs, and what to Christ himselfe: with what rebukes, reuilings, & despights they were continually vexed, whiles they here liued, and that only for the Truths sake: We (I say) do see, that this is not only no new thing, or hard to be beleeued, but that it is a thing already receiued, & commonly vsed from age to age. May truly, this might seeme much rather a maruel, & beyond al beliefe, if the Diuel, who is the father of lies, and enemy to all Truth, would now vpon a sudden change his nature, & hope, that Truth might otherwise be suppressed, then by beleeuing it: Or that he would begin to establish his own kingdome by vsing now any other practises, then the same which he hath euer vsed from the beginning. For since any mans remembrance, we can scant find one time, either when Religion did first grow, or whē it was setled, or when it did afresh spring vp againe, wherin Truth & Innocēcy were not by al vnworthy means & most despightfully intreated. Doubtlesse the Diuel wel seeth, that so long as Truth is in good safety, himselfe cannot be safe, nor yet maintaine his own estate.

Iohan.8.44.

For letting passe the ancient Patriarks & Prophets, who, as we haue said, had no part of their life free from contumelies and slanders: We know there were certain, in times past, which said and commonly preached, That the old ancient Iewes (of whom we make no doubt but they were the worshippers of the only & true God) did worship either a Sow, or an Asse, in Gods stead, & that al the same Religion was nothing els, but sacriledge, & a plaine contempt of all godlines. We know also, That the Son of God, our Sauior Iesus Christ, when he taught the Truth, was counted a Sorcerer & an Inchanter, a Samaritane, Belzebub, a Deceiuer of the people, a Drunkard, & a Glutton. Againe, who woteth not, what words were spoken against S. Paul, the most earnest and vehement Preacher, and Maintainer of the Truth: Sometime, That he was a seditious and busie man, a raiser of tumults, a causer of rebellion: somtime again, That he was an Heretike: somtime, That he was mad: somtime, That only vpon strife & stomacke he was both a Blasphemer of Gods law, and a Despiser of the Fathers ordinances. Further, who knoweth not, how S. Stephan, after he had thorowly & sincerely embraced the Truth, and began frankly & stoutly to preach & set forth the same, as he ought to do, was immediatly called to answer for his life, as one that had wickedly vttered disdainfull and hainous words against the Law, against Moses, against the Temple, & against God? Or who is ignorant, That in times past there were some, which reproued the holy Scriptures of falshood, saying, They contained things both contrary, and quite one against another: and how that the Apostles of Christ did seuerally disagree between themselues, and that S. Paul did vary from them al? And not to make rehearsal of al, for that were an endlesse labor; who knoweth not, after what sort our fathers were railed vpon in times past, which first began to acknowledge and professe the Name of Chriſt: how they made priuate conſpiracies, deuiſed ſecret Counſels againſt the Common wealth, and to that end made earely & priuie meetings in the darke, killed young babes, fed themſelues with mens fleſh, and, like ſauage and brut beaſts, did drinke their bloud: In concluſion, how that after they had put out the candles, they cõmitted adultery betweene themſelues, & without regard wrought inceſt one with another: that Brethren lay with their Suters, Sons with their Mothers, without any reuerence of nature or kin, without ſhame, without difference: and that they were wicked men, without all care of Religion, and without any opinion of God, being the very enemies of mankinde, vnworthy to be ſuffered in the world, and vnworthy of life. Euſeb. l. 5. c. 1. Tertull. in Apologetico.

All theſe things were ſpoken in thoſe daies againſt the people of God, againſt Chriſt Jeſus, againſt Paul, againſt Stephan, and againſt all them whoſoeuer they were, which at the firſt beginning embraced the Truth of the Goſpell, and were contented to be called by the name of Chriſtians: which was then a hateful name among the common people. And although the things which they ſaid, were not true, yet the diuel thought it ſhould be ſufficient for him, if at the leaſt he could bring it ſo to paſſe, as they might be beleeued for true: and that the Chriſtians might be brought into a common hatred of euery body, and haue their death and deſtruction ſought of al ſorts. Hereupon Kings and Princes being led then by ſuch perſwaſions, killed al the Prophets of God, letting none eſcape: Eſay with a ſaw, Jeremie with ſtones, Daniel with Lions, Amos with an iron bar, Paul with the ſword, and Chriſt vpon the Croſſe: and condemned al Chriſtians to impriſonmẽts, to toziments, to the pikes, to be throwne down headlong from rocks and ſteepe places, to be caſt to wild beaſts, and to bee burnt: and made great fires of their quicke bodies, for the onely purpoſe to giue light by night, and for a very ſcorne and mocking ſtocke: and did count them no better, then the vileſt filth, the off-ſcourings & laughing games of the whole world. Thus (as ye ſee) haue the Authours and Profeſſours of the truth euer beene intreated. Tertull. in Apologetico. Suetonius Tranquil. in Nerone.

M. Harding.

Who would not thinke, that theſe Defenders were true men, that in the beginning of their Apology ſpeake ſo much of the Truth? Yet who knoweth not, that often times euil meaning is hid vnder good words? Who hath not heard, that filthy queanes in time and place vſe the honeſt talke of chaſte matrons? The theefe commendeth iuſt dealings, and many times beweth a ſtomacke againſt falſe harlots, no, mah more. Among al, none pretend truth in words ſo much as Heretikes. I feare me, ſaith S. Paul, leſt, as the Serpent beguiled Eue by his ſubtilty, ſo your wits be corrupted, and fallen away from that plaineneſſe, which is in Chriſt. The Apoſtle feared becauſe of the crafty Iewes: who, the rather to deceiue, mingled Scriptures with their owne traditions, and truth with falſhood. So bringeth the Heretike his hearer to errour in faith by colour and pretence of truth. 2. Cor. 11.

They are much like to the Manicheis, who promiſed their hearers to diſcuſſe, and ſet foorth the truth moſt euidently vnto them, and to deliuer them from al manner of errors. By which faire promiſes S. Auguſtine was allured to be a diligent Scholar of theirs for the ſpace of nine yeeres. De Vtilita. credendi ad Honoratum lib. 1. cap. 1. Confeſſ. lib. 5. cap. 6.

Chriſt gaue vs a leſſon how to diſcerne them. By their fruits ye ſhall know them, ſaith he. And now to you Sirs. Euen in the beginning, and, as I may ſay, in the forehead of your Apology, whiles I examine it diligently, I finde two foule faults: the one in your Rhetorike, the other in your Logike. By which two faults both the vnskill of your Secretary, and the weakneſſe of your matter may be eſpied, as the Aſſe, I ſpake of right now, was by his two eares ſtaring out vnder the Lions skin. Your Diuinity is nothing elſe in groſſe, but a lumpe of lies, errors, and hereſies. Matth. 7

Firſt, touching your Rhetorike, amongſt many faulty Proems, one of the worſt is that, which is ſuch, as the aduerſary may vſe: which by them is called Exordium commune, that is to wit, ſuch a beginning, as will ſerue the Defendant, no leſſe then the Plaintiffe, or contrariwiſe. Of that ſort is the beginning of your Apology. For declaring at large, that truth hath euer beene perſecuted, what ſaith it therein (the faults amended) that we may not ſay the ſame? That Ship-maſter is accounted very bad, who at the ſetting out of the hauen driueth the Ship on the rocks.

Alleging Tertullian to help your cauſe, ye iniury the Doctor by altering his words. Ye were not wiſe, by falſifying the firſt ſentence, ſo much to impaire your credit. Tertullian ſaith not, that truth readily findeth enemies and ſlanders amongſt thoſe that know her not: but that truth ſoone findeth enemies inter extraneos, amongſt aliens and ſtrangers. Now the Chriſtian Catholikes, whom ye cal Papiſts, be not in reſpect of the truth, aliens and ſtrangers. For your ſelues in ſundry places of your Booke, reproue them for reſiſting the truth which they know.

You haue giuen Tertullian a new liuery with your own badge, and haue made exchange of Extraneos with Ignotos. Tertullian meant by aliens no other then Infidels, and Paynims, among whom Chriſtian people then liued, and were daily perſecuted. But after the Goſpell had beene ſounded abroad by the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſours through all the earth, after that the Emperours themſelues, and all the people euery where had receiued the faith, then was the truth no more a wanderer, ſtranger, or pilgrime in the earth.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Touching this compariſon of whores and theeues, and other like M. Hardings vngentle ſpeeches, as I haue before protelled, I will ſay nothing. He is very dumbe, and can ſpeake but little, that cannot ſpeake ill.

It is true, M. Harding, that you ſay: Moſt liers oftentimes pretend moſt truth: as, if there were none other example, may ſone appeare by the whole tenour and ſubſtance of your bookes. The Diuell himſelfe, the better to ſound his liss, beareth himſelfe oftentimes as the Angell of truth.

2.Cor.11.3. But the example that ye bring of the Iewes, who, as you ſay, the rather to deceiue, mingled Scripture with their own traditions, & truth with falſhood, maketh moſt plainly againſt your ſelf. For you know that this is the generall complaint of all the godly this day throughout the whole Church of God, That you haue mingled your lead with the Lords gold, and haue filled the Lords haruell full of your darnell: That you haue broken Gods manifeſt commandements, to vphold and maintaine your owne traditions: That you haue dammed vp the ſprings of the water of life, & haue broken vp puddles of your owne, ſuch as be able to hold no water: That for your dreames ſake you haue cauſed the people to forget the name of God, and haue led them from that ſimplicity that is in Chriſt Ieſus. This is the mingling of traditions with the Scriptures of God. I marueil yet could ſo freely vtter ſo much, and ſo directly againſt your ſelfe.

Ierem.13. 2.Cor.11.

As for the example of the Manicheis, it was vtterly impertinent and from the purpoſe. Yet (good reader) that thou maieſt vnderſtand what maner of heretikes theſe Manicheis were, and what errors they defended: Firſt they forbade lawfull mariage, and allowed fornication, as M. Hardings Catholikes doe now. So ſaith S. Auguſtine of them, Nuptiarum aditus intercludunt, & promiſcuè conuenire hortantur.

See what is anſwered in the fourth part hereof, chap.1. Di.1. In quæſt. in Nouum Teſtament. q.72.

Addition. ☞ Hereunto M. Harding ſaith, You ſlander vs M. Iewel moſt vniuſtly and impudently. The Catholikes neuer forbade lawfull marriage. And it is knowne to all the world that Fornication was neuer allowed in the Catholike Church at any time or age. And the Manicheis by your pretenſed proofe out of S. Auguſtine excluded all men from mariage generally. The Anſwer. 1. To the firſt part hereof I grant: lawfull mariage was neuer forbidden in the Catholike Church, that is to ſay, in the whole vniuerſall Church throughout the world. For it is knowne that the Prieſts in India, Æthiopia, Africa, Aſia, Grecia, &c. haue continued ſtill in lawfull marriage, from the beginning vnto this day, without any reſtraint or force to the contrary. But in the Church of Rome the marriage of Prieſts hath beene and is forbidden. And the ſame in all other Churches is iudged lawfull, as it was alſo in the Patriarkes, Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, and other holy Fathers, and generally in the whole Primitiue Church of Chriſt. Neither is it marriage, but the vnlawful reſtraint of marriage, that S. Paul calleth the Doctrine of Diuels.

1.Tim.4.13.

2. Secondly, notwithſtanding M. Harding ſay, Fornication was neuer allowed in the Catholike Church, yet verily in the Church of Rome it hath beene allowed, as by good record and generall practiſe it may appeare. M. Harding himſelfe calleth the open Stewes in Rome, A neceſſarie ill for auoiding of other diſorders that would be greater: and ſo far forth he maketh them allowable by way of neceſſity. And further to this purpoſe in defenſe hereof vnaduiſedly he alleadgeth theſe words of S. Auguſtine: Take harlots away from among men, and yee fill all the Countrey with ribaldrie and villanie. Vnaduiſedly, I ſay, he alleageth theſe words. For when Auguſtine wrote the ſame, he was neither Saint, nor Biſhop, nor Prieſt, nor Chriſtian man. In the concluſion he ſaith vnto vs, In good ſooth maſters ye are too young to controll the City of Rome in her doings. Heere M. Harding I pray you tell vs wherefore may wee not controll the City of Rome in her open filthineſſe, vnleſſe in ſome ſpeciall reſpects you thinke it lawfull? In few words, touching the allowance and ſmoothing of Fornication, the practiſe of the Church of Rome is this, Etſi notoria ſit fornicatio Presbyterorum, tamen non propter eam abſtinendum eſt ab officijs illorum: Yea although the fornication of the Prieſt be notorious, yet may no man therefore refraine from his ſeruice. That thing is notorious, ſaith the Law, that needeth neither accuſer nor Iudge, but is cleere and manifeſt of it ſelfe. And notwithſtanding ſome of the Canoniſts haue written otherwiſe of Fornication, yet by theſe words it is paſſed as a matter allowable.

3 Thirdly,

3. Thirdly, whereas M. Harding saith, The Manicheis excluded not onely their Priests and Clergy, but also generally all manner of men from the vse of marriage, as thinking it in al men to be vnlawfull: S. Augustines manifest words to the contrarie, are able both to reare the poore Manicheis in this behalfe, and also to reprone his open errour. These be his words: Hic non dubito vos esse charmaturos, inuidiamque facturos, perfectam castitatem vos vehementer commendare, non tamen nuptias prohibere, quandoquidem auditores vestri, quorum apud vos secundus est gradus, ducere atque habere non prohibentur vxores: Heere I doubt not but you Manicheis will make entries vpon vs, and procure vs displeasure. For you will say, ye greatly commend perfect chastitie, and yet for all that forbid not marriage: For your hearers, which are an inferiour, or second degree amongst you, are not forbidden to marrie and haue wiues. Likewise he writeth in an Epistle vnto Deuterius: Auditores qui appellantur apud eos, & carnibus vescuntur, & agros colunt, &, si voluerint, vxores habent: quorum nihil faciunt illi qui vocantur Electi: They that among them be called the Hearers, doe both eat flesh, and till their grounds, and, if they list, marrie wiues: of all which things they that be called Electi, doe nothing. M. Harding fol. 81. b. Aug. de mori. bus Manich. Lib. 2. Cap. 18. Aug. Epist. 74.

Now (good Reader) examine thou a little these witnesses, and compare them together. M. Harding saith, The Manicheis forbade al men from marriage generally without exception S. Augustine saith, The Manicheis forbade not their hearers, which were of their Laitie, to be married, nor thought it vnlawfull for them to haue wiues. They thought marriage vnlawfull only in their Priests and Ministers, which among them were called Electi. And euen so, as I said, doe this day M. Hardings Catholikes. Wherefore hauing himselfe misreported both S. Augustine and the Manicheis, and also vttering so many vntruths in one place, there was no cause why he should vse this pitifull outcry in the end: Behold Reader, how immoderatly M. Iewell slandereth vs. For, as it may heereby appeare, it is the truth: It is no slander. M. Harding fol. 81. b. Leo Serm. 4. de Quadragesima Aug. Epist. 19. Aug. con. Faustum, lib. 32. cap. 19.

Secondly, they receiued and ministred the holy Mysteries vnder one kind, contrary to the generall order of the Catholike Church. And so doth M. Harding now. M. Harding fol. 220. b.

Thirdly, they yelded more credit to their owne deuices then to Gods holy word. And whereas the Scriptures were plaine against them, they said euen as M. Harding saith, The Scriptures were falsified, and full of errors.

Addition. Addition. Albeit indeed he dareth not so boldly by expresse words to challenge the Scriptures, he thinketh it better skill rather to lay the fault in vulgar Translations. And yet the worst Translation that this day is commonly vsed, either in the English, or in the French, or in the Dutch tongue, as he himselfe wel knoweth, is farre better and truer then the old common Translation in the Latine.

Fourthly, they abstained from flesh, and yet in their fast they had and vsed all maner delicate and strange fruits, with sundry sort of spices in great abundance. They abstained from wine, and yet vsed other liquors more dainty and precious then any wine, and therof dranke while their bellies would hold. S. Augustines words thereof be these: Distenti & crepantes. I leaue the rest. Now iudge thou (gentle Reader) whether partie seemeth to resemble the Manicheis. Aug de Morib. Manich. Lib. 2. cap. 15. Peregrinas & exquisitas fruges multis fercula varietas.

But whereas he thus vpbraideth vs, By their fruits ye shall know them. Verily whiles the Bishop of Rome, euen in the Citie of Rome, maintaineth his houses of Ribaldry and open Stewes, and M. Harding is ready and able by his eloquence and Diuinity to defend the same, they haue no iust cause greatly to boast themselues of their fruits. Howbeit it may be thought Christ gaue vs this lesson not thereby to try the true Doctrine from the false, but a true professor from an hypocrite. Otherwise our liues must be tried by the Gospel, not the Gospel by our liues. Aug. de Morib. Manich. Lib. 2. Cap. 13.

Now let vs examine that horrible Heresie that M. Harding hath espied in the rules of Rhetorike, by which, saith he, the Secretaries vnskill is betraied, euen in the forehead of our booke. This entrie, saith M. Harding, touching the complaint of truth, is so indifferent and common to both the parties, that either may vse it as well as other. Which kind of beginning, saith he, is called Exordium commune, and by the learned in Rhetorike is misliked as faultie. First of all, M. Harding, this seemeth to me a strange kind of beginning, in so deepe a disputation of Diuinity, to make your first quarell vnto Rhetorike. Belike for lacke of better entry, ye thought it good to rush in as you might. Indeede either of vs may seeme to stand in defence of Truth. I denie it not. For as we haue the substance and truth it selfe, so are you content to claime the name. And so farre sooth truth is common to vs both. So the wicked Heathens, Celsus and Antiphon, notwithstanding they published their bookes against the truth, yet they entituled the same ἀληθολόγοι, the Bookes of Truth. S. Hierome saith, Mendacium semper imitatur veritatem: Falshood euermore beareth a shew of truth. In this sort truth is common to either partie Origen contra Celsum. Lib. 3. & Lib. 4. In Hier. ca. 23. Origen in Ma. Tract. 27.

tie. Origen saith, Veritas Christus: simulata veritas Antichristus: Christ is the truth: he selfe: Antichrist is the truth counterfeit. All this notwithstanding, Christ refused not to vse the same kind of entry that M. Harding so much misliketh: but said vnto the Pharises, Ye seeke to murder me, a man that haue told you the truth. And S. Paul to the Romans saith, They haue turned the truth of God into falshood. The like might I say of Tertullian, Cyprian, and other fathers. Yet, I trow, M. Harding will not therefore reproue either Christ, or Paul, or Tertullian, or Cyprian: nor say they vsed such a beginning, as their aduersaries might haue vsed as well as they, and had forgotten their rules of Rhetorike.

John 8.40. Rom. 1.25.

Loth I am so long to stand in so light a matter. But I maruell much, that M. Harding being so great an artificer in so small cases, had no better eie to his owne entry. For if in writing the defense of truth, it be a fault in Rhetorike to begin with the ill intreating and complaint of truth, what then may we thinke it to be in the defense of manifest and knowne errour, to begin, as M. Harding doth, with Whores, with Theues, with Apes, with Asses, with children of the Deuell, and with many other like vnseemly scoffes and scornes? What Rhetorike, what Eloquence, what Art, what Skill is this? What Orator euer vsed it? What Rhetorician, what Sophist, Greke, or Latine euer taught it? Verily this was sometime accounted an old rule in Rhetorike, which it seemeth M. Harding had quite forgotten: Scurrilis oratori dicacitas magnopere fugienda est. This Secretaries beginning, by M. Hardings owne confession, is such as either party indifferently might well haue vsed. But M. Hardings beginning is such, as neither party, with any modesty, might haue vsed.

Cic. De. Orat. Lib. 2.

M. Harding also might haue remembred that the skilfull in Rhetorike, as they mislike Exordium Commune, so they also mislike Commune Argumentum, that is, a reason or proofe so common, that it may indifferently serue both parties. Which kind of proofes if M. Harding would haue weded out of his bookes, hee should haue left very little to trouble the Printer.

Cic. Lib. 1. De Inuentione. Argumentum commune vitiosum est.

Where he saith in grosse, that our Apologie is nothing else but a lumpe of lies: The truth thereof, I trust, shall appeare by this Treaty. In the meane season, good Christian Reader, it may please thee to consider, that M. Hardings mouth is no iust measure in this behalfe. For some men thinke it will often times vtter vntruth without measure. But he saith we haue falsified Tertullians meaning, placing this word Ignotos in stead of Extraneos, and so at our pleasure making exchange of words, and giuing the old Father a new Liuery, and thereby impairing our whole credit. A great out-crie in so small a matter. This great exchange of words is nothing so hainous as it is pretended. For both Ignotus is Extraneus, and Extraneus also in Tertullians meaning is Ignotus. And M. Harding well knoweth that Tertullian speaketh namely, and onely of such aliens and strangers, as knew not the truth of God. Whether of these two words it shall like him to leaue vs, the sense is all one, it forceth nothing. If he will needes refuse this word Ignotus, so that he receiue the other word Extraneus, and grant that he and his fellowes be strangers to Gods truth, it shall be sufficient.

Howbeit he addeth further, that they of his side are now no strangers, but know God, & his deare friends and kinsfolke. Euen so said the Pharises of themselues, Nunquid & nos cæci sumus? What be we blind too? But Christ answered them, If ye were blinde, then had ye no sinne. Now ye say that ye see: Therefore your sinne remaineth still. And againe, I am come to iudgement into the world, that they that see may be made blind. And againe, The children of the kingdome shall be throwne forth into vtter darkenesse.

John 9.40. John 9.39. Matth. 8.12.

Yet further M. Harding saith, After that the Gospel had beene sounded abroad by the Apostles and their successours, then was the truth no more a stranger or a Pilgrime in earth. Whereby he would closely conclude, that his Church of Rome can neuer erre. But this is to vaine a Paradise. For Daniel speaking of the latter daies, saith, Veritas prosternetur in terra: The truth shall be ouerthrowne in earth. Chrysostome saith, Abominatio desolationis stabit in sanctis locis Ecclesiæ: The abomination of desolation shall stand in the holy places of the Church. S. Augustine saith, Vsque ad huius seculi finem, inter persecutiones mundi, & consolationes Dei peregrinando procurrit Ecclesia: Vntill the worlds ende, the Church goeth forward, as it were in a pilgrimage betweene the persecutions of the world, and the comforts of God. And againe, Tota ciuitas Dei peregrinatur in terris: The whole City of God (which is the Church) is a stranger and a pilgrime in the earth. Verily as long as Satan the Prince of darkenesse is Prince of this world, so long the truth of God passeth in this world as a stranger: and being among strangers, as Tertullian saith, easily findeth enemies, and is ill intreated. He saith further, Cæterùm vnum hoc gestit, ne ignorata damnetur: This onely thing truth desireth, that no man condemne her before hee know her.

The Apology, Chap. 2. Diuision 1.

VVHerfoze we ought to beare it the moze quietly, which haue taken vpon vs to pzofesse the Gospell of Christ, if we foz the same cause be handled after the same sozt: and if we, as our forefathers were long agoe, be likewise at this day tozmented, and baited with railings, with spightfull dealings, and with lies: and that foz no desert of our owne, but onely because we teach and acknowledge the Truth.

M. Harding.

O blessed followers of the Patriarks, Prophets Apostles, Martyrs, and Christ himselfe, that suffer so much persecutiō in your innocency, hauing deserued nothing at al, & only because ye acknowledge, and teach the Truth! But Sirs, by your leaue, how followeth this (Wherefore) of your former cōmon place so largely treated? This is your foule fault, which you make in your Logike. How proue you this argument? The Truth is persecuted, and the Professors of the Truth haue euer been euil treated: wherefore we ought to beare it quietly, being likewise handled for the same cause, &c. If you make this argument, which ye seeme priuily to make, leauing out the Minor, The Professors of the truth be persecuted for the Truths sake: we be professors of the Truth; therefore we suffer persecution for the Truthes sake. If you say thus, we embarre you from your Conclusion, by denying your Minor, which ye can neuer proue.

And if ye reason thus, which way also ye seem to vse: The Professors of the Truth suffer persecution: We suffer persecution: Ergo, we are Professors of the truth. We grant your Minor is true: but your argument is naught. So might al Heretikes say & by that argument proue themselues right beleeuers. Wherefore, vntil ye proue, that ye succeed the Patriarks, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, & Christ himselfe, in professing the Truth, boast not as ye do, of your forefathers. For not they whom yee name in your Proeme, but Hus, Wickleffe, Peter Bruse, Berengarius, Waldenses, Albigenses, Donatists, Aërians Manicheis, and such the like Heretikes, iustly condemned of the Church, were your forefathers.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

M. Harding pretendeth Logike, and endeth in Sophistrie. The Argument, we make, wherewith he plaieth so pleasantly, is founded vpon these wozds of Christ: The Scholar is not aboue his Master, nor the Seruant aboue his Lord: If they haue persecuted me, they will persecute you. All these things shall they doe vnto you for my Names sake, because they know neither my Father, nor me. Matth. 10. 24. Ioh. 15. 20. 21. The Minor is this: We succeed the Apostles, and Martyrs, and are the Pzofessoz of the Truth. Which Minor by M. Hardings iudgement, we can neuer pzoue. But Gods holy name be blessed foz euer: The greatest part of Christendome this day seeth this Minor is true, and that both we are the pzofessoz of Gods knowen Truth, and you the pzofessoz of manifest falshood. Touching the Donatists and Manicheis, and all other like condemned Heretikes, and heresies, we vtterly abhoze them, euen as the gates of Hell. As foz Iohn Wickleffe, Iohn Husse, Valdo, and the rest, foz ought we know, and I beleeue, setting malice aside, foz ought you know, they were godly men. Their greatest heresie was this, That they complained of the dissolute and vicious liues of the Clergy, of wozshipping of Images, of fained Miracles, of the tyrannical pzide of the Pope, of Monks, Friers, Pardons, Pilgrimages, and Purgatozy, and other like deceiuing & mocking of the people: and that they wished a refozmation of the Church. We succeed not them, noz beare their names. We succeed him, whose wozd we pzofesse: whose wozd M. Harding, they of your side haue so often condemned, and vnder a colour of false translation haue burnt foz Heresie. Alphonsus de Haresibus. Bartholom. Arbramus in Concil. Ferrarien.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding addeth further, Wickcleffe held, that a Bishop being in deadly sinne is no Bishop: That God ought to obey the Diuel. &c. These and other like errozs were alledged against him, foztye yeeres after he was dead, and could not be pzesent to make his answer. M. Hard. fo. 82. b.

As touching the fozmer of these two Errours, we defend it not. But if it be an Heresie, and an Heresie so grieuous as M. Harding maketh it, why then is not Pope Zacharie charged also with like Heresie? Foz thus he writeth, as it may seeme, to none other purpose then Wickleffe did: Quis sapiens iudicabit eos esse Sacerdotes, qui nec à Fornicationibus abstinent? What wise man will reckon them to be Priests, that abstaine not so much as from Fornication? This saying is no lesse pzeiudiciall, noz lesse maime to the Clergy of Rome, then the other of Wickleffe. Foz it is recozded foz matter of truth, Pauci sine illo vitio inueniuntur: There are few Priests found without that fault. And so by the iudgement of the Pope himselfe, in the whole multitude of the Roman Clergy wee may happen to finde not many Pzests. If this Heresie be so hozrible in the one, why is it so easily dissembled in the other? Conc. Tom. 2. Epist. Zachariæ ad Bonifacium, pa. 454. Dist. 81. Maximianus in gloss.

The

The ſecond erroꝛ that hære is noted, That God ought to obey the Diuel, hath neither colour, noꝛ ſauour of any truth. It impoꝛteth that God is weake, and the Diuel Omnipotent: oꝛ rather, that God is a creature, and the Diuel is God. Which blaſphemie the Diuell himſelfe would neuer haue vttered. God bee thanked, M. Harding can alege no ſuch woꝛds out of any booke written by Wickleffe, although he woꝛt many. The repoꝛt of an enemie maketh no pꝛoфe: neither is there any enemy ſo malitious, no not M. Harding himſelfe, if he behold his owne conſcience, that will beléeue it. But alas, good Chꝛiſtian Reader, were theſe the erroꝛs that ſo troubled the woꝛld, and cauſed ſo many Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbats and Friers, to the number of one thouſand and thꝛée hundꝛed, to mæt together in generall Councell? No certainely, there were other greater Hereſies that vexed them moꝛe. They ſaid, that the Pope and his Clergie, by theſe new Articles of Tranſubſtantiation, and other like fantaſies, had deceiued the people. They ſaid, that in the holy Sacrament, after the Conſecration, there remaineth ſtill the very materiall ſubſtance of Bꝛead and Wine, as the ancient Catholike learned Fathers, S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, Theodoretus, and others haue ſaid beфoꝛe them. They ſaid, Chꝛiſt is not in the Sacrament really, oꝛ in fleſhly manner, oꝛ by the naturall pꝛeſence of his body. They ſaid, as the old learned Fathers ſay, That the Sacrament by nature is very bꝛead, and that the ſame, by way of a figure, is Chꝛiſts body: and that vndoubtedly theſe woꝛds, This is my Body, imply a Figure, as well as theſe woꝛds, Iohn Baptiſt is Elias.

They ſaid, it cannot be pꝛoued by the Goſpell, that Chꝛiſt euer oꝛdained the Maſſe, as then it was vſed. They ſaid, that a Biſhop excommunicating a Clerke, appealing either to the King, oꝛ to the Parliament, is a traitoꝛ both to the King and his Countrey. They ſaid, It was great folly to put affiance in Popes Pardons. They ſaid, It is not neceſſary to ſaluation, to beléeue that the Church of Rome is the head of all other Churches, and that the Pope is not the next and immediate Vicar of Chꝛiſt.

Theſe were the cauſes that inflamed the Biſhops to ſo cruell diſpleaſure, to burne Iohn Huſſe at the Councel of Conſtance, contrary to the Emperours Safe-conduct, and their owne ſpeciall pꝛomiſe; and contrary to all humanity and ſenſe of nature, to digge vp, and to burne the bodie of Iohn wickleffe foꝛtie yæres after hee had bæne buried.

Hæreof we foꝛme our argument in this foꝛt: Chꝛiſt the Sonne of God was perſecuted, and caried as a Lambe vnto the Slaughterhouſe foꝛ ſpeaking the truth: Theꝛefoꝛe it behoueth vs foꝛ the ſame cauſe ſuffering the like, to take it with patience. So ſaith S. Peter; Chꝛiſt died for vs, leauing vs an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps. If we ſuffer patiently for doing well, this thing is thankſworthy before God. So the holy Father and Maꝛtyꝛ Ignatius comfoꝛted himſelfe when he was in the middeſt of his toꝛments: Iam incipio eſſe diſcipulus Chꝛiſti: Now beginne I to be Chꝛiſts diſciple. So Tertullian: Quid debeo, niſi ſanguinem quem pro me fudit filius Dei? What thing owe I elſe, but the blood which the ſonne of God hath ſhed for me? The like comfoꝛt in like caſes Chꝛiſt giueth to his Diſciples; Reioice ye (ſaith he) and be glad, for your reward is great in Heauen. For thus haue they perſecuted the Prophets, that were before you.

They cry out vpon vs at this pꝛeſent euery where, that we are al Heretikes, and haue foꝛſaken the Faith, and haue with new perſwaſions and wicked learning vtterly diſſolued the concoꝛd of the Church.

M. Harding.

If ye haue foꝛſaken the faith ye were Baptized in; if ye be gone from the faith which S. Eleutherius Pope & Martyr the firſt Apoſtle of Britaine preached in this Land by Damianus and Fugatius, within little more then one hundred yeeres after Chꝛiſts death; if ye refuſe the faith which Gregory the Great that holy Pope, cauſed to be preached to our Anceſtors the Engliſh Nation, by Auguſtinus, Melitus, & other holy Prieſts, and haue therby diſſolued the vnity of the Catholike Church, and leaue not to maintaine the Doctrine, where by the ſame vnity is diſſolued; all this preſuppoſed, we ſee not but that this cry made vpon you is true: For then are ye Heretikes indeed.

Damianus & Fugatius firſt Apoſtles of the Britaines, Auguſtinus & Melitus of the Engliſh.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

As well this repoꝛt of Eleutherius, as alſo the other noted in the margin of Auguſtine, that the one was the firſt Apoſtle of the Bꝛitaines, the other of the Engliſh, are both vntrue. Foꝛ it is certaine that the Church of Bꝛitanny now called England, receiued not not firſt the Faith from Rome. Lucius the King of this Country had receiued the Goſpell of Chriſt, and was baptized well neere one hundred and fifty yeeres before the Emperour Conſtantine: and the ſame Conſtantine the firſt Chriſtened Emperour was borne in this Iland. And notwithſtanding Eleutherius the Biſhop of Rome, at the Kings ſpeciall requeſt, ſent hither Fugatius, and Damianus, to informe the Biſhops and Clergy, and to bring things to better order, yet vndoubtedly the Church and Faith of Chriſt had been planted heere a long while before they came, either by Ioſeph of Arimathæa: or (as Theodoretus writeth) by S. Paul the Apoſtle paſſing this way into Spaine: or (as Nicephorus ſaith) by Simon Zelotes: or by the Greeks: or by ſome others. Gild. in. Polydorus. Theodoret. De Curandis Græcorũ affectibus. Niceph. li 2. c. 4

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Heere M. Iewel (ſaith M. Harding) extreamely belieth Theodoretus and Nicephorus. The Anſwer. The extremitie of theſe ſo horrible lies, ſtandeth onely in that I ſay, Paul the Apoſtle, and Simon Zelotes were in perſon within this Iland, and preached the Goſpell: which thing, whether it be true or no, it waigheth not greatly, I deuiſed it not. It is alleged by Flacius Illyricus, Iohannes Wigandus, and Matthæus Index, and auouched by the authority of Theodoretus, and Sophronius the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. Their words be theſe: Theodoretus lib. 9. De curandis Græcorum affectibus indicat, Paulum è priori Captiuitate Româ dimiſſum Britannis, & alijs in Occidente, Euangelium prædicaſſe. Idem ferè tradit Sophronius Hieroſolymitanus Patriarcha. This therefore, good Reader, is not ſo great extremity of lying, ſauing that it liketh M. Harding ſo to call it. I allege mine Authors, and ſhew the places. What Copies theſe learned men followed, I haue not to anſwer. M. Harding fol. 83. b. Centuria 1. lib. 2. cap. 2.

Againe, where I ſay, Simon Zelotes arriued once into this Iland, and heere planted the Goſpell, for proofe thereof alleging the authority of Nicephorus, all this M. Harding hath likewiſe condemned for an other extreame lie. Wherein whether of vs two is more extreamly deceiued. I am content himſelfe ſhall be the Iudge. The words of Nicephorus are theſe: Simon Zelotes Doctrinam Euangelij ad Occidentalium Oceanum, Inſulaſque Britannicas perfert: Simon Zelotes carried the Doctrine of the Goſpel into the Weſt Ocean Sea, and into the Ilands of Britannie. If M. Harding had weighed the matter better, he would not haue beene ſo ready in dealing of lies. ☜☞ Niceph. lib. 2. cap. 40.

☜☞ As for our Auguſtine of England, for it was not S. Auguſtine the learned Doctor, neither was he ſo godly a man, as M. Harding maketh him: for as it may appeare by that Galfridus writeth of him, he was cruell, diſdainfull, proud, and arrogant, and no way meet to be called an Apoſtle. Galfrid. l. 8. cap. 4.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding ſaith, I haue, vnder the name of Galfridus, immoderatly ſlandered that bleſſed Apoſtle, for ſo hee nameth him. The Anſwer. But how bleſſed hee was, and how like vnto one of Chriſts Apoſtles, it may appeare. Indeed all theſe words are not expreſſly vttered, neither by Galfridus, nor by Beda. Howbeit, the whole effect thereof may ſome be found. Firſt, his pride was apparent in that, he, being a meere ſtranger, lately arriued, and vnacquainted, diſdained to ſtand vp from his chaire, or to ſhew any kind of courteſie to the Biſhops of this Realme appearing before him at a Synod: which thing, as Beda witneſſeth, they iudged to proceed of immoderate ſtatelineſſe, and in contempt of them. Againe, he ſhewed his cruelty, in that, as it is written in French by Thomas Gray, an old Chronicler, being refuſed of the Chriſtian Britaines, he enflamed Ethelbertus the King of Kent, to leuie his power and to warre againſt them, himſelfe alſo being in company, as in the old Abſtract of Chronicles it is recorded, and marching with him towards the ſlaughter. Of the bloody cruelty and extremity that there was ſhewed, Thomas Gray ſaith thus, They had no more regard of mercy, then a Woolfe hath vpon a ſheepe. Of the innocent Chriſtian Monks, that there were ſlaine, Galfridus ſaith thus, Mille ducenti eorum in ipſa die Martyrio decorati, regni cœleſtis adepti ſunt ſedem: A thouſand and two hundred of them being that day honoured with Martyrdome, obtained a ſeat in the kingdome of Heauen. Now M. Harding, if they were Saints and Martyrs, that ſo were murdered, what Saint then was your Auguſtine, that was the Raiſer and procurer of that murder? ☜☞ *Beda lib. 2. cap. 2. Thomas Gray. Beda l. 1. c. 26. Certainely Beda saith, the Quéene of England was then Christened, and that there were then in this Realme seuen Bishops, and one Archbishop, with other moe great learned Christian men.

Beda l. 2. c. 2. As touching this Augustine, we are not bound to all his doings. Although M. Harding allow him Apostolike authority, yet all his deeds were not Gospell. The Church in his time was growne to much corruption, as it may many waies appeare by sundry places of S. Gregory.

Beda l. 2. c. 26. Verily Beda saith, The Bishops and learned Christians of this Countrey vtterly refused to receiue this new Apostle with his new Religion. And yet were they right Catholike, and godly men.

Galfridus l. 8. cap. 4. And Galfridus saith, Erant septem Episcopatus, & Archiepiscopatus Religiosissimis præsulibus muniti, & Abbatiæ complures, in quibus grex Domini rectum ordinem tenebat: There were then in England seuen Bishoprikes, and one Archbishoprike possessed with very godly Prelates, and many Abbies, in which the Lords flocke held the right religion.

M. Hard. fo. 83. b. Addition. ☞ Heere (saith M. Harding) M. Iewel belieth Beda twice. First, hee applieth that to the Englishmen, which he spake of the Britaines, namely of seuen Bishops, and one Archbishop &c. Addition. ☞

The answer. If there had beene some errour heerein, yet M. Harding might haue vttered it in more curteous manner. Howbeit indeed it is not so, I speake not one word of English Bishops, but only of the Bishops of the Britaines, who, as M. Harding wel knoweth, and as it may also appeare by Galfridus and Beda, were then the Bishops, and the onely Bishops of this Country.

M. Hard. fo. 84. a. Yet is there heere (saith M. Harding) an other Lie. For they refused to obey him as their Archbishop: They refused not his Religion. Certainely, good Reader, the words of Beda séeme plaine to the contrary.

Beda l. 2. ca. 2. Priscis abdicare moribus, deserere suas traditiones. The Britaines (saith he) made answer, that they could not leaue their Ancient vsages without the consent of their fellowes. They came to an Holy man, and demanded his aduice, whether at this Augustines request, they should forsake, and giue ouer their old Traditions. He answered them, If he be a proud man, it is certaine, he is not of God, neither ought we to care for his word. In the end he saith: Cunctis, quæ dicebat, contradicere laborabant: They withstood him in all that euer he said. I trow, he said somewhat else besides his Archbishoprick, and his Palle: otherwise his head had beene very ambitious.

M. Hard. fo. 83. b. But M. Harding addeth further, It is wel knowne that I haue séene a certaine Booke, which he calleth the Returne of Vntruths, and that one of the same was presented vnto me at Oxford, at what time the Quéenes Maiesty was there in Progresse. How well M. Harding is assured hereof, I cannot say. It may passe in company with the rest of his Truths. I assure thée, good Reader, there was neuer such Booke offered to me, neither at Oxford nor elsewhere, neither did I euer reade one line thereof in all my life. ☜ ☜

That we renew, and, as it were, fetch againe from Hel the old and many a day condemned Heresies: that we sow abroad new sects, and such broiles as neuer earst were heard of: also that we are already diuided into contrary parts and opinions, and could yet by no meanes agree well among our selues.

M. Harding.

Sith that yee raise vp againe the Heresie of Aërius in denying praier for the dead, who was for the same accounted an Heretike eleuen hundreth yeers past: sith that yee raise vp the Heresie of Manichæus that liued before him, in taking away Free-will: sith that ye raise vp the Heresie of Vigilantius, in refusing to pray That these Defenders be renew-

pray to Saints, and to honor their holy Relikes, and to keepe Lights in Churches to the honor of God, and many other heresies beside of old time condemned: sith that ye raise vp the heresies of Berengarius in denying the presence of Christs very body in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar: and sith that ye adde to those moe heresies of your owne, as the appointing of the supreame Pastorship or regiment of the Church in all things and causes spirituall to a lay Magistrate, the denying of the externall Sacrifice of the Church, which we call the Masse, the maintenance of the breach of vowes, of powertie, chastity, and obedience Again, sith that your diuision into sundry sects, can neither be dissembled, nor defended, whereof we shall speake hereafter more largely: all these things besides sundry other of like enormity being true, as they be most true, this other cry made vpon you is true.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This heape is great in shew, and light in substance. Touching Berengarius, gentle Reader, for shortnesse sake, I must referre thee to my former Reply to M. Harding. Aërius the Arian heretike, the breach of vowes, the dissension of iudgements in Religion, shall be answered (God willing) hereafter, each matter seuerally in his place. We flatter not our Prince with any new imagined extraordinary power, but onely giue him that Prerogatiue and Chiefty, that euermore hath beene due vnto him by the ordinance and word of God: that is to say, to be the Nurse of Gods Religion: to make Lawes for the Church: to heare and take vp cases, and questions of the Faith, if he be able: or otherwise to commit them ouer by his authority vnto the learned: to command the Bishops and Priests to doe their duties, and to punish such as be offenders. Thus the godly Emperour Constantinus sate in iudgement in a cause Ecclesiastical, betweene Cicilianus and Donatus, à Casis Nigris, and in the end himselfe pronounced sentence. Greater authority then Constantinus the Emperour had and vsed, our Princes require none. This, I trust, hitherto is no great heresie. Art. 5. Div 6. Esay 49.23. August. contra Cres. l. 3. c. 71.

S. Hierome reproued Vigilantius, for that he found fault with the Vigils, or night wakes, that then there were vsed with praying to Saints, with worshipping of Relikes, with Lights, and other such like waighty matters. Touching which whole controuersie, Erasmus giueth this iudgement: In hunc ita conuitijs debacchatur Hieronymus, vt plusculum in eo modestiæ cogar desiderare. Vtinam argumentis tantum egisset, & à conuitijs temperasset. Against this Vigilantius, S. Hierome so raileth, that I want in him some peece of sobriety. I would rather, hee had dealt with arguments and had spared his rayling. Erasm. in præfatio. in Epistolam Hieronym. contra Vigilan.

Of praier to Saints and lights, we shall speake hereafter. Night wakes afterward were condemned, as I remember, in the councell of Carthage, and so sentence giuen by the Church with this great heretike Vigilantius against S. Hierome. Verily the Fathers in a former Councell holden at Eliberis in Spaine decreed thus: Placuit prohiberi ne fœminæ in cœmiterio peruigilent: quia sæpè sub obtentu orationis scelera latenter committunt: It liketh vs that women be forbidden to watch at the places of buriall. For often vnder pretence of praier priuily they commit wickednesse. To be short, if Vigilantius were an heretike for reproouing of Night watches, why hath the Church of Rome so long sithence condemned and abolished the same watches, agreeably to Vigilantius, and contrarie to the iudgement of S. Hierome? Concil. Eliberi. cap. 35.

Relikes were subiect to much villanie, and are welnere worne out of themselues.

The Manicheis among other their fantasticall errors were wont to say, that the body of Man was made, not by God, but by the Angles of the Diuell, which they called Gentem tenebrarum: and that in Man there be two soules of contrary natures: the one of the substance of God: the other of the substance of the Diuel: and that either soule continueth still as it is, and cannot alter: That is to say, that the good soule can neuer be ill: and that the ill soule can neuer be good. And in this sense they said, that man hath no free will. August. de continent. cap. 9. August. contra duas Ep. Pelagian. lib. 2. c. 2. Aug. ad Quodvultdeum.

All these, and other like errors we abhorre and detest, as franticke furies. We say that the soule of Man is not the substance, but the Creature of God: and that it may be changed from good to ill; from ill to good: that Dauid may fal: that Paul may rise; that God giueth vs a new heart, and a new spirit within our breasts.

But as touching the freedome of will, and power of our selues, we say with S. Augustine, O malum liberum Arbitrium sine Deo: O euill is free will without God. Againe, Libero arbitrio malè vtens homo, & se perdidit, & arbitrium: Man misusing his free will, spilt both himselfe, and his will. Againe, Quid tantum de naturæ possibilitate præsumitur? Vulnerata, saucia, vexata, perdita est. Vera confessione, non falsa defensione opus habet: What doe men so much presume of the possibility of Nature? It is wounded, it is mangled, it is troubled, it is lost. It behoueth vs rather truely to confesse it, then falsely to defend it. Againe, Liberum arbitrium captiuatum, non nisi ad peccatum valet: Aug. de Verb. Apost. Ser. 11. August. in Enchiridio, ca. 30. August. de nat. & grat. cap. 53.

Free will once made thrall, auaileth now nothing but to ſinne. Againe, Quòd bene viuimus, quòd rectè intelligimus, Deo debemus. Noſtrum nihil eſt, niſi peccatum, quod habemus: That we liue well, that we vnderſtand aright, we haue it of God. Of our ſelues we haue nothing but onely ſinne that is within vs.

The better to clære this whole caſe, I thought it good to vſe the moe words. Thus may we learne to know our ſelues, and humbly to confeſſe our imperfection, and to giue the whole glory vnto God.

Therefore to conclude, S. Auguſtine ſaith, Nos volumus: ſed Deus in nobis operatur velle. Nos operamur: ſed Deus in nobis operatur & operari pro bona ſua voluntate. Hoc nobis expedit & credere & diſcere. Hoc eſt pium: hoc eſt verum: vt ſit humilis, & ſubmiſſa Confeſſio, & detur totum Deo. Tutiores viuimus, ſi totum Deo damus, non autem nos illi ex parte, & nobis ex parte committimus: We will, but it is God, that worketh in vs to will. We worke: but it is God, that worketh in vs to worke, according to his good pleaſure. This is behouefull for vs, both to beleeue, and to ſpeake. This is a godly, this is a true doctrine, that our confeſſion may be humble, and lowly, and that God may haue the whole. We liue more in ſafety, if we giue all vnto God, rather then if we commit our ſelues partly to our ſelues, and partly to him.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 4.

That we be accurſed creatures, and like the Giants doe war againſt God himſelfe, & liue cleane without any regard or worſhipping of God.

M. Harding.

What ye be God knoweth, and your owne conſcience ſhould know. Our Lord amend both you and vs. But to ſay ſomewhat to that your guilty mind imagineth the World to report of you, if they which take away and abhorre the externall ſacrifice, wherein Chriſt according to his own inſtitution, is offered to his Father, make no war againſt God: if they which make Chriſt a Miniſter of ſhadowes, ſignes, tokens, and figures: they, which feare not to breake their ſolemne vowes made to God, and defend the ſame as well done: they, which aſſure themſelues of their ſaluation, and therefore liue diſſolutely without due care and feare of God: If (I ſay) they be not curſed Creatures, and like giants that warre againſt God, then are ye cleare of this charge. Luc. 22. 1. Cor. 11.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

To anſwer Ifs with Ifs, and Words with Words, it were great folly. Therefore leauing the anſwer of vowes, and aſſurance of ſaluation to their ſeuerall places, firſt we denie not the ſacrifice of Chriſt. Chriſt onely vpon his Croſſe is our whole and onely ſacrifice for ſin, and beſide him we haue none other. Howbeit, I haue ſpoken hereof more at large in my former reply to M. Harding. In the 17. Art.

Neither make we Chriſt, as it liketh M. Harding to ſay, a Miniſter of ſignes and figures. We know, that Chriſt is the fulfilling and perfection of the Law, and that grace, and truth are wrought by him. Yet neuertheleſſe we ſay, that the Sacraments of the New Teſtament are ſignes and figures. The old Father Tertullian expoundeth Chriſts words in this ſort, Hoc eſt corpus meum, Hoc eſt, figura corporis mei: This is my body, that is to ſay, This is a Figure of my body. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus adhibuit Iudam ad conuiuium, in quo Corporis & Sanguinis ſui Figurã Diſcipulis ſuis commendauit, & tradidit: Chriſt receiued Iudas vnto his banquet, whereat he deliuered to his Diſciples the figure of his body and blood. And againe, Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc eſt corpus meum, cùm daret ſignum corporis ſui: Chriſt doubted not to ſay, This is my body, whereas hee gaue a token of his body. Iohan. 1. 17. Tertull. contra Marcion lib. 4. Auguſt. in Pſa. Auguſt. contra Adimantum, Cap. 12.

I leaue other holy Fathers of like words and ſenſe welnére innumerable. Yet were they neither Giants, nor Rebels againſt God, nor accurſed Creatures. If they had neuer vſed theſe words, nor called the Sacrament the figure, or token of Chriſts body, then might M. Harding haue beene bold to ſay ſomewhat, and to lead away his Reader with a Tragicall exclamation of ſignes, and figures. Howbeit, he himſelfe, as I haue ſhewed in my former Anſwer, in the expoſition of theſe words of Chriſt, This is my body, and other like phraſes incident vnto the ſame, to auoid one vſuall and common figure, is forced to ſhift himſelfe into thirty other vnneceſſary and childiſh figures: as knowing that not ſo much as his open vntruths can well ſtand without figures. Artic. 12. Diuiſ. 16.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 6.

That we deſpiſe al good deeds: that we vſe no diſcipline of Vertue, no Lawes, no Cuſtoms: that we eſteem neither right, nor order, nor equity, nor nor iuſtice: that we giue the bridle to all naughtineſſe, and prouoke the people to all licentiouſneſſe, and luſt.

Faſting with Fleſh.

M. Harding.

Faſt for policy, fo. 2. pa. 2. Epiſt. ad Rom. Bridle giuen to lewdneſſe by this new Goſpell.

Ye teach men to faſt for policy, not for Religion. And by your Statute of Wedneſdaies faſt, who ſo euer ſhall write or ſay, that forbearing of fleſh is a ſeruice of God, otherwiſe then as other politike Lawes are, they ſhal be puniſhed as ſpreaders of falſe Newes are and ought to be. When ye preach only Faith, not to remoue the merit of workes before Baptiſme, as S. Paul meant it, but alſo after Baptiſme: When ye take away the ſacrament of Confeſſion and Abſolution, giue ye not the bridle to all naughtineſſe? Do not ſome of your Goſpelling maides of London refuſe to ſerue, except they may haue liberty to heare a Sermon before noone and a play at afternoone?

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

I thought M. Harding had knowne a difference betweene faſting, and abſtinence, or choice of meats. True faſting is a religious worke, ordained to teſtifie our humility, and to make the fleſh the more obedient vnto the Spirit, that we may be the quicker to Prayer, and to all good works. But abſtinence from this or that meat with opinion of Holineſſe, ſuperſtitious it may eaſily make a man, but holy it cannot. S. Paul ſaith, Cibus nos non commendat Deo: It is not meat that maketh vs acceptable vnto God. Againe, it is good to confirme the heart with grace, and not with meats: wherein they that haue walked, haue found no profit. The meat ſerueth for the bellie, and the bellie for the meat: The Lord will deſtroie them both. And againe, The Kingdome of God is not meat and drinke. Likewiſe Chriſt ſaith, The thing that entreth into the mouth defileth not the man. 1 Cor. 8. 8. Heb. 13. 9. 1 Cor. 6. 13. Rom. 14. 17. Matth. 15. 17.

Hereby it is eaſie to ſee, that faſting is one thing, and abſtinence from fleſh is an other. The Nazarites in the old Teſtament abſtained not from fleſh, and yet they faſted. Elias was fed with fleſh, Iohn the Baptiſt ate the fleſh of Locuſts; and yet they both faſted. Socrates ſaith, That many Chriſtians in the Lent ſeaſon did eate fiſh, and birds: many abſtained vntill three of the cloke in the after noone, and then receiued all kinds of meat, either fiſh or fleſh, without difference. Likewiſe Epiphanius ſaith, Some eat all kind of birds or fowle, abſtaining onlie from the fleſh of fourfooted beaſts. And yet they kept their Lent truly, and faſted as well as any others. Wherefore Abſtinence from any one certaine kinde of meat is not of it ſelfe a worke of Religion to pleaſe God, but only a meere politike policie. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non quæro quo veſcaris, ſed quo delecteris: I demand not, what thou eateſt, but wherein thou haſt pleaſure. And S. Hierome ſaith of the Manicheis: Ieiunant illi quidem: ſed illorum ieiunium eſt ſaturitate deterius: They faſt indeed: but their faſting is worſe, then if they filled their bellies. 3 Reg. 17. 6. Math. 3. 4. Socr. l. 5. c. 22. Caſſidor. lib. 9. cap. 38. Epipha. de Hæreſ. lib. 3. in Oratione de fide Catholica. οἱ μὲν νηστεύουσι μὴ ἀπεχόμενοι, λαμβάνουσι δὲ ἐρίων. Auguſtin. Hieron. in Ioel. cap. 1.

Of onely Faith, and Confeſſion we ſhall ſpeake hereafter.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 7.

That we labour & ſeeke to ouerthrow the State of Monarchies and Kingdomes, and to bring all things vnder the rule of the raſh inconſtant people, and vnlearned multitude.

M. Harding.

Can Monarkes and Princes ſeeme to be maintained by your ſects who teach the people to rebell for pretenſed religion? Allow ye the Monarchie of the Romane Empire, who ſo much complain in your Apology, That the Pope made Charlemaigne Emperour of the Weſt? Hath the Queene of Scotland cauſe to praiſe the proceedings of your Goſpel, through occaſion whereof ſhe ruleth not her ſubiects, but is rather ruled of her Subiects?

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Here is an other great vntruth among the reſt. For M. Harding right well knoweth, that we neuer armed the people, nor taught them to rebell for religion againſt the Prince. If any thing haue at any time happened otherwiſe, it was either ſome wilfull rage, or ſome fatal fury: It was not our Counſel: it was not our Doctrine. We teach the people, as S. Paul doth, to be ſubiect to the higher Powers, not onely for feare, but alſo for conſcience. We teach them, that who ſo ſtriketh with the ſword by priuate authority, ſhall periſh with the ſword. If the Prince happen to be wicked, or cruell or barthenous, we teach them to ſay, with S. Ambroſe, Arma noſtra ſunt preces & lachrymæ: Teares and praiers be our weapons. Notwithſtanding, what rebellion hath beene moued in England by ſome of your ſide, in the late Raignes of King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth, in defenſe of your Religion, ye may well remember. Rom. 13. 1. Math. 26. 52. Ambroſius.

M. Harding fol. 84 b.

Addition. ☞ Here M. Harding hath shortly shuffled together a whole troupe of words, written, or spoken by Luther, Melanchton, or others, in some part true, in most part false, and quite rackt from their meaning: but in no part touching any part of our doctrine. Neither doth any of all these teach the people to rebell against their Prince, but onely to defend themselues by all lawfull meanes against oppression, as did Dauid against King Saul. So do the Nobles in France at this day. They seeke not to kill, but to saue their owne liues, as they haue openly protested by publike writing vnto the world. As for vs we are strangers vnto their cases. They themselues are best acquainted with the Lawes, and Constitutions of their Countrey: and therefore are best able to yeld account of the grounds, and reasons of their doings. But let M. Harding shew vs, in so many kingdomes and Countries, that haue withdrawne themselues from the obedience of the Pope, what one Prince hath there euer beene remoued for Religions sake by the professors of the Gospell. There may he finde the very patterne, and practise of our Doctrine. Perhaps many good Princes may be found, that haue beene remoued by the Pope, and by others of his deuotion. Addition. ☞

I will not speake of enterprises attempted within this Countrey. And yet is it knowen what hath beene done, and at whose becke, and in whose behalfe.

M. Harding fol. 87. a.

But, for as much as you say, Wee openly protest before God, and the world, that wee condemne, and defie all such attempts. I meane that any subiect or subiects whatsoeuer, of their owne priuate authoritie, should take armes against their Prince for matters of Religion: How like you then the attempts of Thomas Arundel the Archbishop of Canterbury, against Richard the Second, King of England? You will say, It was no matter of Religion: yet can you not say, but the said Archbishop was a Subiect, and King Richard was his Prince. How like you the late Insurrection in the North, in the time of King Henry the eight? Who kindled that fire? Who raised that tempest? Whose right was attempted? Whose Crowne was assaulted? Had Protestants the leading of those bands? Was Aske the Generall of that field? How like you the Counsell of Cardinall Poole, in his imagined Oration to Charles the Emperour, calling backe his Maiesty, from the Turke, to leaue all other affaires, and to bend his Banners against England, and encouraging the Subiects of this Realme boldly to rebell against their Prince? There bee in England (saith hee) whole Legions of men, that haue not bowed their knee to Baal. if thou once arriue there, O Emperour, God will bring them to thy hand. English men are a people that oftentimes haue deposed their Kings for lighter causes, &c. They haue still the same courage, &c. Nothing staieth them from reuenging so great wrongs by their King committed, but onely the waiting for your Maiesty, &c. The Booke is abroad in print, and may be seene. I shew you onely a few examples out of the heape; and, for that they be odious, I haue rather touched them shortly, then laid them open.

Fabian part. 7.

Nic. Machiauellus Florent.

Nicolas Machiauell, in his Italian History saith, that the Bishops of Rome themselues through their ambition, and cruelty, haue raised such deadly discord, and bloody warres betweene Christian Princes, as few the like haue beene seene in Christendome these many yeeres. Yet will you protest openly against them all? Against your Archbishops, against your Cardinals, and against the Pope himselfe, the successour of Peter, and the Vicar of Christ? Will you condemne, and defie their attempts before God, and before the world? How then if the Pope this day to recouer his losses, would release the Naturall Subiects of this Realme, from their oath, and alleageance to the Quenes Maiesty, as he hath often done, as well heere, as in other Countries, and saith, Hee may iustly doe it by the right of his office? What would you then do your selfe, M. Harding? or what would you aduise your friends to doe? Why should you dissemble? You would doe euen as your Fathers haue done before you.

15. q. 6. Nos Sanctor. Ead. Alius.

But what meane you to deale so nicely in this matter? You say, You protest before God and the world: you condemne and defie all such attempts. A man would thinke yee spake in earnest. Wherefore then haue you set so fauourable a construction to these words? I meane, (say you) that any Subiect, or Subiects whatsoeuer, of their owne priuate authority, should take armes against their prince for matters of Religion. Wherefore except you onely the case of Religion? Is it lawfull, by your iudgement, for the subiect in any other case, either of life, or of gouernment, to arme himselfe against his Prince? And would you thus perswade the people? Is this your Religion? Is this your Doctrine?

M. Harding fol. 87. a.

Or what meane you, By their owne priuate authority? May then the Subiect arme himselfe against his Prince, by the common aduice, and by the publike authority of the Realme? If so, wherefore then blame you the Nobles of Scotland? For whatsoeuer was done there, a few onely excepted, was done by the consent, and agreement of the whole whole. But perhaps by priuate authoritie, you meane, whatsoeuer is attempted in this behalfe, without the authority of the Pope: to whom you haue giuen the right, and authority of both Swords, Spirituall and Temporall: and from whom, you say, the Kings and Princes of the world haue receiued their power. Verily the Pope himselfe saith, Materialis gladius stringendus est manu Regum, & Militum, sed ad nutum & patientiam Sacerdotis: The Materiall or Temporall Sword must bee drawne by the hands of Kings and Souldiers (howbeit, not by the Princes owne authority, but) at the becke and patience of the Priest: by which Priest, is meant the Pope. And whatsoeuer is done at his becke, hath authority sufficient, and is well done. But great was the patience of the Princes, and Powers of the world, that could so long and so quietly beare his becking. M. Harding Confutat. fo. 247. b. 248. b. De Maiorit. & Obedient. vnam Sanct.

Now M. Harding, if you thinke it lawfull for Subiects to draw the sword in defense of the Pope, why may you not also thinke it lawfull for them, to defend themselues in defense of Christ? ☞

The displacing of the Emperour of Constantinople, and the placing of Charlemaigne the French King, serueth M. Harding to small purpose: vnlesse it be to disclose the Popes conspiracie against the Emperour. Certainely, as any man may sensibly see, it was the aduancing of the Pope, the strengthening of the Saracens and after of the Turkes, and the diuision, and dissolution of the state of Christendoome. Platina saith: Ab hoc tempore perijt & potestas Imperatorum, & virtus Pontificum: After this time the power of the Emperours, and the Holinesse of the Pope were both lost. Platina in Adrian.

Touching the Queene of Scotland, I will say nothing: The Kingdomes and States of the world haue sundry agreements and compositions. The Nobles, and Commons there, neither drew the sword, nor attempted force against the Prince. They sought only the continuance of Gods vndoubted truth, and the defense of their owne liues against your barbarous and cruell inuasions. They remembred, besides all other watnings, your late dealing at Vassei, where as great numbers of their brethren were suddenly murdered, being together at their praiers in the Church, and holding vp their innocent hands to heauen, and calling vpon the name of God. Achab said sometime to the Prophet Elias: Thou art he, that troublest the whole Countrey of Israel. But Elias made him answer: It is not I, that trouble the Countrey: It is thou, and thy Fathers house, which haue forsaken the commandements of the Lord, and haue followed after Baalim. At Vassei An. 1562. 3. Reg. 18. 17.

Addition. ☞ Addition. What is a lie (saith M. Harding) if this be none? The Answer. Indeede the Nobles, and Commons of Scotland were in the field: we denie it not. So was Dauid in the field against King Saul. They stood in armour, not to inuade or attempt force against their Prince, but only to defend themselues, as by way of retire. And therefore they withdrew themselues with their power, into the Marches of England, not for want of strength, or courage, (for they had then double moe men in the field, then came against them) but onely for reuerence of their Prince, that came vpon them: lest they should be forced by rage of their enemies, and furie of warre to strike the Anointed of the Lord. Such broiles haue often happened, in many Countries, as by sundrie stories it may appeare. ☜

The Subiect is bound to obey his Prince: howbeit not in all things without exception: but so farre as Gods glory is not touched. These Nobles had learned of S. Peter, It is better to obey God, then man. And of the Prophet Dauid: Better it is to trust to God, then to trust in Princes. For they are mortall, and shall die: their Spirit shall be taken from them, and then shall they return into the earth. Neither may a godly Prince take it as any dishonour to his estate, to see God obeied before him. For he is not God, but the minister of God. Leo saith, Christus quæ Dei sunt, Deo, quæ Cæsaris sunt, Cæsari reddenda constituit, &c. Hoc est verè non impugnare Cæsarem, sed iuuare: Christ commanded, that is due vnto God, to bee giuen to God: that is due vnto Cæsar, to be giuen to Cæsar. Verily this is not to rebell against, but to helpe Cæsar. Likewise S. Ambrose, being himselfe in maner a Captaine vnto the people in Gods quarrell against Valentinian the Emperour: Quid prælentius dici potuit à Christianis viris, quàm id, quod hodie in nobis Spiritus Sanctus loquutus est? Rogamus, Auguste, non pugnamus: Non timemus, sed rogamus? What could be more boldly spoken of Christian men, then that the holy Ghost spake in you this day? (That ye said) We beseech thee Noble Emperour, we fight not. We feare thee not, but we beseech thee. Act 5. 29. Psal 118. 9. Psal 146. 4. Leo de Passione Dom. Ser. 10. Ambros. lib. 5. Epist. 33.

To conclude, the Queene of Scotland is still in quiet possession of her estate: and is obeied of her Subiects, so far as is conuenient for godly people to obey their Prince.

Addition. ☞ Addition. Heere (saith M. Harding) what will you sticke to say, or write, which doe say, write, and set out in Print such a palpable, and manifest falshood: such, I say, as euen the Tankerd bearers in London canne witnesse against you? The Answer. At the time of the writing, and first entrie into the Printing of my Booke, these words were true.

For then was the Queene of Scotland in the full poſſeſſion of her eſtate. Neither could I Prophesie, what things would follow. Shortly afterward the whole caſe was altered, as it is knowne. In the end of the Print, by forgetfulneſſe this place eſcapt my hands without correction, & ſo ſlipt away vnawares, as it was printed at the firſt. Indeed as I could not foreſee the reſtraint of ỹ ſaid Queens liberty which followed, but wrot of her ſtate, as it then preſently was, as in deede doing, truly I could doe none other: ſo could I not foreſee the cauſes that occaſioned that alteration. For, that the King ſhould ſhortly after the time of my writing be ſo murdered, and the houſe wherein hee lodged blowne vp with powder; that a wicked man, accounted the certaine Author of that parricidall murder, hauing himſelfe a wife yet liuing, ſhould attaine to the mariage of the ſame Queen, whoſe huſband he had ſo traiterouſly ſlaine, were things vnknowne vnto mee, and vnto all men alſo when I did write this. And what way the Nobles and body of the Realme would take for the ſafety of the yong Prince, who ſeemed to all men to be in great danger, was likewiſe vnknown vnto me. And M. Harding knoweth right well, that theſe were the occaſions of the alteration of the State, from that it was when I did write, and not Religion; which might well be knowne by that, that many of the ſaid Queenes Religion were againſt her, and many Proteſtants were and are her friends. And it ſeemeth, that M. Harding ſo openly proteſting before God, and the world, that they condemne and deſie ſuch attempts that any ſubiects ſhould of their owne priuate authority, take armes againſt their Prince, excepting of matters of Religion onely, ſhould thinke it reaſon that parricides, murders, and ſheading of bloud, eſpecially Bloud-Royall, Rapes, Inceſt, and ſuch like, ſhould not paſſe without all controlement. Surely God hath not ſuffered ſuch great faults to eſcape vnpuniſhed euen in Princes, as doth well appeare by the examples of Quene Iſabel in Iſrael, Quene Iohanne in Naples, King Tarquine in Rome, whom for their great wickednesſe, God, by ſtirring their owne ſubiects, againſt them, depriued of their princely eſtates. For princes alſo are Gods ſubiects, againſt whom, for their offences againſt his Maieſty, he proceedeth as well, as againſt the baſeſt ſorts of men, by ſuch waies, as to his heauenly wiſdome it ſeemeth good.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 8.

That we haue ſeditiouſly fallen from the Catholike Church, and by a wicked ſchiſme and diuiſion haue ſhaken the whole world, and troubled the common peace and vniuerſall quiet of the Church: and that, as Dathan and Abiram conſpired in times paſt againſt Moyſes and Aaron; euen ſo we at this day haue renounced the Biſhop of Rome, without any cauſe reaſonable.

M. Harding.

Before Luthers time all Chriſtian people came together peaceably into one Church, vnder one head, as ſheepe into one fold vnder one ſhepheard, and ſo liued Vnanimes in domo, in one accord: But after that Satan, who at the beginning beguiled Eue, had perſwaded ſome to taſte of the poiſoned apple of Luthers new doctrine; they went out from vs, who were not of vs (for if they had beene of vs, they had remained with vs) forſooke the Catholike Church of Chriſt, ſorted themſelues into Synagogues of Antichriſt, withdrew themſelues from obedience toward their Paſtor and Iudge, and ſundred themſelues into diuers ſects. This ſchiſme, diuiſion & conſpiracy againſt the head Shepheard, is no leſſe wicked, then that of Dathan and Abiron againſt Moyſes and Aaron was. For as God commanded Moyſes and Aaron to be obeied of the children of Iſrael, ſo Chriſt commanded all his ſheepe to obey and heare the voice of him, whom in Peter, and ſucceeding Peter, he made Shepheard ouer his whole flocke.

Diuiſion in Schiſme followed vpon Luthers preaching. 1. Iohan. 2. Numer. 6. Iohan. 21.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Before the time that Gods holy will was, that Doctor Luther ſhould begin, after ſo long time of ignorance, to publiſh the Goſpell of Chriſt, there was a generall quietneſſe, I grant, ſuch as in the night ſeaſon, when folke be aſleepe. Yet, I thinke, to continue ſuch quietneſſe, no wiſe man will wiſh to ſleepe ſtill.

Ye ſay, They haue forſaken the Catholike Church: They went from vs who were not of vs. Nay rather, M. Harding, we are returned to the Catholike Church of Chriſt: and haue forſaken you, becauſe you haue manifeſtly forſaken the waies of God. But what if a man would a little put you friendly in remembrance? Sir, it is not long ſithence your ſelfe were out of your owne Catholike Church: and ſo were gone out from your ſelfe: becauſe your ſelfe were not of your ſelfe. For if your ſelfe had beene of your ſelfe, you would haue remained better with your ſelfe. It is no wiſdome, in carping at others, to offer offer occaſion againſt your ſelfe. I beſeech God to giue you grace, that you may Redire ad cor, and returne againe to your ſelfe. But here you bring in a great many vntruths in a throng together. You ſay, that as God commanded the people of Iſrael to obey Aaron, ſo Chriſt commanded al his ſheepe to obey the Pope ſucceeding Peter: You ſay, Chriſt made the Pope ſhepheard ouer his whole flocke: You call him Our Paſtor, and our Iudge: you call him the Head-ſhepheard: and for proofe hereof, for ſome countenance of Truth, ye alleage the one and twentieth Chapter of S. Iohn; in which whole Chapter notwithſtanding, ye are not able to find, neither any ſuch commandement of Chriſt: nor any mention of Peters ſucceſſour: nor All his ſheepe: nor Shepheard ouer his whole flocke: nor Our Paſtour: nor Our Iudge: nor Our head Shepheard. It is much to report vntruth of a man. But to report vntruth of Chriſt, and of his holy Word, and that willingly, and wittinglie, and without feare, ſome men thinke it to be the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt.

As for theſe words, Feed my Sheepe, Feed my Lambes, they pertaine as well to other the Apoſtles, as to Peter. Chriſt ſaid generally to all his Diſciples, God yee into all the world and preach the Goſpel. And Paul ſaith of himſelfe, Ego plus omnibus laborauí: I haue taken more paines (and more led the flocke) then all the reſt. Surely me thinketh it is a weake kind of reaſoning to ſay thus, Chriſt bade Peter feed his ſheepe, Ergo, hee made him head-ſhepheard ouer al the whole world. Matth. 28. 19. 1. Cor. 15. 10.

But if this whole Prerogatiue hang of feeding the flocke, what then if the Pope feede not? What if he neuer mind to feed, as thinking it no part of his office? To conclude, what if he be vtterly ignorant, as many haue beene, and cannot feed? Yet muſt he needs be the head-ſhepheard ouer the whole flock? and muſt al the ſheep obey him, and heare his voice, that cannot ſpeak? Verily S. Auguſtine ſaith, Qui hoc animo paſcunt oues Chriſti, vt ſuas velint eſſe, non Chriſti, ſe conuincuntur amare, non Chriſtũ, vel gloriandi, vel dominandi, vel acquirendi cupiditate: Whoſoeuer they be that feed the ſheepe to the end to make them theirs, & not Chriſts, they loue themſelues, and not Chriſt, for deſire either of glory, or of rule, or of gaine. Auguſt in Ioan. Tra. 123.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 9.

That we ſet nought by the authority of the ancient Fathers & Councels of old time: that we haue raſhly & preſumptuouſly diſanulled the old Ceremonies, which haue bin well allowed by our Fathers and Forefathers many hundred yeeres paſt, both by good cuſtomes, and alſo in ages of more purity: and that we haue by our own priuate head without the authority of any ſacred & general Councel, brought new traditions into the Church: and haue done all theſe things not for Religions ſake, but only vpon a deſire of contention & ſtrife. But that they for their part haue changed no maner of thing, but haue held & kept ſtill ſuch a number of yeeres to this very day, al things, as they were deliuered from the Apoſtles, and well approued by the moſt ancient Fathers.

M. Harding.

Councels. The ancient Fathers are but men, if they pleaſe you not. But if ye find any colour of aduantage but in the new Schoolemen, ye make much of it. So that your owne opinion is the rule to eſteeme them, or deſpiſe them. Councels ye admit as your phanſie and pleaſure leadeth, ſometimes three, ſometimes foure, ſometimes fiue or ſix. But all ye would neuer admit: and yet ſo many as are generall and haue bin confirmed by the See Apoſtolike, they are all of like authority. Concerning Ceremonies, if yee ſhew vs not the vſe of Chriſme, in your Churches, if the ſigne of the Croſſe be not borne before you in Proceſſions and otherwheres vſed, if holy water be aboliſhed, if lights at the Goſpell and Communion be not had, if peculiar veſtiments for Deacons, Prieſts, Biſhops, be taken away, and many ſuch other the like: iudge ye, whether ye haue duly kept the old Ceremonies of the Church.

Ceremonies of the Church aboliſhed by the Goſpellers.

As for your new traditions, rites, and ceremonies, I cannot tell what to make of them, nor whether I may ſo terme them.

No maner of thing haue we changed, that is of neceſſity either to be beleeued, or to be obſerued, aut reſpuere, ſi fortè inuenerimus, quòd aliter ſenſerint, quàm Veritas habet. Talis ſum ego in ſcriptis aliorum: tales volo eſſe intellectores meorum: We receiue not the diſputations or writings of any men, be they neuer ſo Catholike, or praiſe-worthie, as we receiue the Canonicall Scriptures: but that, ſauing the reuerence due vnto them, wee may well reproue or reſuſe ſome things in their writings, if it happen we find, they haue otherwiſe thought, then the truth may beare them. Such am I in the writings of others: and ſuch would I wiſh others to be in mine. Likewiſe he writeth to S. Hierome, Non puto, Frater, te velle Libros tuos legi, tanquam Apoſtolorum, aut Prophetarum: I reckon not, my Brother, that ye would haue vs ſo to read your Bookes, as if they were written by the Apoſtles, or Prophets. It is certaine, Tertullian, Cyprian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Papius, Irenæus, Victorinus, Lactantius, Hilarius, and other ancient Fathers were oftentimes much deceiued. S. Hierome ſcoffeth at S. Ambroſes Commentaries vpon Luke, and calleth them Nugas, trifles, and nicknameth S. Ambroſe, ſometimes calling him Coruus, ſometime Cornicula. Likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, Eccleſiaſtici Iudices, vt homines, plærunque falluntur: The Iudges, or Doctors of the Church, as beeing men, are often deceiued. And Thomas of Aquine ſaith, Non tenemur de neceſſitate Salutis, credere non ſolùm Doctoribus Eccleſiæ, vt Hieronymo, aut Auguſtino, ſed ne ipſi quidem Eccleſiæ, niſi in his quæ pertinent ad ſubſtantiam Fidei: Wee are not bound vpon the neceſſity of Saluation to beleeue not onely the Doctours of the Church, as Hierome, or Auguſtine, but alſo neither the Church it ſelfe, ſauing onely in matters concerning the ſubſtance of faith.

The Biſhop of Saresburie.

We allow the ancient Fathers the ſame credit, that they themſelues haue euer deſired. S. Auguſtine hereof writeth thus, Neque quorumuis Diſputationes, quantumuis Catholicorum, & Laudatorum hominum, velut Scripturas Canonicas habere debemus, vt nobis non liceat, ſalua reuerentia, quæ illis debetur, aliquid in illorum Scriptis improbare, aut Aug. ad Fortunas. Epiſt. 118.

Touching the authority of Councels, S. Auguſtine ſaith, Ipſa plenaria Concilia ſæpe priora à poſterioribus emendantur, cum aliquo experimento aperitur, quod clauſum erat: The very generall Councels are often corrected, the former by the later, as often as by triall and experience the thing is opened, that before was ſhut. Likewiſe Panormitane ſaith, Plus credendum eſt vni priuato fideli, quàm toti Concilio & Papæ, ſi meliorem habeat authoritatem, vel rationem: Wee ought to giue more credite to one priuate Lay man, then to the whole Councell and to the Pope, if he bring better authority, and more reaſon. If the Councell bee wicked, and caried with malice, as many haue beene, ſpecially within theſe few late hundred yeares, wee ſay, as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Inite conſilium, & diſſipabitur: loquimini verbum, & non ſtabit: quia nobiſcum eſt Dominus: Take counſell together, and it ſhall be broken: Speake the word, and it ſhall not hold. For the Lord is with vs.

Eſa. 8. 10.

As for the late Schole Doctours, your ſelues weigh them as little, as no man leſſe. You ſay in your common talkes, Bernardus non vidit omnia: you haue controlled your Doctour of all Doctours, Peter Lombard, with this common Caueat in the margine, Hic Magiſter non tenetur: Heere our Doctour is no Doctour. You your ſelfe M. Harding, in this your very booke againſt our Apologie ſay, that your Doctour Gratian was deceiued, and in ſtead of Anacletus alleged Calixtus. You your ſelfe againe ſay, If in a ſecret point of learning S. Auguſtine, or S. Cyprian teach ſingularly, we follow them not: much leſſe do we bind our ſelues to beleeue, whatſoeuer Albertus Pighius hath written. And againe, Wee bind our ſelues neither to the words of Sylueſter, nor of Pighius. And againe, Wee take not vpon vs to defend all that the Canoniſts or Schoolemen ſay or write. And another of your companie ſaith, that your Doctour Gratian hath publiſhed great vntruths, and wilfully falſified the Generall Councell. Nomen vniuerſalis, ſaith hee, aſſutum eſt à Gratiano. Thus M. Harding, ye vſe your Doctours, euen as the Merchant vſeth his Counters: ſometime to ſtand for an hundred pounds, ſometime for a penny.

Copus. Dialog. 1 pag. 33.

But now let vs a little examine the particulars of your Bill. Ye come in with Proceſſions, with Lights, with Torches, with Tapers, with Chriſme, with Oile, with Tunicles, and Thiſibles, with holy Water, and holy Bread, and I know not what elſe: as if all theſe things had deſcended directly from the Apoſtles, and without the ſame the Church of God were no Church.

Verily, M. Harding, we hate not any of all theſe things. For we know, they are the Creatures of God. But you haue ſo miſuſed them, or rather ſo defiled, and beraied them with your ſuperſtitions and ſo haue with the ſame mocked, and deceiued Gods people, that we can no longer continue them without great conſcience. I will paſſe ouer the reſt, and ſpeake onely of your Oile, wherof you ſeeme to make moſt account. In your Pontificall thus are ye taught to bleſſe your Oile: Fiat Domine hoc Oleum te benedicente, vnctio Spiritualis ad purificationem mentis, & corporis: O Lord, let this Oile by thy bleſſing, bee made a ſpirituall ointment to purifie both ſoule and body. And againe, Emitte quæſumus, Sancte Pater, Spiritum Sanctum Paracletum tuum de cœlis in hanc pinguedinem Oliuæ, ad refectionẽ corporum, & ſanationem animarum: O holy Father, we beſeech thee, ſend downe thy holy ſpirit the comforter from heauen into this fatneſſe of the Oliue, to the refreſhing of body & ſoule. In like ſort ye are taught to pray ouer the ſicke: Per hanc ſanctam vnctionem, & ſuam pijſſimam miſericordiam ignoſcat tibi Deus, vt per hanc vnctionem habeas remiſſionem nem omnium peccatorum: By this holy anointing, and by his great mercy, God pardon thee, that by this anointing thou maiest haue remission of all thy sinnes. These things cannot be denied: they are written in all your Manuals, vsed and practised in all your Churches. Ye call it Holy Oile, and Oile of Saluation: Ye beare the people in hand that thereby they shall haue health of body and soule: and yet indeede ye haue no Chrisme at all. For Pope Innocentius saith, Chrisma conficitur ex oleo & balsamo: The Chrisme is made of oile and balsame. And to the making thereof the balsame is as necessary as the oile. But these many hundred yeeres ye haue had no balsame, nor hath there beene any to be had: therefore ye haue had no Chrisme this long while, but haue deceiued the people with quid pro quo, giuing them one thing for an other. Lights. Water. Extra. de sacra vnctione.

Now that your oile came not from the Apostles, your owne Doctour Panormitane is witnesse. For thus he writeth, Apostoli olim conferebant Spiritum sanctum sola manus impositione. Et quia hodiè Prælati non sunt ita beati, fuit institutum vt illi conferrent hoc Sacramentum cum Chrismate: The Apostles in old time gaue the holy Ghost onely by laying on of hands. But now adaies because Bishops be not so holy, order hath been taken that they should giue this Sacrament with Chrisme. Panormitan. de Consue. Cap. 5.

Neither is this matter so throughly approued by all antiquity as M. Harding imagineth. For Pope Innocentius is witnesse that in old times there were some that found fault with these doings. These be his words, Non Iudaizat Ecclesia cùm vnctionis celebrat Sacramentum, sicut antiqui mentiuntur: The Church is not Iewish in solemnizing the Sacrament of vnction, as the elders haue misreported. Extra de sacra vncti. vaguur.

Touching your Lights and Tapers, Beatus Rhenanus a man of great learning and iudgement, doubteth not but ye borrowed the vse thereof from the Heathens. I grant, the Christians in old time had Lights in their Churches when they met together at their Common praiers. But it appeareth by the ancient Fathers that the same lights serued to solace them against the darke, and not for any vse of Religion. S. Augustine saith, Vouent alius oleum, alius ceram ad luminaria noctis: They promise (to the Church) one oile, another wax, for the night Lights. Likewise saith Eusebius, κἀνταῦθα φῶς, ὅσον ἐξαρκέσει τοῖς εὐχομένοις: Ignis purus, quantum satis esset ad præbendum lumen precantibus: A cleere light, so much as might suffice the people at their praiers. So likewise saith S. Hierome, Cereos non clara luce accendimus, sed vt noctis tenebras hoc solatio temperemus: We light not our Tapers at mid day, but onely by this comfort to ease the darkenesse of the night. Therefore M. Harding vnto you that set vp Lights in your Churches, as your selfe say, to the honour of God, the ancient Father Lactantius saith thus, Num mentis suæ compos putandus est, qui authori & datori Luminis, candelarum & cerarum lumen offert pro munere? What, may we think he is well in his wits that vnto God the maker and giuer of light, will offer vp candles and tapers for a present? Verily, Tertullian saith, Accendant quotidie lucernas, quibus lux nulla est, &c. Illis competunt & testimonia tenebrarum, & auspicia pœnarum: Let them that haue no light (of God) set vp their tapers euery day, &c. To them belongeth both the testimony of darkenesse, and the beginning of paine. In Annotation. in 5 lib. contra Marcionem. Aug. de temp. in natali. Dom. Sermon 6. Euseb. de vita Const. Orat. 3. Hier. aduer. Vigilantium. M. Harding fol. 7 b. Lact. l. 6. cap. 2. Tertul. de Idolatria.

But what shall I say of your holy water? No doubt it must needs serue, as your oile doth, to the saluation of body and soule. Augustinus Steuchus, a principall Doctor of your side, saith, Non inane institutum est, quòd aquas sale & orationibus sanctificemus, vt ad eorum aspersum delicta nostra deleantur: It is no vaine inuention, that we hallow water with salt and praiers, that by the sprinkling thereof our sinnes may be forgiuen. Thus prophanelie and Heathen-like he writeth, as if the blood of Christ were quite dried vp. Aug. Steuchus in lib. numer. Cap 19.

Beside al this, one of your Doctors of Louaine telleth vs in good sadnes, by report of one of the Iesuites, that in India holie water is very holesome to driue away Mise, and to make barren women to conceiue. I faine not this matter: The place may bee seene. O M. Harding I must needes say of your company that one said sometime of the Grecians, These that call themselues Catholikes are euer children. Copus Dial. 1. Pag. 18 b. Ἕλληνες ἀεὶ παῖδες ἐστε. Plato in Timæo: & Theodoret. de corrigendis Græcorum affectibus Lib. 1

Ye say ye haue changed nothing that is of necessity either to be beleeued, or to be obserued. What necessity ye meane I cannot well coniecture. For when you list, your holy water and holy bread must needs be of necessity. But indeed of the ancient godly orders of the Church ye haue in a manner left nothing, vnlesse it be such as ye might best haue spared: and the same ye haue so defaced with superstition, that it hath now quite lost his former vse, and is not the same it was before. Certainly if you had changed nothing, then should you haue now no priuate Masse.

Therefore we may iustly say to you as Tertullian said in like case vnto the Romane Heathens: Vbi Religio? Vbi veneratio Maioribus debita? Habitu, victu, instructu, sensu, ipso denique sermone proauis renunciastis. Laudatis semper antiquitatem: nouè decidie viuitis. Per quod ostenditur, dum a bonis maiorum institutis decediti, eâ vos retinere Tertullian. in Apologetico.

The Apology, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 10.

And that this matter ſhould not ſeem to be done but vpon priuy ſlãder, and to be toſſed to & fro in a corner only to ſpight vs, there haue bin beſides willy procured by the B. of Rome certaine perſons of eloquence enough, and not vnlearned neither, which ſhould put their helpe to this cauſe, now almoſt deſpaired of: and ſhold poliſh & ſet forth the ſame, both in bookes, & with long tales, to the end that when the matter was trimlie & eloquently handled, ignorant and vnſkilful perſons might ſuſpect there was ſome great thing in it. Indeed they perceiued that their own cauſe did euery where goe to wrack, that their ſleights were now eſpied, and leſſe eſteemed, and that their helps did daily fail them, and that their matter ſtood altogether in great need of a cunning ſpokeſman.

M. Harding.

We cannot deſpaire of this cauſe, vnleſſe we would forſake our faith, as yee haue. For beleeuing Chriſt, which our faith leadeth vs vnto, we cannot miſtruſt the continuance of this cauſe Heauen and Earth ſhall paſſe, but my words ſhall not paſſe, ſaith Truth it ſelfe. And his words tell vs that he will be with his Church all daies to the worlds end: and that hee hath beſought his Father to giue to it the Spirit of Truth, to remaine with it for euer. Then be we moſt aſſured of this cauſe. We tel you therefore, it ſtandeth, and ſhall ſtand by Chriſts preſence, and by the holy Ghoſts aſſiſtance, to the end. Your cauſe yet ſtandeth not, but wauereth and tottereth, as that which S. Paul termeth a puffe of doctrine, and doubtleſſe ſhortly fall it ſhall, as all Hereſies haue fallen.

We cannot deſpaire, ſaith M. Harding, of the continuance of our cauſe. For Heauen and Earth ſhall paſſe, but Chriſts words ſhall not paſſe. Hee will bee with vs all daies to the worlds end, &c. Theſe words M. Harding, be true and certaine: and therefore our hope is the firmer. The Church of God ſhall ſtand ſtill, yea though Rome were poſſeſſed with Antichriſt.

Mat. 15. 13. Hilar. in c. 15. Matth. Canon. 14. in fine. It is true that Chriſt ſaith, Euery plant which my heauenly father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted vp. Vpon which words S. Hilary ſaith, Significat Traditionem hominum eruendam eſſe, cuius fauore tranſgreſſi ſunt præcepta Legis: He meaneth that the Tradition of man, for which Traditions ſake they haue broken the Law of God, ſhall be taken vp by the roots. Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe, and your fantaſies and deuices, M. Harding, ſhall paſſe: the Lord hath ſpoken it: but the word of God, and his Church ſhall endure for euer.

But M. Hardings Almanake ſaith, our doctrine ſhall fall, and that very ſhortly. Herein I profeſſe I haue no ſkil. Gods will be done. It is his cauſe: whatſoeuer ſhall happen, his name be bleſſed for euer. In like ſort the Heathens in old times, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, vaunted themſelues againſt the faith of Chriſt: Ad certum tempus ſunt Chriſtiani: poſteà peribunt, & redibunt Idola: redibit quod erat anteà. Verùm tu, cùm expectas, miſer Infidelis vt tranſeant Chriſtiani, tranſis ipſe ſine Chriſtianis: Theſe Chriſtians are but for a while: fall they ſhall, and that ſhortly. Then ſhall our Idols come againe, and it ſhall be as it was before. But O thou miſerable Infidel, while thou lookeſt that the Chriſtians ſhould paſſe, thou paſſeſt away thy ſelfe without the Chriſtians. Againe he ſaith, Ecce veniet tempus vt finiantur, & non ſint Chriſtiani. Sicut cœperunt ab aliquo tempore, ita vſque ad certum tempus erunt Sed cum iſta dicunt, ſine fine moriuntur, & permanet Eccleſia prædicando brachium Domini omni generationi venturæ: *They ſay, behold the day will come, when all theſe Chriſtians ſhall haue an end. As they had a time to beginne, ſo ſhall they haue a time to continue. But while they make theſe crakes, they themſelues die without end. But

But ye say, The authors and professors of our Doctrine be damned in hell fire, and cry Peccaui. This is a very terrible kinde of talke. But it is a rash part for you M. Harding, so suddenly to skip into Gods chaire, and there to pronounce your sentence definitiue like a Iudge. But God will iudge of your Iudgement. S. Augustine saith, Alia est Scilla terena, aliud Tribunal cœlorum. Ab inferiori sententia accipitur, à superiori corona: The earthly chaire is one thing, the iudgement seat in Heauen is an other. From the one wee receiue sentence, from the other we receiue a crowne. Oh, M. Harding, God grant you may once crie Peccaui, lest the time come that ye shal crie out, as it is written in the Booke of Wisdome: These are they whom we sometime had in derision, and in a parable of reproach. We fooles thought their life madnesse, and their end without honour. But now are they counted among the children of God, and their portion is among the Saints. Aug. in Psal. 36. par. 3. Sapient. 5.

NOw, as for those things which by them haue been laid against vs, in part they be manifestly false and condemned so by their owne iudgements which spake them: partly againe, though they be as false too indeed, yet beare they a certaine shew & colour of truth, so as the Reader (if he take not good heed) may easily be tripped and brought into error by them, especially when their fine & cunning tale is added thereunto. And part of them be of such sort as we ought not to shun them as crimes or faults, but to acknowledge & confesse them as things well done, and vpon very good reason. For shortly to say the truth, these folke falsly accuse & slander al our doings, yea the same things which they themselues cannot deny but to be rightly and orderly done: and for malice do so misconstrue and depraue al our sayings & doings, as though it were impossible that any thing could be rightly spoken or done by vs. They should more plainely & sincerely haue gone to worke, if they would haue dealt truly. But now they neither truly, nor sincerely, nor yet Christianly, but darkely & craftily charge and batter vs with lies, and do abuse the blindnesse & fondnesse of the people, together with the ignorance of Princes, to cause vs to be hated, and the truth to be suppressed.

This, lo ye, is the power of darkenesse, and of men which leane more to the amazed wondering of the rude multitude, and to darknesse, then they doe to truth and light: and as S. Hierome saith, doe openly gainesay the truth, closing vp their eies, and will not see, for the nonce. But we giue thanks to the most good & mighty God, that such is our cause, where against (when they would faineſt) they were able to vtter no despight, but the same which might as wel be wrested against the holy Fathers, against the Prophets, against the Apostles, against Peter, against Paul, and against Christ himselfe. Hier aduersus Ruffinum.

M. Harding.

The Catholikes doe not burden you with ought, wherein by their own iudgements they condemne themselues, as ye slander them, not onely heere, but oftentimes in your booke. For if they iudged otherwise, they would not wittingly do against their iudgement. That is the speciall property of an Heretike, whom S. Paul biddeth all men to auoid, knowing that he that is such, is peruerted, and seemeth euen condemned by his owne iudgement. Tim. 3.

They shew both your blasphemous heresies, and your wicked acts. Luther, ye know, powred out his heresies & villanies, &c. Your robbing of Churches, persecuting of men for standing stedfastly in the faith of the holy forefathers, your incestuous marriages of Monks, Friers, and Nuns, your breach of solemn vowes for fleshly pleasure, your pophaning and abandoning of holy Sacraments, your contempt of ancient and godly ordinances & discipline of the Church, and such other things of like estimation.

For indeede the Catholiks do persecute you (if such deserued intreating of euill persons may be called persecution) & al good folk besides, we grant, and shall so do so long as they loue the truth, and keepe them in the vnity of the Church; yet with no other minde doe they persecute you then Sara did Agar, then Christ the Iewes, whom he whipt out of the temple; then Peter did Simon Magus. Genes. 10. Iohn 2. Egesippus.

And to be ſhoꝛt, M. Harding, it might haue pleaſed you to remember that your ſelfe in your firſt booke, in the defenſe of your pꝛiuate Maſſe, haue written thus: Marry, I denie not, but that it were more commendable, and more godly on the Churches part, if many well diſpoſed and examined would be partakers of the bleſſed Sacrament with the Prieſt.

All theſe things M. You grant ye perſecute your bꝛethꝛen where ye haue the Swoꝛd, and may perſecute: but as Sara did Agar, as Chriſt did the Iewes: and not otherwiſe. Verily, M. Harding, that Chriſt oꝛ Sara were perſecutoꝛs I haue not greatly heard, but I remember Chryſoſtome ſaith thus:

Nunquid ouis lupum perſequitur aliquando? Non, ſed lupus ouem. Sic enim Caim perſecutus eſt Abel, non Abel Caim. Sic Iſmael perſecutus eſt Iſaac, non Iſaac Iſmael. Sic Iudæi Chriſtum, non Chriſtus Iudæos. Hæretici Chriſtianos, non Chriſtiani Hæreticos. Ergo ex fructibus eorum cognoſcetis eos: What, doe the ſheepe perſecute the Wolfe at any time? No, but the wolfe doth perſecute the ſheepe. For ſo Caim perſecuted Abel, not Abel Caim. So Iſmael perſecuted Iſaac, not Iſaac Iſmael. So the Iewes perſecuted Chriſt, not Chriſt the Iewes. So the Heretikes perſecute the Chriſtians, not the Chriſtians the Heretikes. Therefore ye ſhall know them by their fruits.

But ye pꝛetend great good wil, and ſay ye perſecute and murder your bꝛethꝛen foꝛ loue, as Chꝛiſt perſecuted the Iewes. So I trow, Ariſtophanes ſaith, Philippides toke a cudgell and beat his father, and all foꝛ loue. Howbeit M. Harding, neither are you armed as Chriſt was armed, noꝛ was Chriſt armed as you are armed. I muſt ſay to you as S. Auguſtine ſaith vnto the Heretikes the Donatiſts: Hanc formam ne ab ipſis quidem Iudæis perſecutoribus accepiſtis. Illi enim perſecuti ſunt carnem ambulantis in terra: vos Euangelium ſedentis in cœlo: *Ye learned not this forme of perſecution, no not of the Iewes. So Moſes ſaith, Iſmael plaied or ſported with Iſaac. But S. Paul ſaith, the ſame playing and ſpoꝛting was perſecution. Foꝛ thus he wꝛiteth: He that was after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was after the Spirit.

Harding to say, They be blasphemous heresies: wicked acts: Luthers heresies and villanies: robbing of Churches: breaches of vowes: fleshly pleasures: abandoning of the holy Sacraments: malices, slanders & lies. And besides these things in effect he answereth nothing. Now to answer nothing with some thing, it were worth nothing. Dist. 13. Item. In margine.

Now therefore, if it be lawfull for the folkes to be eloquent & fine-tongued in speaking of euil, surely it becommeth not vs in our cause, being so very good, to be dumbe in answering truely. For men to bee careleſſe what is spoken by them and their own matter, be it neuer so falsely and slanderously spoken, (especially whē it is such that the Maiesty of God, and the cause of Religion may thereby be dammaged) is the part doubtlesse of dissolute & retchlesse persons, and of them which wickedly winke at the iniuries don vnto the name of God. For although other wrongs, yea oftentimes great, may be borne & dissembled of a milde and Christian man, yet he that goeth smoothly away, and dissembleth the matter when he is noted of heresie, Ruffinus was wont to deny that man to be a Christian. We therefore will doe the same thing which all lawes, which natures owne voice doth command to be done, and which Christ himselfe did in like case, when he was checked and reuiled: to the intent we may put off from vs these mens slanderous accusations, and may defend soberly and truly our owne cause and innocencie.

M. Harding.

Ye haue not proued the truth to be of your side, nor euer shalbe able to proue, maintaining the Doctrin of the Lutherans, Zwinglias, & Caluinists, as ye do. Now al depēdeth of that point. And because ye haue not the truth, whatsoeuer ye say, it is soon confuted: & whatsoeuer ye bring, it is to no purpose.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This is the very issue of the case: whether the Doctrine that we professe be the truth, or no. Which thing through Gods grace by this our conference in part may appeare. I beseech God the Author of all truth, and the Father of light, so to open our hearts, that the thing that is the truth indeed, may appeare to vs to be the truth.

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuision 2.

For Christ verily, when the Pharises charged him with sorcerie, as one that had some familiar spirits, and wrought many things by their helpe: I (said he) haue not the Diuel, but do glorifie my Father: but it is you that haue dishonoured me, and put me to rebuke and shame. And S. Paul, when Festus the Lieutenant scorned him as a mad man: I (said he) most deare Festus, am not mad, as thou thinkest, but I speake the words of truth and soberneſſe. And the ancient Christians, when they were slandered to the people for mankillers, for adulterers, for committers of incest, for disturbers of the Common weales, and did perceiue that by such slanderous accusations the Religion which they professed might be brought in question, namely, if they should seeme to hold their peace, and in manner confesse the fault: lest this might hinder the free course of the Gospel, they made Orations, they put vp Supplications, and made meanes to Emperours and Princes that they might defend themselues and their fellowes in open audience. Iohn 8. 49. Acts 26. 25.

M. Harding.

When ye proue that ye haue the truth, then may ye be admitted in your defence to allege the example of Christ of S. Paul, and of the first Christians But now we tel you, being as you are, these examples serue you to no purpose. And for ought ye haue said hitherto, the Anabaptists Libertines. Zwenkfeldians, Nestorians, Eunomians, Arians, and al other pestiferous Heretikes might say the same as wel as ye. Christ was charged of the Iewes with vsing the power of impure spirits, blasphemously: Paul Luk. 11.

was ſcorned of Feſtus as a mad man, without cauſe: The ancient Chriſtians were accuſed by the infidels of hainous crimes, falſly. But ye are accuſed of Hereſies, & ſundry impieties, by godly, wiſe, and faithfull men, vpon zeale, by good aduice, and truly. And as for thoſe ancient Chriſtians, when they made Apologies or Orations in the defenſe of the Chriſtian faith, they did it ſo as became Chriſtian men, plainely and openly. Either they offered them to the Emperours with their owne hands, or put to their names, & ſignified to whom they gaue the ſame. As S. Hilarie deliuered a booke in defenſe of the Catholike faith againſt the Arians, to Conſtantius. Melito & Apollinaris wrote their Apologies to the Emperors. S. Iuſtine the Philoſopher and Martyr gaue his firſt Apologie for the Chriſtians, to the Senate of the Romans, the ſecond to Antonius Pius Emperor. Tertullian to the Romans. S. Apollonius the Romane Senator & Martyr did read his booke openly in the Senate houſe, which he had made in defenſe of the Chriſtian faith. But ye do your things that ought to be done openly, in hucker mucker. Ye ſet foorth your Apology in the name of the Church of England, before any meane part of the Church were priuie to it, & ſo as though either ye were aſhamed of it, or afraid to abide by it. The inſcription of it is directed neither to pope, nor Emperor, nor to any Prince, nor to the Church, nor to the generall Councell then beeing when ye wrote it, as it was moſt conuenient. There is no mans name ſet to it. It is printed without priuilege of the Prince, contrary to the Law in that behalfe made: allowed neither by Parliament, nor by Proclamation, nor agreed vpon by the Clergy in publike & lawfull Synode. This packing becommeth you: it becommeth not the vpright profeſſors of the truth. Wherefore your vnlawfull booke, as it is, ſo it may bee called an Inuectiue, or rather a Famous Libell, and ſlanderous Writ, as that which ſeemeth to haue beene made in a corner, and caſt abroad in the ſtreets, the authors whereof the ciuill Law puniſheth ſharply.

Acts 26. Tertull. in Apolog. The Apologies of the old Fathers were lawfully publiſhed. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 16. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 5. ca. 21.

Vntruth.

The Apologie a famous Libell.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

How far forth theſe examples may ſerue vs, we remit the iudgement thereof to the diſcreet Chriſtian Reader. It is not enough thus to cry out, Impieties and Hereſies. M. Hardings bare word in this behalfe is not ſufficient to warrant an euidence. Certainly among other great comforts that we haue in Gods mercies, this is one, and not the leaſt, that touching the innocency and right of our cauſe, we may ſay to you as Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſeis, We haue not the diuell, but we glorifie our Father: Or as S. Paul ſaid vnto Feſtus, We are not mad (M. Harding) as ye report of vs: but we vtter vnto you the words of truth & ſobriety.

Iohn 8. 49. Act. 26. 25.

But this is a pitious fault. The names of all the Biſhops, Deanes, Archdeacons, Parſons, Vicars, and Curates of England are not ſet to our Apologie. It is directed neither to the Emperour, nor to the Pope, nor to the Councell. Neither is it printed with priuelege of the Prince. This laſt clauſe is a manifeſt vntruth, and may eaſily be reproued by the Printer. Hereof ye conclude, It is a ſlanderous Libell, and was written vnder a hedge, and, as you ſay, in hucker mucker.

First, were it granted that all ye ſay of Hilarie, Melito, Iuſtinus, Tertullian, and Apollonius were true, yet muſt it néeds follow that all bookes that are not ſubſcribed with the Authors names were written in a corner? Firſt to beginne with the Scriptures, tell vs, M. Harding, who wrote the bookes of Geneſis, of Exodus, of Leuiticus, of Numerie, of Deuteronomium, of Ioſue, of the Iudges, of the Kings, of the Chronicles, of Iob, &c. Who wrote theſe bookes, I ſay? Who authorized them? Who ſubſcribed his name? Who ſet to his ſeale? The booke of Wiſdome by ſome is fathered vpon Philo, by ſome vpon Salomon. The Epiſtle vnto the Hebrewes ſome ſay was written by S. Paul, ſome by Clemens, ſome by Barnabas, ſome by ſome other: and ſo are we vncertaine of the Authors name. S. Marke, S. Luke, S. Iohn, neuer once named themſelues in their Goſpels. The Apoſtles Creede, the Canons of the Apoſtles, by what names are they ſubſcribed? How are they authorized? To what Pope, to what Emperour were they offered? To leaue others the ancient Doctours of the Church, which, as you know, are often miſnamed, Ambroſe for Auguſtine, Greeke for Latine, new for old: your Doctor of Doctors, the faireſt flower and crop of your Garland, Gratianus, is ſo well knowne by his name, that wiſe men cannot well tell what name to giue him. Eraſmus ſaith of him thus, Quisquis fuit, ſiue Gratianus, ſiue Craſſianus: What ſoeuer name we may giue him, be it Gratianus, or Craſſianus. And againe he ſaith, Eruditi negant illam Gratiani, neſcio cuius, congeriem vlla vnquam publica Eccleſiæ authoritate fuiſſe comprobatam: The learned ſay that Gratians collection, or heape of matters, was neuer allowed by any publike authority of the Church. And againe, Non conſtat vllis argumentis quis fuerit Gratianus, quo tempore opus ſuum exhibuerit, cuius Pontificis, cuius Concilij fuerit authoritate comprobatum: It cannot appeare by any tokens of record, neither what this Gratian was, nor at what time hee offered vp his booke, nor what Councell, nor what Pope allowed it.

Eraſ. in Præfatione in 4. Tom. Hieron.

Who ſubſcribed the late Councell of Colaine? Who ſubſcribed the booke not long ſithence ſet abroad vnder the name of the Church of Colaine, and named Antididagma? To be ſhort, who ſubſcribed your own late booke, intituled The Apology of Priuate Maſſe? Where were they written? Where were they ſubſcribed? By what authority, and vnder what names were they allowed? I will ſay nothing of your late famous Volume bearing the name of Marcus Antonius Conſtantius. This booke, as you ſée, hath thrée great names, names, notwithstanding the Authour himselfe had but two: and yet not one of all these three. What M. Harding, would you make your brethren beleeue that all these be but slanderous writers, deuised onely in hucker mucker, and vnder a hedge?

The decree the Apostles made in the fiftéenth Chapter of the Acts, it appeareth not, it was so curiously subscribed with al their names. The Protestation of the Bohemians in the Councel of Basile, the Confession of the Churches of Geneua and Heluetia, for ought that I know, haue no such publike Subscriptions. Neither is it necessary, nor commonly vsed to ioine priuate mens names to publike matters, neither in so mighty and ample a Realme, vpon all incident occasions is it so easie to be done. Briefely, our Apology is confirmed by as many names as the high Court of Parliament of England is confirmed.

Neither was the same conceiued in so darke a corner as M. Harding imagineth. For it was afterward imprinted in Latine at Paris: and hath béene sithence translated into the French, the Italian, the Dutch, and the Spanish tongues: and hath béene sent and borne abroad into France, Flanders, Germanie, Spaine, Poole, Hungary, Denmarke, Sueueland, Scotland, Italie, Naples, and Rome it selfe, to the iudgement and triall of the whole Church of God. Yea it was read, and sharpely considered in your late Couent at Trident, and great threats made there, that it should be answered, and the matter by two notable learned Bishops taken in hand, the one a Spaniard, the other an Italian: which two notwithstanding, these fiue whole yéeres haue yet done nothing, nor (I beléeue) intend any thing to doe. Indéed certaine of your brethren haue béene often gnawing at it; but such as care nothing, nor is cared, what they write.

But if names be so necessary, we haue the names of the whole Clergie of England, to confirme the Faith of our Doctrin, & your name, M. Harding as you can wel remember, amongst the rest: vnlesse as ye haue already denied your Faith, so ye will now also deny your name. To conclude, it is greater modesty to publish our owne booke without name, then, as you doe, to publish other mens bookes in your owne names. For indéede M. Harding, the bookes ye send so thicke ouer are not yours. Ye are but translators: ye are no authors. If euery bird should fetch againe his own feathers, alas, your poore chickins would die for cold. But you say, we offered not our booke to the Pope. No, neither ought we so to doe. He is not our Bishop: He is not our Iudge. We may say vnto him as the Emperor Constantius said sometime to Pope Liberius, Quota es tu pars orbis terrarum? what great portion art thou of the whole world? As for your Councell of Trident, God wot, it was a silly Couent, for ought that may appeare by their conclusions. Theodoret. in Hist. Eccles.

We offered the defense and profession of our Doctrine vnto the whole Church of God: and so vnto the Pope, and to the Councel too, if they be any part or member of the Church: and by Gods mercy shall euer be able in all places both with our hands and with our bodies to yéeld an account of the hope we haue in Iesus Christ. Whereas it liketh you to terme our Apology a slanderous Libell, I doubt not but whosoeuer shall indifferently consider your booke, shall thinke M. Hardings tongue wanteth no slander.

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuision 3.

But we truly, seeing that so many thousands of our brethren in these last twenty yeeres haue borne witnesse vnto the Truth, in the midst of most painfull torments that could be deuised: and when Princes desirous to restraine the Gospel, sought many waies, but preuailed nothing, & that now almost the whole world doth begin to open their eies to behold the light: we take it, that our cause hath already beene sufficiently declared and defended, and thinke it not needfull to make many words, seeing the matter saith enough for it selfe.

M. Harding.

The reasons and examples ye bring for it, conclude nothing: because lacking truth, ye build vpon a false ground, whatsoeuer ye set vp, eft soons it falleth, being staied by no iust proofe. Here ye go forth, and faine would ye prop vp that matter: but your reasons be as weake as before. I here haue not so many thousands of your brethren beene burnt for Heresie in these last twenty yeeres as yee pretend. But when ye come to boasting, then haue ye a great grace in vsing the Figure Hyperbole. Then scores, be hundreds: hundreds be thousands: thousands be millions.

But what was Michael Seruetus the Arian, who was burnt at Geneua by procurement of Caluin a brother of yours? Dauid George that tooke vpon him to be Christ, who was taken vp after he was buried, and burnt at Basile, was he your brother? To come neere home, Ioan of Kent, that filth, who tooke forth a lesson further then you taught her (I trow) or yet preach, was she a sister of yours? So many Adamites, so many Swenkfeldians, so many hundreds of Anabaptists and Libertines as haue within your twenty yeeres beene rid out of their liues by fire, sword, and water, in sundry parts of Christendome, were they all of your blessed brotherhead?

And this is the chiefe argument ye make in all that huge dunghill of your stinking Martyres, which ye haue intituled Acts and Monuments. But we tell you, it is not death that iustifieth the cause of dying; but it is the cause of dying that iustifieth the death. Acts and Monuments.

Princes (yee say) were desirous to restraine your Gospel, and though they went about it by many waies, yet preuailed they nothing. Therefore your Doctrine must needes be the true Gospel. As good an argument as this is, may theeues make in their defense. For Princes bee desirous to keepe their Dominions from robbing, and haue euer deuised straight lawes and punishments for restraint of theeues: yet be theeues euery where, and theft is daily committed. A weake argument of truth.

And whereas your Gospell is a grosse Gospell, a carnall Gospel, a belly Gospell, wonder it is not, if those people be not wholly withdrawn from assenting to the same, who bee not of the finest wits, and be much giuen to the seruice of the bellie, and of the things beneath the belly. Yet where the Princes haue vsed most diligence, and best means to stop the course of your Heresies, there the people remain most Catholike: as euery man may iudge by view of Italy, Spaine, Base Almaine, and France, before that weighty Scepter by Gods secret prouidence for punishment of sinne, was committed to feeble handes, that for tender age were not able to beare it. This carnall Gospell soon taketh place amongst carnall heares.

Your other argument, whereby ye would perswade your Gospell to be the truth is, that now (as ye crake) almost the whol world doth begin to open their eies to behold the light. This argument seemeth maruelous well for Antichrist. And truely if he be not already come, ye may very well seeme to be his forerunners. Nay sirs, if it be true that ye say, that almost the whole world looketh that way, knowing that in the latter daies, and toward the end of the world, iniquity shall abound, and the charity of the more part shall wax cold; we may rather make a contrary argument, and iudge your Gospell to be erroneous and false, because the multitude is so ready to receiue it. Againe, Christ hath not loued his Church so little, as that the world should now begin to open their eies to behold the light. For the same cause presupposeth a former general darknesse, It stādeth not with Christs promises made to the Church, touching his being with the Church all daies to the worlds end, and the holy Ghosts remaining with it the Spirit of truth for euer, that he should suffer his Church to continue in darknesse and lacke of truth these thousand yeers past, and now at the latter daies to reueale the truth of his Gospel by Apostates, Vow-breakers, Church-robbers, and such other most vnlike to the Apostles. The argument of the defenders seruing well for Antichrist. Matth 24. The argument of multitude returned vpon the defenders to a contrary conclusion. Matth 18. Iohn 14.

What soeuer we say, here appeareth smal weight in M. Hardings sayings. We make no boast of the numbers and multitudes of our Martyres. And yet, as S Paul saith, if we should needs boast, we should chiefely boast of such our infirmities. But we reioice with them, and giue God thanks in their behalfe, for that it hath pleased him to prepare their hearts vnto temptation, to trie and purifie them as gold in the Furnace, and to keepe them faithfull vnto the end. 2. Cor. 11. 30.

As for Dauid George, and Seruete the Arian, and such other the like, they were yours, M. Harding, they were not of vs. You brought them vp, the one in Spaine, the other in Flanders. We detected their heresies, and not you. We arraigned them. We condemned them. We put them to the execution of the Lawes. It seemeth very much to call them our brothers, because we burnt them. It is knowne to children, it is not the death, but the cause of the death that maketh a Martyr. S. Augustine saith, Tres erant in cruce: Vnus Saluator: alter saluandus: tertius damnandus. Omnium par pœna, sed dispar causa: There were three hanging on the Crosse: The first was the Sauiour: the second to bee saued: the third to be damned. The paine of all three was one, but the cause was diuers. Aug. in Psal. 34. par. 2.

Your Anabaptists, and Zuenkfeldians we know not. They finde harbour amongst you in Austria, Slesia, Morauia, and in such other Countries and Cities, where the Gospell of Christ is suppressed: but they haue no acquaintance with vs, neither in England, nor in Germanie, nor in France, nor in Scotland, nor in Denmarke, nor in Sueden, nor in any place else, where the Gospell of Christ is clerely preached. But it hath beene your great pollicy these many late yeeres, when ye murdered the Saints of God, first to rote out their tongues, for feare of speaking, and then afterward to tell the people they were Anabaptists, or Arians, or what ye listed. With such pollicy Nero sometime that bloody Tyrant burnt the Christians in heapes together, and made open Proclamations, that they were Traitours and Rebels, and had fired the City of Rome. Sueton. Tranquillus in Nerone.

It pleaseth you for lacke of other euasion, to cal the story of Martyres a dunghil of Lies. But these Lies shall remaine in record for euer, to testifie, and to condemne your bloody doings. Ye haue imprisoned your brethren, ye haue stript them naked, ye haue scourged them with roddes, ye haue burnt their hands and Armes with flaming Torches, ye haue famished them, ye haue drowned them, ye haue summoned them being dead to appeare before you out of their graues, ye haue ript vp their buried carkasses, ye haue burnt them, yee haue thrown them out into the dunghill: yee toke a poore babe falling from his mothers wombe, and in most cruell and barbarous manner threw him into the fire.

All these things M. Harding, are true: they are no lies. The eies and consciences of many thousands can witnesse your doings. The blood of innocent Abel crieth to God from the earth: and vndoubtedly he will require it at your hands. Chrysostome saith, as it is alleaged before, Quem videris in sanguine persecutionis gaudentem, is Lupus est: Chrys. in Mat. Homil. 19.

eſt: Whoſoeuer hath pleaſure in the blood of perſecution, the ſame is a Wolfe. Ye ſlew your bre-thren ſo cruelly, not for murder, or robbery, or any other grieuous crime they had committed, but onely for that they truſted in the liuing God. Howbeit, we may ſay with the old Father Tertullian, Crudelitas veſtra noſtra gloria eſt: Your cruelty is our glory. Tertull. ad Scapulam.

Whereas we auouch the power and authority of Gods holy word, for that the more it is troden downe, the more it groweth, and for that the Kings and Princes of this world with all their puiſance and policie were neuer able to rote it out, your anſwer is, that this reaſon may ſerue theeues as well as vs. To diſſemble your odious compariſons, how lightly ſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe you to weigh this reaſon, yet your forefathers the Phariſes in old time ſeemed to make ſome account of it. For thus they murmured and miſliked among themſelues: Videris nos nihil proficere. Ecce mundus totus poſt eum abijt: Yee ſee we can doe no good. Loe the whole world (for all that we can doe) is gone after him. Tertullian likewiſe ſaith, Exquiſitior quæque crudelitas veſtra illecebra magis eſt Sectæ. Plures efficimur quoties metimur à vobis. Semen eſt ſanguis Chriſtianorum: The greateſt cruelty that ye can deuiſe is an entiſement to our Sect. How many of vs ſoeuer yee murder when yee come to the view, ye finde vs more and more. The ſeed of this increaſe is Chriſtian blood. So S. Auguſtine, Ligabantur, includebantur, cædebantur, torquebantur, vrebantur; & multiplicabantur: They were fettered, they were impriſoned, they were beaten, they were racke, they were burnt; and yet they multiplied. S. Cyprian ſaith, Sacerdos Dei Euangelium tenens, & Chriſti precepta cuſtodiens, occidi poteſt, vinci non poteſt: The Prieſt of God holding the Teſtament in his hand, killed he may be, but ouercome he cannot be: So likewiſe Nazianzene, Morte viuit: vulnere naſcitur: depaſtum augetur: By death is liueth: by wounding it ſpringeth: by diminiſhing it increaſeth.

John 12.19. Tertullian. in Apologetico. Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 22. cap. 6. Cyp. l. 1. Ep. 3. Gregorius Nazianzen. in reditum ſuum ex agro. Θαλάττῃ ζῇ, καὶ πιμελᾶται, καὶ αὔξεται διαπαιόμενον.

Thus theſe holy Fathers, when they ſaw the Goſpell of Chriſt encreaſed and grew by perſecution, contrary to all iudgement of reaſon and worldly policie, they were enforced, contrary to M. Hardings iudgement, therein to acknowledge the mighty power, and hand of God, and an vndoubted teſtimony of the truth. Iuſtinus a godly learned Father and Martyr, ſaith thus of himſelfe, Cùm audirem Chriſtianos publicè traduci & exagitari ab omnibus, viderem autem eos ad mortem, & ad omnia quæ ad terrorem excogitari poſſent, eſſe intrepidos, cogitabam nullo modo poſſe fieri vt illi in aliquo ſcelere viuerent: When I (being an Heathen and one of Paltoes ſcholers) hard that the Chriſtians were accuſed and reuiled of all men, and yet ſaw them go to their death, and to all maner terrible and euell torments, quietly and without feare, I thought with my ſelfe, it was not poſſible that ſuch men ſhould liue in any wickedneſſe. The like writeth Sozomenus of the Chriſtians in the Primitiue Church: Nec adulatione victi, nec minis perterriti, magnũ omnibus argumentum dabant, ſeſe de maximis præmijs in certamen deſcendere: The Chriſtians neither relenting by faire meanes, nor ſhrinking for threats, made it well appeare to euery man that it was for ſome great reward they ſuffered ſuch trouble. Euſeb. l. 4. c. 8. Sozo. l. 1. ca. 1. Δῆλον πᾶσιν ἐπέφαινον, ὡς ὑπὲρ μεγίστων ἄθλων τὰ χαλεπὰ ὑπομένουσιν.

These learned Fathers therefore ſaw that M. Harding could not ſee, the increaſing of the Goſpell through death and perſecution, maugre the might of worldly Princes, is an euident token of the truth. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, The Princes came and conſulted together againſt God, and againſt his Chriſt. But he that dwelleth in Heauen will laugh them to ſcorne. There is no wiſdome, there is no policy, there is no counſell againſt the Lord. Pſal. 2. 4. Prou. 21, 30.

Further you ſay, Our Goſpell is groſſe, and the people dull and ſenſuall, and giuen to their belly and beaſtly pleaſure, and therefore the apter and redier to receiue the ſame. O M. Harding, what a deſperate cauſe is this that cannot ſtand without ſuch manifeſt blaſphemy of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and deſpightfull reproach of Gods people? Certainely S. Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the power of God vnto Saluation. And the Prophet Dauid ſaith, The people is Chriſts inheritance. What hath the people ſo much offended you, that you ſhould either in this place ſo ſcornfully and ſo reprochfully report of them, or in your former booke ſo diſdainefully call them Swine and Dogs? Yet is it not ſo long ſithence your ſelfe were an earneſt profeſſor of the ſame Goſpell, were it neuer ſo groſſe. Where was then your ſineneſſe and ſharpneſſe of wit? where was your belly? where was the reſt? You ſhould not ſo ſone haue forgotten your owne ſelfe. Rom. 1. 16. Pſalm. 2. 8. M. Harding fol. 155. b.

Surely M Harding, neither will the ſenſuall man drowned in filthy and beaſtly pleaſures, take vp his Croſſe and follow Chriſt, and yeeld his necke to your ſword, or his body to your fire: neither is it a groſſe and ſenſuall Goſpel that will lead him to the ſame.

You ſay it ſtandeth not with Gods promiſe to forſake his Church a thouſand yeeres. It is much for you, M. Harding, openly to breake Gods Commandements, to defile his holy Sanctuary, to turne light into darkeneſſe, and darkeneſſe into light: and yet neuertheleſſe to binde him to his promiſe. All men be liers, but God onely is true,

Pſalm.50. and preuaileth when he is iudged. God knoweth his owne. Chriſt will be euermore with 2.Tim.2.19. his Church, yea although the whole Church of Rome conſpire againſt him.

M.Harding fol.90.b. Addition. ☞ Here M. Harding ſaith, We ſucceed the Donatiſts, and renew their wretched obiection againſt the Church, &c. Howbeit we are no Donatiſts, as his own conſcience well knoweth. The Donatiſts enclоſed the Church of God within the bounds of one Country, and ſaid there was no Church but onely their owne, which was in Aphrica. In like ſort, and with like truth M. Harding ſo often and ſo conſtantly telleth vs this day, there is no Church nor ſaluation, but vnder the obedience of the See of Rome. It is eaſie therefore to ſee who are the children of thoſe Fathers. We ſay, as all the holy and learned Doctors haue ſaid, The Church of God hath bene euer from the beginning, and ſhall continue vnto the end, and ouerſpreadeth all the parts of the world, without limitation of time or place. Notwithſtanding ſometimes by care and diligence ſhe is kept neat and cleane, ſometimes by negligence ſhee is laid waſte, and ouergrowne with weeds; and therefore ſhe is compared vnto a Garden. Sometimes her light is cleare and Cantic.4.12. beautifull, ſometime ſhe waneth and groweth darke: and therefore ſhe is compared vn-
Cantic.6.9. to the Moone. ☜ Addition.

M.Harding fol.89. The Church, you ſay, hangeth not of your well doing. Gods name therefore be bleſſed. For if it hung of you, it could not ſtand. It hangeth onely of the aſſurance of Gods promiſe: and the ſame promiſe God extended as well to Hieruſalem and Antioch, as he did to the See of Rome. But now Antioch, where Peter had his firſt Apoſtolike ſeat, and Hieruſalem, where Chriſt himſelfe firſt planted his Goſpell, are both forſaken, and left vtterly without faith and knowledge of God. Notwithſtanding God is true in all his Malac.1.10. words yet vnto the wicked he ſaith, Non eſt mihi voluntas in vobis: I haue no will nor pleaſure in you. I will receiue no ſacrifice at your hands. And S. Paul ſaith to the Church of Rom.11.21. Rome, euen to the ſame Church wherein you ſo immoderately glory, and aſſure your ſelfe it cannot erre. Noli altum ſapere, ſed time: Preſume not but ſtand in awe. For if God haue not ſpared his owne people of Iſrael and Ieruſalem (vnto whom hee made his promiſe that his name ſhould dwell there forever) how much leſſe will he ſpare thee? Marke well the mercy and ſharpeneſſe of God. His ſharpeneſſe againſt them that are fallen from him: but his mercie towards thee (ô thou Church of Rome) if thou continue ſtill in his mercy. Otherwiſe euen thou ſhalt likewiſe be hewen downe. Thus M. Harding, S. Paul adviſeth the Church of Rome to walke in awe, with feare and reuerence; and not to preſume of her ſelfe that ſhe cannot erre.

The argument that you forme thereof, taken, as you ſay, out of the Scriptures, is very ſimple. For thus it ſtandeth: Chriſt hath promiſed to be with his Diſciples, and with his faithfull for euer vnto the end of the world, Ergo, the Church of Rome can neuer erre in matter of faith.

The Prophet Ieremie adviſeth you better: Say not (ſaith he) The Temple of God, The Ieremie 7.4. Temple of God. We haue his temple, We haue his word, We haue his promiſe. Put no confidence in ſuch words. They be words of lying and vanitie, ſaith the Prophet they will deceiue you.

Michæ.3.11. So ſaith the Prophet Micheas of the Prieſts that deceiued the people: Super Dominum requieſcunt, diſcentes, Nonne eſt Iehoua in medio noſtri? Idcò non veniet ſuper nos malum. Idcirco propter vos Sion vt ager arabitur, & Hieruſalem erit in acerum, & mons domus in excelſa ſyluæ: They reſt themſelues quietly vpon the Lord, that is to ſay, they imbolden themſelues vpon his promiſes. Behold, ſay they, is not the Lord in the midſt amongſt vs? Therefore none ill ſhall happen to vs. Euen therefore (ſaith the Prophet) ſhall the Caſtle of Sion be ploughed vp as the corne field, and Hieruſalem ſhall lie as a heape of ſtones, and the mount of the Temple ſhall ſtand waſte as a forreſt. ☜ ☜

But why doe you ſo much abate your reckoning? Why make you not vp your full account of your fiftéene hundred, threeſcore and ſix yeeres, as ye were wont to doe? Ye haue here liberally and of your ſelf quite ſtricken off fiue hundred, threeſcore and ſix yers, that is to ſay, the whole time wherein the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and holy Martyrs, and other learned Fathers, and Doctors liued: in which whole time it appeareth by your owne ſecret confeſſion, the Church of God might well ſtand both without your priuate Maſſe (for then was there none) and alſo without many other your like fantaſies. Neither ought you, M. Harding, ſo deepely to be grieued, and to call vs Apoſtates and Heretikes, for that we haue reformed either our Churches to the patterne of that Church, or our ſelues to the example of thoſe Fathers. Verily in the iudgement of the godly, fiue hundred of thoſe firſt yeeres are more worth then the whole thouſand yeeres that followed afterward.

M.Harding fol.94.b. Addition. ☞ This (ſaith M. Harding) is a manifeſt blaſphemy, and little becommeth a Chriſtian man. But therefore, I heare ſmall reaſon. The Primitiue Church, which was vnder vnder the Apoſtles, and Martyrs, hath euermore bene counted the pureſt of all others without exception. And therefore the ancient Fathers oftentimes appeale to the iudgement thereof, as vnto the infallible ſtandard and meaſure of truth. S. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking hereof, although not ſpecially to this purpoſe, ſaith, Veterum Cœlum Eccleſia fuit, Spiritu cuncta adminiſtrante, cuncta Eccleſiæ capita moderante &c. Nunc verò veſtigia tantùm rerum illarum tenemus: Then verily the Church was a Heauen, the ſpirit of God ordering all things, and directing all the heads of the Church. But now we ſcarſely haue the ſteps and tokens of thoſe things. And immediatly after, he ſaith further, The Church now may bee likened to a woman, that hath loſt her old modeſty, hauing onely certaine tokens and ſhewes of her former felicity, as the cheſts and forſeales of precious things, being vtterly void of the treaſure. This ſaid S. Chryſoſtome, touching the decay of the Church; and yet he thought, his words imported no blaſphemy. If the forme of the Church were ſo much altered in Chryſoſtomes daies, that is aboue eleuen hundred yeeres paſt, what may we then thinke of the times of darkeneſſe, that haue followed ſithence? It was no blaſphemy therefore. M. Harding, to ſay, as we ſay, The firſt fiue hundred yeeres of the Church are more worth then the whole thouſand that followed afterward. This rather is open blaſphemy, to compare the Church of Rome, that now is, to a perfect man, as you doe, and the Primitiue Church of the Apoſtles, and holy Martyrs, vnto an Infant. This ſurely is blaſphemy againſt God. Chryſo. 1. Cor. Homil. 36.

Therefore I will anſwer you with the words of S. Hierome: Quiſquis es aſſertor nouorum Dogmatum, quæſo te, vt parcas Romanis auribus: parcas fidei, quæ Apoſtoli- machinum & ore laudatur. Cur poſt quadringẽtos annos docere nos niteris, quod antea neſciuimus? Oceanum. Cur profers in medium, quod Petrus, & Paulus edere noluerunt? Vſque ad hunc diem ſine iſta doctrina mundus Chriſtianus fuit: Thou, that art a maintainer of new doctrine whatſoeuer thou be, I pray thee, ſpare the Romane eares: ſpare the faith, that is commended by the Apoſtles mouth. Why goeſt thou about after now foure hundred yeeres to teach vs that faith, which before wee neuer knew? Why bringeſt thou vs forth that thing, that Peter and Paul neuer vttered? Emore vntill this day the Chriſtian world hath beene without this doctrine. Hier. ad Pam-

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuiſion 7.

For if the Popes would, or elſe if they could weigh with their owne ſelues the whole matter, and alſo the beginnings & proceedings of our Religion, how in a maner all their trauel hath come to nought, no body driuing it forward, & without any worldly helpe: and how one the other ſide, our cauſe againſt the wil of Emperours from the beginning, againſt the wils of ſo many Kings, in ſpight of the Popes, & almoſt maugre the head of al men, hath taken increaſe, and by little & little ſpread ouer into al Countries, & is come at length into Kings Courts & pallaces: Theſe ſame things me thinketh might be tokens great enough to them, that God himſelfe doth ſtrongly fight in our quarrel, and doth from Heauen laugh at their enterpriſes: and that the force of the truth is ſuch, as neither mans power, nor yet Hell gates are able to roote it out.

M. Harding.

It is well that ye vſe the terme of the beginning and proceedings of your religion. For indeed of late yeeres it began, not at Ieruſalem, but at Wittenberg. Neither was it firſt deliuered vnto you by an Apoſtle, but by an Apoſtata. Still it proceedeth, & the farther off from the end. And wel may ye name it your proceedings, for there is no ſtay in it. What liketh to day, miſliketh to morrow. The ſilly beguiled ſoules that follow it, be as S. Paul ſaith, euer learning and neuer reaching to the knowledge of the Truth. 2. Tim. 3.

The firſt beginning of this new Goſpell, and the occaſion that firſt moued Luther to Hereſie.

Did not your Religion begin firſt of couetiſe, and grew it not afterward of rancour & malice, when Martin Luther conceiued againſt the Dominican Friars in Saxony, becauſe Albert the Archbiſhop of Mentz and Electour of the Empire, had admitted them to be Preachers of the Pardon of a Croiſade againſt the Turkes, contrary to an ancient cuſtome, whereby the Auguſtine Friars, of whom Luther was one, had of long time been in poſſeſſion of that preferment? Is it not well knowne what a ſtirre Friar Luther made againſt Iohn Tetzet the Friar of S. Dominikes order, for that the ſaid Tetzet was made chiefe Preacher of a pardon, wherein was great gaine, and thereby himſelfe was bereft of that ſweet morſell, which in hope he had almoſt ſwallowed downe?

The Diet of Smalcalde.

Where you ſay, your Religion is ſpred abroad, and hath taken ſo much encreaſe againſt the wils of Princes and almoſt maugre the head of all men: that is as falſe, as your Religion is

Did not the great ſlaughter of your hundred thouſand Boores of Germany ſignifie to the world, your cauſe to haue had the helpe of man? What may we iudge of the great league of Germane Princes made at the diet of Smalcalde, for defenſe of your Lutheran Goſpell?

The

The troubles and tumults of France raiſed by your brethren the Huguenotes, and the lamentable outrages commited there for your Goſpels ſake, be they not a witneſſe of freſh memory, that your Religion is maintained, ſet foorth and defended with power and helpe of men?

That it is now at length come euen into Kings Courts and Pallaces, it moueth wiſe men no leſſe to ſuſpect it, then to praiſe it.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Yee make your ſelfe game, M. Harding, for that the preaching of the Goſpell iſſued firſt out of Wittenberg, and not from Rome: notwithſtanding Wittenberg is a noble and a famous Vniuerſitie, ſo generally frequented out of all forraine Countries, and ſo much commended for all kindes of tongues, and liberall knowledge, as not many the like this day in Chriſtendome.

But be it that Wittenberg were ſo ſimple a Burrough as M. Harding imagineth, yet were it not more ſimple then was the towne of Nazareth; in which more Towne notwithſtanding, firſt appeared the moſt glorious and greateſt light of the world. Chriſtian modeſty would not diſdaine the truth of God in reſpect of place. That rather becommeth the proud lokes of the Scribes and Phariſeis. They deſpiſed Chriſt and his Diſciples, and called them Nazarenes in deſpight of his Country. And therehence, it is likely, firſt grew Iohn 1.46. that ſcornefull queſtion vſed by Nathaniel, Nunquid ex Nazareth poteſt aliquid eſſe boni? Can any good thing come from Nazareth, ſo more a towne? So Celſus the Heathen Origen. contra Celſum. Lib. 1. deſpiſed the Religion of Chriſt, becauſe it came (not from Rome or Athens, but) from the barbarous Iewes. For thus Origen reporteth of him: Dogma Chriſtianum affirmat à barbaris cepiſſe ortum, hoc eſt a Iudæis: He ſaith the Doctrine of the Chriſtians had his beginning only from a barbarous nation, that is to ſay, from the Iewes.

1.Cor.1.27. But this is the mighty hand and power of God. He chuſeth the weake things of the world to confound the ſtrong, and the foliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe.

Touching your long tale of Doctour Luthers auarice and ſale of Pardons, I minde not nor néede not to anſwer you. It is a ſimple ſtale ſlander. Yet it often ſerueth your turne of courſe, when other things begin to faile. Indéed Frier Tecel the Pardoner made his
Ioh. Sleidanus lib. 13. Proclamations vnto the people openly in the Churches in this ſort: Although a man had laine with our Lady the mother of Chriſt, and had begotten her with childe, yet were hee able by the Popes power to pardon the fault. Againſt this and other like foule blaſpemies Doctour Luther firſt began to ſpeake. Now whether this occaſion were ſufficient or no, let M. Harding himſelfe be the Iudge.

We grant, the Princes and Eſtates of the world haue now laid their power to aſſiſt the Goſpell. Gods holy name therefore be bleſſed. How be it, the Goſpell came not firſt from them. It ſprang vp and grew by them many wheres againſt their wils.

Neither is the Goſpell therefore the more to be ſuſpected, becauſe it hath entered into Philip.1. Princes Courts. Daniel was in King Nabuchodonoſors Palace, and taught him to know the liuing God. S. Paul reioiced, and toke comfort in his bands, for that there Theod. lib 4. *cap.*3. were ſome euen in Neroes Court that began to hearken to the Goſpell. And Euſebius ſaith, Valeriani Aula erat iam Eccleſia Dei: Valerian the Emperours Court was now become the Church of God. Athanaſius ſaith vnto the Emperour Iouinian, Conueniens eſt pio prin-
Cyril. in Epiſt. ad Theodoſ. & Valentinian. cipi, &c. The ſtudy and loue of godly things is very meet for a godly Prince. For ſo ſhall you ſurely haue your heart euermore in the hand of God. Likewiſe ſaith S. Cyril to the Emperours Theodoſius and Valentinian: Ab ea, quæ erga Deum eſt pietate, Reipub. veſtræ ſtatus pen-
*Sozom. l.9.c.*3. det: The ſtate and aſſurance of your Empire hangeth of your religion towards God.

So likewiſe ſaith Sozomenus of the Emperour Arcadius, Μόνη ἡ Εὐσέβεια ἀρκεῖ θεοῦ σωτηρίαν τοῖς βασιλέυσιν ἀνευ̃ παντὸς μαθήματος τὸ σχετύμενον.

Therefore it behoueth Princes to vnderſtand the cauſes of Gods Religion, and to receiue Chriſt with his Goſpell into their Courts. For God hath ordained Kings, as Pſal.2.11. the Prophet Dauid ſaith, to ſerue the Lord: and as Eſay ſaith, to be Nurſes vnto his Eſay 49.23. Church.

If there be occasions of vanities or wickednesse in Princes Courts, yet is there no Court therein comparable to the Court of Rome. For there S. Bernard saith, Mali proficiunt: Boni deficiunt: The wicked wax: the godly wane.

Ye striue in vaine, M. Harding: This Counsell is not of man: it is of God. If Princes with their powers could not stay it, much lesse can you stay it with vntruths and fables. The poore beguiled soules of whom ye speake, are neither so silly, nor so simple, but they are able to espie your follies. The truth of God will stand. Vanity will fal of it selfe. Remember the Counsell of Gamaliel: Fight not against the spirit of God. Act. 5. 13.

The Apologie, Chap. 5. Diuision 3.

For they be not al mad at this day, so many free Cities, so many kings, so many Princes, which haue fallen away from the Seat of Rome, and haue rather ioined themselues to the Gospell of Christ.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

M. Hardings answer hereto is long: the effect thereof in short is this:

The faith of the holy Romane Church is the very Catholike faith, which who so forsake, shall be companions with Diuels in euerlasting fire.

And where ye say, so many free Cities, so many Kings, I pray you, how many free Cities can you name, that haue receiued your Sacramentary Religion? Nay the free Cites of Germany, as many as haue forsaken the Catholike Church, doe they not persecute you the Sacramentaries? But (say ye) they be fallen from the Seat of Rome. So be the Greeks also in a point or two: yet condemne they you for Heretikes.

Neither be all the free Cities in all the Country of Germany fallen from the See Apostolike. Of fiue parts of that great Country, at least two remaine Catholike.

Let vs see, how make ye vp the number of so many Kings ye speake of? The Realmes of England and Scotland, because by Gods prouidence the gouernment of them is deuolued to women, forasmuch as they be no Kings, though they haue the full right of Kings, of them I speake not. Now onely two Christened Kings remaine, the King of Denmarke, and the King of Sweden. Get you now vp into you Pulpits like bragging Cockes on the rowst, flap your wings, and crow out aloud, so many free Cites so many Kings.

But what thinke you of all the World before this day? were all Cities and Prouinces, all Countries, all Kings, all Princes, &c. till Frier Luther came, and with his Nun told vs a new Doctrine, and controlled all the old; were all these mad?

The vertuous men of the society of Iesus, haue they not brought many Countries, many Kings, many Princes to the faith of Christ by preaching the Doctrine of the Catholike Church? Wee will not follow your foolishnesse in boasting, &c. The Faith professed in the holy Romane Church, is now preached in Peru, in the Kingdome of Iguamban, in the Kingdome of Monopotapa, in Cambia, in Giapon, in Cina, in Tartaio, in Basnaga, in Taprobana, in Ormuz, in Ceilon, in Zimor, in Bacian, in Machazar.

The miracles wrought by these holy Fathers which conuerted these Countries, I trow, ye will not account to be madnesse. Thus your vaine boast in wickednesse, wrought by the power of Satan, is put to silence, &c.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The faith of the Romane Church (saith M. Harding) is the very Catholike faith of Christ, which who so forsaketh, bee hee King or Emperour, hee shall be companion with Diuels in euerlasting fire. Thus much, I trow, M. Harding learned of the counterfeit Decree of Anacletus. For thus it pleaseth him to glose and enterlace the words of Christ: Super hanc Petram, id est, super Ecclesiam Romanam, ædificabo Ecclesiam meam: Vpon this rocke, that is to say, Vpon the Church of Rome, I will build my Church. And therefore Pope Bonifacius, for a full resolution of the matter, saith thus: Subesse Romano Pontifici, omni humanæ creaturæ declaramus, dicimus, definimus, & pronunciamus, omnino esse de necessitate salutis: Vnam Sanct. Wee declare, say, determine, and pronounce, that it is of the necessity of saluation for euery mortall creature to be subiect vnto the Bishop of Rome. And the Glose likewise vpon the same, Quicquid saluatur, est subsummo Pontifice: Whatsoeuer creature is saued, is vnder the highest Bishop. Here is no mention neither of Christ nor of his Gospell. Saluation and damnation hangeth onely of the Bishop of Rome. This thing once granted, the case is clere: the Pope himselfe hath resolued the doubt. What should we nede a better trialle Notwithstanding Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto in the late Chapter at Tridente, of the Bishop and holy See of Rome, saith thus, Vtinam à Religione ad Superstitionem, à Fide ad Infidelitatem, à Christo ad Antichristum, à Deo ad Epicurum, velut prorsus vnanimes non declinâssent, dicentes in corde impio, & ore impudico, Non est Deus: O would God (the Pope and al his Cardinals) had not fallen with common consent, and altogether, from true Religion to Superstition, from Faith to Infidelity, from Christ to Antichrist, from God to Epicure, saying with the wicked heart, and shameleſſe mouth, There is no God. In like sense of the same Psalm. 14. 1.

Bernard saith, Serui Christi seruiunt Antichristo: The seruants of Christ serue Antichrist. Cornelius saith, The Bishops of Rome are fallen to Superstition, to Infidelity, to Antichrist, to Epicure: and are not ashamed to say, there is no God. Yet saith M. Harding, the faith of Rome is the Catholike faith: and who so departeth from the same, be he King or Emperour, he shall be companion with the diuell in hell fire. And thus to say is no meere madnesse.

Bern. in Cantic. Canticor.

That the Princes and free Cities of Germanie euer persecuted vs, it is vtterly vntrue, and like the rest of your tales. Notwithstanding some of them haue dealt sharpely with certain of this side, in consideration either of conscience, as they thought, or of the stay and quietnesse of their Subiects, yet in open consultation and publike Diet, they neuer suffered this Doctrine to be condemned. They reioice in God in our behalfe; and being there, they receiued vs vnder their protection, and offred vs such freedome and courtesie, as they seldome haue offered the like to any Nation. Certaine of them, by your owne confession, haue already agréd to all the points of our Doctrine. But none of them all, no not one, would euer suffer the same Doctrine of ours to be condemned in open assembly, and to be iudged for Heresie.

What the Grecians this day thinke of vs, I cannot tell. Notwithstanding, it appeareth by their letters written purposely to the Church of Bohemia, that they allow well of our Doctrine, and vtterly condemne yours. For thus they write vnto them: Ουκουν τοιγαρουν ἀδελφοι ἡμων και τεκνα, ει ουτω εστιν, ως ἀνθρωποι, ἡ ἐλπιζομεν, συναινουμεν τω μετ' ἡμων ἑνουσθαι. Wherefore, louing brethren and children, if it be so as we beare and hope, make haste that we may ioine together in vnitie.

Epist. Ecclesiæ Constantinopol. ad Eccles. Pragensē in Conc. Lateran. cap. 4.

And againe, thus it is recorded in the late Councel of Laterane, Græci in tantum cœperunt abominari Latinos, vt si quando Sacerdotes Latini super eorum Altaria celebrarent, ipsi non vellent prius in illis sacrificare, quàm ea, tanquam per hoc inquinata, lauissent: The Greekes began so much to abhorre the Latines, that if it had happened the Latine Priests had ministred vpon their Altars, they would not afterward make Oblation vpon the same, before they had washed them: as thinking their Altars defiled by the Latines handling. Wherefore M. Harding, whatsoeuer the Græcians thinke of vs, it appeareth hereby they vtterly refuse your Communion, and condemne you for Heretikes.

But who would haue thought M. Harding had béene so skilful in proportions? The whole country of Germanie, saith he, being diuided in equall portions, two of fiue remaine still in the obedience of the Sée of Rome. We giue God thanks, it is as it is. Indéed certaine townes subiect to the Bishops, in outward vsage of their Churches, remaine still as they were before. Yet neuertheless, in most places where the Churches are Popish, the people of all sorts are Protestants, and loue the truth, and are much ashamed of your follies. It was Gods secret prouidence that certaine of yours should remaine amongst vs a season, as the Cananites remained amongst the people of Israel. Otherwise within few yéeres ye would denie that euer your disorders had beene so great.

It is very hard and in manner not possible to conuert the whole people of so great a Countrey all at once. The haires of a mans beard or head neuer ware white al together. Christ compareth the Kingdome of God vnto leauen, which the woman taketh and laieth in a lumpe of dew. It worketh and laboureth by little and little, vntill it haue leauened all the whole. In this sort Eusebius seemeth to compare the two parts of the Romane Empire dissenting in iudgement of Religion: the East part to the Night, and the West to the Day. But Christ will draw all vnto himselfe, and then shall God be all in all.

But héere to match our so many Kings, and so many Princes, M. Harding hath brought vs a many of newes out of Ignamban Monopotapa, Cambaia, Giapan, Bisnaga, Ormuz, and other strange and farre Countries. There, he saith, so many, and so many Kings & Princes are lately conuerted, and brought to the obedience of the Sée of Rome. I maruel, he saith not, the man in the Moone was likewise newly christened to make vp the musser.

Howbeit, all these things must néedes be true. For Christs owne fellowes, or, as M. Harding vttereth it in better wise, the holy Fathers of the society of Iesus, haue sent home word as well hereof, as also of sundry miracles wrought by the same holy Fathers. Verily, so the name of Christ be published, whether it be by them, or by vs, by light, or by darkenesse, Gods holy name be blessed. But of many their miracles I haue no skill. For thus these holy fathers write, as it is said before, that with holy water they haue driuen Mise out of the Countrie, and made barren women to beare children, and such other the like maruellous miracles. Neither are we bound of necessity to beléeue all such miracles whatsoeuer without exception. Alexander of Hales saith, In Sacramento apparet paret caro, interdum humanâ procuratione, interdum operatione diabolica: In the Sacrament it selfe there appeareth flesh, sometime by the conueiance of men, sometime by the working of the Diuell. Likewise saith Nicolas Lyra, Aliquando in Ecclesia fit maxima deceptio populi in miraculis fictis à Sacerdotibus, vel eis adhærentibus, propter lucrum: Sometime euen in the Church the people is shamefullie deceiued with fained miracles, wrought either by the Priests, or else by their companions, for lucres sake. Miracles bee not euermore vndoubted prooues of true Doctrine. Therefore S. Augustine saith vnto Faustus the Manichee: Miracula non facitis: quæ si feceritis, tamen ipsa in vobis caueremus: Yee worke no miracles: and yet if yee wrought any, at your hands wee would take heede of them. The Prophet Ieremie saith, Seduxerunt populum meum in mendacijs suis, & in miraculis suis: They haue deceiued my people by their lies, and by their miracles.

Touching the conuersion of the East India, Vesputius writeth, there were many godly Bishops there, and sundry whole Countries conuerted and Christened long before that either the Portugales or the Iesuites came thither: and yet had neuer heard of the name of the Bishop of Rome.

Vespuius.

As for the rest of the West Spanish Indies, the people there liued not only without all manner knowledge of God, but also wild and naked, without any ciuill gouernment, offering vp mens bodies in Sacrifice, drinking mens bloud, and eating mens flesh. Some of them worshipped the Sunne and the Moone, some an ancient old tree, some what soeuer they saw first in the morning, they thought the same for that day to bee their god. Some worshipped certaine familiar Diuels, and vnto them sacrificed yong boies and girles.

Petr. Martyr. Mediolanen.

Being in this miserable state, and naturally by the very sense and iudgement of common reason abhorring and loathing their owne blindenesse, what maruel is it if they were easie to be lead into any Religion, specially carrying such a shew of apparell, and holy Ceremonies?

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Heere (saith M. Harding) M. Iewell attributeth the glorious conuersion of the Indians to the leading of naturall reason. This (saith he) is his Heathenish heart. What could Porphyrie, or Iulius, or Celsus say more? And what maketh you, M. Harding, to be so behement? Is nature so blinde that shee can no way discerne what is likely or vnlikely in any part of Religion? Wherefore then doth S. Paul say, speaking onely of naturall men, and of the light of nature, That thing that may be knowne of God, is opened vnto them. The inuisible things of God are knowne (naturally) by the Creatures of the world: euen the euerlasting power of God, and his Diuinity? Or why saith he, The Heathens that haue not the Law of God, yet by nature do the things that pertaine to the Law: and hauing no Law, they are a Law to themselues, and shew foorth the worke or effect of the law written within (by nature) in their hearts? S. Ambrose addeth further, Gentilis duce natura credit in Christum: Gentilis per solam naturam intellexit authorem: The Heathen by the leading of nature beleeueth in Christ: The Heathen onely by nature hath knowne God the maker of the world. In the short Commentaries, that beare the name of S. Hierome, it is written thus; Cognouerunt Deum, siue per naturam, siue per facturam & rationem: The Heathens knew God, either by nature, or by creation and way of reason. And againe, Homo naturaliter potest scire de Deo, & quòd sit, & quòd iustus sit: Man may by nature know of God, both that he is, and that he is iust. If these sayings be so Heathenish and Iewish in vs, why are they suffered in S. Paul, in S. Hierome, in S. Ambrose, and in other holy Fathers?

I say not that nature alone is able to leade vs into the perfection of Faith, or to endue our hearts with the Spirit of God. But thus I say, Nature of her selfe is often times able to discerne betweene truth and falshood. Cicero saith, onely of the ability and force of nature, Vtinam tam facilè vera inuenire possem, quàm falsa conuincere. By which confession it appeareth, although he were not able by skill of nature to finde the truth, yet was he able by the same to reproue the falshood. And therefore speaking of the vanity of his owne Heathen Religion, he saith, Quid negotij est hæc Poetarum & Pictorum portenta conuincere? What mastery is it (euen onely by the light of naturall wisdome) to reproue the fabulous wonders of Painters and Poets?

The heart of man is naturally inclined to Religion: notwithstanding, being blinded with originall sinne, in the choice thereof it often times falleth into horrible errours. When the Christians in Rome had chosen a void plat in the City, and therein had builded themselues a Church for the seruice of Christ, and the Tauerners or Victualers there had laid claime to the same plat, for that it seemed to stand commodiously for their vtterance; Alexander Seuerus the Emperour, being an Heathen, and void of Faith, and lead only by the guiding of nature, hauing the hearing of the matter, answered the Tauerners in this sort: It is better that God be any way worshipped in that place, then you should haue it.

Ælius Lampridius in Alexandro.

Vespucius in Nouo Orbe. fol.485.

The Tartarians of late yeres hauing no certaine Religion of their owne, submitted themselues to the Religion of the Turkes. Nature taught them it was better to haue the Turkish Religion, then none at all.

This therefore is it that I say M. Harding: The poore Indians, liuing by mans flesh, and going naked, hauing no manner sense nor knowledge of God, but falling downe either before an old tree, or before the Sun and the Mone, or whatsoeuer thing thy saw first in the morning: when they saw the Religion of Rome, with so many ceremonies, and shewes of holinesse, very nature taught them to thinke the same farre better then their owne. What Heathenish infidelity finde you heerein, or what blasphemy against the power of God? As blind as your Indians are this day, if they might see both your and our Religion set open before them, I doubt not but nature her selfe would lead them to iudge that ours is the light, and yours darkenesse. S. Paul speaking of the disorder of praying vnto God, that he saw among the Corinthians, saith thus, Nonne natura ipsa docet vos? Doth not very nature teach you this thing?

All this notwithstanding, I say not, that nature is able to lead vs into all the secrecies and mysteries of Christs Gospell. Christ himselfe saith, God often times hideth these things from the (natural) wise, and great learned men, and reuealeth the same vnto babes. And againe, No man commeth to my father, but by me. And, No man commeth to me vnlesse he be drawne by my Father. And vnto Peter he saith, Flesh and blood hath not reuealed these things to thee, but the Spirit of my Father which is in Heauen.

Mat.11.25. Iohn 14 6. Iohn 6.44. Mat.16.17.

As for the conuersion of the wilde Indians which you call so glorious, I pray God it may not iustly be said vnto you that Christ said vnto the Pharisees, Ye seek about by sea and by land to find one Nouice: and when ye haue gotten him, ye make him the child of Hell, double worse then your selues.

And what if God would vse this meane for the time, afterward the better to lead the said nations to the cleare light of the Gospell, as S. Augustine saith, the Shoomaker vseth his bristle, not to sowe withall, but to draw in his thred? No doubt, M. Harding, if your Doctrine & ours were laid together, the very Indians themselues, be they neuer so rude, would be able to see a great difference.

But let the Bishop of Rome winne abroad, and lose at home. You remember the old Prouerbe, Dionysius Corinthi: Dionysius when he had lost his Kingdome at home at Syracusa, he got himselfe to Corinth, and there became a Schoolemaster, and so seemed to continue a Kingdome still.

We make no boast, M. Harding, nor get vs to rowst, as ye say, nor flap our wings in the behalfe of these Princes and Countries, so many, and so many, as it pleaseth you to spoyt, that haue submitted themselues to the Gospell of Christ. Neither are the same so many, and so many, so few as you would seeme to make them. The Kingdome of England, the Kingdome of Scotland, the Kingdome of Denmarke, the Kingdome of Sweden, the Dukes of Saxonie, the Duke of Brunswike, the Palsgraue of Rhene, the Duke of Wittenberg, the Lantgraue of Hessia, the Marquesse of Brandeburg, the Prince of Russia, al other the Earles and Noble men, and great Cities through the whole countrey of Germanie, the mighty Common weales of Heluetia, Rhetia, Vallis Tellina, with so many hundred thousands besides, in France, Italie, Spaine, Hungarie, and in the kingdome of Poole: Certainely all these well reckoned cannot seeme so few as you would haue it. Peruisse, M. Harding, it greeueth you full sore they are so many. If God of his mercy blesse those things that he hath mercifully begun, it wil be high time for you shortly to seek a new refuge.

We boast not our selues of these things. There is no cause. It is not the worke of man: it is the onely hand of God. Dauid saith, Let the Heauens reioice: let the Earth be glad: The voice (of the Apostles) is sounded abroad into all the world. The Angels of God sang, Glorie be to God on high. The Angell in the Apocalyps crieth amaine, Cecidit, cecidit Babylon illa magna: Downe, downe is fallen that great Babylon. Tertullian saith, Parthi, Medi, Elamitæ, &c. The Parthians, the Medians, the Elamites, the people of Mesopotamia, of Armenia, of Phrygia, of Cappodocia, of Pontus, of Asia, of Pamphylia, Ægypt, of Africa, of Rome, of Hierusalem, of Getulia, of Mauritania, of Spaine, of France, of Britannie, of Sarmatia, of Dacia, of Germanie, of Scythia, and many other nations and Prouinces, knowen and vnknowne, haue receiued the Gospell of Christ. Thus said they, the Angels and Prophets of God, and holy Fathers, and yet without boasting, or flying to rowst, or clapping of wings. Giue vs leaue therefore, M. Harding, in the like case to solace our selues with the consideration of Gods mighty and mercifull workes, and humbly to reioice at the triumph of the Crosse of Christ.

Vnto our ſelues we ſeeme many: but vnto God we are but few. We put difference betweene nation and nation, but vnto God this whole world is but one houſe.* This counſell, M. Harding, is wholeſome for either part to follow, that who ſo will reioice, may reioice in the Lord.

The Apology, Chap. 5. Diuiſion 4.

And although the Popes had neuer hitherunto leaſure to conſider diligently & earneſtly of theſe matters, or though ſome other cares do now let them, and diuers waies pul them, or though they count theſe to be but common & trifling ſtudies, and nothing to appertain to the Popes worthines, this maketh not why our matter ought to ſeeme the worſe. Or if they perchance will not ſee that which they ſee indeed, but rather will withſtand the known truth, ought we therefore by and by to be counted Heretikes becauſe we obey not their will and pleaſure?

M. Harding.

Sith Chriſt hath giuen to the Pope in Peter, whoſe lawfull ſucceſſor he is, commiſſion to feed his ſheepe: holeſome feeding being the end of that cõmiſſion, it is not to be doubted but he that ordained the end hath alſo ordained meanes belonging to the end. Therefore it is not the duty of a good and humble ſheepe to giue forth a malicious ſurmiſe, that the ſhepheard will not ſee that he ſeeth indeed, but rather will withſtand the known truth. And whatſoeuer ſheepe be diſobedient, and refuſe to heare the voice of their ſhepheard, whom Chriſt hath made ouer them, the ſame be not of Chriſts fold. And maintaining contrary Doctrine to their ſhepheards true Doctrine, iuſtly may they be accounted Heretikes. Iohan. 21.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

To be Peters lawfull ſucceſſour, it is not ſufficient to leape into Peters ſtall. Lawfull ſucceſſion ſtandeth not onely in poſſeſſion of place, but alſo, and much rather in Doctrine and diligence. Yet the Biſhops of Rome, as if there were nothing elſe required, euermore put vs in minde and tell vs many gay tales, of their ſucceſſion. Pope Symmachus ſaith, In Papa ſi deſint bona acquiſita per meritum, ſufficiunt quæ à loci prædeceſſore præſtantur: If the Pope want vertues and goodneſſe of his owne, yet the vertues that are giuen him by (Peter) his predeceſſour are ſufficient. And the Gloſſe vpon the ſame: Petrus fecit Papam hæredem bonitatis ſuæ: Peter hath made the Pope heire of his goodneſſe. Head ſhepheard. Diſtin. 40. Non nos. Gloſſa Ibid. in verb. Cùm hæreditatem.

But S. Hierome ſaith farre otherwiſe: Non ſanctorum filij ſunt qui tenent loca ſanctorum: They be not euermore holy mens children that ſit in the rooms of holy men. Likewiſe ſaith Alphonſus de Caſtro, a ſpeciall aſſiſtant of that ſide, Quamuis teneamur ex fide, credere verum Petri ſucceſſorem eſſe ſupremum totius Eccleſiæ paſtorem, tamen non tenemur eadem fide credere Leonem aut Clementem eſſe verum Petri ſucceſſorem: Notwithſtanding we be bound by faith to beleeue that the true ſucceſſor of Peter is the higheſt ſhepheard of the whole Church, yet are we not bound by the ſame faith to beleeue that Leo or Clement (being Biſhops of Rome) are the true ſucceſſors of Peter. Diſ. 40. Non eſt facile. Alphonſus contra hæreſ. lib. 1. cap. 9.

The words that Chriſt ſpake vnto Peter import no ſouereignetie, but were common to all the reſt. S. Cyprian ſaith. Hoc erant vtique cæteri Apoſtoli quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio prædíti & honoris & poteſtatis: The reſt of the Apoſtles were euen the ſame that Peter was, all endued with like fellowſhip both of honour and power. What ſpeciall priuiledge then can the Pope claime by the ſucceſſion of S. Peter? Or what talketh he of feeding the whole flocke of Chriſt, that neuer feedeth any part thereof? Wherein is the Pope like S. Peter? Or wherein euer was S. Peter like the Pope? Iohan. 21. 15. 16. 17. Cypria. de ſimplicit. prælat.

Yet M. Harding doubteth not to giue his definitiue ſentence, whatſoeuer ſheepe is not obedient to the head ſhepheard, is not of the flocke of Chriſt. The Pope alſo himſelfe boldly warranteth the ſame. Thus he ſaith of himſelfe, Quicunque præceptis noſtris non obtemperit, peccatum Idololatriæ & Paganitatis incurrit: Whoſoeuer obeieth not our commandements, falleth into the ſinne of Idolatry and Infidelity. And therefore Pope Steuen thus aduanceth the authority of his owne See: Sacro ſancta Domina noſtra Romana Eccleſia: Our holy Lady the Church of Rome. Diſt. 81. Si quis. Gloſſa. In Gloſſa. Diſt. 79. Oportebat.

But Chriſt ſpeaking of himſelfe, ſaith, I am the true ſhepheard: And who ſo heareth theſe words of mine, and doth the ſame, I will like him to a wiſe man. S. Paul being but one of the ſheepe ſaith thus, I withſtood Peter (as M. Harding ſaith, the head-ſhepheard) euen vnto his face, for that he walked not vprightly to the Goſpell of Chriſt. Yet was he a ſheepe of the flocke of Chriſt. Hoſtienſis in this caſe ſeemeth reſonable: his words be theſe: Omnes debent Iohan. 10. 14. Luc. 6. 47. Gal. 2. 11. 14.

debent obedire Papæ, quicquid præcipiat, nisi sequi possit peccatum: All men must obey the Pope, what soeuer he command, so there follow no sinne of his commandement. Likewise Felinus a notable Canonist: Non obstante plenitudine potestatis quæ est in Papa, non est obediendum ei, peccatum imminente: Notwithstanding the fulnesse of power that is in the Pope, when sinne shall follow his bidding, we may not obey him.

If the Pope will claime the headpastorship ouer the whole flocke of Christ, or rather, if he will be taken for any Pastour at all, let him then fede the flocke: let him breake the bread of life without leauen: let him speake the word of God truely, without fables, and we will heare him. Otherwise S. Augustine hath warned vs: Sua si docere velint, nolite audire, nolite facere. Certè enim tales sua quærunt, non quæ sunt Iesu Christi: If they will teach you Doctrines of their owne, see ye heare them not, (and whatsoeuer such thing they command you) see ye doe it not. For vndoubtedly such men seeke for their owne matters and not the things that pertaine to Iesus Christ.

Augustin. in Iohan. tracta. 46.

The Apologie, Chap. 5. Diuision 6.

If so be that Pope Pius were the man (we say not, which he would so gladly be called) but if he were indeed a man that either would account vs for his brethren, or at least would take vs to be men, he would first diligently haue examined our reasons, and would haue seene what might be said with vs, what against vs: and would not in his Bull, whereby he lately pretended a Councell, so rashly haue condemned so great a part of the world so many learned and godly men, so many Common-wealths, so many Kings, and so many Princes, only vpon his owne blinde preiudices, and fore-determinations, and that without hearing of them speake or without shewing cause why.

M. Harding.

Speake of Pope Pius what ye will, and what ye can Neither your praise can aduance his estimation, nor your dispraise abase it. His singular vertues be wel known. God is highly to be praised for that he hath prouided for his flocke so good a Shepheard. As for you, as he taketh you to be men, so not his brethren, because ye haue cut off your selues from the Catholike Church. Your reasons haue been diligently and exactly examined already. In respect of your reasons, learning and holy Scriptures which ye bring, ye are found such as Balsazar King of Babylon was signified by the hand that appeared writing before him in the wall.

A comparison between the defender and Balsazar King of Babylon.

What it is, Heretikes to be admitted to reasoning, it is and hath beene euermore too well knowne. Be they neuer so throughly confuted, they yeeld not. Ouercome they may be, reformed they will not be. Therein no good lightly is done.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

If Pope Pius were so good a man, and so fit and worthy a Pastour for the Church of God, why then did his Cardinals of late labour so earnestly by treason and conspiracy to depose him, being, as you say, so good a man? Or if it were not so, why then did hee himselfe complaine thereof so bitterly in an Oration pronounced openly in Rome in the Consistory? Is it not lawful for so good a man to liue in Rome? Is the same Proclamation now practised among the Cardinals in Rome, that was sometime vsed in the Councell house at Ephesus, Nemo nostrum frugi esto: Let no good man be amongst vs? This Oration is abroad in print. If you doubt the authority thereof, wee wot it not: it is none of ours.

Oratio Pij Papæ.

Ἐμὸν δόγμα, ἐμὸν ψήφισμα.

Ye say, Pope Pius would not vouchsafe to call vs his brethren. No marueil, seeing his owne deare and first begotten children the Cardinals would no longer haue him to be their father. It is sufficient for vs, that Christ the sonne of God is content to call vs his brethren.

Matth. 28. Iohan. 20. 17. Ioh. 9. 12. 16.

Ye haue excommunicate vs, as the Pharisees did the Apostles, because wee speake vnto you in the name of Christ. But your owne Law saith, Excommunicatus non potest excommunicare: He that is excommunicate himselfe, cannot giue sentence to excommunicate others. And your owne Gelasius saith, Neminem ligare debet iniqua sententia: A wicked sentence (of excommunication) bindeth no man. But before all others God himselfe saith, Ego benedicam maledictionibus vestris: I will blesse that you curse, saith the Lord. You say you haue weighed our reasons, and haue found them too light. Now surely that is a good light answer. Euen in such light sort Iulianus the Apostata wrote sometime vnto the Christian Bishops: Ἀνέγνων, ἔγνων, κατέγνων: I haue read your reasons: I know know them well enough: and therefore I haue condemned them. But the ſame Chriſtian Biſhops anſwered him againe, Ἀνέγνως ἀλλ' οὐκ ἤγνως· εἰ γὰρ ἔγνως, οὐκ ἂν κατέγνως. It may be ye haue read our reaſons, but ye vnderſtood them not, for if ye vnderſtood them, ye would not condemne them. S. Paule alſo likewiſe ſaith, Non ſi cognouiſſent, nunquam Dominum gloriæ crucifixiſſent: If they had knowne, they would neuer haue crucified the Lord of glorie. 1. Cor. 2. 8.

But vnto many of your ſide, M. Harding, I feare me we may ouer truly ſay as S. Hilarie ſaith vnto the Arian Heretikes: Verè Deum neſciunt: atque vtinam neſcirent: cum procliuiori enim venia ignorarent: Indeed they know not God: and would God they knew him not: then their ignorance were the eaſier to be pardoned. Hylar. de Synodis aduerſus Arianos.

You ſay, there is no diſputation to be had with Heretikes. Yet your Fathers in the Councell of Baſile, and your friends in the laſt Councel of Trident, I will not ſay, had diſtations, but certainely yéelded, and gaue place vnto the Bohemians and vnto ſuch others as you call Heretikes. in Appendice Conc. Baſili. Hac Sanctus. Concil. Triden. Seſſion. 6.

Addition. ☞ Addition. This lie (ſaith M. Harding) is ſo cleare and euident, that our Confutation is needleſſe. Neither is it told wherein theſe Councels ſhould yeeld, nor where that yeelding ſhould be found. The Anſwer. So cléere, ſaith M. Harding, is this lie. Howbeit if he had better conſidered his bookes, he might haue found that this ſo cleare a lie is an euident truth. M. Harding fol. 98. a. First, the Councell of Baſile, contrary to the order of the Romane Church, yéelded vnto the Bohemians the holy Communion in both kindes: And yet the ſame Bohemians they called Heretikes. The words there among others are theſe: Indultum liberationis Communionis ſub vtraque ſpecie. The like might you haue found in Cardinall Cuſanus, if ye had well ſought it. Thus he writeth vnto the Prieſts of Bohemia: Neque ita eſt vt ſcribitis, nos compactiones ignorare. Nam illæ aliquam correctionem, nobis tunc præſidentibus in Natione Germanica, receperunt; maximè in capite de libertate Communionis: Vbi apponi fecimus, facultatem in euentum dari Sacerdotibus, poſſe communicare populum modo qui ibi ponitur: Neither is it ſo as you write, that we know not the agreement or compoſition. For the ſame compoſition was corrected when I was preſident in Germany, ſpeciallie in that Article that toucheth the liberty of the Communion: Whereunto I cauſed to bee added, that vpon a further proofe the Prieſts ſhould haue liberty to Communicate the people in that ſort that there is mentioned. Here haue you that thing which you ſay is not poſſible to be found. And you haue it confirmed and vouched by a Cardinall of the Church of Rome. Touching the ſame Article, the late Councell of Trident hath likewiſe yéelded, howbeit, with many long and ſolemne proteſtations. The words beginne thus: Vt ſub vtraque ſpecie communicare volentes, &c. We ordaine that whatſoeuer Church or Nation will receiue the Communion vnder both kindes, firſt they agree both in heart and word with all the ordinances of the Church of Rome. Secondly, that they ſhall be ſubiect and obedient vnto the Pope, as reuerent children vnto their father, &c. Concil. Tom. 3. in Appendice Concil. Baſil. pag. 243. Hac Sanctus. Nicol. Cuſaxus ad Bohemos Epiſt. 6. De libertate Communionis. Poſſe communicare populum. Concil. Trident. Seſſione 6. apud Kemnitium, pag. 150. editionis Francofurt. An. Dom. 1578. nam in ipſo Concilio fruſtra quaras.

Thus M. Harding, haue your Councels yeelded euen vnto them that they themſelues haue condemned for Heretikes. Now haue I told you both wherein theſe two Councels haue yéelded, and alſo where this yeelding may be found. Therefore I read you hencefoorth not to be ſo ready in dealing of lies. ☞☜

But ye haue reaſon: ye can foreſee your beſt aduantage. It were the readieſt way to diſcloſe your ſhame. You neuer yet came to diſputation, but ſome of your company ſhranke away from you. As I before haue reported out of Tertullian: Veritas nihil veretur, niſi abſcondi. Truth feareth nothing, but leſt ſhee be hid. If the God of Iſrael come into the Temple, the Idol of Dagon muſt needs fall downe. Tertullian. in Apologetico. 1. Reg. 5. 3.

BVt becauſe he hath already ſo noted vs openly, leſt by holding our peace we ſhould ſeem to grant a fault, eſpecially becauſe we can by no meanes haue audience in the publike aſſembly of the General Councel, wherein he would no creature ſhould haue power to giue his voice, or to declare his opinion, except hee were ſworne, and ſtraitly bound to maintaine his authority: For we haue had good experience hereof in the laſt Conference at the Councel of Trident: where the Ambaſſadors and Diuines of the Princes of Germany, and of the free Cities were quite ſhut out from their company. Neither can we yet forget how Iulius the Third, aboue ten yeeres paſt, prouided warily by his writ, that none of our ſort ſhould be ſuffered to ſpeake in the Councell, except that there were ſome man peraduenture, that would recant, and change his opinion. For this cauſe chiefely wee thought it good to yeeld vp an account of our Faith in writing, and truely and openly to make anſwer to thoſe things wherewith we haue beene openly charged; to the end the world may ſee the parts and foundations of that Doctrin, in the behalfe whereof ſo many good men haue little regarded their owne liues. And that al men may vnderſtād what maner of people they be, & what opinon they haue of God & of Religion, whom the Biſhop of Rome, before they were called to tell their tale, hath condemned for Heretikes, without any good conſideration, without any example, and vtterly without law or right, only becauſe he heard tell that they did diſſent from him and his in ſome point of Religion.

M. Harding.

Ye alleage two cauſes. The firſt is, leſt by holding your peace, ye ſhould ſeeme to grant a fault. The ſecond, which yee make the more ſpeciall, is becauſe by no meanes ye could haue audience in the late generall Councel. Your ſecond cauſe is falſe, as hereafter it ſhal be ſhewed. Your firſt is naught, as that which ſheweth your pride, vaine glory, and pertinacy. Well, ye doe but as Heretikes before you haue euer done. It muſt not be looked for at your hands, that ye acknowledge any fault. For that were humility, which vertue all heretikes be farre from, &c. To giue a voice or ſuffrage, and vtter ſentence definitiue, it pertaineth onely to Biſhops. Now ye be no Biſhops but ſome of you meere Lay-men, and moſt of you Apoſtataes.

Two cauſes of making the Apology. In Councels any man may ſhew his opinion: but none may giue a voice or ſuffrage, and ſentence definitiue, but onely Biſhops.

Whether the Ambaſſadors and Diuines of the Princes of Germanie and of the free Cities there, were at any time vpon any conſideration of their miſliked demeanour, or for any other iuſt cauſe reſtrained from the company of the Fathers in the late general Councel at Trent. Againe, whether Pope Iulius the third prouided by any Writ, that none of your ſort ſhould be ſuffered to ſpeake in the Councel, the cauſe of recantation excepted; what ye ſay touching this matter, becauſe ye ſay it without proofe; we haue found you in ſo many other points of greater importance, ſo far to ſtep aſide from truth, that for this we cannot beleeue you. But that your ſelues by no meanes could haue audience in the Councell at Trent, and that the Ambaſſadors and Diuines of the Princes and free Cities of Germany were from thence quite ſhut out; how true that is, I report me to the three ſafe cōducts which the three Popes, vnder whom that Councel was holden, granted forth and confirmed in that behalfe. Wherefore belie the Councel no more, complaining that ye could not there haue audience and be heard.

Yee yeeld vp an account of your faith in writing, yee ſay. But to whom do ye yeeld it vp? And by whom is it yeelded? From whom commeth the ſame? Do ye acknowledge no lawfull Iudge, no lawful Conſiſtory in the whole world? Commit ye your whole matter to the temerity of the people? Why haue ye not ſet your names to the booke that containeth the profeſſion of your faith & of your whole conſcience?

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Here M. Harding thought it anſwer ſufficient to vpbraid vs with ſuſpition of vntruth. Howbeit I haue no doubt, but both the truth and the vntruth by the particulars will ſoone appeare.

Extra. de iureiur. and. Ego N.

First, that all Biſhops, hauing voice definitiue, and intereſt in Councels, are solemnly ſworne in all the Decrées and Canons to vphold the authority of the Pope, he thought it the wiſeſt way to diſſemble it. For it had béene great want of modeſty to deny it. The forme of the oath recorded in the Popes owne Decretals is this: Ego N. &c. Papatum Romanæ Eccleſiæ, & regulas Sanctorum patrum adiutor ero ad defendendum, & retinendum, ſaluo ordine meo, contra omnes homines: I N. ſweare that I will be an helper, to defend and maintaine the Papacy of the Church of Rome, and the rules of the holy Fathers (the Popes) mine owne order ſaued, againſt all men aliue. But theſe rules and priuiledges of the holy Fathers the Popes are theſe. [a] That the Pope is aboue al general Councels: [b] That his bare will muſt be holden as a Law: [c] That whatſoeuer he doe, no man may ſay vnto him, Why doe you thus: [d] That his iudgement is more certaine then the iudgement of all the world: [e] That if the whole world giue ſentence in any matter contrary to the Popes pleaſure, yet it ſéemeth we are bound to ſtand to the iudgement of the Pope: and [f] as M. Harding ſaith, That the Pope, whatſoeuer he ſay or doe, as being Pope, can neuer erre. Theſe and other the like be the Priuiledges that the Pope claimeth vnto himſelfe. All which the Biſhops are bound by oath, and by their alleageance to defend againſt all men aliue.

Now where you ſay, that Biſhops onely haue Sentence Definitiue in the Councels, ye ſéeme willingly, and without cauſe to report vntruth. For Æneas Syluius, being himſelf afterward Pope, and named Pius Secundus, would haue tolde you the contrary. Theſe be his words: Apparet, alios, quàm Epiſcopos, in concilijs habuiſſe vocem decidentem: It is plaine, that certaine others, beſides Biſhops, had voice Definitiue in the Councels.

Addition.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ In the report hereof M. Harding hath found great aduantage. For when hee wrot that booke, (saith he) he was Æneas Syluius Picolominеus, not Pius Secundus And afterward being Pope, he recanted that error. Thus, good Reader, thou sest the man is all one: but his name is changed. Yet here is matter sufficient to raise a Tragedy. First, touching his name, it forceth not greatly. Neither was Paul an Apostle when hee was borne at Tharsus in Cilicia. Yet notwithstanding S. Augustine saith, Dicimus Paulum Apostolum in Tharso Ciliciæ fuisse natum: We say that Paul the Apostle was borne in the Country of Cilicia, and in the City of Tharsus. Such quarels are scarcely meete for children. M. Harding fol. 99. b. Aug. de Consensu Euang. Lib. 2. cap. 17.

But afterward (saith M. Harding) being Pope, he recanted this error. No doubt vpon great deliberation and good aduice. For being one of the Councell of Basile, he said, The Councell is aboue the Pope. Afterward being Pope himselfe, hee was better instructed: I see (saith he) before I was much deceiued. Now the Pope is aboue the Councell. Such a thing it is to be rapt vp suddenly into the third Heauens.

But forasmuch as M. Harding saith, all this that I haue here alleged out of Pius Secundus, and Iohannes Gerson, is Little-worth stuffe, for so he calleth it, and that I haue added to these words, In Concilijs, of mine owne; which words he saith are not found in the Authour, and that this is, Lying for aduantage: for this is the ordinary modestie of his speech; I haue thought it good to lay forth some part of the said words more at large. M. Harding fol. 100. a.

Thus therefore saith Æneas Syluius, who afterward was named Pius Secundus: Nec in Concilijs dignitas patrum, sed ratio sectanda est, &c. Nec ego cuiusuis Episcopi mendacium, quamuis ditissimi, veritatem præponam pauperis Presbyteri, &c. In Councels reason or truth is to be considered more then the dignity of the Prelates. Neither will I more esteeme a lie pronounced by a Bishop, be he neuer so rich, then the truth vttered by a poore simple Priest. Nor should a Bishop disdaine, being rude and vnlearned, if the people be not ready to follow after him. Nor doe you that be Bishops, despise your inferiours. The first man that died for Christ, and shewed the way vnto Martyrdome, was not a Bishop, but a Leuite, &c. And to report vnto you some examples of old Councels, we shall finde in them all, that the Bishops were there together with their inferiours &c. In the Acts of the Apostles, thus it is written: It hath seemed good to the holy Ghost, and to vs. To vs, that is to say, to the Apostles and Elders. Neither doth this word, Visum est, signifie a consultation, but a full discussing and decision of the matter. Therefore it appeareth that certaine others besides Bishops, had a voice definitiue in the Councel. And in the Acts, when the Apostles had any great matter to determine, they durst not to discusse it by themselues alone, but called the multitude to sit with them, &c. It appeareth that the Apostles gaue vs an example, that in great weighty matters wee should call some others to vs. And therefore in the Councels that were holden afterward, wee finde that inferiour Priests sate together with the Bishops, &c. De gestis Conc. Basil. l. 1. in Oratio. Arelaten. In Concilijs. Conciliorum. Et nobis. In Concilio. In Concilijs.

But heere M. Harding findeth fault, that I haue corrupted mine Author, and thrust in these words, In Concilijs, of mine owne. And yet in the very same place he might haue found these very words: Concilium, Conciliorum, in Concilio, in Concilijs, vsed sundrie times altogether. And indeed the whole speech there, is only of Councels,

These (good Reader) and other like, be the errors that Pius, being once Pope, would needs recant. Then he saw, That in his Councels the dignity of the Prelates is more to be weighed then the truth. Then he saw, That a lie pronounced by a Bishop being rich, is more to be esteemed then the truth vttered by a simple Priest. Then he saw, That a Priest being himselfe vnlearned and ignorant, ought to disdaine, if the people be not ready to follow after him. These be the things that he recanted. The Popes Recantation.

Howbeit, M. Harding telleth vs these are not the words of Æneas Syluius, but of one Ludouicus the Cardinall of Arles. And this he reckoneth for a great maine lie. Here may I easily answer M. Harding: If this were not Æneas Syluius owne saying, why then did he (as you haue confessed) recant it afterward? If he did afterward recant it, how may it appeare it was not his owne? Are Popes so full of humility that they will recant words they neuer spake? ☜ M. Harding fol. 100 a. M. Harding fol. 99. b.

Likewise saith Gerson, Etiam ad Laicos hoc Potest extendi, & plus aliquando quàm ad multos Clericorum: This (priuiledge of giuing sentence in Councels) may be extended euen vnto the Lay sort: yea and that oftentimes better then vnto many Priests. But hereafter more at large. Io. Gers. Quæ veritates sint credendæ. Col. 4.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Hereto saith M. Harding, You falsely, impudently and foulely belie Gerson, for Gerson in this place speaketh not of the authority of giuing sentence definitiue in generall Councels. The answer. It is reason that M. Harding make dole of lies at his pleasure. Verily thus much at least Gerson saith: The deliberation, or conference, and knowledge of M. Harding fol. 100. b.

matters of faith may belong to the Lay People, and vnto them much more, and better sometime, then to many Priests. This, M. Harding, is as much as I either say, or can require, and this is enough, vnlesse yee thinke your Priests haue authority to iudge, and conclude without knowledge, for so seemeth Gerson by his diuision, to allow conclusion and iudgement to the Priests, and deliberation and knowledge to the people.

Sallust. in bello Catelin.

But whether we be Bishops or no, M. Harding is no competent nor indifferent Iudge. For who so will iudge vprightly, must be void of anger, hatred, loue, enuy, and other like affections. Which sentence being otherwise prophane, is vsed & allowed by the Apostolike Legates in the Councell of Trident. Surely the godly say, that as your Bishops doe no part of Bishops duty, and therefore indeed are no Bishops at all; so your late Counct at Trident, whatsoeuer glorious name it pleaseth you to giue it, yet notwithstanding, indeed and verily was no Councell.

Breue Iulij 3. Citatur à Caluino.

Whether Pope Iulius by his Bull vtterly embarred the Diuines and Embassadors of the Princes and free Cities of Germany from al audience and disputation in the Councell, or no, I repose me to Pope Iulius owne Bull touching the same. His words be these: Erit Concilium, vt qui temerè loquuti sunt, aut dicta recantaturi veniant, aut eorum inaudita causa, in executionem iam ordinatarum Constitutionum Hæretici declarentur, & condemnentur: There shall be a Councell, that they that haue spoken rashly, either may recant their sayings, or else without farther hearing or reasoning of the matter, they may be denounced, and condemned for Heretikes, according to the Constitutions already made.

Iohn. Sliedan. Lib. 15.

Likewise saith Iohn Sleidane, touching the conference had sometime at Augusta: In colloquio frequenter ad initium actionis hoc dicebant: nolle se vel tantillum de opinione & doctrina sua decedere; sed quicquid facerent, eò fieri, vt in sententiam suam nos adducerent: In the conference that was had betweene vs and them, they told vs at the first, that they would not yeeld one whit from their opinion and Doctrine, but that whatsoeuer they did, they did it onely to the intent to bring vs to their iudgement.

Illyri. in Recusatione Concil. Tridentini.

I could farther alleage Matthias Flaccius Illyricus, Iohannes Fabritius Montanus, Petrus Paulus Vergerius, the Bishop of Iustinopolis, to like purpose; but perhaps M. Harding would refuse their authorities, and call them partiall: yet in a matter so euident, and so openly knowne, it had beene great folly for them to dissemble. Illyricus saith, Nostri audiri non potuerunt, quamuis id amplissimi Cæsaris Legati orarent: Our Diuines and Orators could in no wise be heard, notwithstanding the Emperours most worthy Embassadours had desired it.

Iohan. Fabrit.

Iohannes Fabritius saith, Fateor extensionem factam esse ad alias Nationes: sed tamen additur, eam formam, non nisi ad illos pertinere, qui resipiscere & ad Ecclesiæ gremium redire velint: I grant the Safe-conduct was extended to other Nations: But it is added withall, that the same forme or liberty should pertaine to none others, but only to them that would repent, and returne to the bosome of the Church. And againe he saith, Tantùm aberant ab arce disputationum, vt ne ad vestibulum quidem accedere potuerint: The Diuines of the Princes of Germany were kept so farre off from the high Castle of disputation, that they could not be suffered to approach to the entry. Petrus Paulus Vergerius saith, that the Bishop of Vegla in Dalmatia was sore shaken vp in the same Councell, and threatned with deprivation, and other extremities, onely for a little inkling of the truth.

Petr. Paulus. Vergerius de Con. Trident.

Howbeit, what neede we more authorities? No man is herein so plaine and peremptory as M. Harding himselfe. This is his determinate answer, and full resolution in the case:

M. Harding fol. 20. b.

Your reasons are no more to be heard, vnlesse ye repent, and reuoke your errors. Again, Our Doctrine the Bishop of Romes commandement, nor with his commandement. These bee your words M. Harding: This you say you tell vs plainely, and therefore, I trow, we must beleeue you. And so ye seeme to conclude with the words written in the Prophet Ieremie: Non audiemus verbum quod locutus es nobis in nomine Domini, sed faciendo faciemus omne verbum quod egredietur ex ore nostro: We will not heare the word that thou hast spoken to vs in the name of the Lord, but we will doe euery word that shall come from our owne mouth.

Aug. Ep. 152.

We may therefore say of you as S. Augustine sometime said of the Heretikes the Donatists: Cùm omnis anima suspensa expectaret in tanta collectione quid ageretur, illi vehementer instabant vt nihil ageretur. Quare hoc? nisi quia causam suam malam sciebant, & facilimè se posse conuinci, si ageretur, dubitare non poterant? When euery body was looking carefully what should be done in so great an assemblie, they (the Donatists Heretikes) laboured what they could, that nothing vtterly should bee done. And why so? They knew their cause was naught: and could not doubt but that if any conference or disputation should bee had, they should soone be reproued.

And although S. Hierome would haue no body to be patient when he is ſuſpected of Hereſie, yet we will deale herein neither bitterly, nor brablingly, nor yet be carried away with anger & heate, though he ought to be reckoned neither bitter nor brabler that ſpeaketh the truth. Wee willingly leaue this kind of eloquence to our aduerſaries, who, whatſoeuer they ſay againſt vs, be it neuer ſo ſhrewdly or deſpightfully ſaid, yet thinke it is ſaid modeſtly and comely enough, and care nothing whether it be true or falſe. We need none of theſe ſhifts, which doe maintaine the truth. Further, if we doe ſhew it plainely, that Gods holy Goſpel, the ancient Biſhops, & the Primitiue Church do make on our ſide, and that we haue not without iuſt cauſe left theſe men, but rather haue returned to the Apoſtles and old Catholike Fathers: and if wee ſhall be found to doe the ſame not colourably, or craftily, and in good faith before God, truely, honeſtly, cleerely, and plainely: and if they themſelues which fly our Doctrine and would be called Catholikes, ſhal manifeſtly ſee how all theſe titles of antiquity, whereof they boaſt ſo much, are quite ſhaken out of their hands, and that there is more pith in this our cauſe then they thought for: we then hope and truſt that none of them wil be ſo negligent and careleſſe of his owne ſaluation, but he will at length ſtudy and bethinke himſelfe to whether part he were beſt to ioine him. Undoubtedly except one wil altogether harden his heart, and refuſe to heare, he ſhal not repent him to giue good heed to this our Defenſe, and to marke wel what we ſay, and how truly and iuſtly it agreeth with Chriſtian Religion.

M. Harding.

I ſee well we muſt looke to your fingers. Yee ſpit forth your gall and choler by and by at the firſt. Through your whole booke in word ye pretend truth, zeale plainneſſe, and ſober dealing: but indeed powre out little other then lying, ſpight, ſcoffes, and immoderate railing. The effect of the reſt is this: ye haue ioined your ſelues to the Synagogue of Antichriſt: ye ſerue the ſtage, ye haue begun to play your Tragedy on falſly, ſhamefully, darkely, and guilefully: your brags and promiſes, your crakes of Gods holy word, your errors, your Hereſies, your contagious poyſon, your ſlanders, your new Clergies Doctrine, &c.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

The ſaying of S. Hierome is auouched by the like ſaying of Ruffinus an ancient writer. Thus he ſaith, Vnam notam Hæreſeos qui diſſimulat, non eſt Chriſtianus: Whoſo diſſembleth when he is called Heretike, is no Chriſtian man. For the reſt blame me not, good Chriſtian Reader, if I vſe no more words then need requireth. If I thought it worthy the while I could anſwer all theſe things more at large. I truſt, in our whole Apology there appearth no ſuch immoderate kind of railing. But if I ſhold follow M. Hardings humor, and write but the one halfe of that he writeth, then perhaps I might worthily be called a railer.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuiſion 2.

For where they cal vs Heretikes, it is a crime ſo hainous, that vnleſſe it may be ſeen, vnleſſe it may be felt, and in maner may be holden with hands and fingers, it ought not lightly to be iudged, or beleeued when it is laid to the charge of any Chriſtian. For Hereſie is a forſaking of ſaluation, a renouncing of Gods grace, a departing from the body and and ſpirit of Chriſt.

M. Harding.

The defenders definition of Hereſie found inſufficient.

The definition ye ſeeme to make of Hereſie is not ſufficient. For as ye define it, ſo euery deadly ſin is Hereſie. For euery deadly ſin is a forſaking of Saluation, a renouncing of Gods grace, a departing from the body and ſpirit of Chriſt. Hereſie is a falſe Doctrine againſt the right beliefe, by him that profeſſeth the faith ſtubbornly, either auouched, or called in doubt. In which definition this word (ſtubbornly) is added, becauſe it is not error only in thoſe things that be of faith, but ſtubbornes in error that maketh an heretike as S. Auguſtine teacheth. Who (ſaith he) in the Church of Chriſt ſauour any thing that is vnwholſome and crooked, if being sharpely admonished to ſauour that is whole and right, they reſiſt ſtubbornly, and will not amend their venemous and deadly Doctrines, but ſtand to defend them, they be Heretikes. But now the law of vpright dealing, eſpecially in Gods cauſe ſo requiring, ye muſt pardon vs, if, as among husbandmen we call a rake, a rake; a ſpade, a ſpade; a mattocke, a mattocke: ſo among Diuines, we call Hereſie Hereſie, and likewiſe, falſhood, lying, ſlandering, craft, hypocriſie, Apoſtaſie, malice, blaſphemy, euery ſuch crime by his proper name, without all gloſing.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Ye ſay, this is not the right definition of Hereſie. Verily (M. Harding) this is but a ſimple quarell. It was not my minde in this place to vtter any definition of Hereſie, either right, or wrong. You know right well, that ſuch curioſity in this kinde of writting is not needfull. It is ſufficient, our words be true, although they include no definition.

Auguſtinus.

For iuſt proofe of Hereſie, three things neceſſarily are required. Firſt, that it be an error: ſecondly, that it be an error againſt the truth of Gods word: for otherwiſe euery error maketh not an Hereſie: thirdly, that it be ſtoutly and wilfully maintained: otherwiſe an error in Gods truth without wilfull maintenance is not an Hereſie: S. Auguſtine ſaith, Errare poſſum, Hæreticus eſſe non poſſum: In an error I may be: but an Heretike I cannot be.

Auguſtin. ad Quodvult Deum, Epiſt. 2.

It was not ſo neceſſary in this matter, ſo preciſely to ſeeke vs definitions. I thought it ſufficient onely to declare the horror of Hereſie. For as touching the definition, S. Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ſit Hæreſis, regulari quadam definitione comprehendi, ſicut ego exiſtimo, aut omninò non poteſt, aut difficilimè poteſt: To expreſſe by orderly definition what thing maketh an Heretike, as I iudge, it is either impoſſible, or very hard. Therefore you M. Harding, and your fellowes are the more blame-worthy, for that of euery your fantaſies ye haue made an Hereſie. Ludouicus Viues one of your owne Schole thus complaineth thereof: Hæreſis nomen rebus leuiſſimis impingitur: idem facerent Scotiſtæ de Thomiſtis, niſi Scholarum conſuetudo aures emolliuiſſet: The name of Hereſie is laid vpon euery light matter: ſo would the Scotiſts handle the Thomiſts, ſauing that the cuſtome of the Schooles hath brought their eares in vre. Thus Pope Nicolas ſaith, Qui Romanæ Eccleſiæ Priuilegium auferre conatur, hic proculdubio labitur in Hæreſim: Whoſoeuer goeth about to abrogate the Priuiledge of the Church of Rome, he no doubt is an Heretike.

Diſt. 22. Omn.

That ye ſpeake of ſtubbornnes in defenſe of Hereſie, I pray God (M. Harding) it doe not euer nere touch your ſelfe. I pray God you doe not wilfully defend that thing, wherein you know and ſee manifeſt and open error. Verily S. Hierome ſaith, Quicunque aliter Scripturam intelligit, quàm ſenſus Spiritus Sancti flagitat, quo ſcripta eſt, licèt ab Eccleſia non receſſerit, tamen Hereticus appellari poteſt: Whoſoeuer expoundeth the Scriptures otherwiſe then the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, by whom they were written, doth require, although he be not yet departed from the Church, yet may he well be called an Heretike. Likewiſe the old Father Tertullian ſaith, Quicquid contra veritatem ſapit, Hæreſis eſt, etiam vetus conſuetudo: Whatſoeuer thing ſauoureth againſt the truth, it is an Hereſie, be it neuer ſo much an old cuſtome. Likewiſe your tyrannicall and filthy reſtraining of Prieſts lawful marriage, Vdalricus the Biſhop of Auguſta, calleth Periculoſum Hæreſis decretum: A dangerous decree of Hereſie.

24. Quæſt. 3. Hæreſis eſt.

Vdalricus Auguſtanus Epiſcopus ad Nicola. Papam.

Now touching ſimple error, and wilfull defence, S. Hilary ſaith, Illis in eo quod neſciunt poteſt adhuc in tuto eſſe ſalus, ſi credant? tibi verò iam omnia ad ſalutem clauſa ſunt, qui negas quod iam ignorare non potes: They foraſmuch as they know not the truth, may haue their ſaluation in ſafety, if afterward they beleeue; but all hope of health is ſhut from thee, foraſmuch as thou denieſt that thing that thou canſt not chuſe but know.

Hilari. de Trinitate, lib. 6.

To conclude, vnto you, M. Harding, who often times of ſmall errors, often times of vndoubted and vnknowne truths without regard of definition, haue ranſied great and horrible Hereſies, Alphonſus de Caſtro, a Doctor of your owne, ſaith thus: Idcircò ſit vt hi qui tam leuiter de Hæreſi pronunciant, non expendentes de quare loquantur, ſæpè ſuâ ipſorum ſagittâ feriantur, incidántque in eam foueam quam alijs parabant. Nam velle humanas ſcripturas in diuinarum ordinem connumerare, hoc verùm ego dixerim Hæreſim; quod faciunt hi qui humanis ſcriptis aſſentire impium autumant, perinde ac diuinis: Therefore it happeneth that they that ſo raſhly pronounce and call euery thing Hereſie, not conſidering whereof they ſpeake, be often ſtricken with their owne dart, and fall into the ſame pit that themſelues haue digged for others. For this would I rather call Hereſie, to account mens writings among the Scriptures of God. So doe they that thinke it a wicked matter to diſſent from the writings of man, no leſſe then if it were the iudgement of God.

Alphonſus de Caſtro de Hæreſi. lib. 1. cap. 7. pag. 79.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuiſion 3.

But this was euer an old & ſolemn property with them and their forefathers:

fathers: if any did complaine of their errours and faults, and desired to haue true Religion restored; straightway to condemne such for Heretikes, as men new fangled, and factious. Christ for no other cause was called a Samaritane, but only for that he was thought to haue fallen to a certaine new Religion, and to be the Author of a new sect. And Paul the Apostle of Christ was called before the Iudges, to make answer to a matter of Heresie: and therefore he said: According to this way which they call Heresie, I doe worship the God of my Fathers, beleeuing al things which be written in the Law, and in the Prophets. Acts 24.

M. Harding.

The defenders predecessors.

If ye meane Hus, Hierome of Prague, Wickleffe, Almaricke, Abailard, the Apostolikes, Peterbrusians, Berengarians, Waldenses, Albingenses, Imagebreakers, or such like, which euer found fault with the Church in their time, and cried for a restoring of Religion, as though it had been quite lost, and would themselues haue the glory of it, by bringing in their Heresie in place of the Catholike Doctrine, vnder the name of Gods word, which hath alwaies beene the propertie of all Heretikes. If (I say) ye meane these, or any of these, we also call them heretikes, and for such we condemne them.

Contradiction found in the defenders.

But Sirs, ye forget your selues foulely. How agreeth this with that ye say hereafter often times, that the light of the truth was quite put out, and that Luther and Zuinglius first brought the Gospell abroad into the World?

Were it true that Christ was called a Samaritane for the cause ye alleage, thereof what conclude yee? We see where about ye goe. Ye would seeme to ioine with Christ, with Paul, and with the first Christians. But truly they refuse your companie.

Samaritane Iohan. 8.

But we tel you, Christ was the true Samaritane indeed, that is to say, the Keeper, as he that is Keeper of mankinde: and therefore he shunneth not the name: yet was he not a Samaritane as the Iewes meant.

Act. 24.

Paul likewise (who was not as yee say, to speake properly, called before the Iudges to make answer to a matter of Heresie) being accused to Felix by Tertullus that he was of the sect or Heresie of the Nazarenes, (so were the Christians first called) did not only not denie, but openly confessed, that according to that way, or state of life, which the Iewes called a sect or Heresie, he worshipped God. For it is to be considered, that in those times the name of Heresie was not so infamous, as it may be iudged by the place of the Acts, cap. 5. vnlesse somewhat be added, whereby it may be vnderstanded to be taken in rate of a vice, as 1. Cor. 11. Galat. 5. So the word was then indifferent, and might be taken in good part, or euill part. Tertullian vseth it in good part, where, speaking of the Christians, he calleth thē Sectam, a Sect, into which Latine word the Greek word Heresis is turned. Now these examples of Christ, Paul, and the first Christians serue not your defence. Christ was called of the Iewes a Samaritane, vnworthily after the sense of their thought: ye are called Heretikes worthily. Paul burdened with the name of Heresie, forasmuch as thereby was signified the kind of life of those that beleeued in Christ, the word being indifferent, was honoured rather then reuiled. And Tertullian calleth the Christian people a Sect (as hee might) without blemish, or note of any euill. Your case is not like; for ye are charged with Heresie, as it is taken in the worst part.

Apologet. cap. 21. Secta.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

O how many waste words hath M. Harding to spare! Heere once againe hee commeth in with Hus, Hierome of Prague, Wickleffe, Almarike, Abailard, Apostolikes, Peterbrusians, Berengarians, Waldenses, Albingenses, Imagebreakers, to stay his simple Reader with a terrour of strange names. We say, Luther and Zuinglius were the first publishers of the Gospell: and yet againe we say, the same Luther and Zuinglius were not the first. We haue forgotten our selues foulely. Wee write contradiction against our selues. We would seeme to ioine with Christ and Paul, but truely they refuse our company. And so forth, I know not what.

Verily, M. Harding, we neuer said Luther and Zuinglius were the first publishers of the Gospell. If we should so say, we should report vntruth, as you doe often. Christ and his Apostles were the first.

Addition. ☞

Addition. ☞ M. Harding, A great vntruth You say no lesse, Pag. 17. Thus Doctor Luther began to preach the Gospell of Christ. If he that beginneth to publish, be the first publisher, then you said that Luther was the first publisher. The answere. It is a great losse of time M. Harding, to quarell at words, your selfe being assured of the meaning. You know well, I meane not that Doctor Luther was the first man that euer preached the Gospel of Christ. For Christ himselfe, and his Apostles were before him. But thus I say: In this latter age, after your so long darkenesse, hee was the first. But I haue said Doctor Luther began to publish the Gospell. There you say by mine owne confession, Doctour Luther was the first publisher of the Gospell. Granity (M. Harding) and sober dealing would become you better. I say he began: Ergo, (say you) hee was the first. How followeth this conclusion of these premisses? That you may vnderstand your errour by the like, S. Peter saith, Incipiam vos commonere, I will beginne to aduertise you. Will you conclude hereof, that S. Peter aduertised them neuer before, or that no man euer gaue them aduertisement M. Harding fol. 101. b. 2. Pet. 1.

aduertiſment beſore S. Peter? In the Acts of the Apoſtles it is written thus; Peter and Iohn were beginning to enter into the Temple. Will you therefore tell vs, that Peter and Iohn were neuer in the Temple before that day? Or, that no man euer came there before them? This is not that grauity, M. Harding, that you haue profeſſed vnto the world. Hauing reſpect vnto theſe latter daies, Doctour Luther was the firſt that preached the Goſpell. But hauing reſpect vnto the Goſpell it ſelfe, ſo Doctor Luther was not the firſt. For it had béene preached by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and by infinite other holy Fathers, many hundred yéeres before Luther was borne.

Theſe worthy and learned Fathers, Luther and Zuinglius, and other like godly and zealous men, were appointed of God, not to erect a new Church, but to reforme the old, whereof you haue made a Caue of Théeues; to kindle againe the light that you had quenched, and to beare witneſſe to the truth of God.

You ſay, Chriſt and Paul will none of our company: as if you were priuie of their counſell. But perhaps, M. Harding, this is clauis errans, and therefore can neither open nor ſhut: or as S. Hierome ſaith, Pars aliqua ſupercilij Phariſaici: Some part of the high lookes of the Phariſeis. Chriſt himſelfe hath ſaid, Who ſo loueth me, will keepe my word, and my Father loueth him: and my father and I will come to him, and dwell with him. S. Peter ſaith, Who ſo truſteth in him ſhall not be confounded.

Of Abailard and Almarike, and certaine other your ſtrange names, if they haue taught any thing contrary to the truth of God, we haue no ſkill: They are none of ours. Of Iohn Hus, Hierome of Prague, and Berengarius, and other like vertuous learned men, we haue no cauſe to be aſhamed. Their Doctrine ſtandeth ſtill, and increaſeth daily, becauſe it is of God. But as for yours, becauſe it is onely of your ſelues, (for it is knowne for the moſt part at what time, and vnder what Pope euery thing firſt began, as your Tranſubſtantiation vnder Pope Innocentius the third, Anno. 1214. &c.) therefore it falleth daily, and is now forſaken the world thorow.

M. Harding fol. 103. a.

Addition. Héere M. Harding crieth out impatiently, The more is your ſhame, if any ſparke of ſhame be left in you. Neither the whore taketh ſhame of her filthineſſe. Thou haſt gotten thee a whores forehead. Paſt-ſhame wretches. Addition.

Chriſtian Faith called Hereſie.

You ſay that the ſimple name of Sect or Hereſie, wherewith S. Paul was charged, was not ſo infamous or odious in thoſe daies, and that Tertullian called the Religion of Chriſt a Sect or Hereſie, without any maner blemiſh or note of euill. It was néedleſſe for M. Harding to auouch vntruth ſo earneſtly without cauſe.

Cicer. in Paradox. Actor. 24.

I grant, the name of Hereſie or Sect among the Philoſophers was not infamous. Cicero ſaith, Cato in ea Hæreſi eſt, quæ nullum ſequitur florem orationis. But in caſe of Religion it was euermore amongſt al men taken in ill part, and condemned, and counted odious. Touching S. Paul, in how good part the Iewes called him Heretike, it may eaſily appeare by the words of Tertullus his accuſer: Inuenimus hunc virum peſtilentem, & mouentem ſeditionem omnibus Iudæis per vniuerſum orbem, ac principem Sectæ Nazareorum: We haue found this man to be a peſtilent and a wicked fellow, mouing ſedition among the Iewes thorowout the whole world, and a Captaine of the Hereſie of the Nazarenes. In ſuch good part they ſaid vnto Chriſt: Art thou greater then was our Father Abraham? Thou art a falſe Prophet, and deceiueſt the people: Thou art a Samaritane, and haſt the Diuell.

Iohan. 7. Iohan. 8.

Iohan. 16. Matth. 10. Nicol. Lyra in 24. cap. Actor.

The like good part Chriſt promiſed afore hand to his Diſciples: They ſhall caſt you out of their Synagogues: Ye ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake. In ſuch good part and meaning was S. Paul called an Heretike. And ſo M. Harding beſides others, your owne Doctour Nicolaus Lyra would ſoone haue told you.

Tertull. in Apologetico.

But much more I maruel ye ſhould ſo vnaduiſedly ſay that Tertullian called the Chriſtian people a Sect or Hereſie in good part, and, as you ſay, without any blemiſh, or note of euill. For the ſame Tertullian in the ſame Apologie ſaith, the Heathens commonly called the Chriſtians Inceſtos, Homicidas, Infanticidas, Sacrilegos, Peſſimos, Nocentiſſimos, Publicum odium, Hoſtes humani generis, Omnium ſcelerum reos; Deorum, Imperatorum, Legum, Morum, Naturæ totius inimicos: Aduouterous againſt kinde, Mankillers, Killers of children, Churchrobbers, Moſt wicked, Moſt hurtfull, The publike hatred, The enemies of mankinde, Guilty of all kind of wickedneſſe; Enemies againſt the Gods, againſt the Emperours, againſt the Lawes, againſt good order, againſt Nature it ſelfe. Whereſoeuer they ſaw them they made an outcry vpon them, Chriſtianos ad Leonem, Non licèt eſſe Chriſtianos: Haue theſe Chriſtians to the Lion: It is not lawfull theſe Chriſtians ſhould liue. So S. Auguſtine ſaith, Factum eſt vulgi Prouerbium, Pluuia defecit cauſa Chriſtianorum: It is now become a common Prouerb among the people. Our raine faileth vs becauſe of theſe Chriſtians. So Euſebius ſaith, the Religion of Chriſt was called Impiorum Chriſtianorum Hæreſis:

Tertull. in Apologetico. Auſtin. de Ciuit. dei. l. 2. ca. 3. Euſe. l. 4. ca. 18.

Hæresis: The Heresie of godlesse Christians. These words, M. Harding, I trow were neuer vttered without all manner blemish, and note of euill. S. Hierome saith, Quod magis mirum sit, etiam illud de Actibus Apostolorum videtur esse religendum, fidem nostram in Christum & Ecclesiasticâ disciplinam iam tunc à peruersis hominibus Hæresin nuncupatam: And that we may the more marueli, we may once againe reade this place of the Acts of the Apostles, where we find that the Christian faith, and Ecclesiastical Discipline was euen then of wicked men called an Heresie. Hieronim. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. 3.

Euen as rightly, M. Harding, and vpon as good grounds you haue againe this day condemned the same Gospel of Christ, and in as good part and meaning haue called it Heresie. But we may truely and simply say with S Paul, According to this Sect, which you call Heresie, we worship the God of our Fathers, which is the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. Actor. 24.

The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuision 1.

But the more sore & outragious a crime Heresie is, the more it ought to be proued by plaine and strong arguments, especially in this time, when men begin to giue lesse credit to their words, & to make more diligent search of their Doctrine then they were wont to do. For the people of God are otherwise instructed now then they were in times past, when all the Bishops of Romes sayings were allowed for Gospell, and when all Religion did depend only vpon their authority. Now adaies the holie Scripture is abroad, the writings of the Apostles and Prophets are in print, whereby all truth and Catholike Doctrine may be proued, and all Heresie may be disproued and confuted. Scriptures and Doctours

M. Harding.

The defenders Heresies sufficiently and fully confuted already by sundrie great Clerks Lanfrancus. Guimundus. Petrus Cluniacensis. Thomas Walden. B. Fisher.

Where ye require your Heresie, for so much as it is so hainous a crime, by plaine & strong arguments to be proued, it is not vnknown how sufficiently and substantially that is performed already by men of excellent learning, as well of this age, as of times past. Was not Berengarius, the first author of your Sacramentary Heresie, by most plaine and strong arguments confuted of Lanfrancus Bishop of Canturburie and Guimundus Bishop of Auersa? Were not the Peterbrusians so, whose Heresie ye hold against the blessed Sacrifice of the Masse, of the learned Abbat Petrus Cluniacensis? Was not Wickleffe so of Thomas Walden, a learned man of England? Hath not Luther and Oecolampadius been so confuted in our time of that holy and learned father Bishop Fisher?

In what case the Popes sayings are to be taken for truth. Luce 22.

But what shall I speake of particular men, were they neuer so excellent, by whom they haue beene confuted, sith by publike sentence of the Church they haue beene condemned, both in Generall and Prouincial Councels? Therefore we thinke it not needful now againe to proue your Doctrine, so sufficiently condemned, to be Heresie. That the people be now otherwise instructed then they were in times past, we confesse. But whether better now then in our forefathers daies, they that can consider the liues of them now, and of them that were then, may easily iudge.

The sayings of the Bishop of Rome were neuer allowed for the Gospell. His priuate sayings and common talke might be erronious, no lesse then other mens. But what he said by way of iudgement & sentence definitiue in doubtful points touching Religion, such sayings of Peters successor (for whom Christ praied that his faith might not faile, and who was commanded by Christ to strengthen his brethren) we take for truth, and the same obediently receiue. So the Fathers assembled in Councell at Chalcedon, receiued and agreed to the saying & writing of Pope Leo, no lesse then if Peter the Apostle and first B. of Rome himselfe had spoken. The Popes authorinie we acknowledge supreme aboue all other authoritie in earth, touching the gouernment of the Church: yet was it neuer said, ne thought by the Catholikes, that all Religion depended only thereon, as your slanderous report beareth men in hand. Vntruth. Vntruth.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Lanfranc, Guimundus, abbas Cluniacensis, Thomas Waldensis, Iohn Fisher, and other your like Doctours, M. Harding, are ouer yong, all within the space of these last fiue hundred yéres, farre vnlike S. Austine, S. Hierome, S. Ambrose, S. Chrysostome, and others the ancient learned Fathers and Doctours of the Church. Neither is there any sufficient cause to the contrarie, but that Berengarius, Iohn Wickleffe, Iohn Hus, Doctour Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, and others, either for learning, or for truth, or for iudgment in the Scripture, or for antiquitie may well and safely be compared with them. At the least I hope we may say of them as S. Augustine once said of the Doctours and Fathers of his time: Neque quorumlibet disputationes, quamuis Catholicorum & laudatorum hominum, velut Scripturas Canonicas habere debemus: vt nobis non liceat, salua honorificentia, quæ illis debetur, aliquid in eorum scriptis improbare aut respuere, si fortè inuenerimus quòd aliter senserunt quàm veritas habet: Neither weigh we the writings of all men, be they neuer so worthy and Catholike, as we weigh the Canonicall Aug. ad Fortunatian. Epist. 3.

Scriptures: but that, sauing the reuerence that is due vnto them, wee may mislike and refuse somewhat in their writings, if wee happen to finde that they haue thought otherwise then the truth may be are.

Likewise the Councels ye meane are very new, and therefore beare the lesse authoritie, for that they be so many waies contrary to the old. Hereof hereafter more at large. Certainely there is none of your errors so grosse and palpable, but by some of your late Councels it hath beene confirmed.

M. Harding fol. 111. b.

Addition. ☞ This talke (saith M. Harding) is Luciferlike, and saucie, and malepert. For wherein (saith he) are the late Councels so many waies contrary to the old? The Answer. Ye might as well haue demanded, Wherein is darkenesse so many waies contrary to the light? For is he so great a stranger in these cases? I doubt not but he doth well remember it was decreed in the old Councell of Aphrica, that no Priest should appeale out of that Countrie to the Bishop of Rome. Likewise it is concluded in the old Counsels holden at Tela, Hippo, and Meleuetum, that no Priest should appeale, but onely to the Councels holden in Aphrica. But the latter new Councels haue made it lawfull to appeale to the Pope from the farthest ends of the world. And Pope Pius 2. and Pope Iulius 2. haue solemnly determined, that who so appealeth from the Pope to a Councell, shall be iudged an Heretike.

In Bulla Leonis 10.

The old Councell of Nice alloweth the Bishop of Rome equall power with the other three Patriarks, making euery of them within their owne Prouinces in iurisdiction and authority like vnto other. But the latter new Councels haue made the same Bishop of Rome head and Prince ouer all Primates and Patriarks throughout the world. And M. Harding saith, the said Patriarkes were onely the Popes Deputies, that is to say, serued him at commandement as his men. And in the late new Councell of Laterane vnder Pope Leo these words are openly pronounced, and well allowed of, In Papa est omnis potestas supra omnes potestates, Tam Cœli, quàm Terræ: In the Pope there is all power aboue all powers, as well of Heauen as of Earth. The like might be said of priuate Masse, of the halfe Communion, of Transubstantiation, and of the rest. But by these few we may easily see how neere the new Councels resemble the old.

August. contra Maximin. lib. 3. Cap. 14.

Thereby we may iustly say to you as S. Augustine sometime said to Maximinus the Arian Heretike, Nec ego Nicenam Synodum tibi, nec tu mihi Ariminensem debes tanquam præiudicaturus obiicere Scripturarum authoritatibus res cum re, causa cum causa, ratio cum ratione concertet: Neither may I lay to thee the Councel of Nice, nor maiest thou lay to me the Councel of Ariminum, either of vs thinking therby to finde preiudice against the other. But let vs lay matter to matter, cause to cause, and reason to reason by the authority of the Scriptures.

Yet we say not, as you M. Harding, would faine gather, that S. Augustine by these words despised the authority of the Nicene Councell. For certainely he had it euer, as we also haue it, in great reuerence. But thus we say, S. Augustine disputing with an Heretike, as we doe with you, and saying that Councels might be alleaged against Councels, as the Councel of Ariminum against the Counsell of Nice, was therefore contented, not to vse the authority of any Councell at all, but, as himselfe saith, by the authority of the Scriptures to lay matter to matter, and cause to cause.

Addition. ☞ The Counsel of Ariminum, though there were in it eight hundred Bishops, yet was it allowed for no Councell, (saith M. Harding) for want of Damasus the Popes confirmation, as Sozomenus and Theodoretus haue witnessed. The Answer. Here M. Harding you haue conueied in a pretty fitton, vnder some colour of truth: both Theodoretus and Sozomenus will reproue you. For the Councel of Ariminum was misliked, not onely for that it was not confirmed by the Pope, as ye would seeme to tell vs, but also for that it lacked the confirmation of sundry others. Sozomenus saith thus, They allow not the decrees of the Councell of Ariminum, for that neither the Eishop of Rome nor other Bishops had consented vnto it, and for that the said Decrees had misliked many that were there assembled. To like purpose writeth also Theodoretus, and in maner with like words. I grant the Bishop of Rome was the chiefe. Yet his onely authority was not sufficient to allow or disallow generall Councels. For, as it appeareth by your owne Authors the consent of others was required thereto as well as his. Thus M. Harding, ye seeke vnduly to beguile the simple by vntrue report.

Theodoretus lib. 2. cap 21.

Ye grant there is more light and knowledge now then was before. The greater is either your fault or your folly, M. Harding, that in the broad day and open light so busily set forth the works of darkenesse. S. Chrysostome saith, Hic est multò impudentior. Ex furibus enim leges eos grauiùs puniunt qui interdiu furantur: Hee is very shameleſſe that worketh deceit in the open light. For of all theeues the Law most sharpely punisheth them that rob in the day time. Therefore S. Cyprian saith vnto you: Ignosci potuit simpliciter errãti: post inspirationem verò & reuelationem factam, qui in eo quod errauerat perseuerat prudens & sciens, sine venia ignorantiæ peccat: præsumptione enim atque obstinatione superatur: He that is deceiued, and erreth of simplicity, may be pardoned: but after that the truth is once reuealed, whoso continueth neuerthelesse in his former error wittingly and willingly, sinneth without pardon of ignorance, as being ouercome by presumption and wilfulnesse. Cyprian ad Iubaianum.

You say, notwithstanding all this great light we talke of, yet our liues are nothing comparable to the liues of them that haue beene before vs. This, M. Harding, hath euer beene an old complaint in all ages, as may appeare by S. Cyprian, S. Augustine, and other ancient Fathers. It was a common Prouerbe in old times, Tempora priora meliora: Things a yere past are euermore better then things present. For euery thing to vs seemeth the greater as it seemeth nerest to touch our senses. And because we feele not our Fathers euils, therefore we imagine they had no euill at all. The Wiseman saith, Ne dixeris, quę causa est quòd priora tempora meliora fuerint quàm præsentia. Stulta enim est huiusmodi interrogatio: Neuer demand wherefore the times past were better then the times present. For indeed it is a foolish question. Cyprian ad Demetrian. Aug. de Ciuit. Dei. Eccles. 7.

But M. Harding, wherefore doe you thus condemne our liues in respect of our Fathers? Certainly you must needs confesse there are fewer Blasphemies, fewer Othes, fewer breaches of Matrimony, fewer Stewes, fewer Concubines, fewer Fraies, fewer Murthers amongst vs this day then commonly were at any time amongst our Fathers. Howbeit, to let our Fathers passe, if it shall please you to lay our liues to your liues, although we acknowledge many our imperfections, yet Gods name be blessed we haue no cause to fly the comparison.

The Popes words, you say, were neuer taken for Gospell. Yes M. Harding, and somewhat also aboue the Gospel. For proofe whereof it may please you to remember the words of certaine your late Doctors. Syluester Prierias late master of Pope Leoes Palace, writeth thus: Indulgentiæ authoritate Scripturę non innotuere nobis, sed authoritate Ecclesiæ Romanæ, Romanorumque Pontificum, quæ maior est: Pardons are not warranted vnto vs by the authority of Gods word, but by the authority of the Romane Church, and of the Bishops of Rome, which is more then Gods word. If this be not sufficient, he addeth further: A Doctrina Romanæ Ecclesiæ, & Romani Pontificis Sacra Scriptura robur & authoritatem trahit: The holy Scripture taketh strength and authority of the Doctrine of the Bishop and Church of Rome. Pope aboue Gods word. Sylueſter Prierias contra Lutherum.

Your greatest Doctor Albertus Pighius saith, Apostoli quædam conscripserunt, non vt scripta illa præessent fidei & Religioni nostræ, sed potiùs vt subessent: The Apostles wrote certaine things, not to the end that such writings should be ouer our faith and Religion, but rather that they should be vnder. Your Canonists say, [a] Papa potest dispensare contra Ius Diuinum: The Pope may dispense against the Law of God: [b] Papa potest dispensare contra Ius naturæ: The Pope may dispense against the Law of Nature: [c] Papa potest dispensare contra Apostolum: The Pope may dispense against S. Paul the Apostle: [d] Papa potest dispensare contra Nouum Testamentum: The Pope may dispense against the New Testament. [e] Papa potest dispensare de omnibus præceptis Veteris & Noui Testamenti: The Pope may dispence with all the Commandements, both of the Old and also of the New Testament. Hereof more hereafter, as farther occasion shall be offered. Albertus Pighius Hierarch. lib. 1. cap. 2. [a] 16. q. 1. Quacunq; in Glossa. [b] 15 q. 6. Authorit. in Glossa. [c] Dist. 34. Lector. & Dist. 82. Presbyter. [d] Abbas Panor. Extra de Donationibus, ca. fin. [e] Summa Angel. in dictione Papa. [f] Franciscus Xabarella.

These be your owne Doctors words, M. Harding: they be truly reported: they be no slanders. And therefore Franciscus Zabarella a Cardinall of Rome saith thus: [f] Persuaserunt Pontificibus quòd omnia possent, & sic quòd facerent quicquid liberet, etiam illicita, & sint plusquam Deus: They haue made the Popes beleeue that they might do all things, what soeuer they listed, yea notwithstanding they were things vnlawfull: and thus haue they made them more then God.

You say, The Pope in his common talke may be deceiued, and erre as other men may: but in his Iudgement Seat, and Sentence Definitiue of Religion he cannot erre: as if ye would say, The Pope hath one spirit in the Consistory, and an other at home: much like as one said sometimes vnto Cicero in reproach of his inconstancie, Aliud stans, aliud sedens de Republica loqueris: Touching the Common-weale, ye haue one minde sitting and an other standing. Salust. in Ciceronem.

But Christ said vnto Peter, I haue praied for thee, that thy faith should not faile. Therefore, say you, we receiue obediently whatsoeuer the Pope speaketh in place of iudgement. Whereby ye seeme to giue vs secretly to vnderstand that Christs praiers were auaileable for the Pope, to keepe him from error, not in the Church, or Pulpit, or Closet, or any other common or priuate place, but only in the Consistory and Councel in debating doubtfull cases of Religion. Lucæ 22.

But how holdeth this argument? Christ prayed for Peter that his faith should not faile: Ergo, the Pope cannot erre. Verily S. Augustine saith, Nunquid pro Petro rogabat: pro Iohanne & Iacobo non rogabat? Vt de cæteris taceamus: What did Christ pray for Peter; and did he not pray for Iohn and Iames? I will not speake of the rest. Neither did Christ pray for Peter onely, or for the Apostles, but for all the faithfull that euer should be, as himselfe saith, I pray not onely for them, but also for all them that through their preaching shall beleeue in me.

Aug. in Qu. Noui Test. q. 75.

Iohan. 17.

Howbeit, what, saith M. Harding, he so obediently receiueth the Popes Decrees: Yewis, the Popes themselues will not so receiue them. Platina saith, Acta priorum Pontificum sequentes Pontifices aut infringunt, aut omninò tollunt. Nihil enim aliud isti Pontificuli cogitabant, quàm vt nomen & dignitatem maiorum suorum extinguerent: The next Pope either breaketh or vtterly repealeth his predecessors Decrees. For these litle petty Popes had none other study to busie themselues withall, but onely to deface the name and dignitie of the former Popes.

Platina in Stephano, & in Romano.

Where you say, the whole Councell of Chalcedon so estéemed the voice of Pope Leo, as if it had been the voice of Peter himselfe, this, M. Harding, is a manifest vntruth, as it shall soone appeare. I grant the name of Leo, for his great learning and grauity was much regarded. So S. Ambrose for the like cause was called Orbis terrarum oculus, Sacerdotum Archisacerdos, & Fundamentum fidei: The eie of the world, the head Priest of all Priests, and the Foundation of the faith. So Paphnutius, being no Pope, was heard against all the rest of the Councell of Nice: So S. Hierome being neither Pope nor Bishop, was receiued against this whole Councell of Chalcedon.

Athanas. ad Heroxem. Sozom. l. 1. ca. 33. 36. Quæst. 2. Quia legitima.

Neither did the Councell follow Leo alone, as the vniuersall Bishop and head of the Church, but ioined him together with others, as estéeming them of equall authority. For thus they made their generall shout: Omnes ita credimus: Leo Papa ita credit: Cyrillus ita credit: Leo & Anatolius ita credunt: Thus we all beleeue: Thus Pope Leo beleeueth: Cyrillus thus beleeueth: Leo and Anatolius thus beleeue.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 2.

And with what credit can M. Harding say, the whole Councell of Chalcedon yélded vnto Pope Leo, as if it had béene vnto Peter himselfe? For it is certaine, that the same whole Councell decreed against Leo: and likewise Leo against the Councell. For the Councell decreed contrary to the old Canons, that the Bishop of Constantinople among the foure Patriarchs should be the second in dignity, and that the same Bishop of Constantinople should haue and enioy one Authority, and like Priuileges with the Bishop of Rome. The words be these: Æqua sanctissimæ sedi nouæ Romæ priuilegia tribuerunt, rationabile iudicantes vrbem eam ornatam iam imperio & Senatu, æquis senioris regiæ Romæ priuilegijs frui, & in Ecclesiasticis, sicut illa habet, maiestatem habere negotijs: The Fathers gaue equall Priuileges vnto the holy See of new Rome (which was Constantinople) thinking it to be reasonable that the same City of Constantinople, being now furnished with Empire and Councell, should enioy equall Priuileges with the Princely City of the old Rome, and in all Ecclesiasticall affaires should beare the same maiesty that Rome beareth. This thing Pope Leo much misliked, and found great fault with the Councell, and would in no wise consent vnto it. Thus he writeth: Quæ per occasionem Synodi malè sunt attentata reprehenderam: I reproued those things that were euill attempted by the Councell of Chalcedon. And againe, Nullum vnquam potuerunt nostrum obtinere consensum: They were neuer able to get our consent.

Leo. Epist. 59.

Leo. Epist. 53.

Church dependeth of the Pope.

And when these matters were past by the consent of all the Bishops, Lucentius Pope Leoes Legate came whining in, and besought the Councell that the whole matter might be repealed. The words written in the Councel be these: Lucentius dixit, Sedes Apostolica quæ nobis præcepit, præsentibus humiliari non debet. Et ideo quæcunque in præiudicium Canonum hesterna die gesta sunt, nobis absentibus, sublimitatem vestram petimus, vt circunduci iubeatis. Vires illustrissimi iudices dixerunt. Quod interlocuti sumus, tota Synodus approbauit: Lucentius the Popes Legate said, The Apostolike See of Rome, whose commission we haue, may not by any these doings be defaced. Therefore we beseech your honours, that whatsoeuer was concluded heere yesterday in our absence, in preiudice of the Canons, yee will command the same to be blotted out. The honourable iudges made him answer; That we haue talked of, the same the whole Councell hath allowed.

Concil Chalcedon. Actio. 16.

Thus many waies, M. Harding, the vntruth of your tale plainely appeareth. For the Councell of Chalcedon estéemed not the voice of Leo as if he had béene the voice of Peter, as you say: but rather contrariwise made light of it, and weighed it none otherwise then they saw cause.

Therefore Liberatus saith thus touching the same: Cùm Anatolius, consentiente Concilio, Primatum obtinuisset, Legati verò Romani Episcopi contradicerent, à Iudicibus & Episcopis Liberatus cap. 13.

Episcopis omnibus illa contradictio suscepta non est. Et licèt sedes Apostolica nunc vsq; contradicat, tamen quòd à Synodo firmatum est, imperatorio patrocinio permanet, quodammodo: When Anatolius (the Bishop of Constantinople) by consent of the Councell had obtained the Primacy, notwithstanding the Bishop of Romes Legates stood against it, yet their gainesaying could not be receiued neither of the Iudges nor of the Bishops: and albeit the Apostolike See of Rome withstand it still, yet the decree of the Councell, by the Emperours warrant, after a sort continueth in force.

Church depẽdeth of the Pope.

But you neuer taught vs, ye say, that the whole state of the Church dependeth of the Pope. It is not your Doctrine: you neuer spake it. And therefore we are railers and slanderers that so report you. If it be so indeede, M. Harding, as you say, wherefore then suffer you Cardinall Cusanus to write thus? Veritas adhæret Cathedræ. Quare membra Cathedræ vnita, & Pontifici coniuncta, efficiunt ecclesiam: (Popes) The truth cleaueth fast to the chaire. Therefore the members vnited to the chaire and ioined to the Pope, make the Church. Wherefore suffer you Iohannes de Parisijs, one of your Catholik Doctors, to write thus? Fiet vnum Ouile, & vnus Pastor. Quod quidem de Christo intelligi non potest: Sed de aliquo alio Ministro, qui præsit loco eius: There shall be one flocke, and one shepheard. Which thing cannot be taken of Christ: we must needs vnderstand it of some other Minister, that ruleth in his stead.

Wherefore suffer you Hosius your Grand Captaine to write thus? Vnum toti præesse Ecclesiæ vsque adeo est necessarium, vt absque hoc, Ecclesia vna esse non possit: It is so necessary a thing, that one onely man ouerrule the whole Church, that without the same, the Church cannot be one. Wherefore suffer you your Canonists to say, Constat Ecclesiam ideo esse vnam, quia in Vniuersali Ecclesia vnum est caput Supremum, scilicet Papa: It is plaine, that therefore the Church is one, because that in the whole Vniuersall Church, there is one Supreme head, that is, the Pope?

Hosius in Confessione Petri. cap. 27.

Clement. lib. 5. Ad nostrum: In Glossa.

To be short, why doe you your selfe, M. Harding, allege S. Hieroms words directly, as ye would haue vs beleeue, to this purpose? Ecclesiæ salus à summi Sacerdotis dignitate pendet. Which words into English ye haue turned thus: The safety of the Church, hangeth of the worship of the high Priest. He meaneth the Pope Peters successor. In which last clause, ye misconstrue, and racke S. Hieromes words far contrary to his meaning. For S. Ierome meant not hereby the Bishop of Rome, but euery seuerall Bishop within his own charge: euery which Bishop, he calleth the highest Priest, as in my former Replie it is declared more at large.

Hieron. contra Luciferianos. Art. 4. Diu. 15.

If these things be true, why are they now denied? if they bee false, why are they not condemned? I trust it may appeare by these few, that we report the truth truely, and are no slanderers.

The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuision 2.

Sithence then they bring foorth none of these for themselues, and call vs neuertheless Heretikes, which haue neither fallen from Christ, nor from the Apostles, nor yet from the Prophets, this is an iniurious, and a very spightfull dealing.

M. Harding.

Nay Sirs, ye shal not so carry away the conclusion with a lie. But contrariwise, sithence we bring forth many Scriptures for the truth, which ye impugne, as your selues shal see when we come to confute your Doctrine, which here followeth: and sithence notwithstanding that ye wil not yeeld to the Scriptures, but peruert the true meaning of them with glosses and interpretations of your owne heads, frame new opinions contrary to that ye haue receiued, and that the Church hath euer taught: the Catholikes will still call you Heretikes, and the Church will condemne you for Heretikes, and so account you vntil ye recant and repent.

That the Defenders be fallen from Christ. Matth. 18. Luke 10.

But yee haue not fallen from Christ, yee say, nor from the Apostles, nor yet from the Prophets. As though they that depart from the Romane Church, which is the Catholik Church, which diuers times in the Apology yee confesse, fell not from Christ, and consequently from the Apostles and Prophets. Saith not Christ in the Gospell, He that heareth not the Church, let him be to thee as an Heathen and a Publicane? Saith he not also, he that despiseth you, despiseth me?

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Whether part rightly and reuerently vseth the Scriptures of God, and whether peruerteth them by shifts and glosses, I trust it shall in part appeare by this conference. In deed M. Harding, it is no great mastery by your interpretations and handlings, to haue store enough and plenty of Scriptures. For this is one speciall ground of your Diuinity, [a] Papa potest ex nihilo facere aliquid; & sententiam quæ nulla est, facere aliquam: The Pope is able of nothing to make something; and of no sentence to make some sentence. By your Doctrine it is lawfull, and good Logike to reason thus: [b] An gloriabitur serra Esai 10. aduersus eum qui trahit illam? Shall the saw boast against him that draweth it? [c] Non est seruus

Or Thus, [d] Omnia munda mundis: coinquinatis autem & infidelibus nihil est mundum: All things are cleane to the cleane: but vnto the filthie and Infidels nothing is cleane: Ergo, It is not lawfull for Priests to marrie.

Or as you, M. Harding, sometimes haue delighted to reason: [e] Nolite dare sanctum canibus: Giue not holy things to dogs: Ergo, It is not lawfull for the Christian vulgar people to read the Scriptures.

M Harding in his former booke, fol. 155. b

Thus may you easily be well stored, and full freight of Scriptures enow, and as [f] S. Hierome saith, may carrie them captiue to serue your turne. But S. Hierome could also haue told you, [g] Non in verbis Scripturarum est Euangelium, sed in sensu: The Gospel standeth not in the bare words of the Scriptures, but in the meaning: Therefore we may say vnto you as S. Cyprian once said to the Nouatian Heretikes: [h] Audite Nouatiani, apud quos Scripturæ cœlestes leguntur potius quam intelliguntur: Hearken hereto ye Nouatian Heretiks, amongst whom the heauenly Scriptures are read rather then well perceiued.

You say the Church of Rome by your owne confession is the Catholike Church: which Church, forasmuch as we haue forsaken, we haue forsaken Christ and his Apostles. For saith not Christ in the Gospell, say you, [i] He that heareth not the Church, let him be vnto thee as an Heathen and a Publicane? And, He that despiseth you despiseth me?

[i] Matth. 18. Luc. 10.

We grant, M. Harding, the name of the Church of Rome is Catholike: but the errors and abuses thereof are not Catholike, neither is it the Church that we finde fault withall; but the great corruptions and foule deformities that you haue brought into the Church.

Howbeit, your policy herein is apparant. Your Reader, be he neuer so simple, may soone see your whole drift. For magnifie the Church with all manner titles of Authority, not for any speciall regard ye beare the Church indeed, but onely to settle your selues in an infinite Tyranny, and to make vs beleeue that you onely are the Church, and to giue credit to al your fantasies: yea although ye be the defacers & enemies of the Church. Verily the bare name of the Church is not sufficient. S. Paul saith that Antichrist the man of sin shall sit in the Temple of God: whereby no doubt he meant the Church.

2. Thess. 2.

But, M. Harding, heare you the voice of God: leaue your fables: speake Gods holy word, and speake it truely: be ye faithfull Ministers of the truth. Then whosoeuer shall be found to despise your Doctrine, be he King or Emperour, we will not doubt to call him an Heathen and Publicane. But if hee bee an Heathen that will not heare your Church, what is he then that will not heare Christ? Æneas Syluius being afterward Pope himselfe, saith thus, Si Romanus Pontifex non audiet Ecclesiam, Christum quoque non audiet, & tanquam Ethnicus & Publicanus haberi debet: If the Bishop of Rome wil not heare the Church, he will not heare Christ, and therefore must be taken as an Heathen and Publicane. S. Augustine saith, Oues meæ vocem meam audiunt, & sequuntur me. Auferantur chartæ humanæ: sonent voces diuinæ: My sheepe heare my voice, and follow me. Away with mans writings: let the voice of God sound vnto vs.

Æneas Syl. de gestis Concil. Basilien. Paul. Vrsperg. pag. 411. Aug. de ouibus.

Surely Doctor Luther himselfe, against whom M. Harding so vehemently, and so often enflameth his choler, in humble and reuerent manner writeth thus: Nos colimus Romanam Ecclesiam in omnibus. Tantùm illis resistimus qui pro Ecclesia obtrudunt Babyloniam: We honour the Church of Rome in all things. Only we withstand them that in stead of the Church haue thrust in the confusion of Babylon. In like sense S. Cyprian saith, Non est pax, sed bellum: nec Ecclesiæ iungitur, qui ab Euangelio separatur: It is not peace; it is warre: Neither is he ioined to the Church, that is diuided from the Gospel. Now, how carefully the Church of Rome is led by the Gospel of Christ, we may easily learne by Nicolaus Cusanus a Cardinall of the same Church of Rome. Thus he saith: Sequuntur scripturæ Ecclesiam: & non è conuerso: The Scriptures of God follow the Church: but contrariwise the Church followeth not the Scriptures. To conclude, we may say vnto you as S. Augustine said sometime to Petilian the Donatian Heretike. Vtrùm nos Schismatici sumus, an vos, nec ego, nec tu, sed Christus interrogetur, vt indicet Ecclesiam suam: Whether of vs bee Schismatikes, we or you, aske you not me: I wil not aske you: let Christ be asked, that he may shew vs his owne Church.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuision 1.

WIth this sword did Christ put off the Diuel when he was tempted of him: with these weapons ought all presumption which doth aduance it selfe against God, to be ouerthrown and conquered. For al Scripture, saith S. Paul, that commeth by the inspiration of God, is profitable to teach, to confute, to inſtruct, and to reproue, that the man of God may be perfect and thoroughly framed to euery good worke. Thus did the holy Fathers alway fight againſt the Heretikes with none other force then with the holy Scriptures.

M. Harding.

That the holy Fathers did euermore fight againſt the Heretiks with none other force then with the holy Scriptures, that we denie.

For what did the Fathers in the firſt generall Councell holden at Nice? Did they fight againſt Arius, and the maintainers of his Hereſie, with no other force then with the Scriptures? When thoſe Heretiks refuſed the word Homouſion, whereby it is ſignified the Son of God to be of one and the ſame ſubſtance with God the Father, for that it was not to be found in the Scriptures, beſides which they ſtiffly denied, as ye do, that any thing ought to be receiued: did not the Catholike Biſhops of the other ſide flie to the ancient Fathers? Did they not appeale to the iudgements of thoſe Fathers which had giuē ſentence of the matter then being in controuerſie, before that Arius and thoſe that held of his ſide were borne?

Hiſtor. Tripart. lib. 5. cap. 10. In the ſecond Councell aſſembled at Conſtantinople, were not the Heretikes of ſundry ſects by a witty and a godly policy contriued betweene Nectarius the Biſhop, and Theodoſius the Emperour, through the ſuggeſtion of the great Clerke Siſinnius, driuen to receiue the Doctors, who liued before their Hereſies were heard of, as witneſſes of true Chriſtian Doctrine worthy of credit?

Macedonius. Macedonius in that Councell was condemned, who therefore denied the holy Ghoſt to be God, becauſe the Scriptures giue not vnto him that name. But the Biſhops there aſſembled, as Photius that learned Biſhop writeth, declared out of the teaching of the Fathers and Diuines before their time, that the holy Ghoſt is to be adored, worſhipped, and glorified, as being of one nature and ſubſtance together with the Father and the Sonne.

Neſtorius euer called for Scriptures, as the Heretiks at this day do, whatſoeuer ſect they be of. In the third Councell kept at Epheſus, the Heretike Neſtorius boaſted, as ye doe, of the Scriptures, ſaying they were of his ſide, and would neither ſpeake nor heare ought but Scriptures, Scriptures. And alleging a place or two out of the Goſpell, where Mary is called the mother of Ieſus, ſtoutly, Finde me in all Scripture (quoth he) where Marie is called the mother of God. Hereto what ſaid that holy and learned Biſhop Cyrillus chiefe in that councell? Hanc nobis fidem diuini tradidēre Diſcipuli; & licet nullum fecerint dictionis huius mentionem, ita tamen ſentire à ſanctis patribus edocti ſumus. This faith (ſaith he) the Diſciples of God haue by tradition left vnto vs. And although they haue made no expreſſe mention of this word (Deipara) yet ſo to thinke we haue beene taught of the holy Fathers.

Epiſt. 1. Tom. 4 Deipara not found in Scripture, yet receiued and kept. When they reaſoned about rules touching faith to be made (ſaith Vincentius Lirinenſis writing of that Councell) to all the Biſhops there aſſembled, to the number almoſt of two hundred, this ſeemed moſt Catholike, moſt faithfull, and beſt to be done, that the ſentences of the holy Fathers ſhould bee brought forth among them; to the end that by their conſent and Decree the Religion of the old Doctrine ſhould be confirmed, and the blaſphemie of the prophane nouelty condemned. Behold Sirs, what weapons the Fathers haue vſed againſt Hereſies, beſides the holy Scriptures.

Eutyches claimed his opinion to bee tried by the Scriptures. In the fourth Councell which was celebrated at Chalcedon, the Heretike Eutyches, as ye and all Heretikes haue done, craked much of the Scriptures, and required his matter to bee diſcuſſed by Scriptures. Tell me (quoth he, mockingly to euery one that reaſoned with him) in what Scripture lie the two natures?

The teaching of the Fathers to be kept. But let vs heare what the learned Biſhops of that Councel ſaid thereto. We finde in the firſt action of the Councel that they cried out aloud, Ea quæ ſunt patrū, teneantur; The things that the Fathers haue taught, let them be kept. Againe, when they come to the definitiue ſentence, they ſay, Sequentes igitur ſanctos patres, &c. Following the holy Fathers, we doe al with one accord teach men to confeſſe one & himſelfe the ſonne our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, perfect himſelfe in Godhead, and perfect himſelfe in manhood. And for Authority of the Fathers in high points of faith, a Biſhop in that reuerend aſſembly named Eudoxius pronounced a notable ſentence, ſaying thus: Euery one that conſenteth not to the expoſition of the holy Fathers doth alienate himſelfe from al Prieſtly communion, and from the preſence of Chriſt. Thus we haue alleged the foure firſt generall Councels, which S. Gregory honoureth as the foure Goſpels.

Actio. 5. A notable ſaying of a learned Father, for the expoſition of the Fathers. But the thing being ſo euident as it is, and ſo well known euen to your ſelues, if ye be learned, the authority of theſe chiefe Councels may ſuffice.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Here, M. Harding, ye haue taken in hand a needleſſe labour. For you know right well we deſpiſe not the Authority of the holy Fathers, but rather in this ſelfe ſame place haue alleged together S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, and S. Ambroſe, three of the moſt ancient and approued Fathers: and throughout the whole diſcourſe of this Apology, in the defenſe of the Catholike truth of our Religion, next vnto Gods holy word, haue vſed no praiſe or authority ſo much as the expoſitions and iudgements of the holy Fathers. We deſpiſe them not therefore, but rather giue God thanks in their behalfe, for that it hath pleaſed him to prouide ſo worthy inſtruments for his Church, and therefore wee iuſtly reprooue you, for that ſo vnaduiſedly and without cauſe ye haue forſaken the ſteps of ſo holy Fathers.

The foure Generall Councels wherein you dwell ſo long, as they make nothing againſt vs, ſo in ſundry points they fight expreſſely againſt you.

Firſt they were ſummoned by the Emperours Conſtantinus, Theodoſius 1. Theodosius 2. and Martianus: and not by any right or authority of the Pope; as hereafter it shall bee shewed in place conuenient more at large. [a] Iulius the Bishop of Rome was summoned by the Emperors Writ to appeare at the Councel of Nice, as well as others. [b] And Pope Leo afterward was charged by like authority to appeare at the Councell of Chalcedon.

[c] In the Councell of Nice the Bishop of Rome was not President, but Eustathius the Bishop of Antioch. In the same [d] Councell of Nice the Bishop of Rome hath his authority and iurisdiction made equall and leuell with the other three Patriarkes. [e] And in the Councell of Chalcedon the Bishop of Constantinople is made equall in authority with the Bishop of Rome. To be short, [f] the said Councell of Chalcedon, for this last, and soms other like causes, Leo the Bishop of Rome would not allow. Which thing notwithstanding, the Councell standeth still in force, whether the Pope wil or no.

Eodem tenore Leo vocatus est.

These be the foure first Generall Councels, which M. Harding compareth in authoritie with the foure Euangelists.

But these Heretikes, Arius, Nestorius, Macedonius, and Eutyches in these foure Generall Councels vtterly despise all the ancient Fathers, and boasted themselues (saith M. Harding) of the Scriptures, and euermore cried out, Scriptures, Scriptures. Touching the Arians, that they alleaged certaine doubtfull and darke places of the Scriptures to serue their purpose, it is certaine and manifest. But that either they despised, or that the Catholikes against them auouched the exposition and authority of any Father, M. Hardings onely word must bee our warrant. For neither alleageth he any one Author for proofe hereof, not yet nameth any of all these Fathers.

Notwithstanding, let vs grant these Heretikes cried out, as M. Harding saith, Scriptures, Scriptures. Euen so did the same Heretikes likewise cry out, euen as now M. Harding doth, Fathers, Fathers. Socrates saith, Et Ariani Origenis libros citabant in testimonium, vt illi quidem iudicabant, sui Dogmatis: And the Arian Heretikes alleaged the learned Father Origens bookes, as they thought for proofe and witnesse of their Doctrine.

Socr. lib. 4 cap. 21. circa finem.

The Heretike Eutyches said, Ego legi scripta beati Cypriani, & sanctorum patrum, & sancti Athanasij: I haue read the writings of S. Cyprian, and of other holy Fathers, and of S. Athanasius.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 1. pag. 792.

Likewise the Eutychian Heretike Carosus said, Ego secundùm expositionem trecentorum octodecim Patrum sic credo, sic baprizatus sum. Aliud quid mihi dicas, nescio: This is my faith, according to the exposition of the three hundred and eighteene Fathers, (in the Councell of Nice) in this faith was I baptized. What ye should say more to me, I cannot tell.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 4. pag. 877.

Euen so said Eutyches himselfe, Sic à progenitoribus meis accepi, & credidi. In hac fide Baptizatus sum, & signatus: & vsque ad hunc diem in ea vixi, & in ea opto mori: Thus haue I receiued of my forefathers, and thus haue I beleeued. In this faith was I baptized and signed, and in the same haue I lined vntill this day, and in the same I wish to die. Thus S. Augustine saith the Donatian Heretike Cresconius alleaged the authority of S. Cyprian. Thus the Nestorian Heretikes alleaged the authority of the Councell of Nice.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 1. pag. 751.

August contra Cresc. lib. 4. cap. 17.

To be short, thus the Heretike Dioscorus cried out in the open Councell of Chalcedon: Ego habeo testimonia sanctorum Patrum, Athanasij, Gregorij, Cyrilli: Non transgredior in aliquo: Ego cum Patribus eijcior: Ego defendo Patrum Dogmata. Ego horum habeo testimonia, non simpliciter aut transitoriè, sed in ipsorum libris: I haue the Testimonies of the holy Fathers, Athanasius, Gregorius, Cyrillus: I alter not from them in any point: I am thrown foorth and banished with the Fathers: I defend the Fathers Doctrine: I haue their iudgement vttered, not by chance or vnadwisedly, but remaining expressed in their bookes.

Concil Chalcedon. Actio. 1. pag 767.

I doubt not, M. Harding, but you may hereby easily see that the Heretikes ye speake of, cried not onely Scriptures, Scriptures, as ye say, but had leasure also sometimes to crie, as you doe, Fathers, Fathers: and that as well to purpose, and as rightly as you of long time haue vsed to cry, hauing indeed in the cases we speake of, neither Scriptures nor Fathers.

To come neere the matter, we say not that all cases of doubt are by manifest and open words plainely expressed in the Scriptures. For so there should neede no exposition. But we say, there is no case in Religion so darke and doubtfull, but it may necessarily be either proued, or reproued, by Collection and conference of the Scriptures.

Hieronym. in Esay, cap. 19.

Aug. in lib. 83. Quæst q 69. Pag. 325.

S. Hierome saith, Moris est Scripturarum obscuris manifesta subnectere: It is the order of the Scriptures, after hard things to ioine other things that be plaine. S. Augustine likewise saith, Solet circumstantia Scripturarum illuminare sententiam: The circumstance of the Scriptures is wont to giue light, and to open the meaning. The like rule Tertullian also giueth:

Tertul. aduersus Praxeam.

Oportet secundùm plura intelligi pauciora: The fewer places must be expounded by the more.

Therefore

Therefore touching this word Homousius, which M. Harding here mooueth, and the whole contention of the Arians, Epiphanius writeth thus: Nomen substantiæ simpliciter & nudè in veteri & noua Scriptura non proponitur, sententia autem eius nominis vbique occurrit: This word (substance) plainely and nakedly is not found, neither in the old nor in the new testament, but the sense and meaning of that word is found euery where. Epiphan. lib. 3. de Semiarianis. ὁ λόγος παντάχοῦ.

In this conference and iudgement of the holy Scriptures we neede oftentimes the discretion and wisdome of learned Fathers. Yet notwithstanding may wee not giue them heerein greater credit then is conuenient, or then they themselues, if it were offered would receiue. We may reuerently say of them as Seneca in the like case sometime said, Non sunt Domini, sed Duces nostri: They are our Leaders, but not our Lords. They are not the truth of God it selfe, but only witnesses vnto the truth. Scriptures and Doctours. Seneca.

Therefore S. Augustine saith, Alios scriptores ita lego, vt quanta libet sanctitate doctrináque præpolleant, non ideò verum putem, quòd ipsi ita senserint, sed quod id mihi, vel per alios Authores Canonicos, vel probabili ratione persuadere potuerint: Other writers or Fathers (besides the holy Scriptures) I read in this sort, that be their learning or holinesse neuer so great, I wil not thinke it true because they haue thought so, but because they are able to perswade me so, either by other Canonicall writers, or else by some likely reason. Likewise againe he saith, Hoc genus literarum non cum credendi necessitate, sed cum iudicandi libertate legendum est: This kind of writings (of the holy Doctors and Fathers) must be read, not with necessitie to beleeue each thing, but with liberty to iudge each thing. And to that end he saith, Ne Catholicis quidem Episcopis consentiendum est, sicubi fortè falluntur, vt contra Canonicas Dei Scripturas sentiant: Wee may not consent vnto the Bishops, notwithstanding they be Catholike, if they iudge contrary to the holy Canonicall Scriptures. In this authoritie and credit we haue and ought to haue the holy Fathers. Augustin. Epist. 19. ad Hieronym. August. contra Faust. lib. 11. cap. 5. Aug. de Vnit. Eccles. cap. 19.

Now let vs see whether the Bishops and others in these Councels confuted these Heretikes, as we say, by the Scriptures, or else, as M. Harding seemeth to say, for want or weaknesse of the Scriptures, vsed therein the authority of the Fathers. First, the Emperour Constantinus in the Councell of Nice, instructing the Bishops there, how they might best debate their quarrels and end all strifes, saith thus vnto them: Euangelicæ & Apostolicæ literæ, & veterum Prophetarum Oracula perspicuè nos instituunt quid oporteat sapere de voluntate & sensu Dei, Ponentes ergo contentionem, ex diuinitùs inspiratis oraculis quæramus solutionem eorum quæ proponuntur: The Euangelists and Apostles writings, and the sayings of the old Prophets do cleerely instruct vs what iudgement we ought to haue of the meaning and will of God. Therefore laying aside al contention, out of those heauenly Oracles let vs seeke for the assoiling of our questions. Theod. lib. 1. cap. 7. Tripha. lib. 2. cap. 9. τοιγαροῦν ἐκβάλλοντες ἅπασαν ἔριν, ἐκ τῶν θείων ἐκλογιζώμεθα λογίων.

Socrates also touching the same Councell of Nice, saith thus of the Arian Heretikes: Explicantes sacrosanctas Scripturas, sæpè illos euertimus: By opening and expounding the holy Scriptures, oftentimes we ouerthrew them. Socrat. ἐξηγούμενοι τὰς θείας γραφὰς πολλάκις αὐτοὺς ἀνετρέψαμεν.

Likewise S. Augustine disputing against the same Arians, refuseth, as I haue said before, both Councels and Fathers, and appealeth onely to the Scriptures: Nec ego Nicænam Synodum tibi, nec tu mihi Ariminensem debes obijcere: Scripturarum authoritatibus, res cum re, causa cum causa, ratio cum ratione concertet: Neither will I allege the Councell of Nice against you, nor shall you allege the Councell of Ariminum against me. By the authority of the Scriptures let vs weigh matter with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason. August. contra Maxim. lib. 3. cap. 14.

Touching the Councell holden at Constantinople against Macedonius, and the Diuinitie of the holy Ghost, Athanasius saith, Ne interroges, sed solùm ex sacris literis condiscas. Sufficiunt enim documenta quæ in illis reperias: Neuer moue question heereof, but onely learne of the holy Scriptures. For the only proofes, that ye shall there finde are sufficient (to warrant the Godhead of the holy Ghost.) So likewise saith Euagrius of the other two Councels of Ephesus and Chalcedon: Ex Euangelicis & Apostolicis de Domino vocibus scimus viros illos diuinos constituisse: We know that these godly Fathers concluded this matter by such words as the Euangelists and Apostles haue vttered of our Lord. Athan. ad Serapion. Spirit. sanct. non esse creaturam. pag. 676. Euagrius.

Therefore the ancient Father Origen saith, Vide quam propè periculis illi sint qui negligunt exerceri in diuinis literis: ex quibus solis examinationibus huiusmodi agnoscenda discretio est: Consider in what danger they be that haue no care to reade the holy Scriptures. For by the same Scriptures onely the iudgement of this Triall must be allowed. Euen so saith Chrysostome, Etiamsi in ipsis veris Ecclesijs, quæ Dei sunt, dixerint Christum apparuisse, nolite eis credere dicentibus ista de me: Non enim digna est diuinitatis meæ hæc notitia. Ostendens per hæc quòd ab ipsis sæpè veris Ecclesijs exeunt seductores. Propterea ne ipsis quidem credendũ est, nisi ea vel dicant vel faciant quæ conuenientia sint Scripturis: Yea if they say that Christ hath appeared in the very true Churches of God, yet beleeue them not: For this is no worthy or sufficient knowledge of my Godhead. By this he sheweth that Orig. in ca. 16. ad Rom. l. 10. Chrysost. in Opere imperfecto, Hom. 49.

out of the very true Churches often times come foorth deceiuers. Therefore we may not beleeue, no not them (that ſpeake vnto vs in the name of the Church) vnleſſe they ſpeake and doe ſuch things as are agreeable to the Scriptures. In like maner againe ſaith Origen, Neceſſe nobis Orig. in Hiere. Hom. 1. eſt in teſtimonium vocare ſanctas Scripturas. Senſus quippe noſtri & enarrationes ſine iis teſtibus non habent fidem: We muſt needs call to witneſſe the holy Scriptures. For our iudgements and expoſitions without thoſe witneſſes carry no credit.

And to leaue all other like authorities that might bee alleged, for ſhort concluſion, S.
Aug de natura & gratia. c. 61. Auguſtine ſaith, Solis Canonicis Scripturis ſine vlla recuſatione conſenſum debeo: I owe my conſent without gainſaying (not vnto the Doctors or Fathers, but onely) vnto the Canonicall Scriptures.

Scriptures and Doctours

But the Biſhops in thoſe Councels, ſaith M. Harding, brought forth, and followed the expoſitions of the antient learned Fathers. And wherefore might they not? What man euer taught or ſaid the contrarie? Yet notwithſtanding they alleged them, not as the foundations or grounds, but onely as approued and faithfull witneſſes of the truth. Which thing if M. Harding happilie will deny, may eaſilie appeare by the words of Cy-Euagrius lib. 3. cap. 18. rillus, pronounced and publiſhed openly in the Councell of Chalcedon: Gratulamur nobis mutuò, quòd & noſtræ & veſtræ Eccleſiæ fidem habent conſentientem, & diuinitùs adſpiratis Scripturis, & traditionibus ſanctorum Patrum: We reioice together, each of vs in others behalfe, for that the faith both of our Churches, and alſo of yours, is agreeable both vnto the heauenly inſpired Scriptures, and alſo to the tradition and expoſition of our Fathers. Which Concil. Chalcedon. Action. 2. words of Cyrillus beeing heard, and the conſent of the Fathers beeing knowne, the whole Councell for ioy made a ſhout together, Omnes ita credimus: Papa Leo ita credit: &c. Thus wee all beleeue: Pope Leo thus beleeueth: Thus beleeueth Leo and Anatolius: Thus Cyrillus beleeueth: This is the faith of our Fathers: This is the faith of the Apoſtles: Thus haue the Apoſtles taught.

Thus may you ſee, M. Harding, (wee ſay not to you as you doe to vs, If you be learned, for thereof we haue no doubt: God grant you may direct your learning to his glorie) but thus may you ſee to what end the Biſhops in the Councels ye ſpeake of, alleged the expoſitions of the ancient Fathers, and how farre they weighed them vnder the authority of the Scriptures. In like ſort do wee alſo this day allege againſt you the manifeſt and vndoubted, and agreeable iudgements of the moſt ancient learned holy Fathers: and thereby, as by approued and faithfull witneſſes, wee diſcloſe the infinite follies and errours of your Doctrine. And ſeeing you haue forſaken the fellowſhip of the ſaid holy Fathers, as hereafter ſhall more fully appeare, wee ſay vnto you as Eudoxius ſaid vnto the Heretike Abbat Eutyches in the Councell of Chalcedon: Yee haue remooued your ſelues both from all prieſtly Communion, and alſo from the preſence of Chriſt.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuiſion 2.

De Vnitate Eccle. cap. 3. & contra Maximinum Arian. Epiſt. lib. 3. cap. 14. S. Auguſtine, when he diſputed againſt Petilian the Donatian Heretike: Let not theſe words, quoth he, be heard betweene vs: I ſay, or you ſay: Let vs rather ſpeake in this wiſe: Thus ſaith the Lord. There let vs ſeeke the Church: there let vs boult out the cauſe.

M. Harding.

Concerning this place of S. Auguſtine, it ought not to be ſtretched to all matters in generall that be in queſtion, as though wee might not vſe the teſtimonies and authorities of the Fathers againſt Heretikes: but it pertaineth only to the queſtion in that booke De vnitate Eccleſiæ, treated of, which is, where the Church is. Petilian the Donatiſt, and the maintainers of that Hereſie, contended the Church to be only in Aphrike, or at the furtheſt, in parte Donati, among them only that held with Donatus. The ſame Hereſie went they about to proue by Scriptures: but when S. Auguſtine ſaw how weake their proofes were, which they brought out of the Scriptures, he prouoked them, the better to ouerthrow them, to come to the triall of the Scriptures. And indeed where the Scriptures bee manifeſt for proofe of any matter, what need is there of Doctors? But where the ſenſe of the Scriptures is obſcure, and may bee wreſted by euill wits to the maintenance of an Hereſie, there the expoſitions of the Fathers by all old writers haue beene taken of neceſſity, to ſupplie the Scriptures obſcurity, and to declare the ſenſe of the Church, which the holy Ghoſt hath prompted. And in ſuch caſes S. Auguſtine himſelfe vſeth the teſtimonies of the Fathers not ſeldome, namely againſt Iulian the Pelagian: where beſide Scripture, touching originall ſinne, he allegeth againſt the Pelagians a great number of Fathers, and at length in one place ſpeaking of the Authority, reuerence, and credit he had in them, he ſaith thus: Quod credunt, credo, &c. What they beleeue, I beleeue; what they hold, I hold; what they teach, I teach; what they preach, I preach. From the ſpeciall to the generall negatiuely the argument holdeth not, ye know, if ye haue not forgotten your Logike.

Contra Iulianum Pelagi. Lib. 1.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding, as well heere as elſe where, thinketh it an eaſie matter with a bold aſſeueration to ſmoth his vnlearned ſimple Reader, eſpecially ſuch a one as hath no eies to lokeafter him. These words of S. Augustine, saith he, pertaine onely vnto the matter he had then in hand, and therefore may not be forced to any other. And here he remembreth vs of a profound point in Logike, that a Negatiue conclusion from the Speciall to the Generall cannot hold. Here it were a matter worthy the hearing: first, how M. Harding could enter so deepely to know so much of S. Augustines meaning: next, forasmuch as in respect of himselfe, he euermore confesseth vs to be vnlearned, how he were able to teach vs to know the same. Yee alloweth vs vpon his word that these words of S. Augustine must needs be expounded and restrained to that only matter, and may not in any wise be stretched farther: and this he imagineth was S. Augustines meaning. Thus, good Reader, by M. Hardings handling, thou hast here a meaning of S. Augustines that S. Augustine himselfe neuer meant. For S. Augustine in the same matter, and against the same Heretike, Petilian, although not in the same booke, writeth thus: Siue de Christo, siue de eius Ecclesia, siue de quacunque re alia quæ pertinet ad fidem, vitamque nostram, non dicam, si nos, sed, si Angelus de cœlo nobis annunciauerit, preterquam quod in Scripturis legalibus, & Euangelicis accepistis, Anathema sit: Whether it be of Christ or of his Church, or of any thing else whatsoeuer, pertaining either to our life or to our faith. I will not say, if I my selfe, but if an Angell from Heauen shall teach vs otherwise then we haue receiued in the bookes of the Law, and in the Gospels, hold him accursed.

August. contra Liter. Petilian. lib. 3. cap. 6.

M. Harding saith, S. Augustine meant only of one matter: S. Augustine himselfe saith, he meant of all manner matters touching either faith or life.

M. Harding saith, S. Augustine meant this onely of himselfe: S. Augustine himselfe saith, he meant it of any other, yea euen of the Angels of God. And shall wee thinke M. Harding knoweth S. Augustines meaning, and S. Augustine himselfe knew it not?

De quacunque re. Si Angelus de Cœlo.

Uerily S. Augustine in another case concerning the Arians, as I haue touched twice before, likewise refuseth the determinations of all Councels and Fathers, and standeth only to the Scriptures: Neither will I, saith he, alleage against thee the Councell of Nice, nor shalt thou allege against me the Councell of Ariminum, &c.

Aug. cont. Maxi. lib. 3. ca. 14.

Neither doth S Augustine onely say thus, but also yeeldeth a reason why he saith it. These be his words: Auferantur de medio quæ aduersus nos inuicem, non ex diuinis Canonicis libris, sed aliunde recitamus. Quæret fortasse aliquis, Cur vis ista auferri de medio? Quia nolo humanis documentis, sed diuinis oraculis Ecclesiam Sanctam demonstrari: Haue away all those authorities that either of vs alleageth against the other, sauing such onely as be taken out of the heauenly Canonicall Scriptures. But perhaps some man will aske me, Wherefore would ye haue al such other authorities put away? I answer, Because I would haue the holy Church to be proued, not by the Doctrines of men, but by the word of God.

Aug. de vnit. Eccl. contr. Petilian. cap. 3.

So saith S. Augustine vnto other the Donatists: Auferantur de medio chartæ nostræ: procedat in medium codex Dei. Audi Christum dicentem: audi veritatem loquentem: Take away from amongst vs any our own bookes: Let the booke of God come amongst vs, Heare what Christ saith: Hearken what the truth speaketh. Againe he saith, Audi, dicit Dominus: non, dicit Donatus, aut Rogatus, aut Vincentius, aut Hilarius, aut Ambrosius, aut Augustinus; sed, dicit Dominus: Heare this, The Lord saith: Heare not this, Donatus saith, Rogatus saith, Vincentius saith, Hilarius saith, Ambrose saith, Augustine saith: But hearken to this, The Lord saith.

Aug. in Ps. 57.

Aug. in Ep. 48.

In like forme of words saith S. Ambrose: Nolo nobis credatur: Scriptura recitetur. Non ego dico a me, In principio erat verbum, sed audio. Non ego effingo, sed lego: I would not ye should beleeue vs, but read the Scriptures. I say not of my selfe, In the beginning was the word, but I heare it. I make it not, but I read it.

Ambros. de Incarnat. Dom. Sacram. cap. 3.

Likewise saith Chrysostome, Oro vos omnes vt relinquatis quid huic, aut illi videatur, & de his a Scripturis hæc omnia inquirite: I beseech you all, weigh not what this man or that man thinketh: but touching all these things search the Scriptures.

Chryso in 2. ad Cor. Hom. 3.

Now, whereas it pleaseth M. Harding to tell vs of an argument Negatiue from Speciall to Generall, and so to call vs to the remembrance of our Logike: pleaseth it him also to remember that the Argument that we ground of S. Augustines words holdeth not, as it is here imagined, from Speciall to Generall: but from the imperfection and weakenes of the wisdome of man, to the stability and certainety of Gods holy word. And therefore the old learned Father Origen saith, as it is alleged before, Sensus nostri & enarrationes sine his testibus non habent fidem: Our iudgements and expositions without these witnesses (of the Scriptures) haue no credit. In like sort S. Hierome, Quamuis sanctus sit aliquis post Apostolos, quamuis desertus sit, non habet authoritatem: After the Apostles of Christ notwithstanding some man be holy, notwithstanding he be eloquent, yet he wanteth authority. Therefore S. Augustine saith, Cedamus, & consentiamus Scripturæ sacræ, quæ nec falli potest, nec fallere: Let vs yeeld and consent to the holy Scripture, which can neither deceiue, nor bee deceiued.

deceiued. For this cause, M. Harding S. Augustine not onely in the matter that lay betweene him and Petilianus, but also in all other matters whatsoeuer, so often appealed from all Fathers, and Councels vnto the Scriptures.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuision 3.

Likewise S. Hierome: all those things (saith he) which without the testimony of the Scriptures, are holden, as deliuered from the Apostles, be thoroughly smitten downe by the sword of Gods word.

M. Harding.

Ye would faine remoue vs from a good hold, I see well, which is the authority of the holy Fathers, of ancient traditions, and of the Vniuersall Church. All these would ye to be of no force against Heretiks. For ye know the Fathers and the Church to be against you, and that so long as they are beleeued, your doctrin shal not be receiued, as alwaies found to be new, and of priuate deuice. If we were driuen from these, ye doubt not but to match vs well enough in the Scriptures. And as ye would handle the matter, I thinke so my self verily. For when all authority and iudgement of the Fathers and of the Church is shaken quite off in any controuersie, by whom shal we be tried? By the Scriptures ye say. But when both ye and we allege Scriptures to a contrary purpose, and when we vary about the sense of the Scriptures, by whom then shall we be iudged? Perhaps ye will referre the iudgement of doubtfull matters to the holy Ghost. We refuse not the arbitrement and Vmpiresship of the holy Ghost. For the same hath beene promised by Christ to the Church, to remaine with the Church for euer, to teach what things so euer he said, to leade men into all truth.

And thus for iudgement and triall of truth, we shal be returned to the Church and to the Fathers, by whom the holy Ghost speaketh vnto vs, whose authority and due estimation ye goe about to remoue from vs.

But let vs see, what force ye bring to driue vs from this hold. Making your batterie against it, what shoot ye off, but wind & Paper? Your Artillery maketh a noise, but it giueth no blow. As in the last allegation ye falsified the sense of S. Augustine, so in this ye falsifie both the sense & words of S. Hierome. The words, as ye allege them, seeme to be spoken against whatsoeuer traditions of the Apostles. Which words, or any the like to such purpose, were neuer vttered by any Catholike Doctor of the Church, much lesse by S. Hierome. Looke ye againe and view better the place, yee shall say your selues, that I finde the fault of falsifying in you not without cause.

S. Hierome in his Commentaries vpon those words of the Prophet Aggæus, Et vocaui siccitatẽ super terram, & super montes: I haue called the drought to come vpon the earth, & vpon the hils, &c. First, shewing the litteral sense accordingly as the Hebrew word there by him noted, signifieth Siccitatem, drought, then treating mystically, as the seuenty Interpreters haue turned that word into Romphæam, that is, a Sword, and vnderstanding by the Sword, the word of God: thereof taketh occasion briefly to say, what this sword doth, how it destroieth the negligent soule, which is expounded to be drie earth, and how it plagueth mountaines that lift vp themselues against the knowledge of God, whereby he meaneth heretiks. Of whom he telleth, how they flatter the deceiued people with their bread, wine and oile (by which he meaneth their heresies) as it were with meats, and drinkes, and refection. Aggæi cap. 1. Gladius.

Their bread (saith he) any man may very aptly call it, the bread of wailing, and their wine, the madnesse of Dragons, and the madnesse of Serpents incurable: and their oile, the promising of heauenly things, wherewith they do as it were anoint their Disciples, and promise them rewards of their labors: which the Prophet detesteth, saying, the oyle of the sinner shall not anoint my head. After this follow the words of S. Hierome, which you haue falsified to the intent they might seeme to serue your false meaning: Sed & alia quæ absq; authoritate & testimoniis Scripturarum, quasi traditione Apostolica reperiunt, atque confingunt, percutit gladius Dei. But the sword of God striketh also other things, which the Heretiks (for of them he speaketh) deuise and faine of their own heads without the authority & witnesses of the Scriptures as though they came by tradition from the Apostles. He that compareth this place with your falsified allegation, may soone espie great ods between them. For ye make S. Hierome to say, that all those things which without the testimonies of Scriptures are holden (so your allowed interpreter turneth, asseruntur,) as deliuered from the Apostles, be throughly smitten downe by the sword of Gods word. By this sword of your Gods word, ye would quite smite downe al Apostolike traditions at a blow. But thanked be God, that your sword is a forged sword, a paper sword, a sword that neither with edge cutteth, nor with weight beareth downe. S. Hierome putteth not all things, which we haue by tradition from the Apostles without the expresse Scriptures, to the sword of Gods word. He speaketh not generally. His word is Alia, other things: and ye make it Omnia, al things. Againe he speaketh of such things as be deuised and fained by Heretikes, of their own braine, without authoritie and testimonies of the Scriptures vnto which they giue estimation, as though they came by tradition from the Apostles. These circumstances & exaggerations do ye omit, and say, that S. Hierome putteth al Apostolike traditions to that dreadfull sword of Gods word. Now what S. Hierome saith, we hold with it, and allow it wel. But your saying we refuse, as falsly fathered vpon S. Hierome. What he condemneth, we condemne. Neither can that place be iustly alleaged against vs: For we inuent not, ne faine not any things of our own accord, or of our own heads as though they were deliuered by the Apostles besides the Scriptures: that is the part of Heretikes, specially of the Tatians, as in that place S. Hierome saith. We find, deuise, and faine nothing in the Catholike religion. We do but keepe and maintaine things deuised by the holy Ghost, and left to the Church by the Apostles, or by Apostolike men, or by the generall Councels, whose authority is in the Church most healthfull, saith S. Augustine. But concerning the force which the consent of the Fathers had in the iudgement of S. Hierome, it appeareth in his Epistle to Euagrius: where by the authority of the ancient Doctors before his time, he proueth against an Heretike, that Melchisedech was a man of the land of Canaan, and not the holy Ghost.

Scriptures and Doctours.

Faine would M. Harding haue his Reader beleeue that we vtterly despise al holy Fathers. But we despise them not, M. Harding, as may partly appeare by that we haue already said. We read their workes: we reuerence them: we giue God thanks for them: we call them the Pillars, the Lights, the Fathers of Gods Church: wee despise them not. This thing onely we say: Were their learning and holinesse neuer so great, yet be they not equall in credit with the Scriptures of God.

Thus also saith S. Augustine, Nos nullam Cypriano facimus iniuriam, cùm eius quasli- August contra this iudgement were S. Augustine, S. Hierome, and sundry others, whose words for shortnesse I passe ouer: yet were they not therefore condemned as despisers of the holy learned Fathers. We remoue you not, as you say, from your hold, M. Harding. This is nothing else but a courage of your countenance. The Fathers ye speake of are against you. I trust it appeareth already by your former writings, that in the speciall cases that lie betweene vs, ye haue but few Fathers to hold by.

Ye say, we euermore call you to the Scriptures. This fault I hope is not so hainous. Iohan. 5.

When the Scriptures be darke and doubtfull, and are alleaged of both parts, then yée say ye refuse not the Umpereship and iudgement of the holy Ghost. But ye adde farther,
The holy Ghost is promised only to the Church. Now by your opinion there is no Church but the Church of Rome. And the Church of Rome is no Church without the Pope. For

Interpretation of the Scriptures.

Now with what ſpirit the Biſhops of Rome haue expounded vnto vs the holy Scriptures of God we ſhall ſhew it hereafter, as fitter occaſion ſhall require. Here, you ſay, we haue corrupted both the words and the ſenſe of S. Hierome: That wee haue taken Omnia in ſtead of Alia: And that you haue deuiſed and made nothing of your ſelues: That S. Hierome meant not hereby the Traditions of the Apoſtles, but onely the fond fantaſies and dreames of the Heretikes called Tatians.

Of all theſe things we muſt needs confeſſe one thing is true. Indeed we toke Omnia, in ſtead of Alia: and ſo by ouerſight gaue ſome occaſion vnto the quarreler. Howbeit, I doubt not but the indifferent gentle Reader will ſone pardon that fault. It proceeded only of negligence, and not of malice. Notwithſtanding this want may eaſily be ſupplied by a ſufficient Commentary. For Chriſt ſaith, Omnis plantatio quam non plantauerit pater meus cœleſtis, eradicabitur. Euery plant that my heauenly Father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted out. Here, M. Harding, ye may borrow Omnia, to helpe S. Hierome.

Matth. 15. Omnis.

Cyprian. lib. 1. Epiſt. 8. Quodcunque

Or, if this like you not, S. Cyprian may tell you, Adulterum eſt, impium eſt, ſacrilegum eſt, quodcunque humano furore inſtituitur, vt diſpoſitio diuina violetur: It is aduouterous, it is wicked, it is abominable, whatſoeuer is ordered by the raſhneſſe of man, that Gods order ſhould be broken.

It is true, S. Hierome ſpeaketh not theſe words of the Traditions of the Apoſtles: It is true. Yet, M. Harding, he ſpeaketh theſe words of ſuch fantaſies as were brought into the Church of God, and magnified vnder the name and colour of the Traditions of the Apoſtles. So Euſebius ſaith, The Heretike Cerinthus brought vs in his owne monſtrous deuices, vnder the pretence of Reuelations, as written by ſome great Apoſtle.

Euſeb. lib. 3. cap. 25. δι' ἀποκαλύψεων, ὡς ὑπὸ Ἀποστόλου γεγραμμένων.

Such M. Harding, be your inuentions, wherewith ye haue of long time deceiued the world. One of your companions the Suffragane of Sidon, at the late Diet at Auguſta, in the preſence of the whole Empire, doubted not to ſay, that your whole Canon word by word euen as it is now vſed in your Maſſes, came directly from the Apoſtles. Your Hoſius of Polonia ſaith that the Apoſtles appointed your orders of Monks. An other of your ſide ſaith, Chriſtus dux, & ſignifer vitæ Monaſticæ: Chriſt was the Captaine, and ſtander bearer of Monkes life: Imagining, I trow, that Chriſt was an Abbat. And yet afterward the ſame Doctour either by ſome oblition, or elſe vpon ſome better remembrance, ſaith thus: Elias, & Elizæus Duces Inſtituti Benedictini: Elias and Elizæus were the firſt Captaines of S. Benets Order. And you, M. Harding, haue told vs often, that ye haue your priuate Maſſe, your halfe Communion, and I know not what elſe, all from the Apoſtles. And all this ye proue, God wot, by full ſimple coniectures, becauſe Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles, I haue many things to ſay vnto you: but ye are not able to beare them yet: And becauſe S. Paul ſaith to the Corinthians, I will order the reſt, when I come: Hereby ye beare vs in hand, that all your moſt trifling vanities were brought vnto you by S. Paul euen from the third heauens.

And although it were true that ye ſay, ye haue not deuiſed theſe things of your ſelues, but haue receiued them all from the Apoſtles and holy Fathers, which thing your conſcience knoweth to be moſt vntrue, yet notwithſtanding the ſame things ſo receiued, ye haue ſithence foully defaced with ſundry your ſuperſtitions. Yee haue made them neceſſary to ſaluation: ye haue bound the people to them no leſſe then to the Law of God: and ſo haue ye made them ſnares of Chriſtian conſciences. Although the thing it ſelfe came from the Fathers, yet the abuſe therof came from your ſelues: and for the ſame ye haue taught the people to breake Gods expreſſe commandement. Thus haue you blended Gods heauenly wine with your puddle water: Thus haue ye ſtrained gnats, and ſwallowed Camels. This is the very leauen of the Scribes and Phariſies, which Chriſt calleth hypocriſie. Therefore albeit the thing it ſelfe, ye haue thus receiued, in reſpect of ſubſtance be all one: yet now, being thus abuſed, in reſpect of your ſuperſtitions, and deformities, it is not one.

Eſai. 1. Matth. 23. Matth. 16.

The Apoſtles and holy Fathers vſed oile, yet they vſed it not, as ye doe, for the ſaluation of body and ſoule.

God commanded the people to faſt: yet not with hypocriſie, as the wicked faſted. And therefore God ſaith vnto them, Non eſt hoc ieiunium quod ego elegi: This is not the faſting that I haue choſen.

God commanded the people to keepe the Calends and new Moones: yet not with ſuch ſuperſtition and abuſes as the people kept them, and therefore God ſaid vnto them, Who required theſe things at your hands?

God commanded ſundry bathings and waſhings: yet vnto them that moſt preciſely vſed the ſame, Chriſt ſaid: Woe be vnto you ye Scribes and Phariſeis: in vaine they worſhip me, teaching the commandements and Doctrines of men. Matth. 23.

Yet you, M. Harding, haue infeoffed the Apoſtles of Chriſt, not onely with the ſubſtance of the things, which, ye ſay, ye haue receiued by tradition, but alſo with all your abuſes, ſuperſtitions, corruptions and idolatries: which ye haue deuiſed of your ſelues. And therein ye well reſemble the Tatian Heretikes, of whom onely, yee ſay, S. Hierome ſpeaketh. But whether S. Hierome meant onely, I know not what fantaſticall dreames of the Tatians (as you imagine onely of your ſelfe, without proofe, in particular, naming nothing) or elſe alſo all ſuch ſuperſtitious vanities, as we haue often, and iuſtly reproued in you, it may ſoone appeare by theſe words immediately following: Omnem laborem manuum, & ieiunia eorum, & obſeruationes varias, & ξηροφαγίας, id eſt, humi dormitiones: All their hand labour, and their faſtings, and their obſeruations, and vſages, and hard ſleeping on the ground. Theſe and ſuch other like be the things, which, men imagine, came from the Apoſtles, and are ſtricken and conſumed with the ſword of Gods word. Hieronym. in Agga. cap. 1.

This, M. Harding, notwithſtanding your long Gloſe beſide the Text, ſeemeth to be the very meaning of S. Hierome.

If ye will yet force the contrary, and turne all from your ſelues to the Tatians, as you do, the very two lines next following muſt needs make you blush at your owne errour. The words are theſe, Hæc autem vniuerſa, quæ dixi, poſſunt de Eccleſiæ Rectoribus intelligi: All theſe things, that I haue ſpoken, may be vnderſtanded of the Rulers of the Church. Tell vs no more therefore M. Harding, of your Tatians. For S. Hierome himſelfe telleth you, he meant not only them, but alſo the Biſhops and Rulers of the Church. And a little before he ſaith, Infertur Gladius ſuper Montes eleuantes ſe aduerſus ſcientiam Dei: The Sword of Gods word is laid vpon the Mountaines, that lift themſelues vp againſt the knowledge of God.

In this ſenſe writeth S. Cyprian: Si ad diuinæ traditionis caput & originem reuertamur, ceſſat omnis error humanus: If we returne to the head and beginning of our Lords tradition, all error of man muſt needs giue place. Cyprian. ad Pompeium.

In like ſenſe alſo writeth Tertullian: Ipſa doctrina Hæreticorum cum Apoſtolica comparata, ex diuerſitate, & contrarietate ſua pronunciabit, neque Apoſtoli alicuius authoris eſſe, neque Apoſtolici: The very doctrine of Heretikes compared with the Apoſtles doctrine, by the diuerſitie and contrariety, that is betweene that, and the other, will ſoone pronounce ſentence of it ſelfe, that neither Apoſtle, nor Apoſtolike man was author of it. Tertul. de Præſcrip. Hære. Pag 81.

Euen thus it fareth, M. Harding, with a great heape of your doctrine. Ye ſay, ye haue it by tradition from the Apoſtles. Yet is it vtterly void of all authority, or teſtimony of the Scriptures. And therefore as S. Hierome ſaith, it is conſumed and ſtricken downe in the conſcience of the godly, by the onely ſword of Gods holy word, as our eies ſee this day: and being compared with the Apoſtles doctrine (the difference, and contrariety is ſo great) it eaſily bewraieth it ſelfe, as Tertullian ſaith, that it neuer came from any Apoſtle, nor from any other Apoſtolike Doctor of the Church.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuiſion 4.

S. Ambroſe alſo to Gratian the Emperour: Let the Scripture (ſaith he) be aſked the queſtion, let the Prophets be aſked, and let Chriſt be aſked. For at that time made the Catholike Fathers & Biſhops no doubt, but that our Religion might be proued out of the holy Scriptures. Neither were they euer ſo hardy to take any for an Heretike, whoſe errour they could not euidently & apparently reproue by the ſelfe ſame Scriptures. And we verily do make anſwer on this wiſe as S. Paul did: According to this way which they call hereſie, we do worſhip God, and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and do allow all things which haue beene written either in the Law, or in the Prophets, or in the Apoſtles works. Scriptures and Doctours

M. Harding.

Gratian the Emperour buckling himſelfe as it were to encounter with the Heretikes, at the firſt hee giueth warning to all to beware of him, for that hee endeuoureth to proue his falſe doctrine (namely for the firſt point, that the Sonne is vnlike the Father) Verſutis diſputationibus, With ſubtile and craftie reaſonings. He alleageth to that purpoſe S. Paul to the Coloſſians, Cauete ne quis vos depradetur per Philoſophiam: Beware that no man ſpoile you through Philoſophy and vaine deceite, &c. Cap. 2.

For (ſaith he) theſe Heretikes put all the force of their poiſons in Logike or Dialectical diſputation, which by the opinion of Philoſophers is defined, not to haue power to proue, but an earneſt deſire to deſtroy and diſproue. Hauing giuen this wholeſome warning, leſt himſelfe might ſeeme to vſe that, which he counſelleth others to beware of: to withdraw the Emperour and other from the guileful Logike of Arius, at his firſt entry he ſaith: I will not that thou giue credit, Holy Emperour, to argument, and to our diſputation (then follow the words, wherof the Defenders take hold,) Scripturas interrogemus, &c. Let vs aske the Scriptures, let vs aske the Apoſtles, let vs aske the Prophets, let vs aske Chriſt. What need many words? let vs aske the Fathers, &c.

vntruth. And to this point of our beliefe, which is very high and ſecret, is that ſaying of S. Ambroſe to be ſtrained, but that for confirmation of the truth in points which be neerer to common ſenſe, and for confutation of thoſe hereſies which be of leſſe ſubtilty, of which ſort, theſe Goſpellers groſſe errors be, to this end that we ought not to vſe the teſtimonies of the holy Fathers againſt heretiks, (for which purpoſe they allege this place:) S. Ambroſe neither in al that Booke, neither in all his works ſpeaketh ſo much as one word. Ambroſe de Fide l. 1. c. 4.

But contrariwiſe in ſundry places of that worke, he allegeth the authority of the Nicene Councel, as a teſtimony of good force againſt the Arians, & declareth a diuine myſtery to haue bin ſignified by ſuch ſpecial number of the Fathers there aſſembled: ſaying, Sic nempe noſtri ſecundũ Scripturas dixerunt Patres. Euen thus, according to the Scriptures, haue the Fathers ſaid. Seruemus præcepta maiorũ, &c. Let vs keep the precepts of our forefathers, neither with temerity of rude boldnes let vs break the hereditary ſeales (he meaneth the doctrine ſealed by the Fathers and left to the poſterity as it were by heritage.) Which of vs will be ſo hardy, as to vnſeale the Prieſtly Booke, ſealed by the Confeſſors, and now conſecrated with the Martyrdome of many a one? Loe heare ye not Sirs * how much S. Ambroſe is againſt you?

* Nothing.

And though he ſay, touching this myſtery, Let vs aske the Scriptures, Apoſtles, Prophets, and Chriſt: yet thereby doth he not quite exclude the Fathers. He ſaith not, let vs reiect the Fathers. The Scriptures and the Fathers be not contrary: and therefore the allowing of them, is not the diſallowing of theſe. Whoſoeuer maketh this argument * which in your word is implied, The Scriptures are to be aſked, Ergo, the holy Fathers are not to be asked, maketh a fooliſh argument.

* Vntruth.

Scriptures and Doctours.

The greateſt force hereof is anſwered already. S. Ambroſe, ye ſay, by this appeale to the Scriptures, excludeth not the iudgement of the learned Fathers, but only the cauillations, and ſubtilties of Philoſophers and Sophiſters. For S. Ambroſe himſelfe in the ſame treaty often allegeth the authority of the Fathers. All this M. Harding, is true indeed: notwithſtanding there is a certaine ſecret vntruth lapped in it. For S. Ambroſe allegeth the Fathers not as Grounds, or Principles, or Foundations of the faith: but only as Interpreters or Witneſſes, or Conſenters vnto the faith: Which thing of our part was neuer denied. Now, whether S. Ambroſe meant thus, or no, let S. Ambroſe himſelfe be the Iudge. His words be theſe: Sic nempe noſtri ſecundùm Scripturas dixerunt Patres: Thus haue our Fathers ſaid (not of themſelues, but) according to the Scriptures. He allegeth the Fathers, not as hauing ſufficient credit and ſubſtance in themſelues, but onlie as Expounders, and Interpreters of the Scriptures.

So ſaith the godly Father Athanaſius: Nos iſta hauſimus à Magiſtris diuinitùs afflatis, qui Sacros Libros euoluerunt: Theſe things haue we learned of our Maſters (or Fathers) inſpired from Heauen, which haue read and peruſed the Holy Scriptures. For S. Auguſtine very well ſaith, Secundùm hos Libros de cæteris Literis, vel fidelium, vel infidelium liberè iudicamus: According to theſe bookes of the Scriptures, wee iudge frankly of all other writings, whether they be of the faithfull, or of the vnfaithfull. Therefore S. Hierome ſaith, Omni ſtudio legendæ nobis ſunt Scripturæ, & in Lege Domini meditandum die ac nocte: vt probati trapezitæ ſciamus, quis numus probus ſit, quis adulterinus: Wee muſt read the Scriptures with all diligence, and muſt be occupied in the Law of our Lord both day and night: that wee may become perfect exchangers, and be able rightly to diſcerne, what money is lawfull, and what is counterfeit. S. Hilary ſaith, Hoc proprium eſt Apoſtolicæ Doctrinæ, Deum ex Lege, ac Prophetis in Euangelijs prædicare: This is the very order of the Apoſtles doctrine, in the Goſpell to preach God out of the Law and the Prophets.

Otherwiſe, touching the diſcourſe of naturall reaſon, S. Ambroſe ſaith, No Creature either in earth, or in heauen, is able to reach the depth of theſe things. Thus hee ſaith, Mens deficit, vox filet, non mea tantùm, ſed Angelorum. Supra Poteſtates, ſupra Angelos, ſupra Cherubim, ſupra Seraphim, ſupra omnem ſenſum eſt: The minde is aſtonied, the voice faileth, not only mine, but alſo of the Angels. It is aboue the Powers, aboue the Angels, aboue the Cherubims, aboue the Seraphims, and aboue all manner vnderſtanding. And therefore he ſaith, as it is alleged once before, Nolo nobis credatur: Scriptura recitetur: Non ego dico a me, In principio erat Verbum: Sed audio: I would not, yee ſhould beleeue mee: Let the Scriptures bee read: I ſay not of my ſelfe, In the beginning was the Word: but I heare it ſpoken. And againe hee ſaith in the ſame Booke, vnto the Emperour Gratian: Faceſcat noſtra ſententia: Paulm interrogemus: Let our iudgement ſtand apart: and let vs aske S. Paul the queſtion. But M. Harding ſaith, Whoſoeuer maketh this argument which in your word is implied, the Scripturs are to be asked, Ergo, the holy fathers are not to be asked, maketh a fooliſh argument.

It ſeemeth no great point of wiſdome, M. Harding, to vpbraid others with folly without cauſe: God increaſe both you and vs in all wiſdome and vnderſtanding in Chriſt Jeſus. Howbeit, our Argument, howſoeuer it hath pleaſed you to faſhion and to handle it, as wee meant it and made it, had no ſuch folly. Wherefore whatſoeuer folly is now come to it, it is your owne: it is not ours. For we deny not the learned Fathers expoſitions and iudgements in doubtfull caſes of the Scriptures. We reade them our ſelues. We follow them. We embrace them. And as I ſaid before, wee moſt humbly thanke God for them. But thus we ſay, The ſame Fathers opinions and iudgements, foraſmuch as they are ſometimes diſagreeable one from another, and ſometimes imply contrarieties and contradictions, therefore alone and of themſelues, without farther authority and guiding of Gods word, are not alwaies ſufficient warrants to charge our faith. And thus the learned Catholike Fathers themſelues haue euermore taught vs to eſteeme and to weigh the Fathers.

The ancient Father Origen ſaith thus, as it is reported before: Ex ſolis Scripturis examinationis noſtræ diſcretio petenda eſt: The diſcuſſing of our iudgement muſt be taken onely of the Scriptures. And againe, Senſus noſtri & enarrationes ſine Scripturis teſtibus non habent fidem: Our iudgements and expoſitions without witneſſe of the Scriptures haue no credit. Likewiſe, S. Auguſtine, Ego ſolis Canonicis Scripturis debeo ſine vlla recuſatione conſenſum: My conſent without exception I owe (not vnto any Father, were he neuer ſo well learned, but) only to the holy Canonical Scriptures. His reaſon is this: Nam cùm Dominus tacuerit, quis noſtrûm dicat, Illa, vel illa ſunt? Aut ſi dicere audet, vnde probat? For whereas the Lord himſelfe hath not ſpoken, who of vs can ſay, It is this, or that? Or if hee dare ſay ſo, how can he proue it?

And therefore he concludeth directly and in like words with S. Ambroſe: Ego vocem Paſtoris inquiro. Lege hoc mihi de Propheta: Lege de Pſalmo: Recita de Lege: Recita de Euangelio: Recita de Apoſtolo: I require the voice of the Shepheard. Read me this matter out of the Prophets: Read it me out of the Pſalmes: Read it out of the Law: Read it out of the Goſpell: Read it out of the Apoſtles. Aug. de Paſtorib. cap. 14.

The Apologie, Chap. 10. Diuiſion 1.

WHerefore if we be Heretiks, and they (as they would faine be called) bee Catholiks, why doe they not as they ſee the Fathers, which were Catholike men, haue alwaies done? Why doe they not conuince & maſter vs by the diuine Scriptures? Why do they not call vs againe to be tried by them? Why do they not lay before vs how we haue gone away from Chriſt, from the Prophets, from the Apoſtles, and from the holy Fathers? Why ſticke they to do it? Why are they afraid of it? It is Gods cauſe. Why are they doubtful to commit it to the trial of Gods word? If we be Heretiks which refer al our controuerſies vnto the holy Scriptures, and report vs to the ſelfe ſame words which wee know were ſealed by God himſelfe, and in compariſon of them ſet little by all other things, whatſoeuer may bee deuiſed by men, how ſhall wee ſay to theſe folke, I pray you: what maner of men be they, and how is it meet to cal them which feare the iudgement of the holy Scriptures, that is to ſay, the iudgement of God himſelfe, and do prefer before them their own dreames and full cold inuentions: and to maintaine their own Traditions, haue defaced and corrupted now theſe many hundred yeeres the ordinances of Chriſt and of the Apoſtles?

M. Harding.

Iohan. 14. We do ſo. For they condemne thoſe that went againſt the Tradition of the Fathers, and ſo doe wee. The Scriptures conſiſt not in inke and paper, but in the ſenſe. Which ſenſe the holy Ghoſt by Chriſts promiſe hath taught the Church.

Hereſi 61. Scripture needeth ſpeculation. Epiphanius refuting the Heretiks which named themſelues Apoſtolikes, ſaith that the Scriptures haue need of ſpeculation (that is to wit, to be well ſtudied and conſidered) to the end the force & power of euery argument may be known. It behoueth vs alſo (ſaith he) to vſe the Tradition: For we can not haue all things of the holy Scripture. Thus Epiphanius. By Tradition without doubt he meaneth the ſenſe & vnderſtanding receiued of the Fathers. For that is the key of the word of God, as S. Peter taught, by report of S. Clement, this ſenſe and vnderſtanding of the Law had the miniſters of the Law, to whom the Traditions of Moſes and of the Elders came as it were by hands. Now we require you to admit this Tradition, that is to ſay, the Catholike ſenſe and vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, which hath been deliuered vnto vs by the holy Fathers of all ages, and of all Countries where the faith hath beene receiued. And then we will call you againe to be tried by the Scriptures. Tradicions neceſſary, becauſe Scripture hath not all things. Recognitions.

This haue the Catholikes laid before you often times, and this do we ſhew you in this Confutation. lib. 10. He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me, ſaith Chriſt of his Church. Ye deſpiſe the Catholike Church, and therefore ye deſpiſe Chriſt. Luc. 10.

What need ſo many queſtions Sirs? Your hot Rhetorike ſheweth more courage in word, then victory in deed. Ye cal vs forth to the Scriptures, as it were to the field. Ye ſtrike vs down with words before ye come to encounter. To ſhew your brauerie in the muſter, ye refer your controuerſies to the holy Scriptures, ye report you vnto the words ſealed by God himſelfe; but we the Catholikes, as ye pretend ſtick at it, we be afraid of it, we doubt of the matter, we feare the iudgment of holy Scriptures, we preferre our owne dreames and cold inuentions. Well, now that ye haue told your luſty tale, heare our ſober anſwer. Often times the true Scriptures are ſtretched forth to ſerue euill and falſe purpoſes. The Iewes went about by the Scriptures to proue that Chriſt was not ſo much as a Propher. For they ſaid, *Search the Scriptures, & ſee that a Prophet riſeth not out of Galilee. By the Scriptures they would needs ſhew him worthy to die. We haue a Law, quoth they, and by our Law he ought to die, becauſe he hath made himſelf the Son of God. The Diuell by alleaging Scripture would haue deceiued our Sauiour himſelfe, and ſaid vnto him, Scriptum eſt, It is written. The Arians were full of the Scriptures, and by the ſame, as S. Ambroſe writeth, went about to proue that Chriſt, the author of all goodneſſe, was not good. It is written, quoth they, Nemo bonus niſi vnus Deus; None is good but onely God. Likewiſe the Macedonians, the Neſtorians, the Eutychians. Great brags made by the Defenders of the aſſurance of the Scriptures. Vntruth. For the words are otherwiſe. Iohan. 7. Iohan. 19. Matth. 4. De fide, lib. 2. cap. 1. Mark. 10.

Now in this caſe your ſelues doing the like, what may we doe better then honour the Scriptures, and ſeeke for their right ſenſe and vnderſtanding? Scriptum eſt, It is Scripture (ſaith S. Ambroſe to the allegation of the Arians) I acknowledge, but the letter hath not the error: would God the Arians interpretatiō had not. Apices ſine crimine ſunt, ſenſus in crimine. The letters be without crime, the ſenſe is in crime. From the vnderſtanding commeth Hereſie, not from the Scripture: the ſenſe, not the word, becommeth to be a crime, ſaith S. Hilary. Sithence then al ſtandeth in the ſenſe, let vs agree firſt vpon the ſenſe and interpretation of the Scriptures, and then if we be not as ready as ye, come forth when ye liſt, vpbraid vs hardly and ſay luſtily, as here ye doe, Why ſticke they to doe it? Why are they afraid of it? Hilari. de Trinit. lib. 2.

As for the true ſenſe and interpretation of the Scriptures, where ſhall we finde it, but, as before wee ſaid, in the Catholike Church? The Church hauing Chriſt remaining with it all daies to the end of the world, hauing by promiſe of Chriſt the Spirit of truth remaining in it for euer, hauing by Gods owne ancient promiſe both the words which the Father hath put in the mouth of Chriſt, and the Spirit which he put in him, whereby it may vnderſtand the meaning of Gods words; we may not now ſeeke for the true ſenſe, vnderſtanding, and interpretation of the Scriptures any where but in the Church. Your own Doctor Iohn Caluin himſelf, whom ye follow and eſteeme ſo much, admoniſheth very well, and ſaith, It is ſpecially to be noted, that out of the Church there is no light of the ſound vnderſtanding of the Scripture. This ground being laid, on which each part muſt ſtand and be tried in, crow no more againſt vs, boaſt your ſelues no more; we feare not the iudgement of the holy Scriptures. Nay it is your ſelues that feare this iudgement. For your own conſcience telleth you that on this ground ye are the weaker ſide. If ye ſtand with vs on this ground, ye ſhal neuer be able to defend your maſter Iohn Caluines Doctrine touching Baptiſme, which he maketh to be of ſo little force againſt the manifeſt Scripture. Let euery one of you (ſaith S. Peter) be Baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, to remiſſion of ſins. Keeping this ground, *ye ſhall be borne from your Doctrin touching abſolution, denying the prieſt to haue power to abſolue penitents by his prieſtly authority, but by preaching the Goſpel to them, contrary to the plain Scripture: Whoſe ſinnes ye forgiue, they are forgiuen to them: Whoſe ye retaine, they are retained. If ye refuſe not this ground, ye ſhall be forced to reſtore the Sacrament of extreame Vnction, and the vſe of holy Oile againe, which ye haue abandoned. For what haue ye to ſay againſt the Scripture? Is any ſicke among you? Let him cauſe the Prieſts of the Church to come in to him anointing him with Oile, in the name of our Lord. Abiding in this ground, ye ſhall be driuen to forſake your Zuinglian doctrine, which putteth ſignes and figures 1. onely in the Sacrament of the Altar, for the true and real body of Chriſt there 2. preſent, contrary to the 3. cleare Scripture, This is my body. Being on this ground, ye ſhal ſoone giue ouer the maintenance of the Doctrine of your ſpecial faith, and of your iuſtification by faith onely, as being contrary to the plaine Scripture, Man is iuſtified by works, and not by faith only. To conclude (for to ſhew in how many points ye may be confuted by euident Scriptures it were in manner infinite) if ye wil admit this for a good ground, as ye muſt needs admit, then ſhall ye not maintain the preſumptuous Doctrine of your certainty of grace and ſaluation, contrary to that S. Paul counſelleth, With feare and trembling worke your ſaluation.* In Epiſt. ad Hebraeos. Vntruth. Vntruth. For he debaſeth not the Sacrament of Baptiſme.  Vntruth.* Iacob. 5. Three euident Vntruthes. Iacob. 2. Philip. 2.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Whereas we make reaſonable requeſt, that God may be Ampére in his owne cauſe, & that al our controuerſies may be iudged, and tried by the holy Scriptures, M. Harding, thereto anſwereth thus: The Scripture ſtandeth not in the words, but in the ſenſe, & the ſame ſenſe is continued by Tradition in the Church. Otherwiſe, he ſaith, the Iewes, the Arians, the Neſtorians, the Eutychians, and all other Heretikes, were alwaies able to claime by the Scriptures. To conclude, he maketh vp a great empty heape of the force of Baptiſme, of holy Oile, of extreame Unction, of Abſolution, of Signes, of Figures, of onely Faith, and, as it liketh him to call it, of the preſumptuous Doctrine of the certainty of Saluation: in euery of which things, he ſaith, the Scriptures are cleere of his ſide, and directly againſt vs.

To

To answer all these points in particular, it would require another Booke. But briefly to touch so much onely, as shall be needefull. First, that the substance of the Scriptures standeth in the right sense and meaning, and not onely in the naked and bare words, it is true, and generally granted without exception, and needeth no further proofe. S. Hierome saith, Non in legendo, sed intelligendo scripturæ consistunt: The Scriptures stand, not in the reading, but in the vnderstanding. And S. Hilary, Non diuinorum dictorum, sed intelligentiæ nostræ à nobis ratio præstanda est: We must yeeld an account, not of Gods diuine words, but of our owne expositions. Hieron contra Luciferanos. Hilari. de Trinitate, lib. 4. pag. 39.

But if that onely be the right meaning and sense of the Scriptures, that within these few late hundred yeares is cropen into the Church of Rome: and if it be all Gospell, whatsoeuer it be, that arriueth from thence: and if they be al Heretikes, and Schismatiks, and despisers of Christ, and of the Apostles, and of the Vniuersall Church, that make stay at it, or cannot receiue it, then is the whole matter already concluded: we shall need no more adoe.

Yée say, the Iewes, the Arians, the Nestorians, and other Heretiks alleged the Scriptures. Yea verily, M. Harding, and that euen with like faith, and in like sense, and to like purpose as you alleage them now: as hereafter, I trust, it shal appeare. By the way, for example hereof, in this very place, where you allege the words of the Pharisees auouching the Scriptures, it may please you to remember, that either wittingly, or of some errour, and ouersight, ye haue manifestly corrupted the Scriptures: for whereas you haue translated the place thus, Search the Scriptures: the Pharisei said nothing else, but Scrutare, & Vide, Search, and See: and spake not one word of the Scriptures. And although the matter import not much, yet to charge you with your own rule, which must needes be good against your selfe, any small fault in Gods word must be counted great. Indeed S. Chrysostome, and S. Augustine, seeme to supply this word, Scriptures, although it were not in the text. Iohan. 7. Ἐρεύνησον, καὶ ἴδε ὅτι προφήτης οὐκ ἐγείρεται ἐκ Γαλιλαίας. Chrysostom. Augustinus.

Touching the matter it selfe, Nicolaus Lyra saith, Hoc verbum eorum simpliciter falsum est. Quia, si intelligatur de Prophetis generaliter, aliqui fuerunt nati de Galilæa: videlicet, Elizæus, Tobias, & Debora Prophetissa, & forte plures alij: This word of the Pharisees is plainly false. For if it be taken generally of all Prophets, then were there certaine of them borne in Galile, namely Elizæus, Tobias, Debora, and perchance others moe. In such sort M. Harding, euen with the like faith and credit, you also haue vsed to allege the Scriptures. Nicol. Lyra. in 7. cap. Iohan.

But whereto driue you all this long tale? Will you in the end conclude thus: The Iewes, and Heretiks alleged the Scriptures: Ergo, Faithfull Christians may not alege them? Or thus: Theeues haue sometimes armed themselues: Ergo, True men may not be armed? Nay, we may rather say thus vnto you: The Iewes and Heretikes alleged the Scriptures: what account then may we make of you, that flée and condemne, and burne the Scriptures?

Certainely, notwithstanding Pharisei, and Heretikes wickedly misalleged the Scriptures, as ye sometimes doe to serue you purpose; yet for all that, Christ said vnto them, Scrutamini Scripturas: search the Scriptures: And, as it is said before, the Catholike learned Fathers, in all their cases, and controuersies appealed euermore to the Scriptures. Iohan. 5. Cap 9. Deut. 1.

Where you say, the Scriptures are so clére of your side, and make so directly against vs: would God ye would indeede, and vnfainedly stand to that triall. Your fansies and follies would soone come to ground.

Touching your great heapes of examples, of the Sacrament of Baptisme defaced, as you say, by M. Caluin: of Absolution, of extreme Unction, of holy Oile, of Signes, of Figures, of Onely Faith, and of the certainety of Saluation, which you call presumptuous: First, of the Sacrament of Baptisme, M. Caluine euery where writeth with all manner reuerence, calling it a diuine, and an heauenly Mystery, and the Sacrament of our redemption: wherein also sometimes he iustly reproueth you, for that ye haue so many waies, so prophanely, and so vnreuerently abused the same. Of Absolution we shall haue occasion to say more hereafter. Oile. Figure. Signe.

Touching your Oile, indeed in shew of words, S. Iames séemeth to make somewhat for you. Notwithstanding, neither doth he call it holy Oile, as ye doe, neither doth he call it a Sacrament of the Church; nor doth he say, as ye say, it should serue for the saluation of body and soule; nor doth he teach you to salute it, and to speake vnto it as to a liuely and reasonable creature, Aue sanctum Oleum: All haile holy Oile: nor with these words to minister it vnto the sicke; Per hanc sanctam vnctionem, & suam pijssimam misericordiã, ignoscat tibi Deus: By this holy annointing, and his deare mercy, God pardon thee. To be short, it was a miraculous gift of healing, lasting onely, as other like miracles did, for the time: not a necessary Sacrament of the Church to continue for euer.

As for the obiection of Signes, and figures, for shortnesse of time, I must referre thee, gentle Reader, vnto my former Reply to M. Harding. The words of Christ which are thought to be so plaine, the ancient learned Father Tertullian expoundeth thus: Hoc est corpus meum: Hoc est, figura corporis mei: This is my body: that is to say, this is a figure of my body. Likewise S. Augustine, Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui: Our Lord doubted not to say, This is my body, when he gaue a signe of his body.

Tertullian contra Marcion. lib 4 pag. 233.

To rehearse all other like ancient Authorities, it were too long. O what triumphes would Master Harding make if none of all the old learned Fathers could bee found, that euer had called the Sacrament, the Signe and Figure of Christs Bodie? But, as before hee alleged an imagined sense of the Scriptures without words, so now he alleageth the words alone without sense. Hee should haue remembred better, that S. Hierome saith, Ne putemus in verbis Scripturarum esse Euangelium, sed in sensu: Let vs not thinke, the Gospell standeth in the words of the Scriptures, but in the meaning.

Hieronym. in Epi. ad Galat. cap. 1.

Two other great quarrels Master Harding moueth: the one of Onely Faith: the other, as hee calleth it, of the Presumptuous certainty of Saluation. Wherein iudge thou vprightly, good Christian Reader, how iust cause hee hath to reproue our doctrine.

Rom. 3.

As for the first hereof, S. Paul saith, Iustificamur gratis ex gratia ipsius: We be iustified freely of his grace: wee iudge that a man is iustified by faith, without the works of the Law: wee know that a man is not iustified by the works of the Law, but by the faith of Christ. M. Harding will say, yet hitherto of Sola fides, that is of Onely Faith, we heare nothing. Notwithstanding, when S. Paul excludeth all maner works besides Onely Faith, what else then leaueth he, but Faith alone?

Howbeit, if it be so horrible an heresie, to say, Wee bee iustified before God by Onely Faith, that is to say, Onely by the merits and crosse of Christ, let vs see what the holy learned Fathers of the Church so many hundred yeares agoe, haue taught vs thereof.

Ambros. eodem loco.

S. Ambrose saith, Iustificati sunt gratis, quia nihil operantes, neque vicem reddentes, Sola Fide iustificati sunt dono Dei: They are iustified freely: because working nothing, and requiting nothing, they are iustified by Onely Faith through the gift of God. Againe, Sic decretum est à Deo, vt, cessante Lege, Solam Fidem Gratia Dei posceret ad Salutem: This was Gods determination, that, the Law surceasing, the Grace of God should require Onely Faith vnto Saluation. And againe, Sola Fides posita est ad Salutem: Onely Faith is laid, or appointed vnto Saluation.

Ambr. in epist. ad Rom. cap. 9.

Basil. de humil. Πίστις μόνη τοῦτο εἰς χεῖρον ἀνθικαιοῦται.

S. Basil saith, Nouit se esse inopem veræ Iustitiæ: Sola autem Fide in Christum esse iustificatum: He knoweth himselfe to be void of true Righteousnesse, and to be iustified by Only faith in Christ.

Theodo. de Curandis Græcorum affectibus, lib. 7.

Theodoretus saith, Non vllis Operibus nostris, sed per Solam Fidem Mysticabona consequuti sumus: Not by any Works of ours, but by Onely Faith we haue gotten the Mysticall good things.

Nazianzen. περὶ ὑποταξίας.

Orig. in epi. ad Rom. ca. 3. l. 3.

Origen saith, Vbi est gloriatio tua? Excluſa est. Dicit sufficere Solius fidei Iustificationem: ita vt credens quis tantummodò Iustificetur, etiamsi nihil boni Operis fecerit: Where now is thy boasting (of thy good works)? It is shut out. Paul saith, that the iustification of Onely Faith is sufficient: So that a man Only Beleeuing may be iustified, although he haue done no good works at all.

Hesychius in Leuit. lib. 4. c. 14.

Hesychius saith, Gratia ex misericordia, atque compassione præbetur, & Fide comprehenditur Sola: The grace of God is giuen onely of mercy and fauour: and is embraced and receiued by Onely Faith.

Chrys. in Epist. ad Gala. cap. 3.

I leaue a great number of others, that haue written the like, as well Greekes as Latines. In stede of them al, S. Chrysostome saith thus: Illi dicebant, Qui Sola Fide nititur, execrabilis est,: Hic, contra demonstrat, eum, qui Sola Fide nititur, Benedictum esse: They said, who so stayeth himselfe by Only Faith, is accursed: contrariwise S. Paul prooueth, that who so stayeth himselfe by Only Faith, he is blessed.

Rom. 4.

Touching the words of S. Iames, if M. Harding well considered the Æquiuocation, or double vnderstanding of this word Iustification, he might soone and easily haue espied his owne errour. For when S. Paul saith, Abraham was iustified by Faith without works of the Law, he teacheth vs how Abraham was receiued into fauour, and iustified before God: Of the other side, S. Iames, when he saith, Abraham was iustified by Works, and not by Faith Onely

Onely, hee ſpeaketh of the workes that follow Iuſtification, and of the fruits of Faith: without which fruits, Abrahams Faith had bene no Faith.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſunt contrariæ duorum Apoſtolorum ſententiæ, Pauli, & Iacobi, cùm dicit Paulus, Iuſtificari hominem ſine operibus: & Iacobus dicit, inanem eſſe Fidem ſine operibus. Quia Paulus loquitur de Operibus, quæ Fidem præcedunt: Iacobus de ijs quæ Fidem ſequuntur: The ſayings of the two Apoſtles, Paul and Iames, are not contrary, where, as Paul ſaith, A man is iuſtified without Works: and Iames ſaith, Faith without Works, is in vaine: For Paul ſpeaketh of the Workes that goe before faith: Iames ſpeaketh of the Works, that follow after Faith. Aug. in lib. 83. Qua. qua. 76. Iacob. 5.

If M. Harding ſhall thinke, S. Auguſtines authority herein is not ſufficient, Thomas of Aquine will auouch the ſame. His words be theſe: Iacobus hic loquitur de Operibus ſequentibus Fidem: quæ dicuntur Iuſtificare, non ſecundùm quod Iuſtificare dicitur Iuſtitiæ infuſio: ſed ſecundùm quod dicitur Iuſtitiæ Exercitatio, vel Oſtenſio, vel Conſummatio. Res enim dicitur fieri, quando perficitur, vel innoteſcit: Iames in this place ſpeaketh of ſuch works as follow Faith: which workes are ſaid to Iuſtifie, not as Iuſtification is the procuring of Righteouſneſſe: but in that it is an exerciſe, or a ſhewing or a perfecting of righteouſneſſe. For we ſay, A thing is done, when it is perfected, or knowne to be done. Thom. Aquin. in Epiſt. Iacobi. cap. 5.

Now concerning the aſſurance or certainty of Saluation, the Scriptures are full. S. Paul ſaith, There is no damnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: The Spirit of God beareth witneſſe to our ſpirit, that we are the children of God: I know, that neither Death, nor Life, nor Angels, nor Powers, nor Principalities, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor Height, nor Depth, nor any Creature elſe, ſhall be able to remoue me from that loue, that God beareth towards me in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord. Roman. 8.

But foraſmuch as theſe words perhaps haue not the ſenſe of the Church of Rome, without which, in M. Hardings iudgement, the Scripture of God is no Scripture, let vs ſée the ſenſe, and expoſition of the holy Fathers.

Tertullian ſaith, Vt certum eſſet, nos eſſe Filios Dei, miſit Spiritum ſuum in corda noſtra clamantem, Abba, Pater: That we might be certified, that we be the children of God, he hath ſent the holy Ghoſt into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Tertull. contra Marcion. lib. 5. pag. 240.

Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, Re vera ſanguis fidei eſt ſpes, in qua continetur, vt fides in anima. Cùm autem ſpes expiraverit, perinde acſi ſanguis effluxerit, vitalis fidei facultas diſſoluitur: Indeed hope, is as it were, the blood of faith: in which faith, hope is contained, euen as faith is contained in the ſoule. And when hope is gone, then is all the liuely power of faith diſſolued, as if the blond were ſhed out of the body. Clemens in Paedago. l. 1. ca. 6.

S. Cyprian ſaith, Et tu dubitas, & fluctuas? Hoc eſt Deum omnino non noſſe: Hoc eſt Chriſtum credentium magiſtrum peccato incredulitatis offendere: Hoc eſt, in Eccleſia conſtitutum fidem in domo fidei non habere: And doeſt thou ſtagger, and ſtand in doubt (of thy ſaluation?) That were as much as not to know God: that were as much as with the ſinne of vnbeliefe, to offend Chriſt the maſter of beleeuers: that were as much as being in the Church, in the houſe of Faith, to haue no Faith. Cyprian. de Mortalit. Sermon. 4.

Proſper ſaith, Securi diem iudicij expectant, quibus in cruce Domini gloriantibus mundus crucifixus eſt, & ipſi mundo: They vnto whom the world is crucified, and are crucified vnto the world, waite for the day of iudgement without feare. Proſper. De Promiſ. & Prædictionib. Dei, Par. 1. cap. 16.

But to leaue the ancient Fathers of old time, and to put the matter quite out of doubt, one Antoninus Marinarius in the late Councell of Trident, in open audience ſaid thus: Si cœlum ruat, ſi terra euaneſcat, ſi orbis illabatur præceps, ego in eum erectus ero. Si Angelus de cœlo aliud mihi perſuadere contendat, dicam illi Anathema. O fœlicem Chriſtiani pectoris fiduciam! If the heauen ſhould fall, if the earth ſhould vaniſh, if the whole world ſhould come downe headlong, yet would I ſtand preſt, and bold before God. If an Angel from heauen wold tell me otherwiſe, I would accurſe him. O the bleſſed truſt (and certainety) of a Chriſtian heart! Conc. Trident. Act. 1. An. 1546.

Certainely, M. Harding, it were a very preſumptuous part to ſay that theſe Fathers, Greekes, Latines, New, Old, your owne, and ours, were all preſumptuous. If it bee ſo preſumptuous a matter to put affiance in the merits of Chriſt, what is it then to put affiance in our owne merits? S. Paul hath taught vs to ſay, God forbid that I ſhould glory, but only in the croſſe of Chriſt. S. Baſil ſaith, Qui non fidit ſuis meritis, nec expectat ex operibus iuſtificari, vnam & ſolam ſpem habet ſalutis ſuæ miſericordias Domini: Who ſo truſteth not in his own merits, nor looketh to be iuſtified by his works, hath his only hope of Saluation in the mercies of our Lord. Galat. 6. Baſil in Pſ. 32. μὴ ἐπὶ ἴδιοις τοῖς κατορθώμασι τὴν ἐλπίδα τῆς σωτηρίας τοῦ Θεοῦ

So ſaith Iob in al his miſeries, Etiamſi me occiderit ſperabo in eum. Veruntamen vias meas in conſpectu eius arguam: Although he kill me, yet will I put my truſt in him: Notwithſtanding I will reproone my waies before his ſight. So the Prophet Dauid, In thee O Lord Iob 13. Pſalm. 70.

haue I trusted: I will neuer be confounded. This is no presumption, but a patient, and an humble waiting for the redemption of the children of God. It is most true, that S. Paul saith, We must worke our owne saluation with feare and trembling. But this feare riseth in consideration of our owne weakenesse and vnworthinesse: not of any distrust, or doubt in Gods mercy. But rather the lesse cause we finde to trust in our selues, the more cause we haue to trust in God. Therefore S. Augustine saith, Præsume, non de Operatione tua, sed de Christi Gratia. Gratia enim saluati estis, inquit Apostolus. Non ergo hic arrogantia est, sed fides. Prædicare quod acceperis, non est superbia sed deuotio: Presume then, not of thine owne working, but of the grace of Christ. For the Apostle saith, Ye are saued by grace. Here therefore is not presumption, but faith. To proclaime that thou hast receiued, it is no pride, it is deuotion.

Aug. de verbis Dom. Serm. 28

Againe he saith, Non mea præsumptione, sed ipsius promissione in iudicium non venio: It is not of my presumption, but of his promise, that I shall not come into iudgement. S. Basil saith, Paulus gloriatur de contemptione iustitiæ suæ: Paul (presumeth, and) boasteth of the contempt of his owne righteousnesse. So saith S. Ambrose: Non gloriabor, quia iustus sum: sed quia redempti sum, gloriabor: Non quia vacuus sum a peccatis, sed quia mihi remissa sunt peccata. Non gloriabor, quia profui, neq; quia profuit mihi quisquam: sed quia pro me Aduocatus apud patrem Christus est: sed quia, pro me Christi sanguis effusus est: I will not glory for that I am a iust man, but for that I am redeemed, therefore will I glory: Not for that I am void of sin, but for that my sinnes be forgiuen me. I will not glory, for that I haue done good to any man, nor for that any man hath done good to me: But for that Christ is my Aduocate with the Father, and for that Christs blood was shed for me.

Augustin. in Iohan Tract. 22.

Basil. de humil. Καυχᾶται Παῦλος ἐν τῇ ἐξουθενήσει τῆς ἰδίας δικαιοσύνης.

Ambros. de Iacob & vita beata lib. 1. cap. 6.

Therefore S. Augustine saith, Quid retribuam Domino, quòd recolit hæc memoria mea, & anima mea non metuit inde? What shall I render vnto our Lord, for that I call to remembrance all these my sinnes, and yet my soule thereof is not afraid?

August. confes. lib. 2. cap. 7.

To be short, thus saith S. Bernard: Vbi tuta firmaque infirmis securitas & requies, nisi in vulneribus Saluatoris? Tantò illic securior habito, quantò ille potentior est ad saluandum, &c. Peccaui peccatum grande: turbatur conscientia, sed non perturbabitur: Quoniam vulnerum Domini recordabor. Nompe vulneratus est propter iniquitates nostras: What safe rest or surety can the weake soule finde, but in the wounds of our Sauiour? As hee is mightier to saue, so dwell I there with more safety, &c. I haue committed a great sinne: my conscience is troubled; yet shall it not be shaken downe: because I will remember my Lords wounds. For he was wounded for our sinnes.

Bern. in Cant. Canticor. Ser. 61.

Thus, M. Harding, to be assured of our saluation, S. Augustine saith, it is no arrogant stoutnesse: it is our faith. It is no pride: it is deuotion. It is no presumption: it is Gods promise.

But your whole doctrine of the trust in mens merits leadeth directly to desperation. And therefore S. Cyprian saith well of you: Asserunt noctem pro die: interitum pro salute: desperationem, sub obtentu spei: perfidiam, sub prætextu fidei: Antichristum sub vocabulo Christi: They teach vs night instead of day: destruction instead of health: desperation vnder the colour of hope: infidelity vnder the pretence of faith: Antichrist vnder the name of Christ.

Cyprian. de simpl. Prælat.

Now a little to view the grounds of M. Hardings long discourse: whereas he so often and so earnestly telleth vs of the sense of the Scriptures, as if we had Scriptures without sense; his meaning thereby is onely to lead vs away to the sense of the Church of Rome: which sense, Albertus Pighius saith, Is the infallible and inflexible rule of truth. Eckius saith, Scriptura, nisi Ecclesiæ authoritate, non est authentica: The Scriptures of God are not authenticall, or of credit, but onely by the warrant and authority of the Church. And Hosius in like maner, Apostoli cùm Symbolum traderent, nunquam dixerunt, Credo Sancta Biblia, aut Sanctum Euangelium: sed dixerunt, Credo Sanctam Ecclesiam: The Apostles when they deliuered the Creed, they neuer said, I beleeue the holy Bible, or the holy Gospell: but they said, I beleeue the holy Church. Thus now the matter is sure enough for euer. Wee haue neither Scriptures, nor sense of Scriptures, but onely from Rome.

Hosius in confessione Petri. comen cap. 80.

I will not here report the vnsauory senses, that they haue imagined of the Scriptures. One example or two for a taste may be sufficient. Pope Boniface saith thus: Ecce duo gladij hic: Behold here are two swords: that is to say, the Pope hath the power both of the spirituall sword and of the Temporall.

De Maior. & Obed Vnam Sanctam.

Psalm 8.

Another saith: Omnia subiecisti sub pedibus eius, Id est, Papæ: peccora campi, id est, homines viuentes in terra: pisces maris, id est, animas in purgatorio: volucres cœli, id est, animas beatorum. These words S. Paul applieth only vnto Christ, meaning thereby, that God hath aduanced him aboue all powers and Dominions, and that all things are subiect vnto him. But the Romane sense is farre otherwise: Thou hast made all things subiect

vnto him, that is to say, to the Pope: The cattle of the field, that is to say, men liuing in the earth: The fishes of the sea, that is to say, the soules in Purgatory: The Birds of the Heauens, that is to say, the soules of the blessed in Heauen. I leaue M. Hardings owne peculiar expositions, Drinke ye all of this, that is to say, as he gathereth in conclusion, Drinke ye not al of this: It is the Substance, that is to say, It is the Accidens. M. Harding in his former answer, Arti. 2.

By such prettie senses, I will not say, as S. Hierome saith, De Euangelio Christi facitis hominis Euangelium, aut, quod peius est, Diaboli: Of the Gospel of Christ ye make the Gospell of a man, or that is worse, the Gospell of the Diuell. I will not so say, but thus may I say with the Prophet Esay, Ye make light darkenesse, and darkenesse light. M. Hard. Art. 2. & 10. Hiero. in Epist. ad Galat. ca. 1. Esai 5.

Yet must we needs beleeue, vpon M. Hardings word, that the Scripture without the sense of the Church of Rome is no Scripture. And therefore Hosius saith, Si quis habeat interpretationem Ecclesiæ Romanæ de loco aliquo Scripturæ, etiamsi nec sciat, nec intelligat, an, & quomodo cum Scripturæ verbis conueniat, tamen habet ipsissimum verbum Dei: If a man haue the exposition of the Church of Rome touching any place of the Scriptures, although he neither know, nor vnderstand, whether, and how it agreeth with the words of the Scripture, yet he hath the very word of God. So saith Rabbi Abraham Hispanus, speaking of the expositions of the Rabbines, Licèt videantur nobis verba nostra esse vera & recta, nobis tamen veritas abijcienda est in terram, quia veritas cum illis est: Notwithstanding our Expositions seeme to vs neuer so true and right, yet must we throw our truth to the ground: for the truth indeed is with them. Lyra likewise reporteth the common opinion the Iewes had of their Rabbines: Recipiendum est quicquid hoc modo proponatur, etiamsi dicant dextram esse sinistram: We must needes receiue whatsoeuer they lay vnto vs, yea although they tell vs the right hand is the left. Hosius de expresso verbo Dei. Rabbi. Abrah. Scripture, Tradition. Lyra in Deuteron. cap. 17.

Now, gentle Reader, that thou maiest the better see the constancy and certainety of these senses and expositions wherunto M. Harding laboureth so earnestly to haue thee bound, it may please thee to consider these words of Nicolaus Cusanus sometime Cardinall in the Church of Rome: Non est mirum si praxis Ecclesiæ vno tempore interpretatur Scripturam vno modo, & alio tempore alio modo. Nam intellectus currit cum praxi. Intellectus enim qui cum praxi concurrit est spiritus viuificans. Sequuntur ergo Scripturæ Ecclesiam, & non è conuerso: It is no maruell though the practise of the Church expound the Scriptures at one time one way, and at another time an other way. For the vnderstanding or sense of the Scriptures runneth with the practise: and that sense so agreeing with the practise is the quickening spirit. And therefore the Scriptures follow the Church: but contrarwise the Church followeth not the Scriptures. Nicol. Cusan. ad Bohemos, Epist. 7.

For such kindes of expositions of the Scriptures S. Hilarie said sometime vnto the Arians, Fides ergo temporum magis est quàm Euangeliorum: The faith therefore followeth the time, and not the Gospell. Hilar. ad Constantium Aug.

This is the sense of the Church of Rome, whereby onely M. Harding willeth vs to measure & to weigh the Word of God. But the ancient Father Origen saith, Sicut omne aurum quodcunque fuerit extra Templum non est sanctificatum, sic omnis sensus qui fuerit extra diuinam Scripturam, quamuis admirabilis videatur quibusdam, non est sanctus, quia non continetur à sensu Scripturæ: As whatsoeuer gold is without the Temple is not sanctified, so whatsoeuer sense is without the holy Scripture, although vnto some it seeme wonderfull, yet is it not holy, because it is not contained in the sense of the Scripture. Origen. in Matthæ. Hom. 25.

To conclude, whereas M. Harding saith, we cannot vnderstand the Scriptures without Tradition, the ancient Father Irenæus saith, this is one speciall marke whereby wee may know an Heretike: these be his words: Hæretici, cùm arguuntur ex Scripturis, in accusationem Scripturarum conuertuntur, quasi non rectè habeant, nec sint ex authoritate, & quod variè sint dictæ, & quòd ex his non possit inueniri veritas ab illis qui Traditionem nesciunt: Heretikes, when they be reproued by the Scriptures, they fall to the accusing of the Scriptures, as though either they were not well and perfect, or wanted authority, or were doubtfully vttered, or that they that know not the Tradition were neuer able by the Scriptures to finde out the truth. Iren. lib. 3. c. 2.

The Apologie, Chap. 10. Diuision 2.

When say that Sophocles the Tragical Poet, when in his old daies he was by his owne sonnes accused before the Iudges for a doting and sottish man, as one that fondly wasted his owne substance, and seemed to neede a gouernour to see vnto him: to the intent hee might cleare himselfe of the fault, he came into the place of iudgement, and when he had rehearsed before them his Tragedy called Oedipus Colonæus, which hee had writen at the very time of his accusation, maruellous exactlie and and cunningly did aſke the Iudges in his owne behalfe, whether they thought any ſottiſh or doting man could doe the like peece of worke. In like maner, becauſe theſe men take vs to be mad, & appeach vs for Heretiks, as men which haue nothing to do neither with Chriſt, nor with the Church of God, we haue iudged it ſhould be to good purpoſe, & not vnprofitable, if we doe openly and frankely ſet forth our faith wherein we ſtand, and ſhew all that confidence which we haue in Chriſt Ieſus, to the intent all men may ſee what is our iudgement of euery part of Chriſtian Religion, & may reſolue with themſelues whether the faith which they ſhall ſee confirmed by the words of Chriſt, by the writings of the Apoſtles, by the teſtimonies of the Catholik Fathers, and by the examples of many ages, be but a certaine rage of furious and mad men, and a conſpiracie of Heretikes. This therefore is our beliefe.

M. Harding.

The compariſon which ye make betweene your ſelues and Sophocles, gladly we admit. Yet wee acknowledge that as in many reſpects ye are like, ſo in ſome vnlike: Sophocles was a Poet, that is to ſay, a fainer and deuiſer of things that be not true, but fabulous. Ye alſo are fainers and deuiſers of nouelties, and followers of new deuiſes that be falſe. Sophocles was a Tragical Poet, ye are Tragicall Diuines. A Tragedy ſetteth forth the ouerthrowes of Kingdomes, murder of noble Perſonages, and other great troubles, and endeth in wofull lamentations. Your Goſpell inuadeth Chriſts heauenly kingdome the Church, it murdereth ſoules bought with a moſt deare price, it cauſeth a helliſh garboile in mens conſciences, in the end it bringeth to euerlaſting weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. We take you not to bee mad. Would God ye were not worſe then mad. Were ye mad, ye ſhould be tied vp. Elſe were ye ſuffered to go abroad, for feare folke would fly from you. And then ſhould ye doe little hurt. Now whiles ye offer venemous kiſſes with ſugred lips, whiles ye couer woluiſh cruelty vnder lambs skins, whiles ye hurt vnder pretence of benefit, wound vnder colour of a medicine, beguile vnſtable ſoules with reſemblance of truth: neither ſtint ye to worke miſchiefe, nor others can beware of you.

The Biſhop of Saritburie.

O M. Harding, Sophocles himſelfe, if he were aliue, were not able with all his eloquence to expreſſe the Tragicall dealings of your company. Your whole life and Religion is nothing elſe but a Tragedie. You haue ript vp the graues, and digged out the dead, and practiſed your cruelty vpon the poore innocent carkaſes.

They haue conueied their poiſon, I will not ſay into their meats or drinkes, for that is ouer groſſe and common, but euen into their maſſe bookes, into the Sacrament, into the Chalice. Camotenſis, one of their own ſide, ſaith well of them: Sine ſanguinis effuſione non ingrediuntur in Sancta Sanctorum: Without ſhedding of blood they enter not into that holy place, the Holy of Holies.

Howbeit, what ſpend I theſe words? It is not poſſible to ſay, all that may bee ſaid. They haue enflamed warres. They haue raiſed the ſubiects againſt their Princes. They haue armed the ſonne againſt the father. They haue ouerthrown Cities and Countries. They haue depoſed Kings. They haue ſet their feet on Emperours necks.

These matters, M. Harding, be Tragicall indeed. And herein ſtandeth the whole practiſe and policy of your Church of Rome.

Where you thinke your ſelfe a ſober man, in that you can ſo eaſily call vs madde, and worſe then mad, you may remember that this kinde of eloquence amongſt you is ancient and Catholike, and may well ſtand with your Religion. For ſo the falſe Prophet Semeias ſaid that Ieremie the Prophet of God raued, and was ſtarke mad. So the wicked ſaid vnto Ieho of Elizeus the Prophet, What hath this mad Bedlem body to doe with thee? Euen ſo they ſaid of Chriſt, that he was mad, and ſpake in fury hee knew not what. S. Auguſtine ſaith of S. Paul, Incidit in iſtorum ſacrilegam dicacitatem: & ab eis qui ſanari nolunt vocatur inſanus: S. Paul is fallen into their curſed railing: and of them that will neuer be made ſober is called a mad man. So ſaith the ancient Father Origen of Celſus ſus the wicked Heathen: Videamus igitur nos, qui iuxta hunc inſanimus: Let vs therefore conſider heereof, that in this mans iudgement are ſtarke mad. Origen. contra Celſum, lib. 4.

Ierem. 29. 4. Reg. 19. Marci 3.

But M. Harding, wherein are we ſo mad? or what tokens of madneſſe haue we ſhewed? Can no man either ſpeake the truth or diſcloſe your errors, without madneſſe? But, I trow, it is euen as S. Ierome ſaid ſometime, Delirabat, ſcilicet, qui in tuo regno contra tuam ſententiam loquebatur: He raued and was madde, no doubt, that within thy Dominion ſpake any thing againſt thy minde. So ſaith Leo, Inſanis magiſtris veritas ſcandalum eſt, & cæcis Doctoribus ſit caligo quod lumen eſt: Vnto frantike maſters the truth is a ſlander: and vnto blinde Doctors the light is become darkeneſſe. Hieronym. ad Pammach. contra errores Iohan. Hieroſolymit. Leo in Epipha. Sermo. 5.

So ſaith S. Auguſtine of King Dauid: Inſanire videbatur: ſed Regi Achis inſanire videbatur, id eſt, ſtultis & ignorantibus: Dauid ſeemed madde: but vnto King Achis he ſeemed madde, that is to ſay, vnto fooles and idiots. Aug. in Pſ. 33.

As for our part, we remember, what anſwer S. Paul made vnto Feſtus in the like caſe: O good Feſtus, I am not madde, but I vtter vnto thee, the words of truth and ſobriety. Therefore we may comfort our ſelues as the vertuous Gentlewoman Paula did, when ſhe was likewiſe ſuppoſed to be madde: Nos ſtulti propter Chriſtum: ſed ſtultum Dei ſapientius eſt hominibus: We are indged fooles (and madde folkes) for Chriſts ſake: but the fooliſhneſſe of God is wiſer then men. Actor. 26. Hieronym. in Epitaphio Paulæ.

But, M. Harding, S. Cyprian will tell you thus: Hæc eſt, Frater, vera dementia, non cogitare, nec ſcire, quòd mendacia non diu fallant: noctem tam diu eſſe, quàm diu illuceſcat dies: O my Brother, this is madneſſe indeed, not to thinke, or know, that (your) lies cannot long deceiue vs, & that it is night no longer, but vntil the day ſpring. This indeed is very madnes. Cyprian ad Cornelium.

And therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith, Qui in manifeſtam foueam cadit, non negligens dicitur, ſed inſanus: Who ſo falleth into a pit, that lieth wide open, is not ſaid to be negligent, but ſtarke madde.

The end of the Firſt Part.

THE SECOND PART.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuiſion 1.

WE beleeue, that there is one certaine Nature and Diuine Power, which we call God: and that the ſame is diuided into three equal perſons, into the Father, into the Sonne, and into the holy Ghoſt: and that they all bee of one Power, of one Maieſty, of one Eternity, of one Godhead, and of one Subſtance. And although theſe three Perſons be ſo diuided, that neither the Father is the Sonne, nor the Sonne is the holy Ghoſt, or the Father: yet neuertheleſſe we beleeue that there is but one very God: And that the ſame one God hath created Heauen and Earth, and all things contained vnder Heauen.

We beleeue, that Jeſus Chriſt the only Sonne of the Eternal Father (as long before it was determined, before al beginnings) when the fulneſſe of time was come, did take of that bleſſed, & pure Virgin, both fleſh, & al the nature of man, that he might declare to the world the ſecret and hid will of his Father: which will had been laid vp from before all ages and generations: and that he might full finiſh in his Humane body the myſtery of our Redemption: and might faſten our ſinnes to the Croſſe, and alſo that handwriting, which was made againſt vs. The Creed.

We beleeue, that for our ſakes he died, and was buried, deſcended into Hel, the third day by the power of his Godhead returned to life & roſe againe, & that the fortith day after his Reſurrection, whyles his Diſciples beheld

Aug. Tract. 50 in Iohan. beheld & looked vpon him, he ascended into Heauen, to fulfil all thyngs, and did place in Maiesty & glory the selfe same body, wherewith he was borne, wherein he liued on earth, wherein he was iested at, wherein he had suffered most painful torments, and cruel kinde of death. wherein he rose againe, and wherein he ascended to the right hand of the Father, aboue all Rule, aboue all Power, all Force, all Dominion, and aboue euery name, that is named, not onely in this world, but also in the world to come: And that there he now sitteth, and shal sit, till all thyngs be full perfected. And although the Maiesty, and Godhead of Christ be euery where abundantly dispersed, yet wee beleeue, that his body, as S. Augustine saith, must needs be still in one place: and that Christ hath giuen Maiesty vnto his body, but yet hath not taken away from it the nature of a body: and that we must not so affirme Christ to be God, that we denie him to be Man: and as the Martyr Vigilius saith, that Christ hath left vs as touching his humane nature, but hath not left vs as touching his diuine nature: and that the same Christ, though he be absent from vs concerning his Manhood, yet is euer present with vs concerning his Godhead.

In Epist. ad Dardanum. Contra Eutychem. lib. 1. Fulgent. ad Thrasimundum.

From that place also we beleeue that Christ shall come againe to execute that generall iudgement, as well of them whom he shall then finde aliue in the body, as of them that shall be already dead.

M. Harding.

In our Fathers daies before any change in Religion was thought vpon, Christian people liued together in perfect vnity. If account of beliefe had been demanded (a) none was ashamed of the common Apostles Creed. Euery one constantly confessed, I beleeue in God the Father Almighty maker of heauen and earth, and in Iesus Christ, and so forth. But sithence Luther brought a (b) new Gospel into the world, we haue seene great diuersity among men, not onely of Ceremonies, and Administration of the Sacraments, but also of the publike confession of the Faith. For as sundry Rulers, Countries & Common weales receiued that new doctrine: (c) so their Preachers and Ministers haue set foorth sundry Creeds, and Confessions of their Faith.

(a) Neither is any man now ashamed of the Apostles Creed.

(b) Vntruth. It was the old.

(c) Manifest vntruth: For wee keepe all one Creed.

S. Hilarie complaineth many Faiths. One God, one Faith.

S. Hilary in his time complaining thereof, Now adaies there be (saith he) so many Faithes, as there be wils; so many doctrines, as there be maners, so many causes of blasphemy spring vp, as there be vices; whiles Faiths either are so written as we list, or so vnderstanded as we list. And where as there is but one God, one Lord, one Baptisme, and according thereto one Faith, we step aside from that which is the only faith, and whiles moe Faiths be made, they begin to come to that point, that there be no Faith at all.

The maner of the vtterance of the Defenders faith strange to Christian eares.

But the maner of the vtterance of your faith is strange to Christian eares, who haue been accustomed to heare, Credo in Deum, Credo in Iesum Christum, Credo in Spiritum Sanctum: I beleeue in God I beleeue in Iesus Christ, I beleeue in the holy Ghost. That other forme of words which you vse, soundeth not so Christianlike: I beleeue there is a God, I beleeue that Iesus Christ is the Son of the Father, I beleeue that the holy Ghost is God. Although this forme of words doe expresse a right faith, yet being such as may be vttered by Diuels and hath (d) alwaies bin vttered by Heretiks their Ministers; the ancient & holy fathers haue liked better the old forme and maner; after which euery Christian man saith, I beleeue in God. I beleeue in Iesus Christ, I beleeue in the holy Ghost. For this importeth a signification of Faith with hope and charity; that other of Faith onely, which the Diuels haue and tremble, as S. Iames saith; wherein as in many other things these Defenders resemble them. S. Augustine in sundry places putting difference between these two formes of words, vpon S. Iohn alleging S. Pauls words; To one that beleeueth in him who iustifieth the wicked, his faith is imputed to righteousnesse, demandeth, what is it to beleeue in him? It is by his answer, Credendo amare, Credendo diligere, Credendo in eum ire, & eius membris incorporari; With beleeuing to loue him, with beleeuing to goe into him, and to bee incorporate in his members, that is, to be made a member of his body.

(d) Vntruth. For the Heretikes said, I beleeue in God, as well as did the Catholikes.

The Article of Christs ascension must needs be vnderstanded by the Defenders to a vaine purpose.

As this Defender proceedeth in declaring the beliefe of his new English Church, he grateth much vpon the Article of Christs ascension, as the maner is of all Zwinglians to do. For their mind giueth thē, ther by they shal be able to bring at least many of the simpler sort to their Sacramentary Heresie, & to think, that the body of Christ, wherein he ascended into Heauen, & sitteth at the right hand of the Father, is so absent from Earth, as it may not be beleeued to be here present in the Sacramēt of the Altar. Thereto he allegeth S Augustine, making him to say, that Christs body wherin he rose again, must needs be still in one place. In which Treatise that holy Father hath not the word, Oportet, that is, must needs, as this Defender alleageth, but this word, Potest, that is, may, as the bookes haue that be not corrupted by the mantainers of that heresie. And whereas he saith, Ad Dardanum, alleged by this Defender, though Christ hath giuen Maiesty vnto his body, yet he hath not taken away from it the nature of a body; this is not to be stretched to Christs body in the Sacrament, where it is not after condition of nature, but by the almighty power of his word. And although he hath not taken away frō his body the nature of a very body, yet may it please him to do with his body, being God no lesse then Man, that, which is besides and aboue the nature of a Body So it pleased him to doe when he said, This is my Body. And so it pleaseth him him to be done, whensoeuer the same Body is offered in the daily Sacrifice of the Church according to his commandement & institution. That Vigilius saith, Christ hath left vs touching his humane Nature, but hath not left vs as touching his Diuine Nature: it is to be vnderstanded of his visible shape, in which he shewed his Humane Nature, whē he walked here on Earth, when he was so conuersant with men sensibly, that as S. Iohn writeth, they heard him with their eares, they saw him with their eies, they beheld him, & touched him with their hands. As touching his Humane Nature in this sensible wise, Christ hath left vs; after which S. Augustine saith, Iam non inuenis Christum loqui in Terra: Now thou findest not Christ to speake on the Earth. This maner of Christs Humane Nature being taken from vs withstandeth not, but that we may haue the Substance of his Natural Body & Bloud present in the blessed Sacrament in a mystery by the Almighty power of his word: which faith these defenders trauell to impugne. And (as God would) the pen-man of this Apology bringeth vnawares, as it seemeth for confirmatiō of his Sacramentary Doctrine, that out of Fulgentius, which ouerthroweth all that he went about to build against the reall presence. That Father, as he is by him alleaged, saith, Christum, cùm abiit à nobis per Formam Serui, tamen semper esse nobiscum per Formam Dei: That whereas Christ is absent from vs according to the forme of a Seruant, yet he is euer present with vs according to the Forme of God. Wherby he meaneth, that Christ is no more here among men, as he was before his death, in forme and shape of man, in such wise as we see men liue on the earth. Which words because they seeme to dash their whole purpose, the Prelates of this new English Church haue altered the sense of them by shifting in this word (Manhood) in steede of (The forme or shape of a seruant) which the Latine hath, and this word (Godhead) in stead of (the forme of God.)

Vntruth. There is neither such institution, nor such commandement.

Vntruth. For Forme and Substance are both one.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I maruell, M. Harding, that yee can publish so manifest vntruth without blushing. Yée say, that before these few late yéares, there was but one forme of Faith throughout the world. Yet being learned, and hauing trauelled through the ancient Writers, you must néeds haue séene the Apostles Créed: the Nicene Créed: S. Basils Créed: Damasus Créed: S. Hieromes Créed: S. Cyprians, or Rufines Créed: Gregorius Créed: the Créed called, Quicunque vult, written, as some thinke, by Athanasius, as some others, by Eusebius Vercellensis: the Créed contained in the Hymne, called, Te Deum, whether it were written by S. Augustine, or by S. Ambrose; euery of these vnder seuerall and sundry formes. You know, that in diuers of the oldest Councels, as occasion was offred, so somewhat was either added to the Créed, or diminished, or altered: as it may appeare by Eusebius, Socrates, Theodoretus, Sozomenus, Euagrius, Nicephorus, and others. You know that S. Augustine vnto Laurentius, S. Hierome vnto Cyrillus, S. Ambrose vnto the Emperour Gratianus, and others moe in declaration of the Christian Faith, haue not alwaies vsed one precise forme of words: and that the Emperour Constantine maketh open protestation of his faith, as it is recorded in the counterfet Donatian, in sense and substance agréeing with al others, that were Catholike: but in words far disagréeing from all others, and peculiar onely to himselfe. To be short, you know, that betwéene your Masse Créed, and the peoples common Créed, as touching the words, there was great difference. It were too long, to rehearse al. Neither was it necessary to say so much, sauing only to shew the manifest vanity of your talke. To expresse one Substance of Faith in sundry formes of words, I neuer heard it was forbidden, sauing onely now at the last by this late Decrée of M. Harding.

Where you say, the whole people before these few late yéares, had one Faith, ye should rather haue said, they were all taught by you in a strange vnknown tongue, to pronounce as they could, a strange vnknowne forme of Faith. For, God knoweth, they vnderstood not one word, what they said, nor scarcely one Article of their beliefe. S. Hilary saith of the people deceiued by the Arians, as these haue béene by you, Credunt, quod non credunt: Intelligunt, quod non intelligunt: They beleeue that, which they beleeue not: They vnderstand that, which they vnderstand not. Cardinall Ascanius had a Popiniay, that was taught to say distinctly all the Articles of the Créed, from the beginning to the end. Yet I trow, ye will not say, the same Popiniay beléeued in God, or vnderstood the Christian Faith. For Faith is in the heart, not in the tongue. S. Augustine saith, Fieri potest, vt integra quis teneat verba Symboli, & tamen non rectè credat: It is possible that a man may pronounce the whole words of the Creed: and yet not haue the right Faith. Indeed S. Hilary, of whom ye speake, worthily reproued the Arian Heretikes, for that they had altered the whole Faith of Christ, not onely in words, but also in substance. But we hauing published sundry Confessions of our Religion, as the multitudes of your abuses and errors offered occasion, and that in sundry Countries and Kingdomes, in such distance of places and deuersity of spéeches, yet notwithstanding in the Substance and grounds of the truth haue euermore ioined together, and neuer altered.

Cœlius Rhodigin. Antiquit. Lib. 3. Cap. 32. Aug. de Baptismo contra Donatist. lib. 3. cap. 14.

To beleeue in God.

Where we say, Wée beleeue there is one God, M. Harding answereth. Yee cannot well allow this forme of spéech. Wée should rather haue said, saith hee, wee beleeue in God. Were not this Controller so importune, such simple petite quarrels should not be answered. I could neuer haue thought, it had bæn so great a sinne, to beleeue, that God is God. Verily, M. Harding, if euery of your Popes, and Cardinals had beléeued so much, I trow, Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto in your late Councel at Trident would not so bitterly, and in so open sort haue cried out of them, Vtinam non à Fide ad infidelitatem, à Deo ad Epicurum, velut prorsus vnanimes declinassent, dicentes in corde impio, & ore impudico, Non est Deus. Would God they were not gone, as it were, with one consent, from the Faith to Infidelity, from God to Epicure, saying with wicked heart, and shameleſſe mouth: There is no God.

Cornelius Bitontinus in Concil. Trid.

To beleeue in God.

If no Catholike Writer had euer vsed the selfe same forme of spæch before, then might M. Hardings quarrell séeme to haue some reasonable ground. But both Saint Paul, and also many other Catholike Fathers haue often vsed it. Saint Paul saith, Accedentem ad Deum oportet credere, Deum esse: Hee that commeth to God, must beleeue, that there is a God. And Hermes, Saint Pauls Scholar, commonly called Pastor Nuntius, Ante omnia crede Vnũ Deum esse, qui condidit omnia: Before all other things beleeue that there is one God that hath made all. Origen saith, Primùm credendus est Deus, qui omnia creauit: First wee must beleeue there is a God, that hath created all things. Saint Hilary saith, In absoluto nobis, & facilis est Æternitas, Iesum Christum à mortuis suscitatum credere: Our euerlasting life is ready, and easie, to beleeue, that Iesus Christ is risen againe from the dead. Likewise Charles the Great in the Creed published in his name, Prædicandum est omnibus, vt credant, Patrem, Filium, & Spiritum Sanctum, Vnum esse Deum Omnipotentem: The Gospell must be preached vnto all, to the end they may know, that the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost is One God Almighty. To be short, euen in our late Fathers daies, this was counted a Catholike Forme of Faith, and was commonly taught in all Schooles, Vnum crede Deum: Beleeue, that there is One God. If this were then well spoken, and vniuersally vsed, euen in the Church of Rome, without rebuke, I trust M. Harding of his curtesie will no more blame vs for speaking well. As for these Phrases (I beleeue in God, I beleeue in Christ) although indæd they bee better, and more effectuall, and carry more force then the other, yet are they not, neither so peculiar, and speciall to God alone, nor so precisely vsed, as M. Harding imagineth. For it is written in the booke of Exodus, as it is noted by the skilfull in the Hebrew tongue, Populus credit in Deum, & in Mosen: The people beleeued In God, and In Moses. And God himselfe said vnto Moses, as it is likewise noted in the Hebrew: Descendam, vt populus In te credat: I will goe downe, that the people may beleeue In thee. Saint Basil saith, Baptizati sunt in Mosen, & crediderunt In illum: They were Baptized In Moses, and beleeued In him. And Hosius saith, Quid si In Sanctos quoque rectè credi docet Paulus? What if Paul teach vs that wee may also well beleeue In Saints? And they of M. Hardings side haue euermore wel liked this Forme of Spæch, Credo in Sanctam Ecclesiam: I beleeue in the holy Church. Wherein also perhaps they will allege these words of Socrates, and of some others, Credo in Vnam Catholicam Ecclesiam: I beleeue In One Catholike Church. Notwithstanding beside Saint Augustine, and others, Paschasius saith, Credimus Ecclesiam, quasi Regenerationis Matrem: non credimus In Ecclesiam, quasi Regenerationis Authorem. Recede ergo ab hac persuasione blasphemiæ. Non enim licet, nec In Angelum credere: We beleeue the Holy Church, as the mother of Regeneration: But we beleeue not in the Church, as the Author of Regeneration. Leaue therefore this perswasion of blasphemy. For it is not lawfull to beleeue, no not In an Angel. Likewise S. Augustine saith, Credimus Paulo, non credimus in Paulum: credimus Petro, non credimus in Petrum: We beleeue Paul, but we beleeue not In Paul: We beleeue Peter, but we beleeue not In Peter.

Hereby we may see, that whether we say, We beleeue that God is God, or, We beleeue in God, both these phrases are vsed of the godly, and are therefore both good, and Catholike. If M. Harding find any want, or imperfection in our words, let him supply it with good fauour: so he condemne not either S. Paul, or Hermes, or Origen, or Hilary, or Charles the Great, or other Catholike and godly Writers, as well Greekes as Latines, who, as I haue shewed, haue vsed the like. Certainely, the Generall confession of all our people, and of our whole Church, is this: We beleeue In God: We beleeue In Christ: We beleeue In the Holy Ghost.

Christs Ascension.

But M. Harding saith, we grate ouer busily vpon the Article of Christs Ascension into Heauen. What then? Should we haue left it out? Verily that would haue been some good countenance to your cause. And therefore when Pope Nicolas would haue brought vs your new Article of Transubstantiation into the Creed, he should first haue vtterly remooued this whole Article of Christs Ascension. For these two Articles may not well stand together by any construction in one Creed. As for vs, we haue said nothing heerein, but that hath often beene said, and auouched by the holy Learned Fathers. Damasus the Biſhop of Rome in his Creed grateth hereon as much as wee. His wordes bee theſe: Deuicto mortis imperio, cum ea carne in qua natus, & paſſus, & Mortuus fuerat, & reſurrexit, aſcendit ad Patrem, ſedetque ad dextram eius in gloria: Having ouercome the empire of death, with the ſame fleſh wherein he was borne, and ſuffered, and died, and roſe againe, he aſcended vnto the Father, and ſitteth at his right hand in glorie. Which wordes S. Hierome in larger maner expoundeth thus: Aſcendit ad Cœlum, ſedet ad dextram Dei Patris, manente ea natura carnis in qua natus, & paſſus eſt, & in qua reſurrexit. Non enim exinanita eſt humanitatis ſubſtantia, ſed glorificata: Chriſt aſcended into Heauen, and ſitteth at the right hand of the Father, the ſame nature of fleſh wherein he was borne, and ſuffered, and roſe againe, remaining ſtill. For the ſubſtance of his humane nature was not done away, but glorified. Howbeit, gentle Reader, for thy better ſatisfaction herein, I muſt referre thee ouer to my former Replie to M. Harding.

Chriſts body in one place.

Here followeth a pitious outcrie, that we haue ſhamefully corrupted S. Auguſtines wordes, ſhifting in Oportet in ſtead of Poteſt. What new fanſie is ſuddenly fallen into M. Hardings head I cannot tell. S. Auguſtines wordes, as they be alleged by Gratian, are theſe: Corpus in quo reſurrexit in vno loco eſſe oportet: The body wherein Chriſt roſe againe muſt needs be in One place. Here is not Oportet in ſtead of Poteſt, as M. Harding ſaith, but Oportet, as it ſhould be, for Oportet. If there haue bene any corruption wrought herein, it hath bene wrought by Gratian well nere foure hundred yeres agoe, and not by vs. Yet is Gratian one of the higheſt Doctours of M. Hardings ſide. And will M. Harding make vs beleeue that his owne Catholike Doctours would be ſo bold to corrupt S. Auguſtine?

Le Conſecra. Diſt. 2. Prima.

Oportet. Poteſt.

As for this Verbe Oportet, if it were wanting in the place alleged, yet might it well and eaſily be ſupplied of other places. S. Peter ſaith, Oportet illum cœlos capere vſque ad tempora reſtitutionis omnium: The heauens muſt conteine or hold him vntill the time that all things be reſtored. So ſaith Cyrillus, Chriſtus non poterat cum Apoſtolis verſari in carne poſtquam aſcendiſſet ad patrem: Chriſt could not be conuerſant with his Apoſtles in the fleſh after he had aſcended vnto the Father. Likewiſe ſaith S. Auguſtine, Chriſtus ſecundum præſentiam corporalem, in Sole, in Luna, & in Cruce ſimul eſſe non potuit: Chriſt according to the preſence of his body, could not be in the Sunne, in the Moone, and on the Croſſe at one time. And againe, Ne dubites Chriſtum eſſe in aliquo loco Cœli, propter veri corporis modum: Doubt not but Chriſt is in ſome one place of Heauen, becauſe of the meaſure or forme of a very body. Therefore the old learned Father Origen ſaith, Non eſt homo qui eſt vbicunque duo vel tres in eius nomine fuerint congregati, neq; homo nobiſcum eſt omnibus diebus vſque ad conſummationem ſæculi: neque congregatis vbique fidelibus homo eſt præſens: ſed virtus diuina quæ erat in Chriſto: It is not Chriſt, as being man, that is where-ſoeuer two or three be gathered together in his name: neither Chriſt, as being man, is with vs all daies vnto the worlds end: nor Chriſt as being man, is preſent with the faithfull euery where gathered together: but that diuine power (or nature) that was in Chriſt. And for that cauſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, Videte aſcendentem: Credite in abſentem: Sperate venientem: Sed tamen per miſericordiam occultam etiam ſentite præſentem: See you Chriſt aſcending into Heauen: Beleeue in him being abſent: Truſt in Chriſt that is to come: And yet by his ſecret mercie feele him preſent. Thus, M. Harding, thus haue the old Catholicke learned Fathers vſed to grate, as ye terme it, vpon the Article of Chriſts Aſcenſion.

Origen. in Mat Tract. 33.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 46.

You ſay S. Auguſtine in his Epiſtle to Dardanus ſpake not of Chriſts body as it is now preſent in the Sacrament. No marueil. For S. Auguſtine neuer vnderſtood any ſuch kinde of preſence. And who taught you, M. Harding, that Chriſt hath ſuch change of diuers bodies, of one manner in the Sacrament, and of an other manner in Heauen? Chriſts bleſſed bodie, when it was borne of the Virgin, when it died, when it roſe againe, when it aſcended into Heauen, was one, and vniforme. How became it afterward ſo diuers, and ſo vnlike it ſelfe? If either Chriſt, or the Apoſtles, or the ancient Fathers haue thus taught you, why are they not alleged? If they haue not thus taught you, how came ye by this knowledge? Or if ye ſay yee know that they knew not, who will beleeue you?

Yee tell vs that the body of Chriſt in heauen hath the whole ſtature, and forme, and proportion of a man. This is true: It is the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, and of the ancient Doctors of the Church. But ye tell vs farther of your ſelfe, that the bodie of Chriſt in the Sacrament is vtterly void of all maner either ſtature, or forme, or proportion: that is to ſay, is neither long, nor ſhort; nor high, nor low; nor thicke, nor thinne; and being as you ſay, a verie naturall bodie, yet hath neither likeneſſe, nor ſhape, of a bodie. This is your Doctrine, M. Harding, and the more vnlikely to bee true, the more likely to bee yours.

Such fantasticall imaginations the Arian Heretikes sometime had of the Godhead of Christ. For thus they wrote thereof, as saith Athanasius: Creatura est: sed non vt vlla ex rebus creatis. Opus est: sed non vt vllum ex operibus. Res condita est: sed non vt vlla ex rebus conditis: It is a creature: but not as any other of things created. It is a thing wrought: but not as any other thing that euer was wrought, &c.

Athana. contra Arianos, Sermon. 3. pa. 178.

Forme & Substance.

But what saith Athanasius himselfe to all these fantasies? His answer is this: Iam videtis vafritiē & dolos istius Hæreseos, quæ non ignara quàm amarulenta sit illa sua malitia, fucos quærit, & lenocinium sibi mutuat ex verborum diserti tudine: Now yee see the crookednesse and subtiltie of this Heresie, which knowing her owne malice how bitter it is, borroweth some hew and colour by fleet of words.

Epistola Flauiani ad Leon. inter Leon. Epist.

Thus Flauianus reproueth the heretike Euthyches: Adiecit & aliam impietatem, dicens, Corpus domini, quod ex Maria factum est, non esse nostræ substantiæ: He added heere to another wickednesse, saying that the bodie of Christ that was borne of Mary is not now of our substance.

Leo de resurrectione Domini, Sermone 1.

Leo resolueth the matter thus, Caro Christi ipsa est per essentiam: non ipsa per gloriam: The flesh of Christ in substance is now the same it was before: but in glory it is not the same.

Aug. ad Dardanum, Ep. 57.

No man heereof writeth either more plainly or more directly than S. Augustine. His words be these, Christus sic venturus est quemadmodum ire visus est in Cœlum, id est, in eadem carnis forma atque substantia: cui profectò immortalitatem dedit, naturam non abstulit. Secundùm hanc formam non est putandus vbique diffusus. Cauendum est enim ne ita Diuinitatem astruamus hominis, vt veritatem corporis auferamus: Christ shall come againe (to iudge) euen as he was seene going into Heauen, that is to say, in the selfe same forme and substance of his flesh: vnto which flesh vndoubtedly he hath giuen immortalitie: but he hath not taken from it the nature of flesh. For we must take heed we doe not so maintaine the Godhead of Christs humanitie, that we denie the truth of his bodie.

Augustin. in eadem Epistol. ad Dardanum.

And where ye fantasie, that the body of Christ in the Sacrament hath in it selfe neither forme, nor proportion, nor limitation of place, nor distinction of parts, S. Augustine telleth you, Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, & nusquam erunt: & quia nusquam erunt, nec erunt. Tolle ipsa corpora qualitatibus corporum, non erit vbi sint, & ideò necesse est vt non sint: Take away from bodies limitation of place, and the bodies will be no where: and because they be no where, they will be nothing. Take away from bodies the qualities of bodies, there will be no place for them to be in: & therefore the same bodies must needs be no bodies at all. Here of we may conclude, that the bodie of Christ, which you haue imagined to be conteined grosly and carnally in the Sacrament, forasmuch as by your own confession it hath neither qualitie, nor quantitie, nor forme, nor place, nor proportion of bodie, therefore by S. Augustines Doctrine it is no body.

M. Harding pag. 117.

Addition. ☞ Here M. Harding answereth: Bodies doubtlesse left to their owne common nature, haue alwaies the state that S. Augustine speaketh of in his Epistle to Dardanus. But the pretious body of Christ made present in the Sacrament is not bound to that state or condition. The Answer. O M. Harding, when will you learne to deale plainely? What speake you so vainly of bodies left to their owne common nature? Doth not S. Augustine in the same his Epistle vnto Dardanus speake namely and specially of the body of Christ? I meane of that most glorious bodie that is now in Heauen aboue all Powers and Dominions, at the right hand of the Father? Doth not S. Augustine say of the selfe same bodie, Huic corpori immortalitatem dedit: naturam non abstulit. Secundùm hanc formam Christus non est putandus vbique diffusus? Vnto that same bodie of Christ God hath giuen immortality: yet hath he not taken from it the very nature of a bodie. After this forme or proportion of body we may not thinke that Christ is extended or spread into all places? Doth not S. Augustine in the selfe same place say of the selfe same most glorious body of Christ, Christus Iesus vbique est per id quod Deus: In Cœlo autem per id quod homo? Christ Iesus is euery where, and in all places by way of his Godhead: and in Heauen by way of his manhood? Or doth not S. Augustine say of the selfe same body, as he is alleged by Gratian, Corpus Christi in quo resurrexit in vno loco esse oportet? The bodie of Christ wherein he rose againe must needs bee in one place? Is not this that body whereof Dardanus moued his question? Is not this that bodie whereof S. Augustine maketh his answer? Or had he any cause to speake of any other body but only of this?

De consecra. Dist. 2 prima.

But (you say) the pretious bodie of Christ made present in the Sacrament is not bound to that condition. These be your owne fantasies, M. Harding, not the words of S. Augustine. For S. Augustine neuer told you of Christs bodie made present in the Sacrament. But thinke you, or would you haue your Reader to thinke that Christ hath such change of bodies, the one pretious, the other not pretious? Or that the blessed body of Christ is more pretious and glorious in the Sacrament then it is in Heauen at the right hand of God?

O how much better were it for you to ſpeake the truth, and to leaue theſe fables! Chriſts body doubtleſſe is now moſt glorious, as being the body of the Sonne of God, indued with immortality, and full of glory: yet notwithſtanding it is a body, and therefore in one place as S. Auguſtine ſaith, and not in many.

Heere it is a world to ſee what prettie ſport M. Harding maketh himſelfe with the poore Penne man of this Apologie. As God would, the ſimple body vnwares alleged Fulgentius cleane againſt himſelfe. For the words of Fulgentius be theſe: Chriſtus, cùm abſit à nobis per formam ſerui, tamen ſemper eſt nobiſcum per formam Dei: Whereas Chriſt is abſent from vs by the forme of a ſeruant, yet is he euermore preſent with vs by the forme of God. Whereby, ſaith M. Hardings Commentary, he meaneth that Chriſt is no more heere among vs in forme and ſhape of man, in ſuch wiſe as we ſee men liue in the earth. And theſe words (ſaith he) daſh their whole purpoſe: and therefore the Prelates of this new Engliſh Church haue altered the ſenſe of them by ſhifting in this word (Manhood) in ſtead of (the forme of a ſeruant) and word (Godhead) in ſtead of (the forme of God.)

I beſeech the, gentle Reader, ſpare me a little thine indifferent eare, leſt in theſe miſtie clouds of M. Hardings diſtinctions thou happen to wander, and loſe thy way. All this great adoe riſeth only of ſome notable difference that is fancied to be betweene theſe two words, Forme, and Subſtance. For M. Harding would faine haue thee beleeue that the ſubſtance of Chriſts bodie is in many places, but the forme of the ſame body can be only in one place, and not in many.

If I ſhould demand M. Harding this queſtion by the way, wherefore Chriſts body in forme may not as well be in many places together, as the ſame in ſubſtance: or how he knoweth it: or what Doctor or Father euer taught it: or how we may be well aſſured of it; perhaps he would take a day to conſider it better. For thus a man might put him in minde of the grounds of his Religion: Sir you know God is omnipotent, and his power infinite: Ye may not make him thrall, and ſubiect to your ſenſes. That were naturall reaſon: that were infidelitie. Chriſt is as well able to diſpoſe of the forme of his body, as of the ſubſtance: and can as well preſent the one in many places as the other. Howbeit, thus much only by the way.

Addition. Addition. To reproue all that may be ſpoken in this behalfe, M. Harding thus frameth his new obiection: The voice that is one in the Originie, pronounced by one man, if you wil beleeue Priſcian that ancient learned Grammarian, is a very body. And yet the ſelfſame one voice is driuen into the eares of a thouſand perſons at once, as experience teacheth you by the cõmon courſe of nature. And yet you will needs appoint the omnipotent power of God ſuch limits as pleaſe you. M. Harding pag. 118. a.

The Anſwer. Heere M. Harding ye haue broken S. Auguſtines head in fauour of Priſcian. But alas, what hard chaft is this? What ſhould this poore ſilly Grammarian be brought forth as a Champion to proue matters in Diuinitie? Muſt S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, and S. Ambroſe ſtand backe, and giue place vnto Priſcian? Or if Priſcian tell you that a voice is a body, will you beleeue him? Certainly, M. Harding, as the voice of a man is a body, ſo the light in the aire, and the chirping of a ſparrow, and the bleating of a ſheepe is a body, and your face in a glaſſe is likewiſe a body. But Ariſtotle would haue told you, Sonus eſt qualitas ſenſibilis aëris: A voice or ſound is a ſenſible quality of the aire. It is an accident, ſaith Ariſtotle, and not a body: In the Predicament of quality, and not of ſubſtance. Thus ye confound nature, M. Harding, and build vpon ſand.

But you ſay, Ye muſt ſend M. Iewell, being deſtitute of faith, vnto Ariſtotle to learne wit of him. God increaſe our faith, M. Harding, and ſupply that wanteth. I am not aſhamed to learne wit either of Ariſtotle, or of any the meaneſt of Gods creatures. Balaam might haue learned wit of his Aſſe. But if your ſelfe would goe to Ariſtotle, and tell him that a voice is a body, that is to ſay, that an accident is a ſubſtance, I trow he would not greatly commend your wiſdome. Forme & Subſtance.

Howbeit, let a voice be a body, and to pleaſe poore Priſcian, let vs refuſe no abſurditie, nor repugnance in nature. Yet is your purpoſe neuer the neere. For the naturall order of hearing ſtandeth thus, as it is agreed by all Philoſophers. Firſt the voice is a ſtriking or beating of the aire. Then the aire ſo ſtricken, and proceeding from one mouth, as from the Originall, is multiplied forward by ſundry circles, as we ſee rings multiplied in the water at the caſting in of a ſtone, and by meane of the ſaid circles the ſaid voice is driuen, and falleth into the eares of the hearers, and being but one at the firſt, by multiplication is made many. And to this purpoſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, Sonus per moras temporum tendi & diuidi poteſt: The ſound or voice by leaſure of time may be extended along, and diuided into parts, that is, to ſatisfie the ſenſe of euery hearer. Therefore M. Harding, the voice being one at the firſt, and afterward by multiplication increaſing, and falling into a thouſand eares, is no more one voice in the end, then a thouſand eares are one eare.

For euery eare receiueth seuerally his particular voice: and as many as be the eares hearing, so many in number be the voices.

These things, gentle Reader, are true and certaine, although perhaps vnsauory and darke vnto the simple. But let M. Harding beare the blame heereof. For thus it pleased him to lay forth his Philosophy out of Grammarians, and to teach thee that a voice is a body, and to send vs to Aristotle to learne wit. Verily it is but a simple kind of arguing to reason thus:

One voice may fall into many eares:

Ergo, the body of Christ hath not the proportion of a body.

But now, what if all this great imagined difference be no difference? What if these two words Forme and Substance, as they be vsed by Fulgentius, be all one? What then will M. Harding doe with his pretty Glosse?

Verily Athanasius saith thus: [a] Natura, Essentia, Genus, Forma vnum sunt: Nature, Substance, Kinde, and Forme be all one thing. Leo saith [b] Quid est in forma Dei? In natura Dei: What is it to be in the forme of God? He answereth It is to be in the nature of God. Chrysostome saith, [c] Forma Dei natura Dei est: The forme of God is the nature of God. S. Augustine saith, [d] Secundùm formam Dei Christus ipse de se loquitur: Ego & pater vnum sumus: As concerning the forme of God, Christ himselfe saith of himselfe, I and my Father are both one. [e] Likewise againe he saith, Vna est forma, quia vna est diuinitas: The forme is one because the Godhead is one.

In like sort of the forme of a seruant, [f] Leo saith, Quæro quid sit formam serui accipere? Sine dubio perfectionem naturæ & conditionis humanæ: What is it to take the forme of a seruant? He answereth, Doubtlesse it is to take the perfection of nature, and state of man. [g] Chrysostome saith Forma serui omninò est natura serui: The forme of a seruant verily is the nature of a seruant. [h] S Augustine saith, Quando de forma serui in Christo cogitas, humanam effigiem cogita, si est in te fides: When thou thinkest of the forme of a seruant in Christ, thinke of the shape of a man, if there be any faith in thee. Againe, Christum secundùm humanitatem, visibilem, corporeum, localem, atque omnia membra humana veracifer habentem credere conuenit & confiteri: We must beleeue and confesse that Christ according to his humanity is visible, hath the substance and properties of a body, is contained in place, and verily hath all the members, and the whole proportion of a man. To leaue all others, [k] Haimo saith, Formam serui accepit, id est, in veritate hominem accepit: He tooke the forme of a seruant, that is to say, In very truth he tooke man.

Ye see, M. Harding, by these testimonies of the ancient learned Fathers, farre contrary to your vaine distinction, that the Forme of God is nothing else but God: and the Forme of man is nothing else but man. Wherefore then haue you thus deuised vs this new difference? Wherefore say you of your owne head, that Forme and Substance be so contrarie, seeing the Catholike Fathers say, they be both one? or wherefore be you so busie to trouble the Pen-man without cause? Certainly S. Augustine ioineth Forme and Substance both together, and by the one expoundeth the other: In eadem forma atque substantia: In the same forme and substance. And againe expoundeth the same Forme, Veritatem corporis: The truth of a body.

Aug. ad Dardan. Epist. 57.

By these it is plaine, that when Fulgentius saith, the Forme of God, he meaneth thereby the Substance, the Nature, and the Diuinitie of God: and when hee saith, the Forme of a Seruant, he meaneth likewise the Nature, the Substance, the Truth, the Perfection, and the very Manhood of a man. And the whole drift of his discourse is this, that Christ being both God and man, by the nature and substance of his Godhead is euery where; but by the nature and substance of his manhood, and truth of his body, is onely in one place, and not in moe: agreeing therein with these words of S. Augustine before rehearsed, Corpus in quo resurrexit in vno loco esse oportet: The body wherein he rose againe, must needs be in one place. As for real or bodily presence of Christs body in the Sacrament, or the body of Christ without forme or proportion of a body, this learned Father Fulgentius writeth nothing. Neither was there any such fantasie in those daies in the Church of God.

De consecra. Dist. 2. Prima.

Heere we are terribly charged with guilefull dealing, with a speciall note also in the margin, Fulgentius foulely falsified. We haue shifted in this word Manhood, in stead of The forme of a seruant: and this word Godhead, in stead of The forme of God. And therefore both the Pen-man, and the Prelates of our new Clergie must needs be brought foorth before the barre.

I will not heere tell you, M. Harding, how lewdly ye haue demeaned your selfe towards her whom it liketh you so often, and so scornefully to call the Lady Interpreter: a Ladie, I will not say of what learning, vertue, and grauity, but certainely as far from all all vnwomanlie presumption, wherewith ye so rudely touth her, as you are from al manly modesty: and for ought that may appeare by these toies and trifles, ye haue sent vs ouer, as full of wisdome as you of folly.

But the Prelates of this new Clergy (you say) haue fouly falsified both the words and the sense of Fulgentius. And wherein, M. Harding? Forsoth, in stead of these words, The forme of man, and The forme of God, for the better vnderstanding of the vnlearned, they haue vsed these words, as more commonly knowne, Godhead, and Manhood. If this be so foule a fault, wherefore then is the old Father and Martyr Vigilius suffered thus to say, Dei filius secundum humanitatem suam recessit a nobis: secundùm diuinitatem suam semper est nobiscum? The Sonne of God according to his manhood is departed from vs: according to his Godhead is euer with vs? Or, againe, Christus est vbique secundùm naturam diuinitatis suæ: & loco continetur secundùm naturam humanitatis suæ: Christ is in all places according to the nature of his Godhead; and is contained in one place according to the nature of his Manhood. Vigilius lib. 1. contra Eutychetem.

Wherefore doth Cyrillus say, Secundùm carnem solam Abiturus erat: adest autem semper virtute deitatis? According to the flesh onely he would depart: but by the power of his Godhead he is euer present? Wherefore doth Gregory say, Verbum Incarnatum manet & recedit: manet diuinitate, recedit corpore? The word Incarnate both abideth with vs, and departeth from vs: It abideth with vs by the Godhead: it departeth from vs by the body (or manhood?) Wherefore doth S. Augustine say, Ibat per id quòd homo erat: manebat per id quod Deus erat. Ibat per id quod vno loco erat: manebat per id quod vbique erat? Christ departed by that he was man: and abode by that he was God. He departed by that that was in one place: he abode by that that is in all places. Cyril. in Iohan. Lib. 9. cap. 21. Gregor. Hom. 30. in die Pentecost. Aug in Iohan. Tract. 78.

If ye will yet stand in doubt what these holy Fathers meant by the Manhood of Christ that departed from vs, let S. Augustine open both his owne and their meanings. Thus he writeth in expresse and plaine words touching the same: Secundùm carnem quam verbum assumpsit: secundùm id quod de Virgine natus est: secundùm id quod à Iudæis prehensus est: quòd ligno confixus: quòd de cruce depositus: quòd linteis inuolutus: quòd in sepulchro conditus: quòd in resurrectione manifestatus, Me non semper habebitis vobiscum: According to the flesh that the Word receiued: According to that he was borne of the Virgin: According to that he was taken of the Iewes: According to that hee was nailed to the Tree, taken downe from the Crosse, lapt in a sheete, Laid in the graue, and was declared in his Resurrection, (these words are true) Yee shall not haue me alwaies with you. Likewise againe hee saith, Dominus noster absentauit se corpore ab omni Ecclesia, & ascendit in cœlum: Our Lord, as touching his bodie, absented himselfe from his whole Church, and ascended into Heauen. Forme of man, &c. Aug. in Iohan. Tractat. 30. Aug. in Sermo. infer. 2. Pasc.

To be short, if it be so hainous an error in this case to vse these words Godhead and Manhood, wherefore is not Fulgentius himselfe reproued for so often vsing the same? These be his words: Secundùm humanitatem suam localiter erat in terra: secundùm diuinitatem & cælum impleuit & terram. Vera humanitas Christi localis est: vera diuinitas semper immensa est. Caro Christi absque dubitatione localis est: diuinitas tamen eius vbique semper est. Permansit in Christo immensa diuinitas: suscepta est ab eo localis humanitas. Quomodo ascendit in cœlum, nisi quia localis & verus est homo? Quomodo adest fidelibus, nisi quia idem immensus & verus est Deus? Christ according to his manhood was placed in earth: but according to his Godhead he filled both heauen and earth. The manhood of Christ is contained in place: The Godhead of Christ is infinite, and in all places. The flesh of Christ is doubtlesse in (one) place: The Godhead of Christ is for euer in euery place. There remained still in Christ the infinite Godhead: There was receiued of him a local all manhood. How ascended he into heauen, sauing that hee is very man contained in place? How is he present with the faithfull, sauing that hee is infinite, and true God? Last of all he saith, Vnus idemque Christus secundùm humanam substantiam aberat cœlo cum esset in terra, & dereliquit terram cum ascendisset in cœlum: Christ being one according to the substance of his manhood, was absent from heauen when he was in earth, and forsooke the earth when he ascended into heauen. Fulgentius ad Regem Thrasymun. lib. 2.

Thus many times, M. Harding, yee haue these words in one place together in Fulgentius himselfe: The Godhead: The Manhood: Very God: Very Man: The flesh of Christ: The substance of the Manhood. And these be the selfe same words that you reproue.

Blot out therefore for shame that vnaduised note in your margin. Looke better to your booke. Worke hereafter more discretly, and trouble not neither Pen-men nor others without cause. Otherwise the Pen-man will tell you what bird bare the feather that made you a penne.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuision 2.

The holy Ghost is God.

We beleeue that the holy Ghost, who is the third person in the holy Trinitie, is very God: not made, not created, not begotten, but proceeding from both the Father and the Son by a certaine meane vnknown vnto man, and vnspeakeable: and that it is his propertie to mollifie and soften the hardnesse of mans heart, when he is once receiued thereinto, either by the holesome preaching of the Gospell, or by any other way: that hee doth giue men light, and guide them vnto the knowledge of God: to all way of truth: to newnesse of the whole life: and to euerlasting hope of saluation.

M. Harding.

As we acknowledge this Article to be true & Catholike, so we demand of these Defenders how they can proue the same. Haue they either expresse Scripture for it, or any of the foure first General Councels, which be esteemed of most authority? * we are sure they haue not. Therefore we doe them to vnderstand, and if they heare vs not, we aduertise the readers that feare God, and loue his truth, that all truth necessarily to be beleeued is not * expressed in the Scripture: and that * other Councels be to be receiued besides the foure first, which are allowed in England by Parliament.

* Vntruth, as shall appeare.
* O follie. Who euer said otherwise?

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Consider, M. Harding, notwithstanding ye euermore tell vs of Fathers, Fathers, yet how contrary often times ye are in iudgement to the same Fathers. You say, as here we may gather by your words, that the Godhead of the holy Ghost cannot be proued by expresse words of the Scriptures: and thereof, ye say ye are right sure. Yet S. Augustine nothing doubteth but it may be well proued by plaine Scriptures. Thus he saith: Spiritus sanctus est Deus. Vnde Petrus cùm dixisset, Ausus es mentiri spiritui sancto, continuò sequutus adiunxit quid esset spiritus sanctus, & ait, Non es mentitus hominibus, sed Deo: The holy Ghost is God. Therefore Peter when he said (vnto Ananias) thou hast interprised to lie to the holy Ghost, he followed readily, and told him what was the holy Ghost, and said, Thou hast not lied vnto man, but vnto God.

Augustin. De morib. Eccles. Catholi. lib. 1. cap. 16.

Againe he saith, Ostendit Paulus Deum esse spiritum sanctum, & ideo non esse creaturam: S. Paul sheweth vs that the holy Ghost is God, and therefore is no creature. Likewise againe he saith, Ne quisquam spiritum sanctum negaret Deum, continuò sequutus ait, Glorificate & portate Deum in corpore vestro: Lest any man should deny that the holy Ghost is God, Paul added immediately these words: Glorifie you therefore and beare God in your body. Heere haue wee S. Augustines Yea, and M. Hardings Nay. S. Augustine assureth vs he hath Scriptures to proue the Godhead of the holy Ghost: M. Harding saith, wee are sure he hath none at all. Iudge thou now, gentle Reader, whether of these Doctors thou wilt beleeue.

Aug. Ep. 174.

But what a vaine vanitie and folly is this? Will M. Harding haue vs beleeue that God cannot be God vnlesse he be allowed by the Church of Rome, and by the Pope? Then are we come againe to that that Tertullian writeth merily of the Heathens: Nisi homini Deus placuerit, Deus non erit. Homo iam Deo propitius esse debebit: Vnlesse God please man well (though he be God) he shall be no God. And so now man must be friendly and fauourable vnto God.

Tertull. in Apologetico.

Wee beleeue, M. Harding, that the holy Ghost is very God indeed, not vpon the Popes, or his Clergies credit, but, as S. Augustine saith, vpon the speciall warrant of the word of God.

And therefore Nazianzene saith, Dicet aliquis, non esse scriptum, spiritum sanctum esse Deum. Atqui proponetur tibi examen Testimoniorum, ex quibus ostendetur diuinitatem sancti spiritus testatam esse in sacris literis, nisi quis valde insulsus sit & alienus à spiritu sancto: Some man will say, It is not written that the holy Ghost is God. I will bring thee forth a whole swarme of authorities, whereby it shall well appeare that the Godhead of the holy Ghost is plainely witnessed in the holy Scriptures, vnlesse a man be very dull, and vtterly void of the holy Ghost.

Nazianzen. de spiritu sanct. ἐπιχείρησει ἀπὸ τῶν ῥητῶν διὰ πλειόνων ἐπιδείξω.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuision 1.

VVE beleeue that there is one Church of God, and that the same is not shut vp (as in times past among the Iewes) into some one corner or kingdome, but that it is Catholick and Vniuersal, and dispersed sed throughout the whole world. So that there is now no Nation which may truly complaine that they bee shut foorth, and may not bee one of the Church and people of God: and that this Church is the Kingdome, the Bodie, and the Spouse of Christ: That Christ alone is the Prince of this Kingdome: That Christ alone is the Head of this Body: And that Christ alone is the Bridegroome of this Spouse.

M. Harding.

It is a world to see these Defenders! They which haue not kept vnity of Spirit in the bond of charitie, which S. Paul requireth, but haue seuered themselues frō the body of the Church, tel vs now forsoorth, they beleeue that there is one Church of God. But what may we think this one Church to be? Can they seeme to meane any other (whatsoeuer they pretend) then this new Church of late yeers set vp by Satan through the ministerie of Martin Luther & those other Apostates his companions, if it may be named a Church and not rather a Babylonical Tower? For as touching that Church, whereof (a) al Christian people hath euer taken the succession of Peter to be the head vnder Christ, which is the true Catholicke Church, in their Apologie they sticke not so say plainly, that it is cleane fallen down long agone. And therefore the beginning of Luthers seditions & Heretical preachiug they cal Herbam, as much to say, as the greene grasse, or first spring (this interpreter nameth it the very first appearing) of the Gospel, leafe F.7. And in the leafe F.8. they say that forty yeers agone & vpward, that is, at the first setting forth of Luther & Zuinghus, the truth was vnknowen, & vnheard of; & that they first came to the knowledge & preaching of the Gospell. Likewise in another place they grant that certaine & very strange sects haue been stirring in the world euer since the Gospel did spring, meaning the time when Luther first brinced to Germanie the poysoned cup of his Heresies, Blasphemies, and Satanismes.

(a) Vntruth. For the Fathers in the Primitiue Church neuer tooke him so.

Thus hauing condemned the Church of God, which was before Luthers time, and allowing that for the true Church, the Gospel whereof first sprang out of Luther: how can they auouch their beleefe, & by what reason and learning can they make good, that there is one Church of God? We would faine know which and where it is. Is Luther and his Congregation that one Church of God, or Zuinglius & his rabble, or Osiander and his sort, or Zuinckfeldius and his sect, or Stancarus & his band, or Balthasar Pacimontane and his ranke? For al these, and certaine other sects haue (b) Luther for their founder & for their Radix Iesse, as it were, from whence they spring. And indeed euery learned man easily seeth how the gutters of their Doctrines run out of Luthers sinke. Of al these there is none but stoutly claimeth the name of the Church.

(b) Vntruth. As shall appeare.

Then how say yee Defenders, which Church be ye? Name the childe. If ye name one, wee set the others against you, &c.

How often in his bookes putteth Luther you and your Captaines in the rol of those that he vtterly condemneth, naming roundly together, Infidels, Turkes, Epicures, Heretikes, Papists, Sacramentaries? And now if he should heare you challenge the name of the one Church of God, to you, and deny him & his followers that claimed title, would he not (thinke ye) stamp & rage, would he not whet his dog eloquence vpon you, and call ye worse then these aboue reckoned, yea, and if hee wist how, worse than some of you be your selues? The like curtesie may ye looke for at those other sects, of which euery one claimeth the name of this one Church of God.

But ye say that this one Church is not shut vp into some one corner or Kingdome, but that it is Catholike and vniuersal, and dispersed thorowout the whole world. True it is that ye say, whatsoeuer ye thinke. But the holy learned and ancient Fathers, where they call and beleeue the Catholike Church, they meane (as Vincentius Lirinensis declareth) the Church to be Catholike, that is to say, Vniuersall, (for so the word signifieth) in respect of a threefold vniuersalitie of places, which this Defender heer toucheth: of times, and of men, which he toucheth not. In the Catholike Church we must haue a great care (saith he) that we hold that which hath euery where, euermore, & of al persons been beleeued. If these Defenders proue not the Church they professe themselues to be of, to haue this threefold Vniuersality, then is their Congregation not this one Church, nor of this one Church of God, but the Synagogue of Antichrist.

Catholike Church. Why is the Church called Catholike.

And althogh the Authors of this Apologie crake of the great increase & spreading abroad of their Gospel, and now glorie in the number of Kingdomes, Dukedomes, Countries, Common-weales, and Free Cities: yet hath it not gone so farre abroad as the Arians Heresie did, by three parts of foure: which was at length vtterly extinguished, as this shall be.

That the Catholike Church is the Kingdome, the Bodie and the Spouse of Christ, wee acknowledge. Of the same Kingdome we confesse & beleeue Christ to be Prince alone, so as he is Head of this Body alone, & so as he is Bridegroome of this Spouse alone. For Head and Spouse alone he is in one respect, not alone in another respect. According to the inward influence of grace, Christ properly & onely is Head of his mystical Body the Church; but as touching the outward gouernment, the being of a Head is common to Christ with others. For in this respect certain others may be called Heads of the Church, as in Amos the Prophet, the *great States be called the Heads of the people. So the Scripture speaketh of King Saul, When thou were a little one in thine owne eies, thou wast made Head among the Tribes of Israel. So Dauid saith of himselfe, He hath made me Head of Nations.

Christ alone Prince, Head, Bridegroome, Spouse of the Church.
1 Reg. 17.
Psal. 17.

Men be called Heads, in as much as they be in stead of Christ, and vnder Christ: after which meaning S. Paul saith to the Corinthians, For if I forgaue any thing, to whom I forgaue it, for your sakes forgaue I it, In persona Christi, In the person of Christ. And in another place, We are Ambassadors in stead of Christ, euen as though God did exhort you through vs. To conclude in few, according to inward influence of grace into euery faithful member, Christ onely is Head of the Church, according to outward gouerning the (c) Pope vnder Christ, and in stead of Christ is Head of the same.

2. Cor. 2.

(c) Vntruth. What Scripture or Doctor euer said so?

As touching the Bridegroomeship, we say & beleeue, that if we would speake properly, Christ is the only Bridegroome of the Church his Spouse, of whom it is said, he that hath a Spouse is a Bridegroom. For from out of the Church he begetteth children to himselfe. But others are called Bridegrooms working king together with Christ outwardly to the begetting of spirituall Children, whom neuertheleſſe they beget not to themſelues, but to Christ. And ſuch are called the miniſters of the Bridegroome, in as much as they do his ſtead. And therfore the Pope who is inſtead of Chriſt the Bridgrome of the whole Church, is (d) called alſo the Bridgrome of the vniuerſall Church, a man may terme him the vicegerent Bridegroome.

2. Cor. 5. Christ the true Bride-

Catholike in many or few.

I truſt, gentle Reader, thou wilt not loke I ſhould anſwer all M. Hardings ordinarie idle talke. So ſhould I loſe good time without cauſe, and be euer troubleſome to thine eares. O (ſaith he) What a world it is to ſee theſe Defenders! They which haue not kept the vnitie of the Spirit in the bond of charity, which S. Paul required, but haue ſeuered themſelues from the body of the Church, tell vs now forſooth, that they beleeue that there is one Church of God. O, M. Harding, if we haue herein ſaid ill, then beare witneſſe of the ill. If we haue ſaid well, wherefore make you theſe bitter outcries? Whatſoeuer yee haue conceiued vs to be, yet might ye ſuffer vs quietly to ſay the truth, ſpecially ſuch truth as you imagine maketh ſo much for your ſelfe.

Ye ſay we confeſſe that our Church began onely about forty yeares hithence, and was neuer before. No, M. Harding, we confeſſe it not: and you your ſelfe well know we confeſſe it not. It is your tale: It is not ours. We ſay and haue ſufficiently proued, and you know it right well, if ye would be knowne of that ye know, that our Doctrine is the old, and yours is the new. If ye will needes force your ſelfe to the denial, it may eaſily be proued, and that by ſuch authority as your ſelfe may not well denie, vnleſſe yee will once againe doe now as ye haue twice done before.

We ſay that our Doctrine and the order of our Churches is elder then yours by fiue hundred whole yeares, and more. If ye will not beleeue vs, yet beleeue M. Harding: he will tell you euen the ſame. Marke well his words: Theſe they be: It ſtandeth not with Chriſt his promiſes made to the Church, that he ſhould ſuffer his Church to continue in darkenes theſe thouſand yeeres paſt.

M. Harding fol. 15. a.

And thus by ſecret confeſſion he leaueth vs fiue hundred threeſcore and ſix whole yeares at the leaſt: that is to ſay, the whole time of Chriſt, of his Apoſtles, and of all the godlie learned Doctors and Fathers of the Primitiue Church. Which time notwithſtanding is thought a great deale better and purer then all the time that hath followed afterward. In this Diuiſion M. Harding being attent and eager vpon his cauſe, and claiming as much as he thought with any modeſty hee might be able, hath claimed to himſelfe onely a thouſand yeares of the night: and hath left vs well neere ſix hundred yeares of the day.

This is your owne witneſſe, M. Harding. Conſider well of it. It is your owne. Therefore ye doe your ſelfe great wrong, and much deface your owne credit ſo ſuddenly to ſay our Doctrine is new. Gods name be bleſſed, it hath the teſtimony not onely of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, but alſo of the old learned Catholike Fathers of the Church. And this is it that ſo much grieueth you that we reforme our Churches now according to the paterne and ſamplar of Chriſts and his Apoſtles firſt inſtitution. For thereby the diſorder and deformity of your Churches the more appeareth.

Vincentius Lyrinenſis.

Lyrinenſis ſaith, That thing muſt be holden for Catholike, that euery where, euermore, and of all men hath been beleeued. Theſe generall notes muſt be limited with this ſpeciall reſtraint: Whereas the Churches were not corrupted. For otherwiſe there was neuer any Doctrine ſo Catholike, no not the confeſſed Doctrine of Chriſt himſelfe, that hath been receiued Euermore, and Euery where, and Of all men, without any exception. For the Turks receiue it not, and the Iewes abhorre it. And ſo the very Goſpel of Chriſt it ſelfe by this rule ſhould not be Catholik. But, M. Harding, theſe ſelf ſame notes of Lyrinenſis vterly ouerthrow the greateſt part of that whole Doctrine that you would ſo faine haue counted Catholike. For neither reacheth it within fiue hundred yeares of the Apoſtles time, nor hath it that antiquity indeed that in face and countenance is pretended, as it is plaine by your owne former confeſſion: nor was it euer vniuerſally receiued, as hereafter by particulars it ſhall bee proued. It had neuer that vniuerſalitie, neither of all times and ages, nor of all places and Countries: nor was it euer vniuerſally receiued and allowed of all men. Therefore whatſoeuer ye call it, ye cannot by your owne Definition call it Catholike.

The Catholike Church of God ſtandeth not in multitude of perſons, but in weight of truth. Otherwiſe Chriſt himſelfe and his Apoſtles had not bene Catholike. For his flock was very little: and the Catholike or Vniuerſall conſent of the world ſtood againſt it. The Church of God is compared to the Mone, for that ſhe waxeth and waneth as the Wone doth, and ſometime is full, ſometime is empty: and therefore, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, is called Catholica, quia vniuerſaliter perfecta eſt, & in nullo claudicat, & per totum Orbem diffuſa eſt: Becauſe she is vniuerſally perfect and halteth in nothing, and is (not now ſhut vp in one onely Country as was the Church of the Iewes, but) powred thorow out the whole World. Though the hearts of men haue often changes, yet Gods truth is euermore one: and, be it in many, or in few, is euer Catholike. Thus M. Harding, it is written by one of your owne ſide: Etſi non niſi duo viri fideles remanerent in mundo, tamen in eis ſaluaretur Eccleſia, quæ eſt, Vnitas Fidelium: Although there were but two Faithfull men remaining in the world, yet euen in them two the Church, which is the Vnity of the Faithfull, ſhould be ſaued.

Aug. de Gene. ad liter. cap. 1.

Fortalitium Fidei, lib. 5.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Some ſay, that at the time of Chriſts paſſion, the whole Faith remained onely in the Bleſſed Virgin our Lady: and that euen now the ſame Faith may be ſo ſtraited, that it may reſt onely in one poore old Woman. Which thing if it ſhould happen, yet ſhould not Gods truth therefore wander about the world, as it liketh you to ieſt, Tanquam accidens ſine ſubiecto. The Prophet Oſee ſaith, There is no Truth, there is no mercy, there is no knowledge of God in the earth. Yet notwithſtanding the Prophet David ſaith, The truth of God endureth for ever. God is true, though all men be falſe. His truth is a Subſtance, and ſtandeth mightily as the Heauens: It wandreth not vainely, as an Accident. ☜

Luthers dog eloquence (for ſo, M. Harding, it liketh you of your modeſty to call it) were it neuer ſo rough, and vehement, the iuſt zeale of Gods glory, and of his holy Temple, which you ſo miſerably had defaced, ſo enforcing him, yet was it neuer any thing comparable to your eloquence. For, I beſeech you, if ye may haue leaſure, hearken a little, and heare your ſelfe talke. Behold your owne words, ſo many, ſo vaine, ſo bitter, ſo fierie, ſo furious, altogether in one place: This new Church (ye ſay) ſet vp by Satan: Martin Luther, and other Apoſtates his companions: This Babylonicall Tower; Luthers ſeditious and Hereticall Preaching; Luther brinced to Germany the poiſoned Cup of his Hereſies, Blaſphemies, and Sathaniſmes; Zuinglius, and his rable; The gutters of this Doctrine run out of Luthers ſinke; Luther would ſtampe and rage, and whette his dogge eloquence vpon you; you are the Synagogue of Antichriſt. These be the Figures, and flowers of your ſpeech. Yet muſt wee thinke, that ye can neither ſtampe nor rage: but vſe onely Angels eloquence. Howbeit, I truſt, no wiſe man will iudge our cauſe the worſe, for that your tongue can ſo readily ſerue to ſpeake ill.

To the matter. Ye ſay, that touching the influence of Grace, Chriſt is the Head of the Church: but touching Direction and Gouernment, the Pope onely is the Head. All this is but your owne tale, M. Harding: Ye ſpeake it onely of your ſelfe. Other authority of Scripture or Doctor ye bring vs none.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Here M. Harding alleageth ſundry authorities to proue the Vniuerſall Supremacy of the Pope. Chryſoſtome, ſaith he, writeth thus, Peter being a Fiſher, is the Head, and Feeder of the Church. And againe, Peter was the Maſter of the World. And againe, Chriſt made Peter Ruler ouer all the World. In the end, hee concludeth with good liking of his caſe, and ſaith, How ſay you, are ye contented now? The Anſwer. No doubt, Maiſter Harding: Otherwiſe, I trow, I were to blame. For here haue you brought vs great and worthy ſpeeches of Saint Peter: of whoſe authority we moued no queſtion. But ye bring vs not one word of the Pope. If euery word ſpoken to Peter, ſhould be applied vnto the Pope, then ſhould the Pope bee called Satan: for ſo Chriſt called Peter.

Neither doe theſe words here alleged, proue of neceſſity, that Peter himſelfe was the Head, and Ruler of all the world. For you may find the ſame words applied as well to S. Iames, to S. Paul, and to ſundry other Holy Fathers. Clemens ſaith thus, I ſend greeting vnto Iames, the brother of our Lord, and the Biſhop of Biſhops, Gouernour of the holy Church of the Iewes at Ieruſalem, and alſo of all the Churches that by Gods prouidence are euery where founded. Here S. Iames is head of all Churches what ſo euer. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome writeth of S. Paul: The Nation of the Iewes was committed to Michael. But both Land and Sea, and the habitation of all the world, is committed to S. Paul. Likewiſe S. Gregory ſaith, Paul had the Princehood of all the whole Church. So S. Hierome calleth Origen, Magiſtrum Eccleſiarum: The Maſter and Teacher of the Churches. And in like maner Theodoretus calleth S. Chryſoſtome, Doctorem Orbis terrarum, The Teacher and Inſtructer of all the world. Yet neither Iames, nor Paul, nor Origen, nor Chryſoſtome, were Biſhops of Rome, nor had they that power, that by theſe words is pretended.

Ye say, S. Paul saith, If I forgaue any thing, for your sakes I forgaue it, in the person of Christ: We are Embassadors in the stead of Christ, euen as though God did exhort you through vs. Hereof ye conclude, Ergo, The Pope vnder Christ, and in stead of Christ is head of the Church. If yee conclude not thus, ye wander idely, and speake in vaine, and conclude nothing. These words of S. Paul nothing touch the Pope, but onely the faithfull, and zealous Preacher of the Gospell. For wherein doth the Pope resemble S. Paul? Wherein doth hee represent the person of Christ? What exhorteth he? What teacheth he? What saith hee? What doth he? And yet if he would doe any one part of his whole duty, how might this argument stand for good? S. Paul being at the Citie of Philippi in Macedonia, exhorted the Corinthians, as in the person of Christ: Ergo, the Pope being at Rome in Italy, although he neither exhort, nor preach, yet is he the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Although Diuinity go hard with you, yet ye should haue seene better to your Logike.

I grant, Bishops may be called the Heads of their seuerall Churches. So Chrysostome calleth [a] Elias, Caput Prophetarum, The Head of the Prophets: So Amos saith, [b] The Princes are the Heads of the People: So Saul is called, [c] The Head of the Tribes of Israel: So Dauid was made, [d] Caput Gentium, The Head of Nations. Sundry such other like examples I alleaged in my former Reply to M. Harding: As that Cyrillus the Bishop of Alexandria, in the Councell of Ephesus was called [f] Caput Episcoporum congregatorum, The Head of the Bishops, that there were assembled. That S. Gregory saith, [g] Paulus ad Christum conuersus, Caput effectus est Nationum: Paul being once conuerted to Christ, was made the Head of Nations: That Prudentius saith, [h] Sancta Bethlem Caput est Orbis: Holy Bethlem is the Head of the world. In this sense Optatus saith, [i] There be foure sorts of Heads in the Church, the Bishops, the Preests, the Deacons, the Faithfull. And all this only in a certaine kinde of phrase, and maner of speech. But indeed and verily S. Augustine saith, [k] Paulus ipse non poterat Caput esse eorum, quos plantauerat: Paul himselfe could not be the Head of them whom he had planted. Therefore Gregorie saith, [l] Petrus Apostolus Primum membrum Sanctæ & Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ est. Paulus, Andreas, Iohannes, quid aliud, quàm singularium sunt plebium capita? tamen sub vno Capite, omnes membra sunt Ecclesiæ. Atque vt cuncta breui cingulo loquutionis astringã, Sancti ante Legem, Sancti in Lege, Sancti sub Gratia: Omnes hi perficientes Corpus Domini in Membris sunt Ecclesiæ constituti. Et nemo se vnquam Vniuersalem vocari voluit: Peter the Apostle is (not the Head, but) the chiefe member of the holy Vniuersall Church. Paul, Andrew, and Iohn, what are they else, but the Heads of seuerall Nations? Yet notwithstanding vnder one Head (Christ) they are al Members of the Church. And to speake shortly, the Saints before the law, the Saints in the Law, the Saints in the time of Grace, all accomplishing the Lords Body, are placed amongst the Members of the Church. And there was neuer yet one, that would haue himselfe called the Vniuersall Bishop. Therefore, where as M. Harding saith, All Christian people haue euer taken the successe of Peter to be the Head of the Catholike Church vnder Christ, hee spake it onely of himselfe; and though the comparison be odious, yet Christ saith, Cùm loquitur mendacium, ex proprijs loquitur: When he speaketh vntruth, he speaketh it of his owne. S. Gregory saith, Peter was the chiefe member of the Church of Christ: but not the Head.

But the Bishop of Rome, and his hired Proctors, haue taught vs farre otherwise. Panormitane saith: Christus & Papa faciunt vnum consistorium: &, excepto peccato, potest Papa quasi omnia facere, quæ potest Deus: Christ and the Pope make one Consistory, and keepe one Court: And, sinne onely excepted, the Pope in a maner can doe all things that God can doe. This, I trow, is that Head of Direction and Gouernment that M. Harding meaneth.

De Electione ca. Licet, Abb.

As for the rest, that the Church is the kingdome of Christ, and the Pope the Prince thereof, M. Harding in speciall words answereth nothing. Notwithstanding, some others haue said, Petro & Cœlestis & Terreni Imperij iura commissa sunt: Vnto Peter was committed the right both of the Heauenly, and also of the Earthly Empire.

Extra. Nouit ille, in Gloss.

Last of all he doubteth not, but the Pope may be called the Spouse, or Bridegrome of the Vniuersall Church: and yet the same without the authority of any Doctor. He alleageth only S. Bernard: But the same S. Bernard in the selfe same place saith, and that by M. Hardings owne confession, that the Pope is not the Bridegrome of the Church. And therefore he was faine to expound his meaning, and to waigh him down of the other side with his pretty glosse. But S. Bernard without glosse saith plainly, Non sunt omnes amici Sponsi, qui hodiè sunt Sponsi Ecclesiæ: They be not all the Bridegromes friends, that are this day the Spouses of the Church. O miserandam Sponsam talibus creditam Paranymphis! Non amici Sponsi sed æmuli sunt: O miserable is that Spouse, that is committed to such Leaders! They are not the friends, they are the enemies of the Bridegrome.

Howbeit, wee need not greatly to reckon what stiles and titles the Pope can vouchsafe to allow himselfe. As he may be called the Head, the Prince, and the Spouse: euen so, and by like authoritie and truth may he be called the Light, the Life, the Sauiour, and the God of the Church.

God giue him an heart to vnderstand, that he may be, although not the Head, yet a member of that bodie: although not the Prince, yet a subiect in that Kingdome: although not the Bridegroome, yet a childe of the Church of God.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 1.

Furthermore, wee beleeue that there be diuers degrees of Ministers in the Church: whereof some be Deacons, some Priests, some Bishops: to whom is committed the office to instruct the people, & the whole charge and setting foorth of Religion.

M. Harding.

Sacrament of Order. By good reason.

Here it had bene your part to haue declared your faith touching the holy Sacrament of Order, agreeable to the faith of the Catholike Church: That there be seuen Orders in the Church, foure lesser, & three greater; for so by good reason they are called. And as for the institution, authority, and estimation of the greater, specially of the Priesthood & Deaconship, ye might haue alleged the Scriptures: so for the lesser, the example of Christ, the Tradition of the Apostles, & the testimonies written of the Apostles scholars, of those that both next and soone after followed them, namely, Dionys. cap. 3. Hierarch. Eccles. Ignatius Epist. 8. ad Ecclesiam Antiochenam, Tertull. in præscript. aduersus Hæreticos. Gaius Pope and Martyr in Diocletians time, Zosimus in S. Augustines time, Isichius, Eusebius Cæsarienſis in his ecclesiasticall historie, and Epiphanius in the end of his booke Contra Hæresis.

Vntruths boldly presumed, as by the answer it may appeare.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Orders.

Gentle Reader, if I should leaue these, and other like M. Hardings words vnanswered, thou mightest happily thinke he had said somewhat. Here he saith, it had bene our part to haue told thee of seuen Orders in the Church, three greater, and foure lesse: hauing indeed himselfe cleane forgotten his owne part. For notwithstanding this controlment and account of so many Orders, yet he nameth no more Orders then we haue named. And verily, if he would haue followed his owne Authorities, it had bene hard for him in any good order to haue made vp his owne account.

For his owne Anacletus saith, I call him his owne, for that it is only a forged pamphlet, neuer written by that holy Father Anacletus, as it is easie to be seene. But whatsoeuer he were, thus he saith: Amplius quàm isti duo Ordines Sacerdotum (Episcopi & Presbyteri) nec nobis à Deo collati sunt, nec Apostoli docuerunt: More then these two Orders of Priests (Bishops and Elders) neither hath God appointed vs, nor haue the Apostles taught vs. And yet of these same two seuerall Orders S. Hierome seemeth to make only one Order. For thus he writeth, Audio quendam in tantam erupisse vecordiam, vt Diaconos Presbyteris, id est, Episcopis anteferret: I heare say there is a man broken out vnto such wilfull furie, that he placeth Deacons before Priests, that is to say, before Bishops. And againe, Apostolus præcipuè docet eosdem esse Presbyteros quos Episcopos: The Apostle (Paul) specially teacheth vs that Priests and Bishops be all one. The same S. Hierome writing vpon the Prophet Esay, reckoneth only fiue Orders or Degrees in the whole Church: The Bishops, the Priests, the Deacons, the Entrers or Beginners, and the Faithfull. And other Order of the Church he knoweth none.

Anaclet. Ep. 3.

Addition. ☞ Addition. As for M. Hardings prettie imaginations of Termes Generall, and Termes Speciall, they are meere vanities, not worth the hearing. For S. Hieromes words be plaine enough: A Priest and a Bishop is all one thing: and before that, by the working of the Diuell, parts were taken in Religion, and some said, I hold of Paul, some, I hold of Apollo, and some others, I hold of Peter, the Churches were gouerned by the common Councell of the Priests. ☜

Hieronym. ad Titum, cap. 1.

Clemens saith, Tribus gradibus commissa sunt Sacramenta diuinorum secretorum, id est, Presbytero, Diacono, & Ministro: The Mysteries of the holy Secresies be committed vnto three Orders: that is, vnto the Priests, vnto the Deacons, and vnto the Ministers: And yet Deacons and Ministers, as touching the name, are all one.

Dionysius likewise hath three Orders, but not the same: for he reckoneth Bishops, Priests, and Deacons. And whereas M. Harding maketh his account of foure of the lesse or inferiour Orders, meaning thereby Ostiarios, Lectores, Exorcistas, Acoluthos: The doore keepers, the Readers, the Conjurers, and the Waiters or Followers: his owne Ignatius addeth thereto three other Orders: Cantores, Laboratores, Confitentes: The Chanters or singers, the Labourers, and the Confessors. Clemens added thereto, Catechistas, The informers.

Informers or Teachers of them that were entring into the faith. A little vaine booke, bearing the name of S. Hierome, De ſeptem Ordinibus Eccleſiæ, addeth yet an other Order, and calleth them Foſſarios, that is, The Sextines, or Duerſers of the graues. And leſt you ſhould thinke he reckoneth this Order as amongſt other neceſſarie offices to ſerue the people, and not as any part of the Clergie, his words be theſe: Primus in Clericis Foſſariorum Ordo eſt: qui in ſimilitudinem Tobiæ ſancti ſepelire mortuos admonent: The firſt Order of the Clergie is the Order of the Sextines: which, as holy Tobie was wont to doe, call vpon the people for the buriall of the dead.

Iſidor. Etymolog. li. 1. ca. 12. Scotus in 4. ſen. Di. 24. Quæ. 1. Ambr. in Epi. ad Ephe. cap. 4.

Likewiſe to the three greater Orders Iſidorus addeth another diſtinct and ſeuerall Order of Biſhops; vnto whom agreeth Guilielmus Altiſiodorenſis, and Gotofredus Pictauienſis, as appeareth by Iohannes Scotus. Againe, of the other inferiour Orders, S. Hierome leaueth out the Coniurers and Waiters: S. Ambroſe leaueth out the Waiters and Doore keepers: The Canons of the Apoſtles leaue out Coniurers, Waiters, and Doore keepers, all three together.

In this ſo great diſſenſion and darkeneſſe, what way will M. Harding take to follow? By Anacletus there be two Orders; by Clemens and S. Hierome, three; by Hierome counterfeit, ſeuen; by others eight, by others nine, by others ten.

All this notwithſtanding, he telleth vs, our part had bene to haue ſhewed that there be iuſt ſeuen Orders in the Church, three great, and foure leſſe, without doubt or queſtion.

Here, gentle Reader, it had bene M. Hardings part to haue ſhewed vs the reaſons and grounds of this diuinitie: Theſe they be, as they are alleged by the beſt of that ſide: Chriſt ſaith, I am the Doore: Ergo, there muſt be in the Church an Order of Doore keepers. Chriſt ſaith, I am the Light of the world. Hereupon haue they founded the Order of Acoluthes, to carrie Tapers. And ſo for the reſt. Thus much may ſerue for a taſte.

Petr. Lombar. Sen lib. 4. Diſt. 24.

Now let vs conſider what theſe Orders haue to doe, and with how holy and weighty offices they ſtand charged in the Church of God. Firſt, Clemens (of whoſe authoritie M. Harding maketh no ſmall account, for he calleth him the Apoſtles fellow) writeth thus; Vnus Hypodiaconus det aquam manibus Sacerdotum: Duo Diaconi ex vtraque parte Altaris teneant flabellum confectum ex tenuibus membranis, vel ex Pauonum pennis, quibus leuiter abigant præteruolantes beſtiolas, ne in pocula incidant: Let one of the Subdeacons giue water to the Prieſts hands: Let two Deacons ſtand at the two ends of the Altar, either of them with a fanne made of fine parchment, or of Peacks tailes, therewith ſoftly to chaſe away the flies, that they fall not into the Communion cups. The offices of other inferiour Orders be theſe, as they be noted by one of M. Hardings owne ſide; Ad minores Ordines hæc ſpectant: portare cereos & vrceolum, & canes expellere de Eccleſia: To the leſſe Orders theſe things belong: to carrie Tapers, and holy water ſtocks, and to driue dogs out of the Church. Theſe, I trow, be the myſticall holy Orders, whereof M. Harding ſaith, Our part had bene to haue made ſome long diſcourſe: being himſelfe aſhamed, as it may appeare by his ſilence, either to name them in particular, or to open the ſecrets of their offices.

Clem. Conſti. Apoſt. li. 8. c. 15.

Aureum Speculum Papæ.

Howbeit indeed, good Chriſtian Reader, ſundrie of theſe officies in the Primitiue Church were appointed to very good and ſober purpoſes. The Doore keepers office was then to keepe out excommunicate perſons, that they ſhould not preſſe in among the faithfull. The Pſalmiſts or Singers office was to ſing the Pſalmes, thereby to moue the peoples hearts to deuotion. The Exorciſts office was, by a ſpeciall gift of God, ſeruing only for that time, to call forth foule Spirits out of the bodies of them that were poſſeſſed. The Readers office was openly, and plainly, and diſtinctly to pronounce the Scriptures vnto the people: and to this vſe the Biſhop deliuered vnto him a booke with this charge: Accipe, & eſto Relator verbi Dei: Take thou this booke, and be thou a Pronouncer of the word of God. And therefore Iſidorus ſaith, Tanta, & tam clara erit eius vox, vt quamuis longè poſitorum aures adimpleat: The Readers voice muſt be ſo loud, and ſo cleare, that it may be able to fill the eares of thē that ſtand farre off. The Acoluthes or Waiters office was to attend vpon the Biſhop, as a witneſſe of his conuerſation.

Diſt. 23. Lect. Diſt. 21. Cleros.

To ſuch good vſes theſe offices then ſerued in the Church of God. But now there is nothing left, ſauing the bare name only, without any maner vſe or office. For neither doth the Oſtiarius keepe out the excommunicates, nor doth the Acoluthus wait vpon the Biſhop, nor doth the Exorciſt caſt forth Diuels, nor doth the Pſalmiſt ſing Pſalmes, nor doth the Reader openly pronounce the Scriptures, (I might yet ſtep a little farther, to open the whole beautie of the Clergie of Rome) nor doth the Deacon make prouiſion for the poore, nor doth the Biſhop preach the word of God.

This had bene our part to haue opened at large; and for leauing of the ſame, we were worthie by M. Hardings iudgement to be reproued.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 2.

Yet notwithstanding, we say that there neither is, nor can be any one man which may haue the whole Superiority in this vniuersal state: for that Christ is euer present to assist his Church, & needeth not any man to supply his roome, as his only heire to all his substance: & that there can bee no one mortall creature which is able to comprehend, or conceiue in his minde the vniuersal Church, that is to wit, al the parts of the world, much lesse able rightly and duly to put them in order, & to gouerne them.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

S. Hardings answer hereto is long and tedious. The substance thereof in short is this: where wee say, No one mortall man is able to weald the burden of the whole Church of God, M. Harding answereth: Where any thing is indeed, there whether it may be, or no, to discusse, it is needlesse. Therefore whether any one man can be superiour, and chiefe ouer the whole Church, we leaue to speake: that so it is, thus we proue: Euery Parish hath his seuerall Vicar or
1. Parson, and euery Diocesse his owne Bishop. Ergo, What reason is it, there be not one chiefe gouernor of the whole Christian people?

2. When questions be mooued in matters of faith, through diuersities of iudgements the Church should be diuided, vnlesse by authoritie of one it were kept in vnitie.

3. They that say otherwise, take from Christ the glorie of his prouidence, & the praise of his great loue towards his Church.

4. The peace of the Church is more conueniently procured by one, than by many.

5. It is most meete that the Church militant, touching gouernment, resemble the Church triumphant. But in the triumphant Church one is gouernour ouer the whole, that is God. Therefore in the Church militant order requireth that one beare rule ouer all; according to that the holy Captaine Iosue seemeth to speake, The children of Iuda and the children of Israel shall assemble together, & they shal make to themselues one head. Thereof our Lord saith in S. Iohn, There shall be one fold, and one shepheard.

Iosue 1. Iohan. 10.

Indeede Christ is head of his bodie. Yet need it is, forasmuch as Christ now dwelleth not with vs in visible presence, his Church haue one man to doe his stead of outward ruling in earth. And therefore he said vnto Peter, Feed my flocke: Confirme thy brethren.

Thus wee see these Defenders negatiue Doctrine, That no one man may haue the superioritie ouer the whole state of the Church, disproued, as vterly false.

To their second reason, we grant, Christ needed not any man to supplie his roome, that should succeed in his whole substance. Neither is man of capacity of such succession. *neither hath there any such fond saying beene vttered by the Diuines.

But because Christ saw the knot of vnitie should bee most surely kept knit by gouernment of one, he *committed the regiment of the whole Church vnto one; whose visible ministerie he might vse in stead of himselfe.

To the third we say, that man is not only able to comprehend in his minde, and conceiue the vniuersall Church, but also to put it in order, and to gouerne it so farre as is expedient.

Last of all, whosoeuer will not bee fed nor ruled by his owne shepheard, and breaketh out of this one fold, he is not of the flocke of Christ, but of the heard of Antichrist.

A great ouersight: For these be the words, not of the Captaine Iosua, but of the Prophet Osee.

* Vntruth. For Panormitane saith, Papa potest quæ si omnia facere quæ potest Deus.

*Vntruth.

Heere, gentle Reader, M. Harding hath brought thee, not the authoritie of any one Catholike Doctour, or learned Father, but only a fewe cold reasons of his owne, with certaine Scriptures vnaduisedly alleged, and violently forced from their meaning, as shall swone appeare.

His first reason concludeth very weakly: Euery parish is gouerned by one Vicar or Parson: and euery Diocesse is gouerned by one seuerall Bishop: Ergo, There is one vniuersall gouernour ouer the whole Church of Christ. Heere is neither order in reason, nor sequele in nature. Therefore if any man would denie the Argument, M. Harding were neuer able to make it good. He might as well, and in as good order reason thus: Euery Kingdome, or common weale hath one Prince or Magistrate to rule ouer it: Ergo, There must be one vniuersall Prince to rule ouer the whole world. Or thus, Euery flocke of sheepe hath one seuerall shepheard to ouersee them: Ergo, all the flocks throughout the world ought to be ouerseene by one generall shepheard. Otherwise M. Harding imagineth this foule absurditie must needs follow, that the part is better gouerned then the whole.

Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding answereth thus, I see no absurditie in this conclusion. And perhaps, when the matter is well weighed, it may seeme, the world was neuer in better state then when it was gouerned by one good Emperour. The answer. O M. Harding, why should you so vainly auouch vntruth? What one Emperour had euer the regiment of all the world? Where stood his Palace? What was his name? Why tell you such tales of those things that neuer were, and you certainly know they neuer were?

Vnitie by one Pope.

Indeed the Emperours of Rome, after the time of Augustus Cæsar, had a great part of the world vnder their hands. But the whole world, you know, they neuer had: No, neither the halfe deale, nor the third, nor the fourth part of the world. Yet hauingonely that they had, they grew so tyrannicall, and so intollerable vnto their subiects, and so licentious, and monstrous in their liues, that vnlesse it be onely among the Popes, it is not possible to finde so many the like examples of horrour in any State or Kingdome of the world. From the death of Augustus Cæsar, vnto Theodosius, within the space of lesse then foure hundred yeares, more then fortie Emperours were slaine with violence, one of them seeking traiterous meanes to murder an other. When the Princes estate was so vncertaine and miserable, what may we thinke was then the miserie of the people? Yet, saith M. Harding, the world was neuer in better state.

2. 3. 4. In the fourth Article, and in the 18 and 19. Diuisions.

The other three reasons, touching the prouidence of God, the debating of questions in faith, and conseruing of peace and vnitie of the Church, are answered already in my former rep'lie to M. Harding. Indeed I remember, to anouch all that M. Harding hath here said, one sometimes well inclined to that syde, said thus: Non videretur Dominus discretus fuisse (vt cum reuerētia eius loquar) nisi vnicum post se talem Vicarium reliquisset, qui hæc omnia posset: Christ our Lord should not haue seemed to haue dealt discreetly (to speake it with reuerence) vnlesse he had left one such Vicar behinde him, that might haue done all these things.

De Maiori. & Obedien. vnam Sanctam. In Glossa.

I grant, dissension and quarrels be the sooner ended when all things be put ouer to one man: so that the same one man may liue for euer, and still continue in one minde, and neuer alter. But often times one Pope is found contrary to another: and sometimes one Pope hath beene found contrarie to himselfe. Pope Sabinianus would haue burnt all Pope Gregories bookes. And as it is said before, Pope Romanus vtterly abolished all the Acts of his Predecessour Pope Steuen. The same Pope Steuen vnburied his Predecessour Pope Formosus, and defaced and mangled his naked carcase, and vterly condemned all that had beene done by him before. And Platina giueth this generall iudgement of them: Nihil aliud isti Pontificuli cogitabant, quàm vt nomen & dignitatem maiorum suorum extingüerent: These little petite Popes had none other care in the world, but how to deface the name and estimation of other Popes that had beene before them. And thus, that one Pope liketh, another misliketh: that one alloweth, another condemneth. And yet by M. Hardings iudgement, we haue none other rule to stay by in doubtfull cases, but only the will and pleasure of the Pope.

M. Harding pag. 139. b.

Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding findeth great fault, for that I say, Pope Steuen defaced and mangled Formosus his Predecessours naked carcase. The storie (saith hee) maketh no mention of any such mangling. For proofe whereof he allegeth Sabellicus. The Answer. For triall hereof I report me to Platina. His words be these: Hinc odium ortum est, &c. Heereof grew that hatred that caused Pope Stephanus to practise such cruelties vpon the dead body of Pope Formosus, for that in his life time he had hindred him from the obteining of the Popedome. Martinus saith that Pope Stephanus was so wood, and so raged against Formosus, that he haled his dead carcase out of the graue, and caused it to be laid before him selfe and others in the councell, and chopt off the two forefingers of his right hand, and threw them out into the streame.

Platina in Stephano 6.

Stephanum tanta rabie desæuisse.

Falmerius. Dilanians.

Matthæus Palmerius Florentinus recordeth the same by these words: Stephanus Formosi corpus Pontificalibus insignibus exuit: Deinde illud dilanians, omnique afficiens dedecore, manus eius proiecit in Tiberim: Pope Stephanus spoiled and stript Formosus his Predecessours bodie out of his Pontificall robes: And after he had torne and rent the same bodie, and abused it with all kinde of villanie, hee chopt off both his hands, and threw them foorth into Tiber.

Abbas Vrsper. Decollari præcepit. Luitprandus. Memoriale Historiarum.

Abbas Vrspergensis saith further, Pope Stephanus commanded the carcase of Pope Formosus to be beheaded: and the same body stript out of his holy robes, and spoiled of three fingers, to be throwne forth into the streame. The same storie touching the drowning of the carcase is recorded also by Luitprandus Ticinensis. In an old Chronicle written in parchment, intituled Memoriale Historiarum, which I haue to shew, there is added further: Quædam dictu horribilia in illum fecit: Pope Stephanus practised certaine things vpon Pope Formosus, that are horrible to be spoken.

Sabellicus Enneade 9. lib. 1.

But perhaps M. Harding will refuse the authoritie of these Writers, and of all others whatsoeuer, and will rather giue credit to Sabellicus, whom also he hath noted in his margin. Let vs therefore see the report of Sabellicus. Thus he saith, Stephanus Formosi cadauer iterum refossum, tanquam sic quoque pati aliquid atrocius posset, securi subiecit, corpus in Tiberim proijci iussit, vt sepultura, & omni humano honore careret: Pope Stephanus digged vp Pope Formosus his Predecessours bodie, and beheaded it, as minding to make it to

feele more villanie, and threw out his carcase into the Tiber, that he might bereaue him of his graue, and of all other honour due to a man.

All this notwithstanding M. Harding can deuise how to cut off the Popes head, how to chop off his hands and fingers, how to hale out his naked carcase from the graue, how to spoile it, and teare it, and to abuse it with such villanie as may not be spoken, and how to throw the same out into a running streame to bee deuoured and swallowed of the fishes, and all this to do gently and in good order, without any maner defacing or mangling of his bodie. And therefore he concludeth, as his maner is, in this friendly sort, Leaue, leaue, that ill propertie for shame, M. Iewell: adde not, diminish not, &c.

Vnitie by one Pope.

Howbeit, this I trow is not the readiest way to procure peace, and to maintaine vnitie in the Church. And therefore Gregorie saith of Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, that claimed to himselfe this vniuersall power, Si hanc causam æquanimiter portamus, totius Ecclesiæ fidem corrumpimus: corruit vniuersa Ecclesia à statu suo, si is qui vniuersalis dicitur cadit: If we quietly suffer this matter thus to proceed (that one man shall bee called the Vniuersall Bishop, we seeke not waies to maintaine vnitie, but) we ouerthrow the faith of the whole Church: if he that is called the Vniuersall Bishop happen to fall, the whole Church falleth from her state. Thus therefore to allow any one man vniuersal authority, ouer the whole Church, is a matter not behouefull and profitable, as M. Harding fansieth, but, as Gregorie saith, doubtfull, and dangerous to the Church. For although all the world either would, or could giue eare and credit to one man, yet were not that therefore alwaies Christian vnitie. S. Augustine saith, Habet & superbia appetitum quendam vnitatis & omnipotentiæ: Pride it selfe hath a certaine desire of vnitie, and of vniuersall power.

Greg. lib. 4. Epist. 76. Aug. de vera Relig. cap. 45.

Addition. Addition. But M. Harding saith, Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople by this title Vniuersall Bishop, meant to make himselfe the only Bishop of all the whole world, that there should bee no Bishop but himselfe alone. The Answer. This answer were somewhat if any old Writer might be found to say the same. But your bare fantasie, M. Harding, as it may appeare, often times wanteth weight. And how can you thinke it likely, that the Bishop of Constantinople, were hee neuer so proud a man, would suffer no man to be a Bishop, that is to say, neither to ordaine Priests, nor to excommunicate, nor to absolue, nor to sit in Councell, but himselfe alone? By what euidence, by what record, by what practise of his part can you proue it? O what prettie tales ye would tell vs if we would beleeue you!

M. Harding pag. 141. a.

Indeed the Bishop of Constantinople, although he were ambitious aboue measure, yet he neuer neither vsurped, nor claimed any other authoritie in the Church then that sithence hath been vsurped and claimed by the Pope. For thus it is written well neere by all that haue recorded the Storie of Pope Boniface 3. Institutum fuit vt Ecclesia Romana esset caput omnium Ecclesiarum, cùm priùs Constantinopolitana Ecclesia id vsurpare tentasset: It was then ordained that the Church of Rome should be the head of al Churches, whereas before the Church of Constantinople had claimed that title vnto her selfe. So saith Sabellicus, Græci illud decus ad se trahebant: The Greekes claimed the same dignitie to themselues. The same dignitie, he saith, that now is claimed by the Pope, and none other.

Palmerius Vrspergensis. Sabellicus Enead 8. lib. 6.

Therefore, M. Harding, all that you tell vs of one only Bishop throughout the whole world, excluding all other Bishops, sauing himselfe alone, is but a fable without face or likelihood of any truth.

Another of M. Hardings reasons is this: The Church labouring heere in earth must resemble the Church of the Saints triumphing in Heauen. But in Heauen God only is the Gouernour ouer the whole: therefore in the Church beneath, the Pope likewise must needs be gouernour ouer the whole. Thus God must be rated to gouerne aboue, and the Pope beneath: and so, as one sometime said, Diuisum imperium cum Ioue Cæsar habet.

This is a valiant kinde of argument. It holdeth from Heauen to Earth, from Angels to men, from God to the Pope.

But how knoweth M. Harding what orders of Angels and Archangels there bee in Heauen: what they doe: how they deale: who ruleth: who are ruled: what lawes and policies they haue amongst them? They say they would frame their Church according to the Samplar: and yet good men they neuer knew nor saw the Samplar. But only of themselues they imagine Common-weales, and orders in Heauen: and according to the same they would shape and fashion their owne Church in Earth.

Addition. Addition. Forsooth (saith M. Harding) I may easily know that which is euident. For in the fourth of Matthew, Angels wait on Christ. And in the 12. to the Hebrews there is mention made of Thousands of Angels. The Answer. All this, M. Harding, we grant. And Daniel saith further, Thousand thousands of Angels ministred vnto God, and ten thousand thousands stood ſtood before him. But what is all this to proue your orders? You ſay, S. Paul nameth Coloſſ.1. Thrones, Dominions, Principates, and Powers. You might haue added, Archangels, Cherubins, and Seraphins. But how know you heereby which Angell is higheſt in order, and hath authoritie and gouernment ouer all the reſt, that you may applie this heauenly paterne vnto the Pope? Vnleſſe you ſhew vs this, you ſhew vs nothing, and caſt faire colours without a ground. S. Auguſtine in this caſe ſpeaketh modeſtly of himſelfe: Aug. in Enchirid. cap. 58. Quid inter ſe diſtent quatuor illa vocabula, Throni, Dominationes, Principatus, Poteſtates, dicant qui poſſunt, ſi tamen poſſunt probare quod dicunt. Ego me iſta ignorare confiteor: What difference there is betweene theſe foure words, Thrones, Dominions, Principates, & Powers, let them tel vs that be able, ſo that they can proue that they tel vs. For my part, I confeſſe I know it not. If S. Auguſtine confeſſe he knoweth it not, may we ſafely learne it of M. Harding?

Howbeit, as little as we know, or can know in theſe caſes, yet hereof muſt wee bee taught to learne our obedience and ſubiection to the Pope: that as God alone ruleth ouer and ouer al the Heauens, ſo ought the Pope alone to rule ouer and ouer the whole earth: and that as al the powers of Heauen caſt off their crownes, and crie, Holy, holy, holy, vnto God, ſo ought the Powers and States of the earth likewiſe to fal downe and ſubmit themſelues, and to yéld all honour vnto the Pope. If this be not your meaning, M. Harding, then tell your tale plainly, that wee may know it.

Church triumphant and militant.

The better way, M. Harding, had beene, ſéeing the whole matter hangeth onely vpon your fantaſies, to ſay that God hath appointed one principall Archangell to be Pope in Heauen, and al other Powers, Angels, and Dominions to be Subiects. Thus might you eaſily haue made your frame to agrée with your paterne, and the one of your fantaſies to anſwere the other.

For to ſay as you ſay, God ruleth all in Heauen aboue, therfore the Pope muſt rule all in the world beneath, it is but a ſlender kind of reaſoning. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Aug. de vera Relig. cap. 45. Quid aliud in pompa huius mundi homo appetit, niſi ſolus eſſe, ſi fieri poſſit, cui multa ſubiecta ſint: peruerſa ſcilicet imitatione omnipotentis Dei? In the vaine pompe of this world what thing elſe is it that a man doth deſire, but if it were poſſible, to make himſelfe alone ſuch a one vnto whom many things may be obedient: and that by a peeuiſh counterfetting of God omnipotent?

And this is it that Gregorie ſaith of Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople: Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 78. Illum videlicet imitatur, qui ſpreta Angelorum ſocietate, aſcendere conatus eſt ad culmen ſingularitatis: He followeth Lucifer, who deſpiſing the fellowſhip of the Angels, laboured to get vp to the top of ſingularitie, and ſaid, I wil mount vp aboue the North, and will be like vnto the higheſt.

Verily Dionyſius writing purpoſely of the policie and gouernment of the Church, and comparing the ſame with the glorious gouernment of the Angels and Powers in Heauen, yet neuer vttered one word of the vniuerſall gouernment of the Pope. May rather in a little Treatie ioyned to the Councell of Laterane, out of this verie place is formed an Argument to the contrarie: In opere tripart. lib. 2. cap. 5. In cœleſti Hierarchia tota congregatio Angelorum non habet caput vnum, præter ſolum Deum: Ergo à ſimili in Eccleſiaſtica Hierarchia hominum non debet eſſe vnum caput, præter ſolum Deum: In the heauenly gouernment the whole companie of the Angels hath none other one head, but only God: therefore of the like in the Eccleſiaſticall gouernment amongſt men, there ought not to be any one head, but only God.

M. Harding fol. 144 a. Addition. ☞ Heere ſaith M. Harding, I maruell yee had the face to bring this foorth. You ſhew your ſelfe to be ſhameleſſe. The Anſwer. And why ſo impatiently, M. Harding? Marry (ſay you) is it not there ſet forth for an obiection againſt the truth? Neither doe I ſay ſo: nor doe I vſe it as an argument taken againſt the truth. It is laid forth only as an obiection againſt the Pope. Betweene the Pope and truth there may be a difference, as you know, and as it is euident to the world. But you ſay, It is anſwered in the next chapter. I grant you, it is anſwered indéed, but God wot, full fenderly, as the reſt. Yet neuertheleſſe my ſaying is true. For thus I ſay, Out of this place is formed an argument to the contrarie, that is, againſt the Supremacie of the Pope. Behold my words better M. Harding. This onely I ſay: I ſay no more. And that I ſay, you know is true. Yée were to blame therefore, thus without cauſe, and out of reaſon to waſte your choler. Addition. ☞

Neuertheleſſe M. Harding is well able to fortifie all theſe things by the authoritie of the Scriptures. And héere in ſtead of the firſt chapter of the Prophet Oſee, he allegeth the firſt chapter of the booke of Ioſua. And leſt thou ſhouldeſt thinke it were onely a marginall errour, brought in by ſome ouerſight of the Printer, as he vſeth ſometimes to excuſe and to ſhift the matter, he hath thus laid it wide open in his owne text, Heereof the holy Captaine Ioſue ſeemeth to ſpeake. Howbeit, one error may the better be diſſembled amongſt ſo many. Neither would I haue noted this ouerſight, were not M. Harding ſo immoderate in blaming others.

Indéed

Indeed the Prophet Osee, and not the holy captaine Iosua, speaketh these words: but not, as M. Harding imagineth, of the state of all Christendome vnder One Pope, but of that vnity and consent, that all the Faithfull of the world, as well Iewes as Gentiles, should haue vnder One Christ: as it is most euident by the whole discourse of the Text.

Thus lie the words: The number of the Children of Israel shall bee as the Sand of the Sea shoare, that cannot be numbred. And it shall come to passe in the place, where it was said vnto them, Ye are no people of mine, there shall it be said vnto them, Ye are the children of the Liuing God. And the children of Iuda and the children of Israel shall assemble together, and shall appoint vnto themselues one Head. Osee, cap. 1.

Upon which words S. Hierome writeth thus: Hæc omnia fient quia magnus est Dies Seminis Dei, qui interpretatur Christus: All these things shall come to passe, because it is the great Day of the Seed of God, which Seed is expounded (not the Pope, but) Christ. Hieronym. in Osee, cap 1.

Likewise Nicolaus Lyra: Congregabuntur Filij Iuda, id est, Apostoli: & Filij Israel, id est, Gentiles conuersi: Pariter, id est, in Vna ecclesia: & ponent sibi caput Vnum, id est, Christum: there shall assemble together the Children of Iuda, that is to say, the Apostles: and the children of Israel, that is to say, the Heathens conuerted: Together, that is to say, in One Church: and shall appoint vnto themselues One Head, that is to say, (not one Pope, as M. Harding would haue it, but) One Christ. Nicol. Lyra in Osee, cap. 1.

S. Augustine expounding the same words saith thus: Recolatur Lapis ille Angularis, & duo illi parietes, vnus ex Iudæis, & alter ex Gentibus: Let vs remember that Corner Stone (that is, Christ, and not the Pope) and the two walles, the one of the Iewes, the other of the Heathens. Aug. de Ciuit. li. 18. ca. 28.

The other words, which M. Harding allegeth out of S. John, Christ himselfe expoundeth, not of the Pope, but of himselfe: I am the good Shepheard: I yeeld my life for my Sheep: I know my sheepe, and am knowne of them: I haue other Sheepe, that be not of this flocke: Them I must bring, that they may heare my voice: and so shall there be one Shepheard, and one Flocke. Iohn. 10. Ephes. 2.

These words, Chrysostome expoundeth by the words of S. Paul: Vt duos conderet in semetipso in Vnum Nouum Hominem: That he might worke two people into One New Man (not in the Pope, but) in himselfe. Chrysost. in Iohan. Homil. 59.

S. Augustine expounding the same, saith thus: Duobus istis Gregibus, tanquam duobus parietibus, Christus factus est Lapis Angularis: Vnto these two Flockes, as vnto two walles (not the Pope, but) Christ was made the Corner Stone. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 47.

And what should I allege any other the Old Fathers? Nicolaus Lyra, as simple an Interpreter as he was, yet he likewise saith the same: Fiet Vnus Pastor, id est, Christus: There shall be one Shepheard, that is to say (not the Pope, but) Christ. Nicolaus Lyra in Iohan. ca. 10

Neither is M. Harding able to shew vs any learned allowed Interpreter, Old, or New, that hath expounded this place otherwise.

All these things notwithstanding, as well these words of Christ, as also the other of the Prophet Osee, M. Harding applieth only to the Pope: The Pope must be the Head: The Pope must be the Shepheard. Both Christ and Osee prophesied these things of the glory, and kingdome of the Pope. Iuda and Israel shall chuse Christ to be their Head: All the Faithfull throughout the world are one Flocke, and Christ is the Shepheard: Ergo, the Pope is the generall Head of the Vniuersall Church of God.

Such Logike M. Harding is able to teach vs: and with such feare and reuerence can he vse Gods holy Word. And like as the emperour Caligula sometimes tooke off the Head of his great god Iuppiter, and set on another Head of his owne: Euen so by these Interpretations and Glosses, M. Harding smiteth off Christ, the Onely Head of the Church, and setteth on the Pope. For Iohannes de Parisijs (out of whom, or some other the like, he hath borrowed this whole matter) nothing doubteth to tell vs, that Christ is not, nor cannot be the Head of this Body, or the Shepheard of this Flocke. And, lest M. Harding should charge me with vntrue report, his words be these: Congregabuntur Filij Iuda, & Filij Israel, vt ponant sibi Caput Vnum: Et Iohan. 10. Fiet Vnum Ouile, & Vnus Pastor. Quod quidem de Christo intelligi non potest: sed de alio aliquo Ministro, qui præsit loco eius: The children of Iuda, and the children of Israel shall assemble together, to appoint vnto themselues one head. And in the tenth of John, There shall be made One Fold, and One Shepheard. Which thing doubtlesse cannot be expounded of Christ: but must be taken of some other Minister, that may rule in his stead. Suetonius Tranquil. in Caligula. Iohan. de Parisijs, de potestate Regia & Papali, cap. 3.

Thus wee are taught, that Christ is neither the Head of his own Body, the Church, nor the Shepheard of his owne Flocke, but onely the Pope. For consider well these last words of Iohannes de Parisijs, Doubtlesse (saith he) Christ cannot be this One Shepheard. It must needs be some other Minister (that is, the Pope) that may rule in stead of Christ. This one Shepheard, saith he, cannot be Christ. Then must it Only be the Pope. And yet Chrysostome saith, Qui non vtitur Sacra Scriptura, sed ascendit aliunde, id est, non concessa via, hic non Pastor est, sed Fur: Whosoeuer vseth not the holy Scripture, but commeth in another way Chrysost. in Iohan. Homil. 58 way that is not lawfull, (which is by falſe Gloſes, and Corruptions, ſo doth the Biſhop of Rome, and by ſuch meanes hath won his Vniuerſall authority, as it is eaſie to bee proued) he is not the Shepheard of the Flocke, he is the Theefe.

Auguſt. contra Donatiſt. lib. 6. 1. Q. 3. vocantur Canes.

So ſaith S. Auguſtine, Ipſum characterem multi & Lupi, & Lupis imprimunt: The noie or marke of a Biſhop many giue vnto Wolues, and be Wolues themſelues.

Feed my Sheepe.

M. Harding ſaith further, Forasmuch as Chriſt is aſcended into Heauen, and is now no more conuerſant amongſt vs in Viſible Forme, as hee was before, it behoued ſome one man to be put in Commiſſion for bearing the charge, and taking care of the whole Church. Therefore he ſaid vnto Peter, Feed my Flocke: Confirme thy Brethren. Firſt, what ancient learned Father euer thus ſcanned the words of the Popes Commiſſion? Or why doth M. Harding auouch ſo great a matter of himſelfe only, without farther authority? And if this ſo large Commiſſion be to Feed, and to Feed ſo many, why then doth the Pope Feed ſo little? Or rather, why Feedeth he nothing at all? Or how can hee claime by Feeding, that neuer Feedeth?

M. Harding fol. 147. b.

Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding hath taken occaſion of ſundry anſweres. Firſt, he ſaith, Paſcere, is not a word that ſignifieth to Feed only, as you know, but alſo to rule and gouerne. And therefore Homer calleth King Agamemnon ποιμένα λαῶν, that is to ſay, The ruler of the people. The Anſwere. Whether Chriſt by this word, Paſcere, meant Feeding, or Gouerning, it forceth not greatly: To quarrell for words I haue no ſkill. But why is Homer the blinde Heathen Poet heere alleged as an Interpreter of Chriſts meaning? Or why is King Agamemnons Feeding, or leading of his Subiects brought in, to proue the Feeding of the Pope? Certainely Chriſt ſaith to Peter, and to other his Diſciples, Kings haue power, and gouernment ouer their Nations. But it ſhall not be ſo among you. The Feeding that Chriſt meant, ſtood not in Sword, or Scepter, but in Word and Doctrine. Therefore he ſaid to his Diſciples, Goe into all the world, and preach the Goſpell to euery creature. S. Paul ſaith, Let a man ſo eſteeme vs, as the Seruants of Chriſt, and the Stewards of Gods Myſteries. And Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, My Sheepe heare my voice, and follow me. He that is of God, heareth the word of God. The maner of this Feeding, S. Auguſtine expreſſeth thus: Non te paſcere cogita, ſed oues meas: Sicut meas paſce, non ſicut tuas: Gloriam meam in illis quære, non tuam: Dominium meum, non tuum: Lucra mea, non tua: Thinke not to Feed thy ſelfe, Feed my Sheepe: Feed them as my Sheepe, not as thine owne: Seeke my Honour in them, ſeeke not thine: Seeke my ownerſhip, and not thine: Seeke my gaines, and not thine owne. This is likely to be the Feeding that Chriſt ſpake of.

M. Harding fol. 147. b.

Howbeit, as it may appeare by M. Harding, the Pope is not bound to this kinde of Feeding. It is ſufficient for him to be as Agamemnon was, that is, a Prince and a Ruler of the people. God grant, the words of the Prophet Ezechiel be not found true in his Feeding: Woe be to the Shepheards of Iſrael that Feed themſelues. The Prophet Ieremie ſaith, Omnes Paſtores tuos paſcet ventus: Winde, and Vanity ſhall Feed all thy Feeders. The Apoſtle Iudas ſaith, They Feed themſelues, they are clouds without water.

M. Harding fol. 147. b. Chryſoſtom. in Mat. Hom. 55. Ambroſ. in Lucam, cap. 24.

But M. Harding hath heere brought in Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe, Arnobius, Pope Leo and Pope Gregory, to proue the authority of the Pope. The place of Chryſoſtome is alleged, and anſwered once before. His words bee theſe: The charge to rule the whole Church was giuen to Peter. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Chriſtus Petrum Amoris ſui velut Vicarium relinquebat: Chriſt left S. Peter as the Vicar of his loue. To what purpoſe theſe latter words of S. Ambroſe are alleged, I cannot tell. For it were hard for M. Harding to reaſon thus; Chriſt made Peter the Vicar of his Loue: Ergo, the Pope is Lord, and Feeder of all the world. Vndoubtedly S. Ambroſe in that whole place hath not one word, neither of one Generall Feeder, nor of Peters Succeſſour, nor of the Pope: Therefore M. Harding doth wel, thus to qualifie the weakneſſe of his euidence: for thus he ſaith, S. Ambroſe ſaith in effect, as much as I ſaid. And what is that? Verily good Reader, in effect it is as much as nothing. S. Paul ſaith of himſelfe and others, Legatione pro Chriſto fungimur: We are Ambaſſadors or Meſſengers for Chriſt, that is to ſay, We are his Vicars: And Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples all together, As my liuing Father ſent me, euen ſo doe I ſend you, that is to ſay, you are the Vicars of my Loue. Shall we therefore heereof conclude, that Paul, and euery of all the Diſciples had Vniuerſall Power ouer the whole Church of God? O, M. Harding, howſoeuer the Pope Feed the people, you ſhould not Feed vs with ſuch Vanities. But Chryſoſtome, you ſay, ſaith thus: The charge to Rule the whole Church was giuen to Peter. Theſe words are pregnant, and proue the purpoſe. But as I haue told you, Theodoretus hath written the like words of Chryſoſtome himſelfe, Chryſoſtomus Doctor Orbis terrarū: Chryſoſtome the Doctor or Maſter of the World.

M. Harding fol. 148. a. 2. Corinth. 5. Iohan. 6. M. Harding fol. 147. b. Theod. lib. 5. cap. 32.

Yet was not Chryſoſtome therefore, neither Vniuerſall Biſhop, nor Head of the Church.

Now

Now forasmuch as you haue many times in one place alleged these selfe same words by Chrysostome spoken of Peter, as hauing some speciall affiance in the weight of them, may it please you therefore to consider, what words the same Chrysostome hath likewise vttered of S. Paul.

M. Harding pa. 145. b. 147. b. 151 b. 152. a.

Thus therefore he saith: Hoc docet nos Paulus Magister Orbis: This thing doth Paul teach vs being the Master of the world. Againe: Paulo tribuitur cura omnium Ecclesiarum, non vnius, vel duarum, vel trium, sed omnium, quæ sunt in toto Orbe: Vnto Paul the charge of al Churches is committed: not of one, or two, or three Churches, but of al the Churches that be in all the World.

Chryso in Genesin. Homil. 7. In Gen. hom. 11. In Ioh. hom. 11. In Act. hom. 53. De Laudib. Pauli hom. 2.

Againe: Paul being a Persecutor, and a Blasphemer is made the Preacher of all Countries, and ruleth the Church thorowout all the World.

In 1. Cor. hom. 21.

Paul gouerneth and ruleth all the whole World: Paul was the Apostle of the whole compasse of the Earth: All the World was committed to Paul: Paul had the ouersight: Paul was the warden of all the World.

In Sermon. De Eleemosyna.

I passe ouer a great number of other like sentences of Chrysostome, and others, whereof some part I haue touched some other where. And what will you conclude hereof, M. Harding? That Paul was the Head of the Vniuersall Church? Doubtlesse these words, thus vttered of him, import no lesse. But what will you then doe with S. Peter? for to set two Heads vpon one Body, it were ouer much.

De precat. l. 2. Contra Iudaeos. orat. 5.

But to passe by, and to dissemble all that may be spoken of Paul and Peter, what if the Pope himselfe giue the same stile and title vnto sundry other inferiour Bishops? what if they bee called the Ouersears of the whole Vniuersall Church, and that euen by the mouth of the Pope himselfe? Marke therefore what Pope Eleutherius writeth to the Bishops of France: Vniuersalis vobis à Christo Ecclesia commissa est: The Vniuersall Church is committed to you by Christ. Will you therefore tell vs, M. Harding, that the Bishops of France are the Popes of Rome? or, that they haue Vniuersall power ouer al the World? Thus you see how vainely yee busie your selfe, with drawing the good sayings and sentences of holy Fathers from their meaning.

Epist Elent. ad Episcop. Gallia.

Further you say, Christ left not only Peter to be the Successour of his Loue for his owne life only, but also Peters Successours for euer, that is to say, the Popes: for other Peters Successors (you say) we know not. And are you well assured, M. Harding, that euery Pope is the Successour and Heire of Christs Loue without exception? Would God they were. The World should haue lesse cause to be offended. But Christs Loue passeth not by Inheritance, or Succession of Dees. Whosoeuer is ready to giue himselfe for the Flocke of Christ, be he Pope, or Bishop, or inferiour Priest, he is the Vicar of Christs Loue. In the end hereof M. Harding of his modesty chargeth vs with boasting challenges, and bold talkes, and prating in Pulpits.

M. Harding fol. 148. b.

Againe, where learned M. Harding to reason thus? Christ is ascended into Heauen: Ergo, the Pope is Head of the whole World? Or thus, Christ said to Peter, Feed my Flocke: Ergo the Pope hath Vniuersall power ouer the whole Church of God? How can he make these Arguments to hold, I will not say by Diuinity, but by any reasonable shift of Logike?

Feed my Sheepe.

But ye say, God speaketh not now vnto vs mouth to mouth: nor sendeth vs downe his Angels from Heauen: nor instructeth vs now by Visions, as he did others in the Old times. What of that? Will it therefore follow, that all the world must giue eare to the Pope? Nay M. Harding, Chrysostome saith much better: Because God speaketh not now vnto vs in such familiar sort, Ergo, Suam erga Homines amicitiam innouare volens, quasi longe absentibus literas mittit, conciliaturus sibi Vniuersam Hominum Naturam: Therefore God minding to renew his fauour towards Man, sent (his Holy Scriptures, as it were) his Letters, thereby to reconcile to himselfe all Mankind. God speaketh not now vnto vs by his Angels, but he hath already spoken vnto vs, as S. Paul saith, by the mouth and presence of his Onely Sonne. And therefore he saith againe, If an Angell from heauen would now preach vnto vs otherwise, then wee haue receiued, we should hold him accursed.

But for the Vnity and quiet gouernment of the Church of God, S. Paul saith, Christ ascending aboue all the Heauens hath giuen (not One Vniuersall Pope to rule the whole, but) some Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelists, some Pastors, some Doctors, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the worke of the Ministery, for the building vp of the Body of Christ, that we may all come into the Vnity of Faith, and of the knowledge of the Sonne of God. By these meanes God thought it sufficient to preserue his Church in Vnity, and neuer made mention of One Vniuersall Pope.

Therefore S. Cyprian saith, Vnus est Episcopatus, cuius à singulis in solidum pars tenetur: There is but One Bishopricke part whereof of euery seuerall Bishop is holden in whole. And againe, Ideò plures sunt in Ecclesia Sacerdotes, vt, vno Hæresim faciente, cæteri subueniant: Therefore are there many Bishops in the Church, that if one fall into Heresie, the rest may helpe. Thus, when Peter walked not vprightly to the Gospell, Paul came with helpe, and reproued him openly euen to his face: Thus Irenæus reproued Pope Victor: thus sundrie godly Fathers haue reproued others. Therefore S. Augustine saith, Deus docuit Petrum per posteriorem Paulum. A quocunque enim Verum dicitur, illo donante, dicitur, qui est ipsa Veritas: Thus God instructed Peter by Paul his fellow, that was called after him. For by whomsoeuer the truth is spoken, it is spoken by his gift, that is Truth it selfe.

In Conc. Lateran. sub Iulio. In Concil. Lateran. sub Leone. In oratione Stephani Putracensis. Panormitan. de Elect. ca. Licet.

yée say, the Pope succeedeth not Christ in all his Substance, that is to say, in all his Power: neither hath there any such fond saying beene vttered (say you) at any time by the Diuines. If this be true, wherefore then be these words written, and so well allowed of in the Councell of Laterane, Tibi data est Omnis Potestas, in Cœlo, & in Terra: Vnto your Holinesse all Power is giuen as well in Heauen, as in Earth? Wherefore is Bernard so wel allowed to force the same farther with these words: Qui totum dedit, nihil excludit: He that hath giuen thee all, hath excepted nothing? Wherefore is Panormitane allowed to say, Papa potest omnia, quæ Deus ipse potest: The Pope is able by his Power to doe, whatsoeuer God himselfe can doe?

Gregor. lib.4. epist. De Maiorit. & Obedien. Vnam Sanct. in Glossa.

For the rest, M. Harding saith, One King is able to rule One Kingdome: Ergo One Pope is able to rule the whole Church. This reason is very simple, and is answered before. Of the Gouernment of Princes, wee haue daily practise: But of Popes, that euer exercised this Vniuersall Dominion ouer the whole Church of God, M. Harding is not able to shew vs One. Or if hee bee able to lay forth One, let him shew him for his credits sake. If there be not One such example to bee found from the Ascension of Christ vnto this day, then although the Pope had it in claime by Charter, yet hath he lost it by Non vsure. Well were it with him, if he were but a Member of Christs Body, and a Sheepe of his Flocke. S. Gregory said sometime to Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople claiming vnto himselfe the same Title, and thinking himselfe able enough to rule the whole, Quid tu Christo Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ Capiti, in Extremi Iudicij responsurus es examine, qui cuncta eius Membra tibimet conaris Vniuersalis appellatione supponere? What answere wilt thou make in the triall of the last iudgement, vnto Christ the Head of his Vniuersall Church, that thus by the name of Vniuersall Bishop, seekest to bring vnder thee all the Members of his Body?

Last of all, M. Harding concludeth without Premisses: whosoeuer will not be ruled by this Shepheard the Pope, is of the Heard of Antichrist. So saith one of the Popes hired Proctors: Quicquid saluatur, est sub summo Pontifice: Whatsoeuer Soule is saued, it is vnder the Pope. This one thing being granted, M. Hardings whole cause falleth cleere.

Dist.12. Non Decet.

But God be thanked, it appeareth already to al them, that haue eies to see, that we haue not departed from the seruile Obedience of that Sée, but vpon iust cause, and good aduice: And in such sort the Pope himselfe will not deny, but it is lawfull for any Church to dissent from the Church of Rome. These be his words, which must bee holden for a Law: Quicquid sine discretione Iustitiæ contra Romanæ Ecclesiæ Disciplinam actum fuerit, ratum haberi nulla ratio permittit: Whatsoeuer thing is done without discretion of Iustice, against the Order of the Church of Rome, it may not by any meanes be allowed. By which words it appeareth, Ex contrario Sensu, By an Argument of the contrary, that, whatsoeuer is done by discretion of Iustice, notwithstanding it be against the Order of the Church of Rome, yet ought it to be well allowed.

M. Harding pa.155.

Addition. ☞ To this M. Harding answereth, If I had séene the folly hereof, I would neuer haue printed it for very shame. For the Glosse there, which otherwheres he condemneth, as pelting and beggarly, saith thus: Here the argument of the contrary sense is auoided and taketh no place. But indeed, as it may appeare, this poore Gloser was void of somewhat himselfe. For thus he concludeth, and that very well, to M. Hardings liking, That without the authority of the Church of Rome we may doe nothing, bee it neuer so iust and true, and neuer so much done by discretion of Iustice. Yet, good Reader, truth is truth and one for euer, whether the Church of Rome will allow it, or no. Addition. ☞

Dist.12. Illa.

S. Ambrose saith, as in the same place he is alleged, Ego cùm Romam venio, Sabbatum ieiuno: cùm Mediolani sum non ieiuno: When I come to Rome, I fast on the Saturday: When I am at Millaine, I fast not. By these we see, that in the Church of Millaine the Saturday was not fasted. And yet did they well, and according to the discretion of Iustice, and yet contrary to the Order of the Church of Rome.

S. Augustine likewise in the same place saith, Whatsoeuer things are not contrary, neither to the Catholike Faith, nor to good maners, they must be taken as things indifferent. Thus the Glosse, that M. Harding so much commendeth, is quite contrary to the Text. As for the Order of the Church of Rome, the holy Catholike Fathers sometimes, as it may appeare, haue little esteemed it.

S. Hierome thereof saith thus vnto Euagrius, Quid mihi profers vnius Vrbis Consuetudinem? What bringest thou me the custome of Rome, that is but one Citie? As if he would say, Is that Order sufficient to binde the whole Church of Christ? If ye recken authorities, the World is greater then the City of Rome. This had been proudly and disdainefully spoken, had the Order of Rome been a sufficient direction for all the world. Hieronym. ad Euagrium.

S. Augustine saith, Ne Catholicis quidem Episcopis consentiendum est, sicubi forte falluntur, vt contra Canonicas Scripturas aliquid sentiant: We may not giue our consent vnto any Bishops, be they neuer so Catholike, if they happen to be deceiued, and to determine contrarie to the Scriptures. Augu. de Vnitate Eccles. Catholicæ. cap. 10.

And Pope Pius the Second, himselfe saith, Resistendum est quibuscunque in faciem, siue Paulus, siue Petrus sit, qui ad Veritatem non ambulat Euangelij: We are bound to withstand any man to the face, be it Peter, be it Paul, if he walke not to the Truth of the Gospel. Abbas Vrsper. pag. 443.

To conclude, where the Wolfe is broken in, it is best for the poore Sheepe to breake out. That the Wolfe was broken in, beside the cruell spoile and rauening of Christian blood, it is plaine by the words of S. Bernard. For thus he speaketh therof in open Councel, and in the presence of sundry Bishops: Non custodiunt gregem Domini, sed mactant, & deuorant: They keepe not the Lords flocke, but they kill it, and deuoure it. Againe hee saith, Propterea relinquamus istos, quia non sunt Pastores, sed Traditores: Therefore let vs leaue them, for they are not Pastors, but Traitors. And therefore God thus warneth vs in the like case: Exite de medio horum hominum, ne cum illis pereatis: Goe forth from the middest of those men, lest ye perish all together. Bernardus in Concil. Remen. In eodem Concilio. Numer. 16.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 3.

The other Apostles equal with Peter.

For all the Apostles, as Cyprian saith, were of like power among themselues, and the rest were the same that Peter was.

M. Harding.

Power is double, the one Ordinary, the other by Priuiledge or Extraordinarie. Ordinary power is that which continueth in one & the same course for euer. According to which Power Peter was Head of the Church, and his Successors after him. Power by Priuiledge, or Extraordinary is that which is giuen besides the common course by way of dispensation. As where the other Apostles should haue receiued Ordinarily their Power from Peter, as who had commission ouer all, both Lambs and Sheepe, among whom the Apostles had their place: Christ by special grace preuenteth ordinary course, and maketh them for the time, and in their Persons equall with Peter in the office of Apostleship. Thus concerning Ordinary Power, Peter is Head of the Apostles, and by that reason they are subiect vnto him, as Sheepe vnto their Shepheard. But by priuiledge true it is, as S. Cyprian saith, They were of like power among themselues. *Now what oddes there is betwixt an Ordinary authority of iudging giuen to any Officer, for himselfe, and his Successors in that Office for euer, and a speciall commission for life time onely; so much is betwixt Peter and the rest of the Apostles.

Peters Power Ordinary.
The Apostles Power Extraordinary.
Peter is the Shepheard;
The Apostles are the sheepe.
Manifest, and meere Vntruths.
*Peter hath Power to him, and to his Heires for euer.
The Apostles haue power only for terme of life.
Cyprian. De Simplicit. Prælatorum.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

S. Cyprians words be plaine: Hoc erant vtique & cæteri Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio prædíti & Honoris & Potestatis. Sed exordium ab vnitate proficiscitur, vt Ecclesia vna monstretur: The rest of the Apostles were the same, that Peter was, all endued with one Fellowship both of Honour and of Power. Yet the Beginning is taken of One, to shew that the Church is One. But all these words be they neuer so plaine, are soone shifted by a poetic Distinction, such as neither S. Cyprian, nor any other learned Father or Doctor euer knew.

We are taught here to vnderstand, that there are two Powers: The one Ordinarie, the other Extraordinary. By Ordinary Power, saith M. Harding, that is to say, by Order, and of Common Course, Peter appointed all the rest of the Apostles, and gaue them Authority. And Christ also likewise gaue them Authority: but by Extraordinarie Power, that is to say, besides Order, and out of Course. Or, to vtter the matter in plainer wise, Peter gaue Power to the Apostles by his vsuall Authority, and by due forme of Law: but Christ gaue them Power, as M. Harding saith, Onely for the time, and by way of Dispensation, and besides the Law. And thus Peter is the Ordinary Head of the Apostles; Christ is their Head too, howbeit, not in like sort, but Extraordinary. For, as touching Order of gouernment, Peter is the Shepheard, and the Apostles are the Sheepe. All other the Apostles hold their Power, as by copy, for tearme of life; Peter only holdeth the same in Fee Simple, to him, and to his Heires for euer.

And,

And, good Christian Reader, lest thou shouldest thinke, I haue in scorne, and wilfully wrested M. Hardings words, which otherwise might be vttered by him in some sober meaning: may it please thee by these few to consider, what certain others of that side haue vttered and published, touching the same.

Petr. de Palude de Potest. Apostolor. Art. 2. Petrus de Palude saith thus; Dico, quòd nullus Apostolorum, præter Petrum, factus est à Christo Episcopus: I say, that none of the Apostles, sauing onely Peter, was made Bishop by Christ. And again, Videretur, in nouo Testamento, quòd alij Apostoli à Christo nullam Potestatem iurisdictionis receperunt: & per consequens relinquitur, quòd omnis potestas Iurisdictionis, quam habuerunt Apostoli, specialiter post Christi ascensum, fuit collata eis à Petro: It would appeare, that in the New Testament the rest of the Apostles receiued no maner Power of Iurisdiction at Christs hands: & so consequently it followeth, that al the Power of Iurisdiction that the Apostles had, specially after Christs ascension, was giuen vnto them by Peter.

Petr. de Palude in eodem Arts.

Petr de Palude in eodem cap. Againe, he imagineth God the Father thus to say vnto Christ: Constitues eos Principes, non per te, sed per tuum Vicarium: Thou shalt make the Apostles Gouernors ouer al the earth, not by thy selfe, but by Peter, thy Vicar. And againe, Paulus, & alij Apostoli à Petro, non debuerunt prædicare in Ecclesia specialiter Petro commissa, nisi de eius licentia. Vnde a Christo habuerunt idoneitatem: a Petro autem Authoritatem: Paul, & the other Apostles might not preach in the Church committed vnto Peter, but with Peters Licence. For of Christ they had only ability: but of Peter they receiued Authority. In like maner writeth Pope Nicolas: Petrũ in Consortium Indiuiduæ Vnitatis assumptum, id, quod ipse erat, Dominus voluit nominari: Our Lord tooke Peter into the Fellowship of the Holy Vnity, and would haue him called the same, that he was himselfe.

Petr. de Palude de Potesta Curator. Art. 6.

Extr. de Elect. & Electi potest. Fundamenta.

By such amplifications, and outrage in speech, it would appeare, Christ were Peters Vicar; and not Peter Vicar vnto Christ. In this sense and meaning M. Harding seemeth to say, that by ordinary, and common course of Law, the Apostles had all their Power, not from Christ, but only from Peter.

But here M. Harding vnwares falleth into a maruellous inconuenience. For these things thus granted, it must needs follow, that during the time of Christs abode in earth the Apostles had no maner ordinarie power at all; neither to preach, nor to baptize, nor to binde, nor to lose. For Heruæus a Doctour of M. Hardings side, saith thus; Sciendum, quòd cùm Christus conuersabatur cum hominibus, non fuit alius Papa præter ipsum, nec Petrus tunc habuit potestatem papalem: We must vnderstand, that while Christ was conuersant amongst men in earth, there was none other Pope but he alone: neither then had Peter the Popes authoritie.

So likewise saith Petrus de Palude, Non decebat esse simul, nisi vnum summum Pontificem. Vnde Christo ascensuro debuit Petrus fieri Episcopus summus, & non antea: It was not meet there should bee more then one highest Bishop at one time. Therefore when Christ was ready to ascend into Heauen, it was conuenient to make Peter the highest Bishop, & not before.

Petr. de Palude De Potesta. Apostolorum.

For so long time Christ could not giue his Apostles any ordinarie Authority: for M. Harding telleth vs that his power herin was onely extraordinarie. Of the other side Peter could giue them none: for as Heruæus and Paludensis say, Vntill Christs ascension he was not Pope.

But to leaue these vaine fantasies, not worth the hearing, S. Paul will soone remoue all these doubts: Thus he writeth of himselfe: Paul the Apostle, not of men, nor appointed by men, but by Iesus Christ, and God the Father And S. Chrysostome hereof writeth thus, Paulus nihil opus habebat Petro, nec illius egebat voce: sed Honore par erat illi. Nihil enim hic dicam amplius: Paul had no maner of lacke of Peter, nor stood in need of his voice, or allowance: but in Honour was his Fellow. For I will heere say no more. His meaning is, hee was his better.

Chrys. in epist. ad Galat. ca. 1.

Howbeit, what need words? Set contention apart, the case is cleere: For it was not Peter, that breathed ouer the Apostles: It was not Peter, that said vnto them, Goe to the lost Sheepe of the house of Israel: Receiue the Holy Ghost: Goe into all the World, and Preach the Gospell. All this Power was giuen them by Christ alone, and not by Peter.

Iohn 10. Mark. 16.

Now, whereas M. Harding teacheth vs, that Peter was the Shepheard, and the Apostles the Shéepe, making them all as much inferiour vnto Peter, as the Shéepe is inferiour vnto the Shepheard; S. Hierome saith, notwithstanding he grant, that of the twelue Apostles One was chosen, that, a Head being appointed, occasion of discord might be remoued, yet he saith: Super Petrum fundatur Ecclesia: Licèt id ipsum in alio loco super Omnes Apostolos fiat, & cuncti claues Regni Cœlorum accipiant, & ex Æquo super eos Ecclesiæ fortitudo solidetur: Yee wil say, the Church is founded vpon Peter: Notwithstanding in another place the same thing is done vpon al the Apostles: and all receiue the keies of the kingdome of Heauen: and the strength of the Church is founded Equally vpon them all. Likewise the learned Father Origen saith, Quod si super vnum illum Petrum tantùm existimas ædificari totam Ecclesiam, quid dicturus es de Iohanne filio Tonitrui, & Apostolorum vnoquoque? If thou thinke the whole Church was builded only vpon Peter, what wilt thou then say of Iohn the sonne of the Thunder, and of euery of the Apostles? Orig. in Matt. Tract. 1.

Therefore S. Chrysostome of Perer saith thus: Duplex crimen erat, tum quia repugnauit, tum quia cæteris seipsum præposuit: Peter was in double fault; both for that hee withstood Christ, and also for that he set himselfe before the rest. Chrys. in Matthæ. Hom. 83.

Addition. ☞ Addition ☞ It may be said, These words are not specially spoken of the Superiorities of S. Peter. All this I grant: yet by the same words he is blamed for setting himselfe before the rest. But in the same homilie Chrysostome calleth Peter Verticem Apostolorum, The head of the Apostles, saith M. Harding. So doth the same Chrysostome call Elias Caput prophetarum, The head of the Prophets. Yet had not Elias therefore all other Prophets in subiection. S. Gregorie calleth Paul Caput Nationum, The head of Nations: And Chrysostome saith, Paul was in a manner the common Father of all the world. Againe hee saith, Nullus Paulum antecedit. De ea re nemo omnium dubitat: No man hath place before Paul. And thereof no man doubteth. Yet was not Paul therefore the Bishop of Rome. ☜ M. Harding fol. 157. b. Chrys. ad Roman. Hom. 18. fol. 300. Greg. in. Reg. Lib. 4. Cap. 4. Chrys. de laudib. Pauli, Hom. 3.

S. Augustine maketh Peter fellow and equall with the other Apostles: Inter se concorditer vixerunt Petrus, & condiscipuli eius: Peter and his fellowes liued agreeably together. And again, Christus sine personarum acceptione hoc dedit Paulo vt ministraret Gentibus, quod etiam Petro dederat vt ministraret Iudæis: Christ without any choice of Persons gaue the same (Authoritie) to Paul to minister among the Heathens, that he gaue to Peter to minister among the Iewes. And the very ordinarie Glosse giueth these words to S. Paul: Non didici ab alijs tanquam à maioribus: sed contuli cum illis tanquam cum amicis & paribus: I learned not of (Peter and) others as of my betters: but I had conference with them as with my equals and friends. Likewise Paul himselfe saith, Iacobus, Petrus, Iohannes, qui videbantur columnæ esse, dextras dederunt mihi & Barnabæ societatis: Iames, Peter, and Iohn, that seemed to be the Pillers, gaue vnto me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship. Which the Glosse expoundeth thus, Societatis, i. æqualitatis: Of fellowship, that is to say, of equality. Chrys. in Matthæ. Homil. 66. Aug. Ep. 86. August. in Ep. ad Galat. ca. 2. Gloss. Galat. 2. Galat. 2.

The other Apostles equal with Peter.

Therefore notwithstanding M. Hardings Ordinarie and extraordinarie Distinctions, S. Cyprians words are plaine and true, The rest of the Apostles were euen the same (in Authoritie) that Peter was, all endued with one fellowship, both of honour, and of power.

Wee denie that it was said indifferently to them all, Feed yee: Yea, or that it was said at all, Feed yee. *To Peter, and none else, was it said, Feed my lambes, Feed my sheepe. Which word of feeding so singularly spoken to Peter in the presence of the other Apostles, prooueth that it was not indifferently said to all, Feed ye. That they were sent into the whole world, and that they were commanded to teach, and in that respect also to feed, we confesse, vnder the distinction of ordinarie & extraordinarie power before mentioned.

It forceth not greatly what M. Harding denie or grant, hauing neither reason nor authoritie, but only his owne. But if power were not giuen indifferently to all the Apostles, tell vs then, as touching feeding, wherein is the odds? What had Peter more? What had the others lesse? Or what old Doctour or learned Father euer saw this difference?

words being spoken as vnto Peter, are common to all the Apostles. These words, saith he, are not spoken directly, or only vnto Peter, but as vnto Peter. And the other Apostles haue the keies, and are the Rocke as well as Peter. If this be true, as it is, with what good countenance then can M. Thus much, I trow, at least it proueth, That the Church was equally built vpon all the Apostles, as well vpon Iames or Iohn, as vpon S. Peter. For so saith S. Hierome: And that Christs words spoken as vnto Peter were common to all: For so saith Origen. This, M. Harding, was my purpose to proue: And this I thought had bene sufficient. It proueth, that in the Apostleship Peter and Paul, and the rest of the Apostles were all one, and so one of them not so farre inferiour to another as is imagined. It proueth that Peter and Paul, as touching their persons and offices of planting and watering were both nothing. For so saith S. Paul, He that planteth is nothing: and he that watereth is nothing. And what great difference in dignitie can you finde, M. Harding, betweene nothing, and nothing? If Peter that chosen vessell that planted Christs Church, be nothing, what then is he that hath rooted vp all things, and planteth nothing? ☜

Vntruth. Read the Answer.

The interpreter, not without the will & aduice of his Defender, hath altered the sense of the Latine, as the Author of the Latine hath altered the words of S. Hierome. For neither speaketh S. Hierome of Bishops in the plurall number, neither saith the Latine Apologie that the Bishops bee all of like preeminence, which this translation hath, but of the same merit, and of the same priesthood. With the word preeminēce guilefully shifted into the sentence in place of this word merit, these false plaiers thought to winne the game. That is, that all Bishops after the minde of S. Hierome be of like preeminence, and so that all be of like power and authoritie, and none aboue other.

Hieromes place discussed.

Equality of Bishops.

Concerning the place alleged, S. Hierom in an Epistle to Euagrius speaking against that, a particular custome of the Church of Rome should preiudicate the authoritie of the whole world, in preferring Deacons before Priests, compareth Bishops of great Cities & little Townes together, and saith, that as touching the honour, dignitie, and power of Bishoply order and office, and of Priesthood, as good and as great a Bishop in that respect is the one as the other; and that the Bishop of Eugubium & Rhegium, two little Townes in Italie, and of Thebes another little Towne in Egypt, are Bishops and Priests, and haue as great (a) merit in regard of any their vertues, & as great power concerning the order of Priesthood, as the Bishops of Rome, of Constantinople, of Alexandria. Yet as touching power and authoritie of regiment, the Patriarks of Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antiochia bee aboue Bishops of other Dioceses, and the Bishop of Rome Peters successor is (b) aboue all. For we being many, are one bodie in Christ, and euery man among our selues one anothers members. This knot requireth a mutuall consent of the whole bodie, but chiefly the concord of Priests: among whom although dignitie be not common to them all, yet order is generall, as Leo writeth. For euen among the most blessed Apostles (saith he) in likenesse of honour there was ods of power. And whereas the election of them all was equall, yet to one was it giuen to be ouer the rest. Out of which plat rose the distinction also of Bishops, and with great prouidence it hath beene disposed that all should not take all vpon them, but that in euery prouince there should be one who might first giue his sentence among his brethren: and againe, that in the great Cities some should be ordeined for taking vpon them matters of greater care, through whom the charge of the vniuersal Church should haue course to the one See of Peter, and that nothing should euer dissent from the Head.

(a) This was no part of the question.

(b) Vntruth. For the B. of Rome is equall with the other fiue Patriarks, as shall appeare.

Epist. 34. Among Bishops is difference of power with likenesse of honour.

How great & honourable soeuer the roome is that any Bishop is placed in, be he Archbishop, Metropolitane, politane, Primate, Patriarke, or Pope himselfe: he is no more a Bishop thē any other of those who occupie the lowest roome. The diuersitie consisteth in this, that they are called to part of charge in sundrie proportions, as the Bishoprikes are greater or lesser. the Pope hath committed vnto him (c) the charge of the whole fold of Christ, and hath the fulnesse of power. For if all were of like power, as these Defenders teach, Vnitie could not be maintained. Wherfore (d) by very order of Christ himselfe it hath beene ordeined that matters touching faith and religion, at least such as be weightie, be referred to that one Prince of Pastors, who sitteth in the chaire of Peter the high. st Bishop, which hath (e) alwaies been done and obserued from the Apostles time to our daies by Catholikes, and not seldome also by Heretikes.

The diuersitie betweene Bishops, wherein it cōsisteth

The sentence that this Defender allegeth out of S. Cyprian, it seemeth he vnderstood it not. Yee say, that a piece of that one Bishopricke is perfectly & wholly holden of euery particular Bishop. But what meane ye by that? If by this word In solidum, perfectly & wholly holden, ye meane that euery particular Bishop is a Bishop without depending of any other, then ye speake against the words ye bring out of S. Cyprian. Who saith, that as there are many beames of one Sunne, many boughs of one roote, many riuers of one fountaine; so there are many Bishops of one Bishopricke. Therefore this Bishopricke is vnto particular Bishops, as the Sunne, as the root, as the fountaine. (f) what the fountaine, root, and Sunne of this Bishopricke is, S. Cyprian declareth a little before, shewing that it was said to Peter, To thee I will giue the keies of the Kingdome of Heauen. And, Feed my sheepe.

De simplicitate Prælatorū.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Hēre M. Harding chargeth vs with two of his owne common faults. First with corruption: next with ignorance. With corruption in the words and sense of S. Hieromes with ignorance in the place of S. Cyprian. But if we be able sufficiently and truely to answer both, I trust M. Harding shall haue no great cause much to vaunt himselfe, either of his plaine dealing hērein, or of his knowledge.

And hēre, to dissemble these childish cauillations of the altering of numbers, the singular into the plurall; and of the changing of this word Merit, into this word Preeminence; which great fault, if it were any, by M. Hardings owne confession, proceeded only from the interpreter, and not from the Authour: I say, to dissemble and to passe by all these silly quarrels, what S. Hierome meant hereby, Erasmus a man of great learning and iudgement, expoundeth thus: Hieronymus æquare videtur omnes Episcopos inter se, perinde quasi omnes ex æquo Apostolis successerint. Nec putat vllum Episcopum alio minorem esse, quòd sit humilior: aut maiorem, quòd sit opulentior. Nam æquat Eugubiensem Episcopum cum Romano. Deinde non putat Episcopum quouis Presbytero præstantiorem esse, nisi quòd ius habeat Ordinandi: Hierome seemeth to match all Bishops together, as of they were all equally the Apostles successors. And he thinketh not any Bishop to be lesse then other, for that he is poorer: or greater then other for that he is richer. For hee maketh the Bishop of Eugubium (a poore towne) quall with the Bishop of Rome. And farther he thinketh that a Bishop is no better then any Priest sauing that the Bishop hath authoritie to Order Ministers.

Erasmus in schol. in Epist. ad Euagrium.

Addition. ☞ Hereto M. Harding answereth thus: Erasmus saith within fiue lines following, that the Metropolitane hath a certaine dignitie and iurisdiction aboue other Bishops. Take the one (saith he) with the other. The answer. I am contented M. Harding; Erasmus saith, The Metropolitane had a dignitie aboue other Bishops. But he saith not, The Bishop of Rome had iurisdiction ouer all Bishops throughout the world. In S. Hieromes time there were Metropolitans, Archbishops, Archdeacons, and others. But Christ appointed not these distinctions of Orders from the beginning. These names are not found in all the Scriptures. This is the thing that we defend. S. Hierome saith, Sciant Episcopi, &c. Let Bishops vnderstand (whereunto we adde further, Let the Bishops of Rome themselues vnderstand) that they are in authoritie ouer Priests more by custome then by order of Gods truth. These be S. Hieromes words truly translated. What he meant thereby I leaue to the iudgement of the Reader. Erasmus likewise saith in the selfe same place aboue alleged: Quòd Episcopo minus tribuit dignitatis, &c. Whereas S. Hierome yeeldeth lesse dignitie and authoritie vnto Bishops then now adaies they seeme to haue, we must vnderstand he spake of that time wherein he liued. If he had seene our Bishops that now be, hee would haue said otherwise For now the Pope claimeth a power aboue all the powers in Heauen and Earth, as it is written in the Councell of Laterane. Againe Erasmus in another place speaking hereof, saith thus: Sanctus vir ingenuè fatetur, Episcopum Romanum non esse cæteris Episcopis sublimiorem Sacerdotio, sed tantum opibus: This holy man S. Hierome saith plainly, and freely, and as he thinketh, that the Bishop of Rome is aboue other Bishops not by Bishopricke, but onely by riches. By his riches only, M. Harding, Erasmus saith the Pope is aboue other Bishops. By riches onely, (hee saith) not by right of Gods word not by vertue, not by learning, not by diligence in preaching: but onely by riches. Now it may please you to follow your owne rule, and to lay the one saying to the other. ☜

Nec altera Romanæ Vrbis Ecclesia, altera totius orbis existimanda est. Et Gallia, & Britannia, & Aphrica, & Persis, & Oriens, & India, & omnes barbaræ Nationes vnum Christum adorant: vnam obseruant regulam veritatis. Si Authoritas quęritur, Orbis maior est Vrbe. Vbicunque fuerit Episcopus, siue Eugubij, siue Constantinopoli, siue Alexandriæ, siue Tanai, eiusdem meriti, eiusdem est Sacerdotij. Potentia diuitiarum, & paupertatis humilitas, vel sublimiorem, vel inferiorem Episcopum non facit. Cæterùm omnes Apostolorum Successores sunt. Quid mihi profers vnius Vrbis consuetudinem? What doth a Bishop, sauing only the ordering of Ministers, but a Priest may doe the same? Neither may we thinke that the Church of Rome is one, and the Church of all the world beside is another. France, England, Aphrica, Persia, Leuante, India, and all the barbarous Nations worship one Christ, and keepe one rule of the truth. If wee seeke for Authoritie, the whole world is greater then the Citie of Rome. Whersoeuer there be a Bishop, bee it at Eugubium, be it at Rome, be it at Constantinople, be it at Rhegium, be it at Alexandria, bee it at Tanais, they are all of one worthinesse, they are all of one Bishopricke. The power of riches, and the baseneſſe of pouertie maketh not a Bishop either higher or lower. For they are all the Apostles Successours. What bring you me the Custome of Rome, being but one Citie?

Addition. ☞ Hęre M. Harding findeth great fault, for that I haue translated these words Eiusdem Sacerdotij, Of one Bishopricke, and not, as hee would haue it, Of one Priesthood. God wot, a very simple quarrell. Let him take whether he liketh best, if either other of these words shall serue his turne. Erasmus saith, Id temporis idem erat Episcopus, Sacerdos, & Presbyter: These three names at that time were all one. Addition. ☞

Now, if M. Harding will steale away in the darke, as his manner is, and say that S. Hierome spake only of the merit of life, or of the office of Priesthood, let some man tell him that this was no part, neither of the question mooued, nor of the answer of S. Hierome. And S. Hierome in plaine and expresse words saith, Si Authoritas quæritur, If wee seeke (not for merit of life, but) for Authoritie in gouernment, therein the whole world is greater then the Citie of Rome. M. Harding imagineth S. Hierome spake onely of, I know not what: but S. Hierome himselfe saith, hee speaketh namely of Authoritie.

And whereas M. Harding is so highly offended with the changing of this word Merit, into this word Preeminence; and saith farther, that these false Plaiers thought thereby to winne the game; it may please him to remember, that howsoeuer the game goe, S. Hierome himselfe plainly plaid the selfe same game: I meane, that S. Hierome vsing this word (Merit) without question meant (Preeminence) and not Merit of life. For thus he saith, Potentia diuitiarum, & paupertatis humilitas, vel sublimiorem, vel inferiorem Episcopum non facit: The power of riches, and the baseneſſe of pouertie maketh not a Bishop either higher or lower. M. Harding might easily haue seene, that Higher and Lower perteine not to Merit of life, but to Preeminence. Therfore let him looke better vpon his booke before he thus lightly condemne others of corruption.

I grant, it is true, as M. Harding saith, This quarrell first beganne about a particular Custome of the Church of Rome, whereas the Deacons vaunted themselues, and would bee placed aboue the Priests. But hęre M. Harding as his manner is, willinglie dissembleth and suppresseth somewhat. S. Augustine more liuely and fully expresseth the same. For thereof he writeth thus: Quidam qui nomen habet Falcidij, duce stultitia, & Romanæ Ciuitatis iactantia, Leuitas Sacerdotibus, & Diaconos Presbyteris coæquare contendit: One Falcidius, foolishneſſe, and the pride of the Citie of Rome leading him thereto, laboureth to make the Deacons equall with the Priests.

Augu. in queſt. veteris & noui Teſtamenti, quaſt. 101.

This lewd disorder S. Hierome controlleth by the examples of other Churches, and saith, that therein the authoritie of the whole world is greater then the authoritie of the Church of Rome: of which also he seemeth to speake scornefully, and with some disdaine. For thus he saith, Quid mihi profers vnius Vrbis consuetudinem? What bring you mee the Custome of (Rome, being but) one Citie? By which words it seemeth he made small account of the Citie of Rome.

But M. Harding saith, The Primates had authoritie ouer other inferiour Bishops. I grant, they had so. Howbeit, they had it by agreement and custome, but neither by Christ, nor by Peter or Paul, nor by any right of Gods Word. S. Hierome saith, Nouerint Episcopi se magis consuetudine quàm dispositionis dominicæ veritate Presbyteris esse maiores, & in commune debere Ecclesiam regere: Let Bishops vnderstand, that they are aboue Prieſts rather of cuſtome then of any truth or right of Chriſts inſtitution: and that they ought to rule the Church altogether. And againe, Idem ergo eſt Presbyter qui Epiſcopus: & antequam Diaboli inſtinctu ſtudia in Religione fierent, & diceretur in populis, Ego ſum Pauli, Ego Apollo, Ego Cephæ, Communi Presbyterorum Concilio Eccleſiæ gubernabantur: Therfore a Prieſt and a Biſhop are both one thing: and, before that by the inflaming of the Diuell, parts were taken in Religion, and theſe words were vttered among the people, I hold of Paul, I hold of Apollo, I hold of Peter, The Churches were gouerned by the common aduice of the Prieſts. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Secundùm honorum vocabula, quæ iam Eccleſiæ vſus obtinuit, Epiſcopatus Presbyterio maior eſt: The office of a Biſhop is aboue the office of a Prieſt (not by authoritie of the Scriptures, but) after the names of honour, which the cuſtome of the Church hath now obteined.

As for Pope Leo, his owne authoritie in his owne cauſe cannot be great. The Emperour ſaith, Qui iuriſdictioni præeſt, non debet ſibi ius dicere: No iudge may miniſter Law vnto himſelfe. And it is noted thus in the Decrees, Papa non debet eſſe Judex in cauſa propria: The Pope may not be Iudge in his owne cauſe. ff. li. 2. de Iuriſdict. omnium Iudicum. 16. q. 6. conſuetudo in margine.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ And whoſe cauſe pleadeth hee but his owne? It is the Churches cauſe, ſaith M. Harding. But the Church hath euermore repined againſt it. S. Baſil ſaith, Quid auxilij nobis conferet Occidentalium faſtus? What good ſhall the pride of the Weſtern Church doe vs? Noting thereby, as we may reaſonably coniecture, the immoderate pride of the Church of Rome. S. Bernard in like ſort chargeth Pope Eugenius: Ambitio per te in Eccleſia regnare molitur. Murmur loquor & querimoniam communem Eccleſiarum. Truncari ſe clamant, & demembrari: Pride ſtriueth through thee to raigne in the Church. I ſpeake of the murmuring and common complaint of Churches. They complaine they be maimed and diſmembred. Whoſoeuer ſhall conſider how the Popes haue enriched themſelues by the ſpoiles of others, he ſhall eaſily iudge whether they haue ſought their owne, or the things that perteine to Chriſt Ieſus. ☜ M. Harding pag. 168. b. Baſil. ad Euſeb. Epiſt. 8. Bernard. de Conſidera. li. 3.

It is well knowen that the Pope hath ſought for, and claimed this vniuerſall authority theſe many hundred yeeres. Pope Celeſtinus was therefore reproued of pride and worldly Lordlineſſe by the whole Councell of Aphrica.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Where I ſay Pope Celeſtinus was reproued by the whole Councell of Aphrica of pride and Lordlineſſe, M. Harding thinketh I vnderſtand not the place. And therefore he hath taken vpon him to open it better: but ſo as they doe that goe onely by gueſſe. It ſeemeth (ſaith he) that the Pope had ſent his Agents to require temporall aid of the Nobles in Aphrica. Which thing now is called Implorare brachium ſeculare. And this is it that miſliked the Councell. Therfore they ſay to the Pope, We beſeech you ſend not your Clerks, Quibuſcunque potentibus, that is, to any of the great men, leſt wee ſeeme to bring the ſmoakie ſtoutneſſe of the Temporalitie into the Church of Chriſt. By this fauourable conſtruction hee diſchargeth the Pope and his Clergie of pride and ſtatelineſſe, and conueieth ouer the ſame vnto the Nobles, only vpon occaſion of theſe words, Quibuſcunque potentibus. And therfore he ſaith, Whether M. Iewell vnderſtood this place or no, I haue good cauſe to doubt. And yet there appeareth no ſuch great difficulty in the matter, but that a mean learned man may vnderſtand it wel enough with ſmal ſtudie. Notwithſtanding, M. Harding, whether you vnderſtand this place or no, M. Iewell hath no cauſe to doubt. For indeed you vnderſtand it not. The ouer great fauour you beare the Pope, in ſmothing his faults whatſoeuer, and the blinde errour of Peter Crab, that compiled the Councels, hath foully beguiled you. For the true Copies haue not Quibuſcunque potentibus, as you imagine, but Quibuſcunque petentibus, as you might haue learned by Theodorus Balſamon, printed at Paris Anno 1561. and by the words of the ſaid Epiſtle written in Greeke. For thus it is written: Ἐκβιβαζεῖ τὸν μακαριώτατον μῶν αἰτοῦντα μὴ δίδοσθαι ἀναφορὰν. These words, as you know, ſignifie not Lords and Gouernours, but Suppliants and Suters. But, M. Harding, is this the grammercie yee yéeld the Prince? When yée call vpon him for aid and aſſiſtance, will ye ſay, he is proud and ſtately, and bringeth vaine ſtoutneſſe and ſtatelineſſe into the Church? Verily the Prince defending the Church might ſeeme to deſerue ſome greater thankes. I doubt whether there were euer ſuch pride and Lordlineſſe in any Prince worldly, as hath béene found and ſeene in ſundrie Popes. The Pope admitteth the Emperour of Chriſtendome to hold his ſtirrup, to lead his bridle, to beare his traine, to kiſſe his foote. No Emperor euer receiued ſuch ſeruice of the Pope. Doubtleſſe, M. Harding, the Councell of Aphrica meant the ſtoutneſſe of the Clergie, and not Concil. Aphric. cap. 105. ſuperbum ſæculi typhum. M. Harding 170. a. Potentibus. Petentibus. μὴν αἰτοῦντα.

of the Nobles: the pride of Rome, and not of Aphrica. This same is it that, as it is said before, S. Basil calleth Occidentalium Episcoporum fastum. But you, M. Harding, haue turned Petentes into Potentes, that is to say, poore suters into great Noble men. And to shift the Pope from note of statelinesse, ye haue imagined a long Commentarie of your owne, ye wille a great way besides the text. ☜

* Instigante Diabolo.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding saith: That pope Bonifacius 2. condemned that blessed Father S. Augustine by name, or the Councel of Aphrica by solemne sentence, it is an impudent lie. The Answere. These words be ordinarie, M. Harding, and therfore moue me but little. But what talke you of condemning by Name, or by Solemne sentence? I say, Pope Boniface the second condemned S. Augustine. You adde Name and Sentence of your owne. They are not mine. But whether hee condemned S. Augustine, or no, the indifferent Reader may easily iudge. His words be these. Aurelius sometime the Bishop of Carthage began with other his fellow Bishops, by the inticing or leading of the Diuell, to be proud and arrogant against the Church of Rome. Here is Aurelius condemned with his fellowes. But who were his fellowes, M. Harding? Who sate with him in Councell? Who were partners of his pride against the Church of Rome? Why carrie you this away so closely in a cloud? Verily you know right well, and cannot chuse but know, that S. Augustine was one of that Companie, together with Alypius Restitutus, and two hundred and fourténe Bishops besides, as appeareth by their Epistle vnto Bonifacius 1. In the subscriptions of euery of these Councels, of Carthage, of Mileuetum, and of Aphrica, you may finde these words: Ego Augustinus Episcopus Hipponensis subscripsi You see therfore, that Pope Boniface 2. condemned not onely Aurelius the Archbishop of Carthage, but also the great learned Father S. Augustine, and two hundred and fourténe other his fellow Bishops, that sate with him in Councell, and that aboue one hundred yeers after they were dead. But you say, Bonifacius condemned them not for Schismatikes. I grant, by any such expresse words he condemneth them not. Perhaps he condemned them for good Catholikes. Certainely he diuided them from the Communion of the Church: and for so much he condemned them as Schismatikes. Heretikes indéed he calleth them not. And yet Pope Nicolas saith, Qui Romanæ &c. Who so seeketh to make void the Priuiledge of the Church of Rome, falleth into Heresie. For hée breaketh the Faith, whosoeuer withstandeth the Church of Rome, that is the mother of Faith. This, M. Harding, is it that Pope Bonifacius meant, when he said, Aurelius, S. Augustine, and two hundred other learned and godly Bishops in the Councell of Aphrica were led by the Diuell.

The prety nice difference that M. Harding héere imagineth betwéene Enticing & Leading, is not worthy of answer. For no Pope was euer so cruel to condemne a man for that he was inticed, but only for that he yéelded, and was led by the Diuell. ☜

Pope Zosimus, to maintaine this claime, corrupted the holy Councell of Nice. Hilarie the Bishop of Vienna and other learned Bishops of France, for vsurping such vnlawfull authority, charged this same Pope Leo of whom we speake, with pride and ambition.

Leo Epist. 89.

Addition. ☞ And therefore thus Leo complaineth of him: Ipsius quoq; beatissimi Petri reuerentiam verbis arrogantioribus minuit: By his arrogant words he abaseth the reuerence of the most blessed Peter himselfe. By this reuerence due vnto Peter, he meant the reuerence that he claimed to himselfe: for doubtlesse M. Harding himselfe cannot thinke that Hilaries quarrell was against Peter the Apostle of Christ, now reigning in Heauen. It was only against that inordinate ambition and pride of Peters Successors, that euen then sought to rule ouer the whole Church of God. ☜

Addition.

But, gentle Reader, that thou maist the better vnderstand what credit thou oughtest to giue to this Pope Leo, specially setting forth his owne authoritie, I beséech thée consider with what maiestie of words, and how farre aboue measure he aduanceth the authoritie of S. Peter. These be his words: Christus Petrum in consortium individuæ Vnitatis assumpsit: Christ receiued Peter into the companie of the indiuisible Vnity. Authoritate Domini mei Petri Apostoli: By the authoritie (not of Christ, but) of my Lord Peter the Apostle. Deo inspirante, & beatissimo Petro Apostolo: By the inspiration of God, and of S. Peter the Apostle. Deus à Petro, velut à quodam capite, dona sua velut in corpus omne diffudit: God from Peter, as from the Head, hath powred out his gifts into all the bodie. Nihil erit ligatum aut solutum, nisi quod Petrus ligauerit aut soluerit: There shall be nothing bound or loosed, but that Peter shall binde or loose. Nunc quoque Petrus pascit oues, & mandatum Domini pius pastor exequitur: Euen now Peter feedeth the sheepe, and as a godly shepheard he fulfilleth the commandement of his master. Such immoderate and ambitious dignitie Leo

Pope Leo.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ But all these sayings, M. Harding, you say, may well be iustified. Touching the first, whereas Pope Leo saith, Christ tooke Peter into the fellowship of his indiuisible Vnitie, your answer is this, Leo meant thereby an Vnity in Quality, an Vnity in Grace, an Vnity that is proper to Christ himselfe. But the indiuisible Vnity in Substance (you say) he meant not. And yet, this (you say) was my Duelliſh meaning. In good sooth, M. Harding, you do me wrong: I neuer meant it. But thus I say: Giue these words of Pope Leo, the most fauourable construction you can deuise, yet may not the same reasonably be applied to any creature: no not vnto the blessed Angels and Archangels of God. You cannot say, They are in the Fellowship of Christs Vnity. I grant, Peter is called the Rocke. So is Iohn: So is Iames: So are the rest. The learned Father Origen saith, Petra est, quisquis est Discipulus Christi: Whosoeuer is Christs Disciple, hee is the Rocke. Will you say therefore, M. Harding, that Christ receiued Peter to be his fellow, and his fellow in Vnity? And that in such Vnity, as might neuer be dissolued? Wherefore then doth Christ immediatly after call him Satan? For thus he said vnto Peter: Get thee behinde me Satan: Thou vnderstandest not the things that are of God. Shall we say, that being Satan, he was neuertheless in the fellowship of Christs Vnity? Indeed Friar Ambrosius Catharinus in his late declamation openly pronounced in the Councell of Trident, calleth the Blessed Virgin our Lady, Fidelissimam Christi Sociam: Christs most faithfull fellow. And you, M. Harding, vpon warrant of Bernards words haue no doubt to say, The Pope by power is Peter: and by anointing is Christ. This, I trow is, enough. The Pope is Peter: The Pope is Christ. Yet all this, you say, is well spoken, and may be iustified.

Leo saith further, Christ called Peter the Rocke, that the building of the euerlasting Temple might stand in the soundnesse of Peter. Alas, M. Harding, and must this likewise be iustified as the rest? Is this the building of the Church of God? We are built vpon Christ, and not vpon Peter. Christ is the Rocke, that standeth for euer. S. Paul saith, No man can lay other foundation, then that is already laid, which is Christ Iesus.

1. Corint. 10.

1. Corint. 13.

Howbeit, I denie not, but in some reasonable kind of speech, Peter also may be called the Rocke: but so, as Paul, and Iames, and Iohn, and all other the Apostles of Christ may likewise be called, and none otherwise. Origen saith, The words of Christ spoken as vnto Peter were common to all. So likewise S. Hierome, notwithstanding he cal Peter the Head, or Principall of the Apostles, yet he saith, Ecclesia fundatur super omnes Apostolos. Ex æquo super eos Ecclesiæ fortitudo solidatur: The Church is built vpon all the Apostles: The strength of the Church is founded (not only vpon Peter, but) Equally vpon them all. Vpon them all (he saith) the Church is built, and that Equally, that is to say, no more vpon Peter, then vpon the rest. What vanity then is this, M. Harding, to applie that thing only, or specially vnto one, that is equally common vnto so many?

Hieronym. aduersus Iouinianum. lib. 1. Ex æquo.

You say, Christ being himselfe the Rocke, gaue the same title vnto Peter: therfore Leo might iustly say, Christ receiued Peter into the fellowship of his Indiuisible Vnity. This argument hangeth very losely, as it shall appeare. For Christ likewise saith of himselfe: I am the light of the world. And yet he saith to his Disciples, You are the light of the World, giuing them that name, that was proper and peculiar to himselfe. Shall we therefore say, Christ tok all his Disciples into the fellowship of his Indiuisible vnity? If so, where then is Peters Primiledge? Or, what hath Peter aboue the rest? Or, how can these words of Pope Leo be excused? It is to ambitious M. Harding: It is to much. No learned Father euer gaue S. Peter the like title. Iustifie no more then may well be iustified.

Leo Epist. 89.

Here M. Harding in defense of these vnsauorie words, vnaduisedly vttered by Pope Leo, you haue vsed such vnmannerly, and vnnamly speech, as may become no man, but only your selfe. Though I had misconceiued Pope Leo, and taken him otherwise, then he meant, as you haue often the holy Fathers, yet sobriety and grauitie had beene fitting and semely for a Doctour. Much talke you moone, of the Preposition A, first placed, and after repeated, and yet not expressed: of the Ablatiue case ruled, and of the Ablatiue case Absolute, and so you lead the simple along in the darke, he woteth not whither: But indeed you haue purposely corrupted, and mispointed the whole place, as it may easily appeare to any man, that shall compare your Bookes, and Leoes Epistles both together. For Leo hath two Commaes betweene these words, Apostolo, and Decreta sunt, and reades thus, as in all the Bookes, that I haue read, it is easie to see: Obtestamur, vt ea, quæ à nobis, Deo inspirante, & Beatissimo Petro Apostolo, discussis, probatisque nunc omnibus causis, decreta sunt, seruetis. By which manner of pointing, it may appeare to any man, that is able to iudge, that theſe woꝛds, Deo inſpirante, & Beatiſſimo Petro Apoſtolo, are gouerned by one rule of conſtruction, and go together: As if in plainer ſoꝛt the whole ſentence were laid thus: Obteſtamur, vt ſeruetis ea, quæ diſcuſſis, probatiſque omnibus cauſis, decreta ſunt à nobis, Deo inſpirante, & Beatiſmo Petro Apoſtolo: Wee beſeech you, to keepe thoſe things, which, all cauſes being diſcuſſed, and proued, haue beene decreed by vs, by the inſpiration of God, and the moſt bleſſed Peter the Apoſtle. Neither is there any Gꝛammarian, that, the points thus ſtanding, as they be in all Bookes both pꝛinted, and wꝛitten, can expound it otherwiſe.

Now M. Harding, behold Leoes woꝛds, as you haue ſtalled them. Thus you wꝛite: Obteſtamur, vt ea, quæ à nobis Deo inſpirante, & Beatiſſimo Petro Apoſtolo decreta ſunt, ſeruetis. Marry, now it is, as you would haue it: But yet is it nothing, as Leo left it. Lay theſe places together: view your woꝛds againe. Where is the Comma after this woꝛd, Apoſtolo? Where is the other Comma after this woꝛd cauſis? Why haue you bꝛought theſe woꝛds Apoſtolo, and Decreta ſunt, ſo nére together? Could you cut off two Commaes together in one place, and ſo cunningly beguile your ſimple Reader? Indéed, ye were aſhamed of the errour: The ſenſe was blaſphemous; you thought it moſt wiſdome, to leaue out the points, and to alter your Booke, and to ſhift away Blaſphemy by plaine coꝛruption. I would neuer haue made ſo great account of ſo ſimple reckonings, had not you, M. Harding, giuen the occaſion.

Howbeit, let vs yeeld vnto you, and contrary to the credit of all your Bookes pꝛinted, oꝛ wꝛitten, New oꝛ Old, let vs follow your owne reading, and ſay thus, Obteſtamur, vt ſeruetis ea, quæ Decreta ſunt à nobis, & Beatiſſimo Petro Apoſtolo. Beware ye fall not from one errour into another. Héere firſt the Pope placeth himſelfe beſoꝛe S. Peter. Foꝛ thus he ſaith, It is decreed by me, and by S. Peter. This perhaps is no great Blaſphemie. It may rather ſeeme to be ſome lacke of good maners. Yet is it not likely, that Leo, being ſo holy a man, as M. Harding imagineth, no, though he were neuer ſo much ambitious, would ſet S. Peter behinde, and himſelfe beſoꝛe. That had béene enough foꝛ Pope Alexander 3. who, when he had ſet his foot in Fredericus the Emperoꝛs necke, and the Emperour had told him, that he yéelded that honour, not vnto him being Pope, but vnto Peter: Yes, ſaid the Pope, Et mihi & Petro: Thou ſhalt ſtoupe to me, and to Peter: giuing the firſt place vnto himſelfe.

Beſides this, by M. Hardings conſtruction, Leo imagineth, that S. Peter is alwaies pꝛeſent with the Pope, and ſitteth with him in Conſiſtoꝛy, oꝛ in Clauſet, diſcuſſing of Caſes, and deuiſing of Lawes. I will not ſay, that this is blaſphemie. Perhaps I may thinke, it is great follie. Foꝛ what part of Peter is it, that ſitteth there? His ſoule is in heauen, his bodie in the graue. If he be there neither in ſoule, noꝛ in body, how is hée there? Oꝛ, if S. Peter be there, and that in ſuch oꝛder, that he is able to heare cauſes, to make Decrées, and to gouerne the Church, what néed hath he then of any Succeſſour? A Succeſſour hath no place, while the Predeceſſor is pꝛeſent. By ſuch fables, M. Harding, and outrage of ſpéech, ye abuſe the poꝛe people, and beare them in hand, that, whatſoeuer is done by the Pope, it is done by S. Peter.

But, if Peter be yet ſtill in Rome, and make Lawes now, as when hée was liuing, wherefoꝛe then M. Harding, haue you wꝛitten thus in your late Confutation: Chꝛiſt now requireth vs, not to obey Peter and Paul, but him that ſitteth in their chaire? Theſe be your woꝛdes you may not foꝛget them. If S. Peter be now in Rome, and make Lawes foꝛ you, as you ſay, how can you ſay, You are not bound to obey him? If ye be not bound to obey him, how can you tell vs, he maketh you Lawes? Certainely it is meet, that the Lawmaker be euer obeied. But we muſt pardon you, M. Harding: ye walke in the darke, and ſay, and vnſay, ye know not what.

In the life of this Leo, it is wꝛitten thus: Leo wꝛot an Epiſtle againſt the Heretike Eutyches, and doubting the ability of his owne learning, he laid the ſame Epiſtle vpon Peters Altar, and faſted forty dayes, and beſought S. Peter, that if there were any error therein, he would correct it with his owne hands. The fable is true, Peter came downe from Heauen with pen and inke, as I trow, and coꝛrected it. After the foꝛtieth day the Epiſtle was perfect.

Likewise he writeth to Theoctistus, I haue sent thee S. Peters blessing, I meane a Key taken from his blessed Body, that by that same Key you may haue Life, both present and euerlasting. Now, M. Harding, if S. Peter, can sit with the Pope, Write letters, Discusse Causes, Gouerne Priests, Rule the Church, Fæd the Flocke, Bleſſe Cowles, Coats, and Keies, and Bind, and Loose, why may hée not also inspire the Faithfull? Greg. l. 6. ep. 23

Take héd, in shunning one Blasphemie, ye commit not another. Shift Pope Leoes words, as you shall thinke best: Whatsoeuer sense ye shall picke out of them, it will be Blasphemie. Vt per eam vos, qui eum timetis & diligitis, & præsentem salutem & eternã habere valeatis, Epi. Iuly 1. Extr. de Elect. Fundamenta. Concil. Aphric. cap 105.

Some others haue thought, that aswell these Epistles of Leo, as also others moe, of other the ancient Bishops of Rome, haue béene interlaced, and falsified by the ambitious Popes, that followed afterward. Which thing is the more likely, both for that the selfe same words be likewise alleged, partly vnder the name of Pope Iulius, partly vnder the name of Pope Nicolas; and also for that Pope Zosimus, which was the fift before Leo, as it is said before, doubted not, for an aduantage, to falsifie the Holy Councell of Nice.

Verily, when the Councell of Chalcedon had offered vnto this same Leo, the title of Vniuersall Bishop, as Gregory witnesseth, he vtterly refuseth it, and would none of it. Gregor. lib 4. epist. 36.

Now touching that S. Hierome saith, the poore Bishop of Eugubium, and the Bishop of Rome are both of one authority (for of authoritie he speaketh, as it is prooued before) S. Cyprian also saith the same, that the authority of the Bishops in Aphrica is as good, as that authority of the Bishop of Rome: and calleth them all Lewd and Desperate Persons, that would, as M. Harding doth, say the contrary. Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist. 3. Aſi pancis desperatis, & perditis.

Therfore, whereas M. Harding saith, By very order of Christ himselfe it hath béene ordained, that matters touching Faith, and Religion be referred to that One Prince of Pastors, who sitteth on the Chaire of Peter, the highest Bishop, and that the same hath alwaies béene done, and obserued from the Apostles time vntill our daies; hé bringeth vs two manifest Untruths together, without any manner proofe at all, onely auouched vpon himselfe. For it appeareth not, that Christ euer toke this Order, or euer made any such mention, either of any such Prince of Pastors, or of Peters Chaire. And in the Councell of Aphrica it was decréed, that no matters should be remoued from thence to Rome. The words of the Councell are these, Ad transmarina Iudicia qui putauerit appellandum, a nullo intra Aphricam in Communionem suscipiatur: Whosoeuer shall thinke he ought to appeale to the Iudgements beyond the Seas (that is, to the Bishop of Rome) let no man within Aphrica receiue him to the Communion. Concil. Aphrican. cap 52.

Equality of Bishops

Touching that M. Harding calleth the Pope the Prince of Pastors, he might haue remembred, that the right of this name belongeth onely vnto Christ. S. Peter saith, That when Christ the Prince of Pastors shall appeare, ye may receiue the vncorruptible Crowne. Now to infeoffe the Pope with Christs peculiar Titles, a man might thinke it were great blasphemie. Certainely S. Cyprian saith, Nemo nostrûm Episcopum se esse Episcoporum constituit: None of vs appointeth himselfe Bishop of Bishops. Much lesse the Prince of all Pastors. And in the Councell of Constantinople it was decréed, that the Bishop there should haue euen and equall authority with the Bishop of Rome. 1. Peter 5. In Concil. Carthag. Conc. Constantinop. 2. ca. 36. τὸν ἴσον πρεσβεῖα τῇ τῆς παλαιᾶς ῥώμης θρόνῳ. Cyprian. De Simpl. Prælat.

As for the other authority of S. Cyprian, M. Harding saith, we vnderstood it not: and therfore he willeth vs to loke better vpon our Bookes. The counsell is good. But if M. Harding wil grant, that S. Cyprian himselfe knew, what he himselfe wrote, & vnderstood his owne meaning, it shall be sufficient. Verily the words that hé vseth, séeme not so darke. For thus he writeth: Episcopatus vnus est, cuius a singulis in solidum pars tenetur. Ecclesia vna est, quæ in multitudinem latiùs incremento fœcunditatis extenditur: Quomodo Solis multi radij, sed lumen vnum: & rami arboris multi, sed robur vnum: The Bishopricke is One, a part whereof of euery seuerall Bisoop is possessed in whole. The Church is one, which by her great increase is extended vnto many. As in the Sunne the beames be many, but the light is one: and in a Tree the boughes be many, but the body is one.

If there appeare any great darkenesse, or doubt in these words, S. Cyprian himselfe in other places thus expoundeth his owne meaning in plainer wise: Vna est Ecclesia à Christo per totum mundum in plura membra diuisa: Item Episcopatus vnus, Episcoporum multorum concordi numerositate diffusus: There is one Church diuided by Christ into many Members thorowout the world: Likewise one Bishopricke powred farre abroad by the agreeable multitude of many Bishops. Againe, Ecclesia Vna est, & connexa: & cohærentium sibi inuicem Sacerdotum Glutino copulata: There is one Church ioined, and fastened in One, by the consent of Bishops agreeing together. Againe, Quando oramus, non pro Vno oramus, sed pro toto populo: Quia totus populus Vnum sumus: When we pray, we pray not for One, but for Cyprian. lib. 4. epist. 2. Cyprian. lib. 4. epist. 9. Cyprian in Orat. Dominica.

for the whole people. For we the whole people are but One. Againe, immediately before these words, which, M. Harding saith, we are not able to vnderstand, he saith: Hanc Vnitatem firmiter tenere, & vendicare debemus, maximè Episcopi, qui in Ecclesia præsidemus: vt Episcopatum quoque ipsum Vnum, & Indiuisum probemus: This Vnitie must we hold, specially Bishops, that sit as Rulers in the Church: that we may declare our Bishopricke to be One, and without diuision. Againe,

And in this sense S. Hierome saith, Communi Presbyterorum consilio Ecclesiæ gubernabantur: The Churches were ordered (not by the Vniuersall authority of the Bishop of Rome, but, by common aduice of the Priests. Likewise S. Cyprian saith, Idcirco copiosum est corpus Sacerdotũ, concordię mutuę glutine, atq; vnitatis vinculo copulatum, vt si quis ex Collegio nostro Hæresim facere, & Gregem Christi lacerare, ac vastare tentauerit, subueniant cæteri: Therfore is the body or company of Priests so copious, ioined together with Consent, Concord and Vnity that if any one of our Company enterprise to raise an Heresie, and to scatter and waste the Flocke of Christ, the rest should helpe. So likewise S Basil: Interrogate Patres vestros, & renuntiabunt vobis, quod, etiamsi loci situ diuisæ inter se sint parœciæ, tamen veluti coronamento quodam vnitæ, vnaque sententia gubernatæ fuerunt. Assidua quidem populi fuit inter se commixtio: Ipsi verò Pastores tanta præditi fuerunt mutua inter ipsos charitate, vt alius alio Præceptore, ac Duce vsi fuerint: Aske of your Fathers, and they will tel you, that although Bishopricks be diuided, and sundred by distance of place, yet were they euer knit together as with a garland, and euer ruled by one aduise. Indeed the people was euer mingled together: But the Bishops were also ioined in charity, that euery of them was content to be taught, and to be led by other.

Basil. ad Neocæsarien. epist. 75. in ipso fine.

Addition ☞ Yea, M. Harding, dissembling al other authorities, and prowes by me alleged, ye take hold only of S. Basil, seking meanes to shadow one plaine Sentence of that holy Father, by the manifest corruption of another. S. Basils meaning (you say) may best be knowen by S Basil himselfe writing thus to Athanasius: Visum est vtile scribere ad Episcopum Romanum vt consideret res nostras & iudicij sui decretum interponat: vt, quoniam de communi, & conciliari decreto aliquos inde huc amandari difficile est, ipse ina authoritate negotium componat. Which whole sentence being by you vntruely Latined, it hath pleased you to English thus: It hath seemed good vnto vs, to write vnto the Bishop of Rome, that he wil consider our cases, (or visit vs. for so the Greeke word ἐπισκέψω, may be translated, and to determine the matter by his sentence. that for almuch as it is hard for any to be sent hither from thence by authority of a common and Synodicall Decree, hee take the matter into his owne hand, and by his authority strike the stroke. These be S Basils words, M. Harding, so miserably maimed by you, and so set out of ioint, as wel in the Latine, as in the English, that it is pity to behold them. And yet, as though the case were cleere of your side, you say further, Why should S Basil being a Greeke of the East Church, thinke it conuenient to write to the Bishop of Rome, being in the West, to consider of, or to visit them of the East, (for so to the Greeke word, ἐπισκέψω, as you say, signifieth) their state, & to send foorth a Decree of his iudgment, & to giue sentence, vnlesse he agnised the prerogatiue of the Bishop of Rome? In the end you conclude thus: The more yee sturre the matter, the moore it turneth still to your shame. Such is the maidenly modesty of your talke.

Al Harding fol. 180. a.

You say, Why should S. Basil desire the Bishop of Rome to visit them of the East, to send foorth the Decree of his iudgement, and to giue sentence? Nay, nay, M. Harding, why should you thus allege Greeke Authors, if you know them not? or if you know them, why should you thus corrupt them? Verily in these few words you haue much betraied your want of skill. First δόσιν γνώμην you expound thus: To determine the matter by Decree, or by Sentence. And why so? doth δόσις signifie to Determine, or is, γνώμη a Decree, or Sentence in iudgement? Surely, M. Harding, δόσις γνώμην, is nothing else, but to giue aduice, or to aide with counsell. These words Αὐτοπρᾶξαι περὶ τῶν πεπραγμένων you expound thus, To take the matter into his owne hands, and by his authority to Strike the Stroke. And why so? Who taught you this exposition? Euery child could haue told you, that αὐτοπρᾶξαι signifieth neither striking nor stroking. S. Basils meaning is this, that forasmuch as a Councell of all the partes of the West Church could not bee gathered vpon the sudden, and the Church of Græcia stood in need of present helpe, that therefore the Bishoppe of Rome in the meane while should vse his owne discretion, and intreat some of the Western Bishops Bishops to trauell vnto them. And so much in this place signifieth the Greeke word ἐπιδημοῦσι.

Equalitie of Bishops.

But ἐπιδημεῖν (you say) signifieth to visit. So doth Bubo signifie a nightingale. Twice ye haue vsed this word ἐπιδημεῖν in one place: not only in inclosing it in your text, but also pricking it in your Margine, that your simple Reader might thinke there were some mystery in your Greeke. But I pray you, M. Harding, in all the Greeke Bookes, that euer you read, where euer saw you ἐπιδημεῖν in the Indefinite of the Infinitiue Mode? If ye euer once saw it, I will yeeld vnto you. If you neuer saw it once, why haue you vsed it twice, and that euen together in one place? ἐπιδημεῖν, ye should haue said, M. Harding: ἐπιδημεῖ, it is, and not ἐπιδημεῖν. And yet, ἐπιδημεῖν in this place is not to Ride in Visitation, as you imagine, but to consider of the miserable state of the East Church, and to be carefull for it. The true, and common translation is this, Visum est mihi conuenientem, vt scribatur Episcopo Romæ, vt, quæ hic geruntur, consideret, detque consilium: Et quoniam difficile est, vt communi, ac Synodico Decreto aliqui illinc mittantur, ipse sua authoritate in hac causa vsus viros eligat ad ferendas itineris molestias accommodos: It seemeth good vnto me, that we write vnto the Bishop of Rome, that he consider our estate, and giue vs counsell: and, forasmuch as it is a hard matter, for any to be sent hither from thence by the common Decree of a Councell, that he, vsing his owne authority or discretion in the case, chuse such men, as be able to beare the trauell of the iourney, &c. Basil. epist. 52. ad Athanas.

Now, M. Harding, compare your translation and this together: here is neither Visitation of the Church, nor Determination by Sentence, nor Striking of Strokes. Ye could not haue missed so often times in one thing without some study. If I listed to follow some part of your eloquence, I could say, Fie, and shame, & I know not what, as you do.

Yet you say, S. Basil thought it good, that the Bishop of Rome should consider their estate, & send forth a Decree of his Iudgement. O M. Harding, grosse error and ignorance maketh no proofe. But bee it, that all this were true: yet what Decree of iudgement could the Pope send forth? he had heard neither the one part, nor the other, but was a meere stranger to their cases. And thinke you, he would determine matters, before he knew them? So might he cast Christ, and quit Barabbas. Hereof Basil himselfe writeth thus: Quid auxilij conferet nobis Occidentalium fastus? qui quid in causa veri sit, neque sciunt, neque discere sustinent: falsis verò suspicionibus præoccupati eadem nunc quoque faciunt, quæ antea in causa Marcelli, cum illis, qui veritatem annuntiabant, contentiosè egerunt, & Hæresim interea per seipsos corroborarunt. Ego quidem ipse non publica formula, sed priuatim volebam scribere ipsorum Coryphæo: de Ecclesiasticis quidem rebus nihil, nisi tantum vt admonerem, ipsos neque veritatem rerum nostrarum scire, neque viam, qua doceri possint, admittere: What shall the pride of the Western Bishops auaile vs? For neither doe they know, nor will they learne to know, the truth of our matters: but being led away with vaine suspicions, they doe euen now, as they did before in the case of Marcellus. For then they cauilled contentiously with them that told the truth, and by meane thereof imboldened and confirmed Heresie. Indeed for mine owne part, I was contented to write vnto the chiefe or Principall of them all, (that is, to the Pope) not by any publike instrument, but mine owne priuate letter. Of matters Ecclesiasticall I would write nothing, but onely to tel him, that neither they doe know the truth of our cases, nor wil abide the way, whereby they may know it. This, M. Harding, is that Decree, and Determination of iudgement, S. Basil found in the Pope. Neither did he know the case, nor would he learne how to know it. Therefore Chrysostome saith, Non est congruum, vt hi qui sunt in Ægypto, iudicent eos, qui sunt in Thracia: It is not meet, that they that bee in Ægypt, should be Iudges ouer them, that dwell in Thracia. S. Cyprian also likewise saith, Æquum, iustumque est, vt vniuscuiusque causa illic audiatur, vbi crimen admissum est: It is good reason that euery mans cause be heard there, where the fault was committed.

But you will say, S. Basil thought it good, to write to the Pope. I grant you: but in such sort, as I haue told you. Againe ye say, Why should Basil so doe vnlesse he knew the priuiledge of the Pope? How followeth this, M. Harding? Will you beare vs in hand, that euery Bishop vnto whom S. Basil wrote to like purpose, had therefore the like priuiledge? At the same time thus he wrote, not onely to the Pope, but also to all the Bishops of the West: Quantam poteritis consolationem, & opem laborantibus, & afflictis Ecclesijs afferre ne detrectetis: Forestow not to helpe our miserable afflicted Churches with such aid, and comfort, as you may Likewise he writeth to the Bishops of France and Italy, Wee haue good hope, that as soone as we shall doe you to vnderstand the cause of our griefs, you will be moued to seeke helpe for vs.

authoritie in the gouernment of the Church. So writeth S. Basil vnto Athanasius, Quanto Ecclesiarum, &c. The more the maladies of our Churches doe abound, the more wee all turne our selues to thy goodnesse, beleeuing, that the comfort of our griefes, resteth onely in thy defense. For thou by the power of thy prayers, and by the skill of gouerment, art thought able to deliuer vs from this horrible tempest. Thou carriest the care of all Churches: thou disputest, thou warnest, thou writest, thou sendest. We flie vnto thee, as vnto the Head of all: we vse thee, as our Counseller, and as the Leader, and Prince of our causes. The whole state of the Church of Antioch dependeth of thee. Thou maist instruct some, represse others, and make them quiet, and restore the strength of the Church. Such power and authoritie S. Basil giueth to Athanasius. Yet was Athanasius the Bishop of Alexandria, and not of Rome. Had you well considered these things, M. Harding, ye would not so rashly haue thus concluded, S. Basil thought it good to write thus, and thus, to the Bishop of Rome; Ergo, He confessed that the Bishop of Rome had a Priuilege aboue all others.

Basil. ad Episc. Occident. epist. 74.

All this notwithstanding, you say, Why should S. Basil thinke it conuenient, to write to the Bishop of Rome &c. The Answere is easie. S. Basil himselfe saith, Quæ nos loquimur, multis suspecta sunt &c. What soeuer we our selues say, it is suspected of many, as if for our owne priuate quarels we would keepe them in awe. But you (being strangers) the further ye dwell from them, the more credit ye haue with our people. This was it, M. Harding, that S. Basil required of the Pope. Here is no Vniuersall Power, no Priuiledge, no Decree, no Determination by Sentence, no Striking of Strokes. Aduise your selfe better hereafter of your authorities, before you allege them.

Therefore, as many Faiths in sundry Faithfuls, are but One Faith: As many Churches are but one Church: As many Baptismes are but One Baptisme: Euen so, saith S. Cyprian, many Bishoprickes are but One Bishopricke: and therein, as well the Bishop of Rome, as also euery other seuerall Bishop, hath his portion.

I say, the Bishopricke of Rome is not this whole Bishopricke, but a part; not the body of the Sunne, but a beame: not the stemme of the Tree, but a branch.

And thus, by S. Cyprians minde, neither doth One Bishop hold of another: Nor is any One Bishop Head of the whole: Nor is One Bishop all in all: but all Bishops are onely One.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 6.

And according to the iudgement of the Nicene Councell, we say, that the Bishop of Rome hath no more iurisdiction ouer the Church of God, then the rest of the Patriarkes, either of Alexandria, or of Antioch haue.

M. Harding.

If it be a shame to belie the Diuell, according to the old Prouerbe, what is it to belie the Church of God represented in the Nicene Councell?

The sixth Canon among all others of the Nicene Councell is that you ground your surmisse vpon, I know well. For that hath beene wrested to your purpose by certaine of your side. And the same rightly construed (a) maketh most against you. For it seemeth to acknowledge the Bishop of Rome his Supremacy and soueraignetie of iudgement ouer other Patriarkes. These be the words of the Canon rightly Englished: Let the ancient custome continue in force which is in Egypt, Lybia and Pentapoli: so that the Bishop of Alexandria haue Power ouer them all. Quandoquidem etiam Episcopo Romano hoc consuetum est. For asmuch as the Bishop of Rome hath thus vsed. Likewise in Antiochia also, and in other Prouinces, let the Churches keepe their Prerogatiue. What can be gathered of the words of this Canon, but that for ratifying the iurisdiction of the Patriarkes of Alexandria, and Antiochia, the Fathers of the Nicene Councell thought good to alter nothing: but to follow the ancient custome of Old time vsed & allowed by the Bishop of Rome? For it is asmuch to say, as this: Inasmuch as (b) the Bishop of Rome hath beene woont from the beginning to grant to the Bishop of Alexandria iurisdiction ouer Egypt, Lybia, and Pentapoli; the (c) Nicene Councell following his authoritie and rule, or at the least his vsage, willeth and granteth, that the said Bishop retaine and keepe his ancient right. For if the Bishop of Alexandria had not receaued such iurisdiction by authority and grant of the Bishop of Rome of old time, what reason should haue mooued those Fathers, for confirmation thereof to allege the custome of the Bishop of Rome? And in that case, (d) whereto pertained the addition of the cause, Quia Episcopus Romanus hoc consueuit, Because this was the Bishop of Rome his custome? If this had not beene their meaning, they would neuer so haue spoken. For what was his custome other, (e) then to allot those prouinces to the Bishop of Alexandria? If any other thing be alleged to haue beene his maner & custome, besides that the words of the Canon beare it not, what had that bin to the purpose, what soeuer it be, for cause & confirmation of the Bishop of Alexandria his iurisdiction ouer Egypt Lybia & Pentapoli? Alledge you Defender, for old custome, of the Bishop of Rome what else you list so that you make no violence to the Canon. and therupon make your Argument, inferring of your allegation the Conclusion, (Ergo, the Bishop of Alexandria ought to haue iurisdiction ouer Egypt Lybia, & Pentapoli) and you shall find it to be such an argument, as any Sotte would be ashamed to make.

Against this if it shall like you to Replie, we warn you before, that neither ye take aduantage of a doubtful interpretatiō, as we know that Canon to be found in diuers Bookes not so plainly translated, & therefore

(a) Vntruth. For the expresse words are plaine to the contraty.

(b) Vntruth. Vaine and childish.

(c) This exposition is like a sick mans dreame

(d) O folly! The words are plain: Qui Episcopo Romano paritis mos est.

(e) Vntruth. For the bishop of Rome neuer had power to allot Prouinces: but himselfe had his Prouince allotted him as well as others.

The sixth Canon of the Nicene Councell declareth to make against the Defender.

The Coūcel of Nice

therefore we require you to ſtand to the Originall, as it is in Greeke: neither that ye defend your lie with the wreſted Expoſition of Theodore Balſamon, who hath written Greeke Commentaries vpon the Canons of the Councels, ſithence the Schiſme of the Greekes, himſelfe being a ſchiſmaticke. For he being a Greeke borne, and prickt with the hatred of his Nation againſt the Latine Church, & ſpecially the See of Rome, in the expoſition of that ſixt Canon of the Nicene Councell ſwarueth both from learning, and alſo from reaſon.

Theodore Balſamon.

A ve Recipiatur.

Indeed it is a ſhame to belie any creature, for that lying is ſhamefull of it ſelfe. And therefore M. Harding, ye might do much better to vſe it leſſe. You haue brought vs here an Expoſition of the councell of Nice, ſuch as I thinke from that time vntill this time hath ſeldom bene heard of. You ſay, the Biſhop of Romes cuſtome was to giue iuriſdiction to the Patriarks of Alexandria, of Antioch, and of Hieruſalem: and that they had none authoritie of gouernment, but only ſo much as was limited and allowed by him. And this, you ſay, was the only and vndoubted meaning of that Councell. This fantaſy is not here auouched by any ancient Doctour, or learned Father. Therefore we muſt thinke whatſoeuer it be, it is your owne. And weighing the ſtrangeneſſe of the ſame, I muſt néds ſay of you as S. Hierome ſaid ſometime of one Rheticius in the like caſe, Rheticius eloquens quidem eſt, ſed ineptus Interpres: Rheticius is an eloquent man indeed; and yet but a fond interpreter. For it is certaine, and knowen euen vnto children, that the Biſhop of Rome, before the Councell of Nice, had neither ſuch cuſtome of Superioritie, nor ſuch dealing of Iuriſdictions. Pope Pius Secundus ſaith, Ante Nicenam Synodum vnuſquiſq; ſibi vixit, & paruus reſpectus ad Romanam Eccleſiam habebatur: Before the Councell of Nice euery Biſhop lined to himſelfe, & there was then ſmall regard had of the Church of Rome.

Hieronym. ad Marcellam.

Æneas Syluius Epiſt. 288.

As for our ſottiſh Argument, ſuch as by your iudgement any ſot would be aſhamed to make, I may leaue them well to you, M. Harding: not for that ye lacke them greatly, but for that, as it appeareth by your bookes, ye know beſt how to vſe them.

Touching the firſt Canon of this Councell, which you imagine is ſo darke and doubtfull, I truſt it ſhall be plainly and clerely opened by them that were neuer hitherto accounted ſottiſh.

The words thereof are plaine enough. The ſenſe is this: The whole bodie of Chriſtendome was diuided into foure Patriarkſhips: whereof the firſt was Rome: the ſecond Alexandria: the third Antioch: the fourth Hieruſalem. And each of theſe was limited and bounded within it ſelfe: Alexandria to haue the ouerſight ouer Egypt and Pentapolis: Antioch ouer Syria: Hieruſalem ouer Iurie: Rome ouer Italie, and other Churches of the Weſt. And herein we haue the Expoſition of Theodorus Balſamon, that liued fiue hundred yeres agoe, and was Patriarke of Antioch, and, as ſome of M. Hardings friends haue thought, a man of great learning. Yet foraſmuch as M. Harding here vtterly refuſeth him, not only as a Schiſmaticke, but alſo as a man void of learning and reaſon, let vs therefore ſee ſome others.

Lipomanus in Prefatione.

Copus Dial. 166. Balſamonem virum certè doctum.

Addition ☞ Addition ☞ Heere, ſaith M. Harding, Searche out, M. Iewell, why was Rome the firſt, and not rather the ſecond, or the third? Thereby ſhall you perceiue how your ſelfe vnwares are taken in your owne ſnare. This matter M. Harding is eaſily ſearched, and ſoone found. Indeed your forged Anacletus ſaith, The Apoſtolike Church of Rome hath the Preeminence ouer all Churches, not from the Apoſtles of Chriſt, but from Chriſt himſelfe. And therefore full prettily he expoundeth the words of Chriſt, Super hanc Petram, id eſt, Super Eccleſiam Romanam, ædificabo Eccleſiam meam: Vpon this Rocke, that is to ſay, vpon the Church of Rome, will I build my Church. But ſuch vaine forgeries make ſimple proofe. The very cauſe why the Church of Rome was placed in order and dignitie before all others, was not the word of Chriſt, as you imagine, but the Empire and honour of that City, which then in reſpect of worldly glorie, was the Ladie, and head of the world. And therefore in the councell of Chalcedon it is written thus: Sedi Veteris Romæ propter Imperium Ciuitatis illius Patres conſequenter Priuilegia reddiderunt: The Fathers orderly gaue the Priuilege of chiefties to the See of Old Rome, becauſe that Citie had the Empire. And immediately after it followeth further, Et eadem intentione permoti æqua ſanctiſſimæ Sedi Nouæ Romæ Priuilegia tribuerunt, rationi congruum iudicantes, vt Ciuitas illa ornata Imperio & Senatu, æquis Seniori Regiæ Romæ Priuilegijs frueretur: The ſaid holy Fathers, moued with like conſideration, gaue the like Priuileges to the moſt holy See of Conſtantinople, which it called New Rome, thinking it agreeable vnto reaſon, that the ſame Citie of Conſtantinople, being honoured with Empire and Senate, as Rome was, ſhould enioy the ſame Priuileges that Rome enioied.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio 16. pag. 936.

The like heereof is written in the Councell of Conſtantinople. This, this, M. Harding, was the cauſe, and not the voice of Chriſt our Sauiour, as you would tell vs. For Chriſt neuer ſpake one word of the Cities, either of Conſtantinople, or of Rome, or of the firſt See, or of the ſecond. ☜

Nilus de Primatu Romani Pontificis. οὐκ ἐκ τῆσδε τῆς ἀποφάσεως ἔστιν.

The Coūcel of Nice

Nilus a Greeke Authour hereof writeth thus: Sed vt etiam liquidiùs appareat Papam non imperare alijs omnibus Episcopis, legatur sextus Canon Synodi Nicænæ: quo disertè precipitur, vt alijs Ecclesijs Alexandrinus, alijs Romanus, alijs Antiochenus præsit: vt non liceat alteri alterius Prouinciam inuadere: That it may the more plainly appeare that the Pope hath no gouernment ouer all other Bishops, read the sixt Canon of the counsell of Nice. There it is expressly commanded that the Bishop of Alexandria shall haue the rule ouer certaine Churches: and the Bishop of Rome ouer certaine: and the Bishop of Antioch likewise ouer certaine: and that it be not lawfull for any one of them to inuade aonthers Iurisdiction. Farther hee saith, Quòd si quis suis non contentus, aliena appetit, ille sanè meritò, & consuetudinis, & sanctorum Canonum violator haberi debet: If any one (of these Patriarkes) not contented with his owne, craue Dominion ouer others, (as doth the Pope) he ought of right to be called a breaker both of the custome, and also of the holy Canons.

Ruffinus Eccle. Hist. li. 1. ca. 6. Suburbicarum Ecclesiarum.

If M. Harding will yet say this exposition is sottish, let vs see in what sort others haue expounded the same. Ruffinus opening the same Canon, saith thus: Statutum est in Concilio Nicæno, vt apud Alexandriam, & in Vrbe Roma vetusta consuetudo seruetur: vt vel ille Ægypti, vel hic Suburbicarum Ecclesiarum solicitudinem gerat: It was decreed in the Councell of Nice, that in Alexandria, and in Rome the old custome should be kept: that the Bishop of Alexandria should rule ouer Egypt: and the Bishop of Rome (not ouer all the world, but) ouer the Churches of his Suburbs.

Conc. Constantinop. 2. cap. 36. τὴν ἴσην ἀπολαῦσαν πρεσβείων Nicephor. lib. 12. cap. 13.

Likewise it was afterward ordered in the Councell holden at Constantinople: Definimus Sedi Constantinopolitanæ paria Iura & Priuilegia cum Sede Veteris Romæ: We decree that the See of Constantinople shall haue Rights and Priuileges Equall (and one) with the See of Old Rome

Therefore Nicephorus saith, Romano & Constantinopolitano Episcopo ex æquo paria sunt & dignitatis præmia, & honorum iura: The Titles of dignities, and rights of honour giuen to the Bishop of Rome, and the Bishop of Constantinople, are One, and Equall.

Athanas. ad solitariam vitam agentes. Cod. de Sacrosanctis ecclesijs Omni Innouatione. Concil. Aphrican. cap. 105. Nilus de Primatu Papæ.

For this cause Athanasius saith, Romano erat Metropolis Romanæ Ditionis: Rome was the mother Church (not of the whole world, but) of the Romane Iurisdiction. In like sort the Emperour Iustinian saith, Ecclesia Vrbis Constantinopolitanæ Romæ Veteris Prærogatiua iactatur: The Church of Constantinople enioieth the Prerogatiue, or Priuilege of the Church of Old Rome. So likewise S. Augustine and other learned and godly Bishops in the councell of Aphrica vnderstood the same Canon. And therefore they called the Popes presumption, crauing Vniuersall Iurisdiction ouer all the World, Fumosum Sæculi Typhum, The smokie pride of the World. To conclude, Nilus saith thus: Nunc, cùm aliæ Regiones assignatæ sint Romano, aliæ Alexandrino, aliæ Constantinopolitano, non magis hi sub illo sunt, quàm ille sub hisce: Seeing there be certaine Countries appointed out for the Bishop of Rome, certaine for the Bishop of Alexandria, and certaine for the Bishop of Constantinople, they are now no more subiect vnto him then he vnto them.

But all these perhaps were Sots, and their sayings Sottish: and no man is able rightly to vnderstand these matters, but he that can say, Consuetudo is Latine for a Commission: or, Mos parilis for Vniuersall Iurisdiction.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision. 7

And as for the Bishop of Rome, who now calleth all matters before himselfe alone, except he do his duty as he ought to do, except he minister the Sacraments, except he instruct the people, except he warne them & teach them, we say that he ought not of right once to be called a Bishop, or so much as an Elder. For a Bishop, as saith Augustine, is a name of labour, and not of honour: that the man that seeketh to haue preeminence, and not to profit, may vnderstand himselfe to be no Bishop.

M. Harding.

An euill Bishop loseth not thereby of a Bishop, though he loseth thereby of a Bishop. Vide Aug. contra Epist. Parmen. ca. Tom. 7. 1. Tim. 3.

Neither the Bishop of Rome, nor any other Bishop is worthie of the name of a Bishop, except hee doth the dutie of a Bishop. All this we grant. But that he ought not of right to be so called of the se who he hath charge ouer in case of omitting his dutie, thereto we say, that although in respect of his demeanour he be not worthie to be called a Bishop, yet in respect of the Vocatiō, Degree, & Preeminence, though he leaue his dutie vndone, for which he incurreth danger of damnation, that Title perteineth vnto him of good right, and so continually he is, and ought to be acknowledged for a Bishop, though an euill & an vnworthy Bishop: likewise a Priest. And whereas S. Augustine saith, that a Bishop is a name of labour, and not of honour, he is to be vnderstood so as the Scripture is: which in some places speaking of two things that are both indeed to be affirmed, the one being of more importance then the other, denieth the one in comparison of the other, &c.

Yet it seemeth to bee a secret preparation towards a purpose against such time as the Princes gouern-

ment shal mislike their fantasies. For where they learned this opinion concerning Bishops, there learned they also the like concerning ciuill Magistrates. I meane Wickleffe: among whose hereticall Articles, condemned by the Church in the Councell of Constance, this is reckoned for the fifteenth: Nullus est Dominus ciuilis, nullus est Prælatus, nullus est Episcopus, dum est in peccato mortali. That is to say, None is a Temporall Lord, none is a Prelate, none is a Bishop, so long as he is in deadly sinne.

A Bishop, no Bishop.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This matter shall need no great contention. The like words haue beene vttered by sundrie other holy Fathers. S. Chrysostome saith, Multi Sacerdotes, & pauci Sacerdotes: Multi nomine, Pauci opere: Many Priests there be, and few Priests there be: Many in name, and few in labour. Againe, Quomodo potest esse magister qui Discipulum non habet? Acquire Discipulum, & esto Magister: How can he be a Master that hath no Scholar? Get thee a Scholar, and then be a Master.

Chrys. in Opere Imperfecto Hom. 43.

Chrys. in eadem Homil.

S. Ambrose saith, Nisi bonum opus amplectaris, Episcopus esse non potes: Vnlesse thou imbrace the good labour, a Bishop thou canst not be. S. Gregorie saith, Sacerdotes nominamur, & non sumus: Priests we are called, but Priests we are not.

Ambros. de dignita. Sacerdotali cap. 4.

Greg. lib. 4. Epist. 32.

As for Wicleffe, his Scholar Iohn Hus expoundeth his meaning, and that with M. Hardings owne construction. For these be his words, euen as they are alleged by his enimies: Papa, vel Prælatus malus & Præscitus, est æquiuocè Pastor, & verè Fur & Latro: The Pope, or any other wicked Prelate, in double or doubtfull speech is a Pastor: but in very deed he is a Theefe and a Murderer. So Chrysostome saith, Qui ab hominibus ordinatus est, quantum ad Deum attinet, non est Sacerdos, aut Diaconus: He that is appointed by men, (and not by God) before God is neither Priest, nor Deacon.

In Concil. Constantien. Sessione 15.

Chrys. in Matth. Homil. 3. In Opere Imperfecto.

If Wickleffe, vpon iust zeale of the house of God, for that he then saw the Bishops either knew nothing, or did nothing, or cared for nothing, either spake or meant more then truth may beare, wee defend it not. Notwithstanding, touching that is obiected of deadly sinne, it seemeth hee followed therein the Councell of Valentia in France. The words bee these: Quicunque sub Ordinatione, vel Diaconatus, vel Presbyterij, vel Episcopatus mortali crimine dixerint se esse pollutos, à supradictis Ordinationibus submouentur: Whosoeuer after the Order, either of Deaconship, or Priesthood, or of Bishopricke, shall say they haue beene defiled with mortall sinne, let them bee remooued from the foresaide Orders. If M. Harding shall deuise any other Exposition hereof, I will not greatly striue with him for it. So S. Augustine saith, as hee is alleged by Gratian: He that neither hath wiped off his owne sinnes, nor corrected the sinnes of his children, ought rather to be called a shameleſſe Dogge, then a Bishop.

Concil. Valent. sub Damas. cap. 4.

2. Quæst. 7. Qui nec regiminis.

Yet notwithstanding, to remoue all strife, whatsoeuer the Bishop of Rome bee, or whatsoeuer he doe, let him hardly be called a Bishop, because as M. Harding saith, hee standeth in rome of a Bishop: Or, as Wickleffe saith, let him so bee called Æquiuocè, that is to say, by a word of double meaning: as vnsauourie salt is called salt: Or, as the Prophets of Baal are called Prophets: Or, as a painted man is called a man: And, as S. Gregorie saith, Let him in words be called a Priest, although in deed he be no Priest. Let him be called a Teacher, although he teach not. Let him be called a Father, although hee feed not. S. Cyprian saith of S. Paul, Ipsum quamuis inane nomen & vmbram quandam Sacerdotis cogitans, expauit: S. Paul was afraid, eonsidering onely the empty name and shadow of a Bishop. And in the late Councell of Trident the matter is concluded thus: Qui dicit eos qui non exercent Ministerium Verbi & Sacramentorum non esse Sacerdotes, Anathema sit: Whosoeuer saith that they that minister neither the Word of God, nor the Sacraments, be no Priests, accursed be he. But Athanasius saith, Quid opus est hominibus titulo Episcopis? What need haue wee of these men that beare only the name of Bishops? Therefore S. Hierome saith, Auferet Dominus nomina vanæ gloriæ, & Admirationis fallæ, quæ versantur in Ecclesia. Sed & nomina Sacerdotum cum Sacerdotibus auferet, qui frustrà sibi applaudunt in Episcopali, & in Presbyterij dignitate, & non in opere: The Lord shall take away the names of vaine glorie, and of fained wondering, which are in the Church. Yea hee shall take away both the names of those Priests, and the Priests with all, which vaunt themselues in the dignitie of Bishopricke and Priesthood, but not in the labour.

AND that neither the Pope, nor any other worldly creature can no more be head of the whole Church, or a Bishop ouer all, then he can bee the Bridegroom, the Light, the Saluation, and Life of the Church. For these Priuiledges and Names belong only to Christ, and be properlie and only fit for him alone.

Proud Name.

And that no Bishop of Rome did euer suffer himselfe to be called by such a proud name and title, before Phocas the Emperours time, (who, as we know, by killing his own Souereigne Mauritius the Emperour, did by a traiterous villany aspire to the Empire) which was about the sixth hundred and thirteenth yeere after Christ was borne.

M. Harding.

The name of Vniuersall Bishop, which this Interpreter meaneth, being taken in a right sense, is no proud name, in respect of him * to whom it belongeth. Whether any Bishop of Rome euer suffered himselfe to be called by that name, or no, as you denie it, and proue it not, so it forceth not whether any did so, or no. If they refused it of humilitie, that proueth it not to be vnlawfull. Vniuersall Bishop.

* Vntruth. For it belonged not vnto the Pope.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

If the name of Vniuersall Bishop be a proud name in others, why may it not also be a proud name in the Bishop of Rome? Hath the Bishop there such a speciall priuiledge for pride aboue all others? May pride be humility, and humility pride only in respect of diuers persons? You say, This title of right belonged to the Bishop of Rome: and therefore in him it was no pride. This, M. Harding, is a foule vntruth, as it shall appeare by the next Diuision. For these be the words of the Councell of Carthage, or at least, by your Dist. 99. Prima Sedis. owne confession, of Gratian, alleging the Councell of Carthage: Vniuersalis autem (Episcopus) nec ipse Romanus Pontifex appelletur: The Bishop of Rome himselfe may not bee called the Vniuersall Bishop.

That the old learned and godly Bishops of Rome refused this name, as proud and arrogant, it is so plaine by S. Gregorie, that I maruell any learned man would call it in question. His words thereof be these: Nullus Decessorum meorum hoc tam profano vocabulo vti consensit: Nullus Romanorum Pontificum hoc singularitatis nomen assumpsit: Nos hunc honorem nolumus oblatum suscipere: None of my Predecessours, Bishops of Rome, euer consented to vse this vngodly name: No Bishop of Rome euer tooke vpon him this name of singularitie: We, the Bishop of Rome, wil not receiue this honour being offred vnto vs. Gregor. lib. 4. Ep. 32. & 36.

If the Bishops of Rome in old times refused this name, not for want of right, but only, as M. Harding saith, of humilitie, wherefore then did their Successours that followed afterward so ambitiously labour to get the same? Platina saith, Bonifacius Tertius obtinuit à Phoca, magna tamen contentione: Pope Bonifacius the Third obteined of the Emperour Phocas (that Rome should be called the Head of all Churches) but with great contention, and much adoe. Platina in Bonifacio 3. Wherefore then doth S. Augustine, and the whole Councell of Aphrica condemne the attempt of this vsurped Iurisdiction, and call it, Fumosum Sæculi Typhum: The smokie Pride of the World? And that euen in the Bishops of Rome?

If the Bishop of Rome be so full of humilitie, as wee are heere borne in hand, why aduanceth he himself so high aboue all Generall Councels? Why saith he that no creature may iudge his doings? Why claimeth hee the Sword and Scepter of all the World? Why saith hee that Christs Consistorie and his Consistorie are all one, and that hee can doe all that God can doe? Why doth he say that the Emperor is but the Proctor or Bailiffe of the Church of Rome? Procurator siue Defensor Romanæ Ecclesiæ? Why doth he suffer Kings and Emperours to hold his Stirrup, to lead his Palfrey, and to kisse his foote? Verily this kind of humilitie in other places might goe for pride. Hesychius saith, Vbi superbia regnat & Hypocrisis, humilitas locum non habet: Where pride and Hypocrisie beare the sway, there humilitie can haue no place. Dist. 98. Si imperat. in Gloss. Hesych. Sent. lib. 4. Dist. 17. Cur ergo. Dist. 40. Multi. Likewise Chrysostome saith, Quicunque desiderauerit Primatum in terra, inueniet in cœlo confusionem: nec inter Seruos Christi computabitur, qui de Primatu tractauerit: Whosoeuer desireth Primacie in earth, in heauen he shall finde confusion: neither shall he be accounted among the Seruants of Christ, that will once intreat of Primacie.

Addition. ☞ But heereto M. Harding answereth, Why did you not quote the place, M. Iewell? Chrysostome hath no such saying. That which goeth before in Gratian is taken out of Opus Imperfectum, Homil. 43. which is well knowen not to be Chrysostomes. But this saying which heere you allege out of Gratian, is neither there, nor in Chrysostome. It is a forgerie: and that you know well enough. Yet you are not ashamed to vse it, to deceiue the ignorant Reader. Leaue, leaue, M. Iewell, to abuse the simplicity of the vnlearned with such forged pieces and patches. The Answer. M. Harding, how shall poore M. Iewell be able to answer this kind of eloquence? It becommeth you so well, that it were great pitie yee should speake better. Though this were a forgerie indeed, as you haue so sadlie tolde vs, yet you know it was your owne Gratians Addition. ☞ M. Harding 185. a. M. Harding. 185. b.

ans forgerie: it was not mine. You say, The booke intituled Opus imperfectum was neuer written by Chrysostome. I can easily yeeld hereto, and neuer striue for it. And yet your Gratian allegeth the same booke by the name of Chrysostome, as you know. Neither did I allege these words as out of Chrysostome, but as out of the booke of Gratians Decrees, allowed to the world by Pope Eugenius 3. and commonly called Fundamentum Iuris Canonici. Whoso is able truly to bring forth his Authour, ought not of right to be charged with forgerie. You doe wrong therefore, M. Harding, with such outeries to raise the Countrie vpon him that hath not offended.

But, I pray you, be these words neither in Opere Imperfecto, as you say, nor in any other booke of Chrysostome? And doe I know it, as you tell me? Or will you say your selfe doe know it? Or if you so say, may we beleeue it? Surely if ye had sought these words better, ye might haue found them. But ye sought them where they were not, and sought in vaine. In the 35. Homilie of that same booke it is written thus: Quicunque desiderauerit Primatum in terra, inueniet in cœlo confusionem: vt iam inter seruos Christi non sit de Primatu certamen. These be the selfe same words that you say cannot be found, neither in Opere imperfecto, nor in any other booke of Chrysostome. Here is neither pæcing nor patching, M. Harding. It is plaine dealing: It is no forgerie. If these words thus placed doe not like you, as it appeareth they doe not, then change them hardly, and take the contrarie, and rather say thus: Whosoeuer desireth Primacie in earth, shall finde no confusion in heauen. This perhaps may seeme better to serue your turne. Here might I triumph, and say to you as you say to me, Yet are you not ashamed, &c. Leaue, leaue, M. Harding, &c.

Hom. 35. in Opere Imperfect.

To conclude, a learned man, one of M. Hardings owne side, hereupon hath noted thus: Bonifacius obtinuit à Phoca, vt Ecclesia Romana esset caput omnium Ecclesiarum. Ex quo posset modo consimili sumi Argumentum, quòd ad Imperatorem pertineat Primatum Ecclesiæ transferre, & de Ecclesijs Ordinare: Pope Bonifacius the third obteined of the Emperour Phocas, that the Church of Rome should be the Head of all Churches. Whereof wee may in like case gather an Argument, that it belongeth to the Emperour to translate the Primacie of the Church, and to take Order for the Churches.

Also the councel of Carthage did circumspectly prouide, that no Bishop should be called either the Highest Bishop, or Chiefe Priest.

M. Harding.

Falsifying of a Councell.

Heere by your leaue, Sir Defender, you play false, and are taken, as it were, with false Dice, and therefore ye ought iustly to lose all that ye haue vniustly wonne by your false play, & false Dice, I meane your shamefull falsifying of this Councel by you alleged. And for this and other your falshood, it is right you lose the credit which vniustly (because by false teaching) you haue wonne among the vnlearned. That your false play might not soone be espied, you doe as like to M. Iewell as though you were his fathers son. For that false sleight he vseth more then any that euer I read. For whereas we haue seuen Councels of Carthage, neither shew you which of them it is that you allege, nor giue any notice of the number, where the Canon may be found. But contrariwise as the Lapwing with her busie crie leadeth a man frō her nest, so you lead vs from the place where it is, by putting in the margin of your booke the number 47. that not finding it by your note, we should giue ouer further looking for it. Who doth euill, hateth light, saith Christ. So heere falsifying (a) and forging a Canon of a Councell, you would faine walke in clouds, that your lying might not be deprehended, &c. So had it beene done more circumspectly for furtherance of your falshood, if the matter should neuer come to triall of learning.

M. Harding is a merry man.

(a) Vntruth. For this Canon will soone be found.

Now, whosoeuer examineth the place truly, must needs crie out, Shame on you, Defender, who are the author. The words, if you had listed to haue alleged them without falshood, be these which we finde in the 26. Canon of the third Councell of Carthage, which Councell was authorized by the sixt Generall Councell holden at Constantinople in Trullo: Vt primæ sedis Episcopus non appelletur Princeps Sacerdotum, aut Summus Sacerdos, aut aliquid huiusmodi, sed tantùm Primæ Sedis Episcopus. And thus they are to bee Englished. It hath liked vs (say the Fathers of that Coūcel) that a Bishop of a First See be not called Prince of Priests, or Highest Priests, or any such other thing, but onely a Bishop of a First See. Now commeth me this iolly Defender, & saith, the Councell of Carthage hath expresse words for so much his Latine foundeth) that no Bishop should be called either the Highest Bishop, or Chiefe Priest. By which Canon thus by him vntruly vttered, he thought to depriue the Pope of this (b) ancient Title that all the world hath euer attributed vnto him, so as he be called no more Summus Pontifex.

The 26. Canon of the third Councel. of Carthage discussed.

Vide Epist. Leon. 9. ad Petrū & Iohannem Aphricæ Episcopos.

Highest Bishop, Prince of Priests.

(b) Vntruth, as all appeare.

For the right vnderstanding of this Canon two things are to be considered. How farre the authoritie of this Councell ought to be extended, and what is meant by a first See. (c) The Decrees of this Councell perteined but to the Prouince of Aphrike. For Prouinciall Councels binde onely the Prouinces in which, and for order of which they be kept. Only the Generall Councels are to be receiued of all.

(c) Vntruth. For this councell namely restraineth the Bishop of Reme.

By these two words (Prima Sedes) those Fathers vnderstood any Citie, in which a Patriarke or Primate, who are of one office, though of diuers names, hath his See. I call it a First See, or rather (if it might be permitted) a Primate See. (d) In great Cities, where the highest Courts for Iustice were kept, and where the the chiefe Pagane Prieſts of the Latines, named Primi Flamines, were reſident before the comming of Chriſt, there after Chriſts comming were Patriarkes or Primates placed, by whom the weightie matters of Biſhops ſhould be decided. (e) Which order was taken firſt by commandement of S. Peter, as Clement writeth: by the Apoſtles and Clement, as Anacletus witneſſeth: by the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſours afterward, as Lucius the Pope ſaith. Dist 99. C. Prouincia.

Now the Councell of Carthage, by this Defender alleged, and likewiſe the Aphrican Councell ordeined and willed that a Biſhop of any of the Primate Sees of Aphricke ſhould not be called Princeps Sacerdotum, aut Summus Sacerdos, Prince or chiefe of the Prieſts, or Higheſt Prieſt, by which word a Biſhop is there ſignified, but only a Biſhop of the Primate See, whereof he was Primate. By which Decree they willed (f) only their Primates of Aphricke to keepe themſelues within their limits, and not preſumptuouſly to take vpon them more glorious Titles, and further Iuriſdiction then to them perteined, leſt ſurely they might ſeeme to preiudicate the Popes Supremacie. Thus it is euident, the authoritie of that Carthage Councell being reſtrained to Aphricke only, that by this Canon the Popes Primacie and Title is no whit diminiſhed or diſprooued. And ſo for all this Defender, he remaineth as he hath (g) euer, higheſt Biſhop.

What M. Harding, ſo much falſhod vpon vs at one time? Falſifying of Councels: Shamefull falſifying: False teaching: False ſleight: False dice: False play: and all falſe? Chriſt ſaith of himſelfe, I am the Truth. God giue you grace to credit him. For the errour of quotation in the margin, wherein you ſpend ſo many words, it may pleaſe you to know that I neither was the Printer, nor could be preſent at the printing. For the reſt, if there can be any one point of falſhod found in mee touching the allegation of this Councel of Carthage, I will not refuſe to ſtand charged with the whole. But if euery of theſe horrible falſhoods be found an euident and plaine truth, then it may pleaſe you to take home all theſe prettie Titles to your ſelfe againe, as in euery of theſe words ſo often doubled, and ſo heapt together, hauing your ſelfe committed a ſeuerall falſhod.

And herin for triall of your courteous dealing, I am content your ſelfe ſhall ſit and be the Iudge. For notwithſtanding it be thought of many that ye diſſemble deepely, and will not beſtow your voice to ſay the truth, yet I doubt not but in this matter, if ye haue eies, ye may eaſily looke vp and ſee the truth.

You ſay, Sir Defender hath falſly alleged the Councell of Carthage. And why ſo? For that hee ſaith, The Councell decreed by expreſſe words, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould not be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. This, you ſay, is forged and falſified, and is no part of that Councell. For indifferent triall both of the truth, and of the falſhood herein, I beſeech you behold the very words of the Councell, euen as they are alleged by your owne Doctour Gratian. Theſe they are: Primæ Sedis Epiſcopus non appelletur Princeps Sacerdotum, vel Summus Sacerdos, vel aliquid huiuſmodi: ſed tantùm Primæ Sedis Epiſcopus. Vniuerſalis autem nec etiam Romanus Pontifex appelletur: Let not the Biſhop of any of the Firſt Sees bee called the Prince of Prieſts, or the higheſt Prieſts, or by any other like name: but onely the Biſhop of the Firſt See. But let not the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. And in the Gloſſe thereupon it is noted thus: In hac Diſtinctione dicitur, quòd Papa non debet dici Vniuerſalis: In this Diſtinction it is ſaid, that The Pope ought not to be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop.

Dist 99. Primæ.

Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding crieth out bitterly, M. Iewell is a ſhameleſſe man: Three maine lies: O impudent Gloſer! Are ye not aſhamed, &c These be not the words of the Councell of Carthage. They are to bee referred to the third part of the diſtinction that followeth afterward. Your ſpeech is terrible, M. Harding, and argueth ſome inordinate paſſion in your ſtomacke. Referre theſe words whither you wil. If they be not written in the Councell of Carthage, yet at the leaſt they are the words of Gratian alleging the words of the Councell of Carthage. Be they his words, or be they the Councels; I will not ſtriue. Well you know they are not mine. Thus hee ſaith, by your owne confeſſion, Vniuerſalis autem nec etiam Romanus Pontifex appelletur: Let not the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. And thus you confeſſe is the meaning of Pope Pelagius, that followeth immediately in the ſame diſtinction. Now, M. Harding, what great preiudice is this, as touching the right of our cauſe, if we loſe the authoritie of the councell of Carthage, and get the authoritie of the Pope himſelfe, who in your iudgement, and as you haue haue written and published to the World, is aboue the authority of all Councels. What soeuer the Councel of Carthage say, the Pope himselfe saith, as it is noted in the Rubrik, Nec etiam Romanus Pontifex Vniuersalis est appellandus.

Now touching the Glosse, yée runne vpon mee with hue and crie: O impudent Glosер, (you say) Are you not asshamed to shew your peeuish Falshhood? Why left you out the beginning of the Sentence? Truly, M. Harding, I knew not your diet: Otherwise I could as good cheape haue serued you with all together. I left out nothing that was necessary. But, for asmuch as ye want something, I know not what, ye shall haue frée liberty to make it vp at your pleasure. The whole words be these: Hæc est Tertia pars Distinctionis, in qua dicitur, quòd Papa non debet vocari Vniuersalis: This is the Third part of this Distinction, wherin it is said, that the Pope ought not to be called the Vniuersall Bishop. M. Hardings Confut. pag. 284. a.

Highest Bishop, Prince of Priests.

Now tell vs, good Maister Harding, what peeuish Falshood, or what impudent glosing is this? or, sauing some part of your follie, whereat ought any man to bee asshamed?

Touching that you so pleasantly chére your selfe with these words, You doe as like to M. Iewell, as if you were his Fathers Sonne. I must answer you, as S. Augustine sometime did the Heretike Cresconius: Serua potiùs Puerilia Pueris: Keep such Childish toies to play with your Children. God make vs both like vnto our Father, that is in Heauen. Aug. contra Cresc. lib. 3. cap. 38.

Where you say, of your selfe only, without farther witnesse, that this title is the Popes ancient right, euer giuen to him by all the World, I doubt not, but the vntruth hereof by my former Replie, touching the same, may soone appeare. Certainly, when the same Title was offered to S. Gregory, he refused it vtterly, as none of his. Artic. 4. Greg. lib. 7. Epist. 30

Indéed, this Councell of Carthage, notwithstanding the Title of Highest Bishops was sometime giuen, not only to the Bishop of Rome, and other Patriarkes, but also vnto all other Bishops. M. Hardings owne Amphilochius calleth S. Basil, Principem Sacerdotum: The Prince, or Chiefe of Bishops. Ruffinus calleth Athanasius, Pontificem Maximum: The Highest Bishop. Nazianzenus calleth the same Athanasius, Archisacerdotem Sacerdotum: The Cheife Bishop of Bishops. Lactantius calleth euery Bishopricke, Summum Sacerdotium. Likewise S. Hierome saith, Ecclesiæ Salus in Summi Sacerdotis dignitate pendet: The safety of the Church standeth in the dignity of the Highest Priest. By which Highest Priest, M. Harding himselfe saith, is meant euery seuerall Bishop within his own Diocesse. S. Augustine saith, Quid est Episcopus, nisi Primus Presbyter, hoc est, Summus Sacerdos? What is a Bishop, but the First, or Chiefe Priest, that is to say, the Highest Priest. Therefore we may safely spare the Pope this Title, of Highest Bishop, not as peculiar to him alone, as M. Harding imagineth, but as common, and generall to all Bishops. M. Hardings Amphilochius. Rufinus l. b. 2. cap. 23. Nazian. ad Heronem. Lactan. lib. 4. cap. 30. Hieron. contra Lucifer ianos.

All that you haue héere alleged of the Iurisdiction of the Flamines, is a méere phantasie, grounded only vpon an vnsauory Fable of Anacletus, and Clemens. Neither are you able to finde, either these names, Archiflamines, or Protoflamines, which héere are imagined, in any ancient allowed Writer, or any such Vniuersall Iurisdiction to them belonging. M. Harding in his Answere to the Apology, fol. 204. b.

The First, or Principall, or Mother Sées were limitted, not by the Flamines, but by the Prince. So it is written in the Councell of Chalcedon: Quascunque Ciuitates per Literas Regias Metropolitico nomine honorarunt: What Cities soeuer by the Princes Charter, they honoured with the name of the Mother See. In Quæst. ex vtroque Testam. mixt. Qu. 101. Conc. Chalced. cap. 12.

And therefore the Emperour Theodosius vpon displeasure conceiued, toke that Name of Honour from the City of Antioch, minding it should bée so called no more. And for that cause was the City of Rome chosen amongst others, to bee a Primate, or a Principall Mother Sée, not for that either Christ or Peter, had so appointed, as M. Harding telleth vs, but for that it was the most Noble City, & of greatest renowm in all the world. Chrys. ad Pop. Antiochen. Homil. 17.

The words be plaine: Sedi Veteris Romæ Patres meritò dederunt Primatum, Quòd illa Ciuitas alijs Imperaret: The Fathers worthily gaue the Chiefrie to the See of the Old Rome: Because that Citie had the Princehood ouer others. Conc. Chalced. cap. 28.

Now concerning this Decrée of the Councel of Carthage, it touched as wel the Bishop of Rome, as other Primates. And therfore Pope Adrian afterward alleging, and corrupting the same, added thereto this speciall Prouiso for himselfe: Nullus Archiepiscoporum, nisi qui Primas Sedes tenent, appelletur Primas, aut Princeps Sacerdotum, aut Summus Sacerdos, aut aliquid huiusmodi &c. Salua semper in omnibus authoritate Beati Petri Adrian. Papa. In Capitulis ex Synodis & Canonib. diuer. collect. To. 2. pa. 611.

Petri Apostoli: Let no Archbishop, sauing such as haue the Principal, or First Sees, be called either the Primate, or the Prince of Priests, or the Highest Priest, or by any other like name, &c. Sauing alwaies, and in all things, the authority of Blessed S. Peter the Apostle.

The Apology, Chap. 4. Diuision 3.

All these be the words of Gregory.

And therefore, sithence the Bishop of Rome wil now adaies so be called, and challengeth vnto himselfe an authority, that is none of his: besides that, he doth plainly contrary to the ancient Councels, and contrary to the Old Fathers: We beleeue, that he doth giue to himselfe, as it is writtē by his own Companion Gregory, a presumptuous, a Prophane, a Sacrilegious, & an Antichristian name: that he is also the King of Pride, that he is Luciser, which preferreth himself before his Brethren: that he hath forsaken the Faith, and is the Forerunner of Antichrist.

M. Harding.

Vniuersall.

Heere is much adoe about naught, and a number of bitter words picked out of Saint Gregories Epistles, pretended to be written against the Bishop of Rome to no purpose. For if we say, (a) as we may say truly, that he challengeth to himselfe no such name, then what hath this Defender to say? Let him shew vs how many Bishops of that See euer tooke the name of the Vniuersal Bishop vpon them, specially as Gregory vnderstandeth it to signifie. If he can shew none, why blotteth he so much Paper with so impudent Lies?

(b) Indeed the six hundred and thirtie Fathers of the Generall Councell of Chalcedon, gaue to Pope Leo that name, as Gregory in three sundry Epistles writeth, and certaine other in their writings haue attributed to the Pope the same. But that either Leo, or any other his Successour (c) affected so to be called, Gregory denieth. (d) And that any since Gregories time to our daies, euer called or wrote himselfe Vniuersall Bishop, we denie.

Whereas Pelagius, and Gregory, writing against the presumption of Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople for taking vpon him this name, are much alleged by the enemies of Vnity, against the authority of Peters Successour ouer the whole Church: we say, that they following the steps of their Predecessours, refused the name of Vniuersall Bishop in such sense, as Pelagius, and specially Gregory oftentimes declareth, that where one is called Vniuersal Bishop, he seemeth to be called (e) Bishop alone, so as Bishoprick should bee taken away from all others. But they refused not so to bee called after this meaning, as though by that refusall, the authority of the Bishop of Rome should be restrained, & not extended ouer the whole Church. They denie, that any man might so be Vniuersal Bishop, as he should be also the peculiar Ruler & gouernour of euery particular Church. For so all other Bishops had bene in vain: & that is contrary to Christs institution, who ordained all the Apostles to be Bishops. To say al in few, they refused the name that might odiously bee taken, they refused not the Primacy (f) which Christ to them had committed. Therfore Gregory writing to Morice the Emperour alleging the words that make for Peters authority ouer the whole Flock of Christ, saith of Peter, (g) The charge of the whole Church & Principality is committed to him, & yet is he not called Vniuersall Apostle. Where it is plaine, that Gregory doth both affirme the charge of the whole, and denieth the name of Vniuersall. Let these Defenders grant the thing and we striue not for the name.

(b) There appeareth no such matter in all that Councell.

(c) Vntruth. As appeareth by the former authority of Platina.

(d) Vntruth As further appeareth by the answer.

(e) Vntruth, and most vaine fantasie. For no Bishop of Constantinople euer dreamed of such authority.

(f) Vntruth: for Christ neuer erected any such Primacie.

(g) The like whole charge was giuen to Paul, Iohn, and Matthew, as shal appeare. M. Harding pag. 186. b.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Heere it pleaseth M. Harding of his courtesie to say, We haue blotted our papers with so many, and so many impudent Lies. His whole discourse standeth onely in the Construction of this word, Vniuersall, in what sense it may be either refused or claimed. Howbeit, vnderstand thou, gentle Reader, that all this is M. Hardings owne only Commentary. For other Doctour or Father he alleageth none.

Addition. ☞ But, M. Harding saith, M. Iewell misliketh with me for saying, that the name of Vniuersal Bishop in a right sense is no proud name, in respect of him, to whom it belongeth. By a right sense, I mean that sense, which S. Gregory allowed, and that, which the Fourth Generall Councell of Chalcedon allowed. The Answer. But what is that right sense, M. Harding? The same (you say) that is allowed by the Councell of Chalcedon, and by S. Gregorie. But what sense that may be, neither the Councell of Chalcedon, nor S. Gregory euer told you. Verily S. Gregory hauing occasion largely to dispute hereof, euen in the same sense and meaning, as it was claimed by the Bishop of Constantinople, saith, that the same title with the same sense was offered by the Councell of Chalcedon to the Bishop of Rome. In the same sense, I say, M. Harding, and in none other: And in what sense it was offered by the Councell, in the same sense the Pope refused it. The sense therefore being one, why doe you so vainely imagine such choice of senses? The sense that was offered (you say) was good. The sense that was refused, (you say) was naught. And yet both these senses were all one sense. Otherwise shew you me, where S. Gregory euer called himselfe the Vniuersall Bishop in any kind of sense. Certainly, speaking of the same title of Vniuersall Bishop, and of the same sense, and of none other, he saith, Petrus Vniuersalis Apostolus non vocatur: S. Peter is not called the Vniuerſall Apoſtle. If this title, and this ſenſe neuer belonged vnto S. Peter, how then may it belong vnto the Pope? Wherfore, M. Harding, touching the right ſenſe of theſe words, I think him not in his right wits, that can deuiſe ſuch diſtinction of ſenſes without any difference. Him S. Gregory meant to claime the name of Vniuerſall Biſhop, that ſought to ſubdue all the members of Chriſts Church vnto himſelfe. And this is that ſelf ſame title, & that ſelf ſame ſenſe, that this day is claimed by the Pope, as it is euident vnto the world. Pope Clement ſaith, Omnes ſubiecti ſunt motioni Papæ: & ſunt in illo, quaſi membra de membro: All men are ſubiect to the Popes wil: and are in him, as members of a member. Durandus ſaith, Omnes Epiſcopi deſcendunt à Papa, tanquam membra à capite: All Biſhops come from the Pope, as members from the head. Another ſaith, Papa eſt Ordinarius totius Mundi: The Pope is the Ordinary, or Biſhop, of all the whole World. And therfore Pope Bonifacius 8. hath concluded by ſolemne Sentence, That euery Creature muſt ſubmit it ſelf vnto the Biſhop of Rome, vpon the paine of euerlaſting damnation. This is the right ſenſe that you meane, M. Harding: Thus the Pope claimeth this day, to be the Vniuerſall Biſhop. And this ſame title, and ſenſe is it, that S. Gregory condemneth.

First, where it is ſaid, that S. Gregory by this word, Vniuerſall Biſhop, meant him, that would be Biſhop alone ouer all the World, excluding all others, this expoſition is not only ſtrange, but alſo vaine, and fond, and void of reaſon. For what Biſhop of Conſtantinople euer was there, that called himſelfe the Onely Biſhop, and excluded all others? Doubtleſſe Iohn, that firſt laid claime vnto this name, as he called himſelfe the Vniuerſall Biſhop, ſo he wrote his Letters vnto others, and neuer refuſed to call them Biſhops.

But, to leaue theſe Gloſſes and fantaſies, by the title of Vniuerſall Biſhop, S. Gregory meant ſuch a one, not, as would bee Biſhoppe alone, but as would claime Infinite Authority, and Vniuerſall Iuriſdiction ouer all other Biſhops throwout the World: and that, as S. Cyprian ſaith, would call himſelfe, Epiſcopum Epiſcoporum: The Biſhop of Biſhops.

Cypr in Concil. Carthag.

Therefore S. Gregory thus writeth vnto Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, the firſt Vſurper of this title: Quid tu Chriſto Vniuerſalis Eccleſiæ Capiti in Extremi Iudicij reponſurus es examine, qui cuncta eius Membra tibimet Vniuerſalis conaris appellatione ſupponere? What anſwer wilt thou make vnto Chriſt *the Head of the Vniuerſall Church, when thou ſhalt be examined at the laſt Iudgement, (not that thou haſt called thy ſelf the onely Biſhop, but) that thus goeſt about by the name of Vniuerſall Biſhop, to make all his Members ſubiect vnto thee?* It was this immoderate Vniuerſall Iuriſdiction, that S. Gregory reproued, and not the making of himſelfe Biſhop alone, excluding all others.

Greg. lib. 4. epiſt. 38.

Likewiſe he writeth of himſelfe vnto Eulogius: Beatitudo veſtra mihi ſic loquitur: Sicut Iuſiſtis. Quod Verbum Iuſionis, peto, a meo auditu remouete. Non Iuſi: Sed quæ vtilia viſa ſunt, indicare curaui: Your Holineſſe ſaith thus vnto mee, (being the Biſhop of Rome) As you haue Commanded. Haue away this word of Commanding from my hearing, I beſeech you. I Commanded you not: but that I tooke to be the beſt, I thought good to ſhew you. The fault therefore that Gregorie findeth with Iohn the Biſhoppe of Conſtantinople, ſtood not in calling himſelfe the Onelie Biſhop, for ſo hee neuer did, but in Bidding, and Commanding, and Claiming Vniuerſality of Iuriſdiction ouer the whole Church of Chriſt. And for that cauſe hee ſaith vnto Eulogius: Eccein Præfatione Epiſtolæ, quam ad meipſum, qui prohibui, direxiſtis, Superbæ Appellationis Verbum, Vniuerſalem me Papam dicentes, imprimere curaſtis. Quod, peto, dulciſſima mihi Sanctitas veſtra vltrà non faciat: quia vobis ſubtrahitur, quod alteri pluſquam ratio exigit præbetur: Behold euen in the Title of your Letter yee haue written this Proud Poſie, naming me The Vniuerſall Pope: notwithſtanding I haue forbidden it. I beſeech your Holineſſe, to doe ſo no more. For whatſoeuer is giuen vnto any other aboue reaſon, the ſame is taken from your ſelues.

Greg. lib. 7. epiſt. 30.

M. Harding ſaith, Gregory affirmeth the charge of the whole, and denieth the name of Vniuerſal. Let theſe Defenders (ſaith he) grant the thing, and we ſtriue not for the name. Verily this play had bin too vaine for Children: to allow the thing it ſelf, and to cauil only about the name:

that

Matth. 23. that is to receiue the Body, and to ſhunne the Shadow: Or, as Chriſt ſaith, to ſwallow a Camell, and to ſtraine a Gnat. So Appian ſaith, Iulius Cæſar nicely refuſed to be called a King: and yet in all maner authority and gouernment bare himſelfe none otherwiſe, then as a King.

Appianus: ἵνα μὴ ἴρρα καισὶς.

Vniuerſall.

It was not the bare name of Vniuerſall Biſhop, that ſo much offended the Holy Fathers: but the Pride, and Tyranny, and Vniuerſall gouernment, and Iuriſdiction, that is ſignified by that name. If the name were naught, then was the Vſurpation of the thing it ſelfe, a great deale worſe.

But, S. Gregory ſaith, The Charge and Principality of the whole Church was committed vnto Peter. This is not denied: In like ſort Chryſoſtome ſaith, The like charge and Principality of the Church was committed vnto Paul. For thus he writeth: Paulo totus Orbis creditus eſt: Paulus gubernat Orbis Eccleſiam: Paulus Vniuerſum gubernat Orbem: Vnto Paul the Whole world is committed: Paul gouerneth the Church of the World. Paul ruleth the whole World. And yet Chryſoſtome meant not hereby, that Paul had the Vniuerſall Gouernment of the whole: but that his care and charge was generall, as not bound or limited vnto one place, but indifferent, and common vnto all. So he ſaith, Paulus tam anxiè omnium ſalutem curabat, acſi totus mundus vnica eſſet Domus: Paul was ſo carefull for the ſaluation of all men, as if the whole World had beene but one Houſe. Againe: Paulum tangebat ſolicitudo Omnium Eccleſiarum: non Vnius, aut Duarum, aut Trium, ſed Omnium, quæ erant per Orbem Terrarum: Paul was mooued with the care of All Churches: not of One, or Two, or Three, but of All the Churches thorowout the World. Likewiſe he ſaith of S. Iohn, Columna erat Omnium, quæ in Orbe ſunt, Eccleſiarum: He was the Pillar of All the Churches in the World. Likewiſe againe of S. Matthew, Matthæus Vniuerſi Orbis curam gerebat: The whole World was vnder Matthews charge.

Therefore, if M. Harding will gather out of theſe three words of S. Gregory (Totius Eccleſiæ Cura) that Peter had Vniuerſall Iuriſdiction ouer all, it muſt needs follow by the ſame words, that Paul, John, and Matthew had the ſame Iuriſdiction ouer all. What other thing hee hopeth to gaine by theſe words of S. Gregorie, I cannot tell: Vnleſſe happily he will found his reaſon thus: S. Gregory ſaith, Petrus Vniuerſalis Apoſtolus non vocatur: Peter is not called the Vniuerſall Apoſtle: Ergo, The Pope is the Vniuerſall Biſhop.

So handſomely theſe things are gathered together, to ſerue the purpoſe.

Pope Leo (ye ſay) of humility refuſed this name openly in the Councell of Chalcedon. Indeed Pope Gregorie ſo reporteth it. Notwithſtanding it appeareth not by any thing done in that Councell, that this title was euer offered him. And to refuſe a thing before it be offered, it is no great point of humility.

To be ſhort, the beſt we can gather hereof, is this: Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ambitiouſly craued this name: Pope Leo godly refuſed it, being offered vnto him: The Popes afterward gladly receiued it without offering. If it were a good name, why was it refuſed? If it were an ill name, why was it receiued?

Now let vs ſee, what they of M. Hardings ſide haue meant by this word Vniuerſall, and with what humility the Popes haue receiued the ſame. Thus therefore they write: [a] Papa Totius Orbis obtinet Principatum: The Pope hath the Princehood of All the World. And when the Pope is Conſecrate, the Chiefe Miniſter ſaith vnto him, [b] Ego inueſtio te de Papatu, vt præſis Vrbi, & Orbi: I doe inueſt thee with the Popedome, that thou maieſt rule both the Citie and the World.

And whereas M. Harding demandeth, how many Popes haue claimed this name, it may pleaſe him to remember, that in the late Councell of Conſtance, it was not onelie claimed, but alſo publiſhed, as an Article of the Faith. The words are theſe, De neceſſitate Salutis eſt credere, Papam eſſe Oecumenicum: It is of the neceſſity of Salnation to beleeue, that the Pope is the Vniuerſall Biſhop.

For theſe cauſes Gregory calleth the name of Vniuerſall Biſhop, a Prophane, a Preſumptuous, a Wicked, and an Antichriſtian name; comparing the Vſurper thereof with Lucifer and Antichriſt.

The Apology, Chap. 5. Diuision 1.

Further we say, that the Minister ought lawfully, duely, and orderly to bee preferred to that office of the Church of God, and that no man hath Power to wrest himselfe into the Holy Ministerie at his owne pleasure. Wherefore these persons doe vs the greater wrong which haue nothing so common in their mouthes, as that we doe nothing orderlie and comly, but all things troublesomely, and without Order: And that we allow euerie man to be a Priest, to bee a Teacher, and to be an Interpreter of the Scriptures.

M. Harding.

Yee say, that the Minister ought lawfully to bee called (for so hath your Latine) and duely and orderlie to bee preferred to that office of the Church of God. Why doe yee not so? Why is not this obserued among you Gospellers? Whatsoeuer ye meane by your Minister, and by that office, (a) this are wee assured of, that in this your new Church, Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Subdeacons, or any other Inferiour Orders, yee haue none.

(a) Vntruth. For it is knowne wee haue them.

For whereas after the doctrine of your new Gospell, like the Forerunners of Antichrist, yee haue (b) abandoned the externall Sacrifice, and Priesthood of the New Testament, and haue not in your Sect consecrated Bishops, and therefore beeing without Priests made with lawfull laying on of hands, as Scripture requireth, all Holy Orders being giuen by Bishops only: how can ye say, that any among you can lawfully Minister, or that ye haue any lawfull Ministers at all?

(b) Vntruth. For we haue abandoned neither the Priesthood, nor the Sacrifice, that Christ appointed.

This then beeing so, let me haue leaue to oppose one of these Defenders consciences. And that for the better vnderstanding I may direct my words to a certaine person, let him bee the Author of this Apologie: or because his name to me is vnknowne, Let him be M. Iewel. For with him gladlie would I reason in this point, the rather for acquaintance, and for that he beareth the name of a Bishop in that Church, where my selfe had a roome. How say you, Sir Minister Bishop, ought the Minister to be lawfully called? ought he duely and orderly to bee preferred to that office, or (as the Latine heere hath) promoted, or put in authority ouer the Church? In the Apologie this Defender saith, yea.

How many Bishops can you reckon, whom in the Church of Salisburie you haue succeeded aswell in Doctrine, as in outward sitting in that Chaire? How many can you tell vs of, that beeing your Predecessours in order before you, were of your opinion, and taught the faithfull people of that Diocesse the Doctrine, that you teach? Did Bishop Capon teach your Doctrin? did Shaxton? did Campegius? did Bishop Audley? Briefly, did euer any Bishop of that See before you, teach your Doctrine? (c) it is most certaine, they did not.

Succession

(c) Vntruth. For Bishop Shaxton, and B. Capon taught the same

If you cannot shew your Bishoply Petigree, if you can proone no Succession, then whereby hold you? Will you shew vs the Letters Patent of the Prince? Well may they stand you in some stead before men before God, who shall call you to an account for presuming to take the Highest office in his Church (d) not duely called thereto, they shall serue you to no purpose.

(d) Vntruth. For he was chosen by Canonic. Election of the Chapter, as all other Bishops haue beene before.

In præscriptionibus aduersus Hæreticos. These bee Tertullians words.

You know what Tertullian saith of such as ye be, Edant origines Ecclesiarum suarum, &c. We say like wise to you M. Iewel, and that we say to you, we say to each one of your Companions: Tell vs the Originall and first spring of your Church. Shew vs the Register of your Bishops continually succeeding one another from the beginning, so as that first Bishop haue some one of the Apostles, or of the Apostolike men for his Authour and Predecessour. For by this way the Apostolike Churches shew what reputation they be of. As the Church of Smyrna telleth vs of Polycarpe by Iohn the Apostle placed there. The Church of the Romans telleth vs of Clement ordained by Peter. S. Augustin hauing reckoned vp in order the Bishops of Rome to Anastasius Successour to Siricius, who was the eight & thirtieth after Peter, saith that in all that number & role of Bishops there is not found One, that was a Donatist: and therefore he concludeth, Ergo, the Donatists be not Catholikes. So after that we haue reckoned all the bishops of Salisburie from Bishop Capon vpward, we shall come at length in respect of Doctrine & Orders to S. Augustine the Apostle of the English, who was made Bishop by Gregory, & from Gregory vpward to S. Peter. And in all that row of Bishops (e) we shall finde neuer a one that beleeued, as M. Iewel beleeueth. Ergo, your Zuinglian & Calumian beleefe, M. Iewel, & of the rest of you fellowes, is not Catholike.

(e) Vntruth by your owne confession.

Epist. 165.

Therefore, to goe from your Succession, which ye cannot proue, and to come to your Vocation, how say you Sir? you beare your selfe as though you were Bishop of Salisburie. But how can you proone your Vocation? By what authoritie Vsurpe you the administration of Doctrine and Sacraments? What can you allege for the right and proofe of your Ministerie? Who hath called you? Who hath laid hands on you? By what example hath he done it? How, and by whom are you consecrated? Who hath sent you? Who hath committed to you the office you take vpon you? Bee you a Priest, or be you not? If you bee not, how dare you Vsurpe the name and office of a Bishop? If you be, tell vs (f) who gaue you Orders? The institution of a Priest, was neuer yet but in the power of a Bishop. Bishops haue alwaies after the Apostles time, according to the Ecclesiastical Canons, beene consecrated by (g) three other Bishops, with the consent of the Metropolitane and confirmation (g) of the Bishop of Rome.

(f) Euen he that gaue M. Harding Orders in the time of King Edward.

(g) Vntruths two together in one Sentence. See the answer.

Athan. in Apolog. 2.

Macarius a Priest of Athanasius (as it was laid to his charge by his accusers) pulled Ischyras from the Altar, as hee was at (h) Masse, ouerthrew the Holy Table, brake the Chalice. The matter brought to Iudgement, Athanasius and the se Bishops both denied the fact, and also though it were granted, yet defended the same as well done, because Ischyras was not a lawfull Minister of the Church. And why so? Because hee was not lawfully made Priest, not with Churchly laying on of hands consecrated. By which example besides other points we are taught, what to iudge of your pretensed Communion.

(h) A vaine Vntruth. For if it had beene any thing it had been a Communion, and not a Masse. But Athanasius saith plainly: Neque Ecclesia illa erat, neque Sacra fiebant, neq; tempus mysteriorum agebatur.

Againe, what say you to Epiphanius, who writeth against one Zachæus of his time, for that being but a Layman, with wicked presumption tooke vpon him to *handle the Holy Mysteries, and rashly to do the office of a Priest? Hereof S Hierome saith notably: Hilarius cum Diaconus de Ecclesia recesserit, &c. Hilary forasmuch as he went from the Church being a Deacon, and is only (as he thinketh) the multitude of the world, can neither consecrate the Sacrament of the Altar, being without Bishops and Priests, nor deliuer Baptisme without the Eucharist. And whereas now the man is dead, with the man also the sect is ended, because being a Deacon he could not consecrate any Clerke that should remaine after him. And Church is there none, which hath not a Priest. But letting goe these few of little regard, that to themselues be both Lay and Bishops, listen what is to be thought of the Church. Thus S. Hierome there: In whom, leauing other things, I note, that if there be no Church where is no Priest, where is your Church like to become, after that our Apostates, that now be fled from vs to you, shal be departed this life? Therefore this being true, it remaineth, M. Iewel, you tell vs, whether your Vocation be Ordinary or Extraordinary. If it be Ordinary, shew vs the Letters of your Orders. At least shew vs that you haue receiued Power to doe the office you presume to exercise, by due order of laying on of hands and Consecration. * But Order and Consecration you haue not. For who could giue that to you of all these new Ministers, howsoeuer else you call them, which he hath not himselfe? If it be Extraordinary (as all that ye haue done hitherto, is besides all good Order) shew vs some signe of Miracle. If you fail, in all these, why ought not you to be put away?

Contra Ioan. Hierosol. lib. 2. in Dialog. aduersus Luciferianos. Sacerdotem.

M. Hardings Brethren Apostates.

*A manifest Vntruth: For we haue both Order and Consecration.

Finally, what can you answer to that, which may be obiected to you out of S. Cyprians Epistle to Magnus, touching Nouatian? It was at those daies a question, whether Nouatian Baptized and offered, specially where as he vsed the Forme, Maner, and Ceremonies of the Church. Cyprian denieth it: For he can not (saith he) be counted a Bishop, who setting at naught the Tradition of the Gospell, and of the Apostles, Nemini succedens à seipso ordinatus est, Succeeding no man is ordained Bishop of himselfe. For by no means may one haue or hold a Church, that is not ordained in the Church.

Lib. 1. Epist. 43. in Gratian. Euseb. Eccl. Hist. lib. 6. cap. 43.

This being so, wee doe you no wrong, as ye complaine, in telling you and declaring to the World, that touching the exercise of your Ministery, yee doe nothing orderly, or comely, but all things troublesomely and without Order. Vnlesse ye meane such Order, and Comelinesse, as Theeues obserue among themselues in the distribution of their Robberies.

M. Hardings modesty.

Lastly, if ye allow not euery Man, yea and euery Woman to be a Priest, why driue ye not some of your fellowes to recant * that so haue preached? Why allow ye the Bookes of your New Euangelists that so haue written?

* An odious Vntruth. For touching the Ministery of the Church, we haue neither preached so, nor written so.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here hath M. Harding taken some paines more then ordinarie. He thought, if hee could by any colour make the world beleeue, wee haue neither Bishops, nor Priests, nor Deacons this day in the Church of England, he might the more easilie claime the whole right vnto himselfe. And indeed, if it were certaine, that the Religion, and Truth of God passeth euermore orderly by Succession, and none otherwise, then were Succession, wherof he hath told vs so long a tale, a very good substantial argument of the truth. But Christ saith, In Cathedra Mosis sedent Scribæ, & Pharisæi: (By order of Succession) The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses Chaire. Annas and Caiphas, touching Succession, were as well Bishops as Aaron, and Eleazar. Of Succession S. Paul saith to the Faithfull at Ephesus: Scio, quòd post discessum meum intrabunt Lupi rapaces. Ex vobis ipsis exurgent viri peruersa loquentes: I know that after my departure hence, rauening Woolues shall enter, and Succeed mee. And out of your selues there shall (by Succession) spring vp men speaking peruersly. Therefore S. Hierome saith, Non sanctorum filij sunt, qui tenent loca Sanctorum: They be not alwaies the Children of Holy Men, that (by Succession) haue the places of Holy men.

Dist. 40. Non est Facile.

Addition. ☞ Nay, (saith M. Harding) you bring these words, as in the reproch of Succession: whereas Christ of the same made an argument for Succession. Could you not perceiue, that Christ made a plaine argument, why, and why only the Scribes and Pharisees should bee obeyed? Thus Christ saith, Obey thē only for Succession sake, because by order of Succession they sit in Moses chaire. This place so maketh for Succession, that it can neuer be auoided. The Answer. And thinke you indeed, M. Harding, that the Scribes, and Pharisees came from Moses by Succession, as the Pope would seeme to come from Peter? were they the Dukes and Princes of the Country, as Moses was? Or, were they the High Priests or Bishops, as was Aaron? Or, had they continued their estate & doctrine euen from the time of Moses vntill Christ, welnere by the space of two thousand yeeres? Certainly S. Hierome saith, The Scribes and Pharisees grew out of two houses in Iurie, the one called Sammai, the other Hillel, not long before Christ was born: Nō multò prius quàm Dominus nasceretur. And Iosephus saith, The Pharisees were first brought to the gouernment of the State by the policy of Alexandra, after the death of Alexander her husband, which was not aboue three score yeres before Christ. Now, M. Harding, if the Scribes and Pharisees had neither the office of Moses, nor his Doctrine, nor his Lawes, nor his Sword, but only had shifted in themselues so many yeres after him, how then can you say, That Christ commanded them to be obeied only for Succession sake, for that by order of Succession they had placed themselues in Moses Chaire? Indeed they had set themselues in the rome of Moses, and were his Successours, as touching place: but other Succession of continuance, or Vniuersally of euery part of Doctrine, I know none. Vniuersally, I say, and of euery part: For otherwise in many parts they taught Moſes Law, and taught it truly. Howbeit, as the Scribes and Phariſeis ſucceeded Moſes, peruerting and breaking the Lawes of Moſes: euen ſo doe the Biſhops of Rome this day ſucceed Chriſt, peruerting and breaking the Lawes of Chriſt.

But, I pray you, did Chriſt command the people to obey the Phariſeis whatſoeuer they ſaid, true or falſe, only becauſe of their Succeſſion? Wherefore then ſaid hee to his Diſciples, Beware of the Leauen of the Scribes and Phariſeis? Blinde they are, and lead the blind, and both fall into the pit. They breake the Lawes of God to vphold their owne Traditions. They are Theeues and Murderers. They ſeeke only to deſtroy and kill. They ſhut vp the kingdome of God before men. Yet will you tell vs that Chriſt commanded the people to follow the Phariſeis abſolutely, and without exception, breaking and defacing Gods holy Lawes: ſhutting vp the kingdome of God: deſtroying and killing the ſoules of Gods people: and leading them headlong into the pit? Nay, M. Harding, Chriſt rather ſaith, My ſheep heare my voice, and follow mee: and will not heare the voice of ſtrangers. By ſtrangers hee meant the Scribes and Phariſeis, and other like. For full anſwer hereto, S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: Sedendo in Cathedra Moſis, Legem Dei docent, &c. Sitting in the Chaire of Moſes, they teach the Law of God. Therefore it is Gods that teacheth in them. But if they will teach any thing of their owne, then (ſaith S. Auguſtine) heare it not, then doe it not.

Matth. 16. Matth. 15. Ibidem. Iohan. 10. Matth. 23. Iohan. 10. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 46.

Thus, M. Harding, you ſee, neither had the Phariſeis due Succeſſion and continuance from Moſes, no more then the Pope hath from S. Peter: nor did they vniuerſally and in all points teach the true meaning of Moſes Law: nor did Chriſt will the people vniuerſally and abſolutely to obey them. So much this place maketh for your Succeſſion.

Notwithſtanding the Pope himſelfe will ſay, as it is before alleged, In Papa ſi deſint bona acquiſita per meritum, ſufficiunt quæ à loci Prædeceſſore præſtantur: If the Pope want good things gotten by his own merits, the good things which he hath (by Succeſſion) of Peter his Predeceſſour are ſufficient. And the Gloſſe thereupon, Petrus fecit Papas hæredes bonitatis ſuæ: Peter made the Popes heirs of his goodneſſe (by Succeſſion.) And againe, Papa Sanctitatem recipit à Cathedra: The Pope receiueth his holineſſe (by Succeſſion) of his Chaire.

Diſt. 40. Non nos. Diſt. 19. Sit omnes: in Gloſſ.

Addition. Addition. The effect of M. Hardings anſwer hereto is this: The Pope may be holy, although not by vertue that ſhould be within him, yet by his office that is without him. The Anſwer. And yet it is vniuerſally confeſſed among the learned, that holineſſe is a vertue, and, that vertue is an ornament of the minde, and is within vs. Sanctitas eſt virtus: virtus eſt habitus animi. But the Pope hath a priueledge aboue others, and may bee holie without holineſſe. So the Scribes and Phariſeis, and Annas, and Caiaphas, were they neuer ſo wicked, might bee holy by their Office. And ſo by this concluſion it may ſtand well with reaſon, that wickednes and holineſſe may dwell together. But S. Hierome ſaith, Si quis hominem, qui ſanctus non eſt, ſanctum eſſe crediderit, & Dei eum iunxerit ſocietati, Chriſtum violat, cuius membra ſumus: If any man beleeue that man to be holy that is not holy, and will ioine him to Gods companie, hee doth villanie to Chriſt, whoſe members wee are.

Such affiance ſometime had the Scribes and Phariſeis in their Succeſſion. Therefore they ſaid, Wee are the children of Abraham: Vnto vs hath God made his promiſes: Art thou greater then our Father Abraham? As for Chriſt, wee know not from whence hee came, or what he can ſhew for his Succeſſion. And when Chriſt began to reforme their abuſes and errours, they ſaid vnto him, By what Power doeſt thou theſe things? And who gaue thee this Authoritie? Where is thy Succeſſion? Vpon which words Beda ſaith, Intelligi volunt, Diaboli eſſe quod facit: They would haue the people vnderſtand (for that hee had no ſolemne Succeſſion) that all that hee did was of the Diuell. And Cyrillus frameth their words in this ſort: Tu, ortus ex Iuda, commiſſos nobis faſces vſurpas: Thou being of the Tribe of Iuda, (and therefore hauing no right by Succeſſion vnto the Prieſthood) takeſt vpon thee the Office that is committed vnto vs. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome imagineth the Phariſeis thus to ſay: Tu de Sacerdotali familia natus non es: Senatus tibi hoc non conceſſit: Cæſar non donauit: Thou art not of the houſe of Prieſts. The Counſell hath not granted it thee: The Emperour hath not giuen it thee. Thus to maintaine themſelues in credit, for that they had Succeſſion and continuance from Aaron, and ſate in Moſes Chaire, they kept Chriſt quite out of poſſeſſion: and ſaid vnto him then, euen as M. Harding ſaith now vnto vs: Who euer taught vs theſe things before thee? What Ordinarie Succeſſion and Vocation haſt thou? What Biſhop admitted thee? Who confirmed thee? Who allowed thee?

Addition. Addition. But M. Harding ſaith, Chriſt had a moſt perfect Succeſſion from Adam, till Ioſeph the husband of the Virgin Mary. The Anſwer. I grant, as touching his birth, Christ had his Succession from Adam downeward. So hath euery man liuing whatsoeuer he be. Euen you your selfe, M. Harding, are lineally descended from Adam by vndoubted Succession, although vnknowen: Vnlesse we shall thinke ye were borne without father or mother, and are none of Adams children. But we speake not now of Succession of birth, but of Succession of Office. And you know the office of Priesthood, whereof the Phariseis spake, was neuer in the house of Dauid, that is reckoned in Luke and Matthew, but only in the house of Leui. Otherwise tell me, in that whole race of Dauids descent, who was euer accounted a Priest, or offered the Sacrifice, or had ordinary power to teach the Gospell, before Christ? You doe euer vainely abuse your Reader, thus confounding and blending your things together. Touching the Ordinarie Office of Priesthood, and instructing the people, whereof we speake, Christ saith plainly, As many as came before me, they were Theeues and Murderers. As if he would say vnto them, I haue no Ordinary descent from the Bishops and Priests of the house of Leui. I am able to shew you no such Succession. My liuing Father hath sent mee to you. Consider better what you write, M. Harding, ye shall the lesse deceiue the simple.

Succession

M. Harding pag. 210. a.

Further you say, S. Peters Chaire to the new Law, is that which Moses Chaire was to the old Law. Who told you this tale, M. Harding? In what Scripture may wee find it? Your owne word carrieth no such credit. Proue it better, that wee may beleeue you. Hereto ye adde further, Whatsoeuer King, or Queene, or Priest setteth vp a Succession against Peters Chaire (you meane that is not obedient to the Pope) before Christs second comming, is a Schismatike, and without repentance, shal be damned in helfire with Idolaters for euer. And is this your Definitiue Sentence, M. Harding? Or may not a poore man appeale from it? Indeed so said Pope Bonifacius in his vanitie: I haue decreed and determined (saith he) that euery creature be subiect to the Bishop of Rome, vpon the necessitie of his saluation. Thus al other Christians whatsoeuer, dwelling in Græcia, Armenia, Aphrica, Asia, Æthiopia, India, &c. must néeds be damned. For certainly they neuer knew any such subiection to the Pope. But God be thanked, S. Peter himselfe, of whose Chaire wee speake, saith thus: Before God there is no difference nor choice of persons: but in euery Nation whosoeuer feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse, is acceptable vnto him. But of any such necessity of obedience to the See of Rome he telleth vs nothing.

De Maior. & Obedient. Vnam sanctam.

Therefore, good Christian Reader, let not these M. Hardings great words much abash thee. The Scribes and Phariseis in the like cases vsed the like language long agoe.

Touching the Church of Rome, I will say no more for this present, but only that was spoken openly by Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto, in the late Councell of Trident: Vtinam non à Religione ad Superstitionem, à Fide ad Infidelitatem, à Christo ad Antichristum, velut prorsus vnanimes declinassent: Would God they were not gone as it were vtterly by consent together, from Religion to Superstition, from Faith to Infidelity, from Christ to Antichrist. These few words, considering either the speaker, or the place where they were spoken, may seeme sufficient. They are gone from Faith to Infidelity, from Christ to Antichrist. And yet, all other things failing, they must hold only by Succession: and onely because they sit in Moses Chaire, they must claime the possession of the whole. This is the right and vertue of their Succession.

Cornel. Episc. Bitontin. in Conc. Trident.

The words of Tertullian, M. Harding, which you haue heere alleged, were spoken of certaine your ancient Fathers, that had raised vp a new Religion of themselues, as you haue also done, without either word of God, or example of the Apostles and holy Fathers. And therefore he saith not vnto vs, but vnto you and such as you bee, Edant Origines Ecclesiarum suarum: Let them shew foorth the Originals of their Churches. Euen so wee say vnto you, shew vs the Originals of your Doctrine: shew vs any one of the Apostles of Christ, or of the learned Catholike Doctours of the Church, that euer said your Priuate Masse: shew one at the least, either Greeke or Latine. S. Augustine saith, of so many Bishops of Rome there could not one be found that had beene a Donatist. Euen so in like sort say wee to you, of all the same Bishops of Rome, there cannot one be found that euer agreed with M. Harding in saying Masse. Or if there were any such, shew vs his name, with other Circumstances, when, and where, and who were witnesses of the doing. Shew vs your Originals, M. Harding: Confesse the truth: Deceiue vs no longer: It is a new deuice: yee haue it onely of your selues, and not by Succession from the Apostles.

August. Epist. 165.

Addition. Hereto M. Harding answereth, You say not euen right so as Tertullian said: For he called not for the Originals of Doctrine, but of Churches. For by the Churches the Doctrine is knowen to be good or euill, to be allowable or reprooueable. The Answer. I grant, M. Harding, great and worthy is the Authoritie of the Church of God: yet is not the truth

Succeſsiō. Confirmation.

Further you ſay, It is cleare that S. Chryſoſtome ſaid Maſſe, and yet had no man to receiue with him. The anſwer. This is all vntrue, M. Harding. For your credits ſake prooue it better. It is euident by Chryſoſtome, that when he miniſtred the holy Communion, great multitudes, as well of the Lay people, as alſo of the Clergie receiued with him. For proofe whereof it may pleaſe thee, good Reader, to conſider ſome part of my Reply to M. Harding.

M. Harding pag. 218. a. Articul. 1. Diuiſion. 34.

Againe you ſay, Wee ſay priuate Maſſe, becauſe the Popes and other Biſhops who ſit in Peters, and in other the Apoſtles Chaires, doe tell vs that it is lawfull to ſay priuate Maſſe. The anſwer. If this rule be infallible, then happy are you. Following the Pope whitherſoeuer he lead you, you can neuer goe amiſſe. This is that myſterie that ye haue diſcloſed to the world in your late Confutation. Thus you ſay: It ſhall bee ſufficient for vs to doe as Peters Succeſſours bid vs to doe: Chriſt now requireth not of vs to obey Peter, or Paul, but him that ſitteth in their Chaire, that is, the Pope.

M Harding Confuta. pag. 192. a. b.

But wherefore telleth vs M. Harding this long tale of Succeſſion? Haue theſe men their owne Succeſſion in ſo fare Record? Who was then the Biſhop of Rome next by Succeſſion vnto Peter? Who was the ſecond? Who the third? Who the fourth? Irenæus reckoneth them together in this order: Petrus, Linus, Anacletus, Clemens: Epiphanius thus: Petrus, Linus, Cletus, Clemens: Optatus thus: Petrus, Linus, Clemens, Anacletus. Clemens ſaith that hee himſelfe was next vnto Peter: and then muſt the reckoning goe thus: Petrus, Clemens, Linus, Anacletus. Hereby it is cleare, that of the foure firſt Biſhops of Rome, M. Harding cannot certainly tell vs who in order ſucceeded other. And thus talking ſo much of Succeſſion, they are not well able to blaſe their owne Succeſſion.

Iren. li. 3. ca. 3. & lib. 4. cap. 4. Euſe. li. 5. ca. 6. Epiphan. lib. 1. De Corpocrat. Optatus contra Donatiſt. lib. 2.

I might farther ſay that Peters See Apoſtolike was ouer the Iewes, and not at Rome ouer the Heathens. For ſo S Paul ſaith: Mihi concreditum eſt Euangelium Præputij, ſicut Petro Circumciſionis: Qui potens erat Petro in Apoſtolatu Circumciſionis, potens erat in me inter Gentes: The Goſpel of the Vncircumciſion among the Heathens, was committed vnto me, as the Goſpell of the Circumciſion among the Iewes vnto Peter: God that was mighty in Peter in the Apoſtleſhip of the Circumciſion, was mightie in me among the Heathens. Therefore if the Pope this day will claime only by Peters Title, and require no more then Peter had, then muſt he ſeeke his Primacie amongſt the Iewes, where Peter had his Iuriſdiction limited, and not at Rome among the Heathen Chriſtians, among whom, as S. Paul ſaith, he had not much to doe.

Addition. Addition. Heere ſaith M. Harding, The lewdneſſe of this licentious Miniſter paſſeth all reaſon. His malicious and fond conceit: You are ſo impudent: Shame it is to you, M. Iewell: The ſhame of ignorance I meane; or which is more likely, the ſhame of impudencie. The anſwer. You are liberall M. Harding. It is your good will I ſhall want no ſhame. Of lewd and licentious Miniſters I haue no ſkill. Such licentious ſpeech might well be ſpared. But why are you ſo impatiently moued without cauſe? You ſay, Iexclude not onely the Pope, but alſo S. Peter from the gouernment of his owne Chaire in Rome. You may not beare falſe witneſſe, M. Harding, be you neuer ſo angrie. The mouth that ſeeketh ſuch aduantages, killeth the ſoule. You know full well we exclude not the Pope from the gouernment of his owne Chaire in Rome. Otherwiſe why ſhould we ſo often times call him the Biſhop of Rome? God giue him grace, that he may ſo gouerne his Chaire, as the ſeruant of Chriſt, and the ſteward of Gods Myſteries: leſt his Chaire be laid to his confuſion. S. Hierome ſaith, It is no eaſie matter to ſtand in the place of Peter and Paul, and to behold the Chaire of them now reigning with Chriſt. And Chryſoſtome ſaith, as he is alleged by Gratian, Non Cathedra facit Sacerdotem, ſed Sacerdos Cathedram: It is not the Chaire that maketh the Prieſt, but it is the Prieſt that maketh the Chaire.

and I know not what. I beſeech you, M. Harding, and doth not S. Paul ſay the ſame? Did not Peter and Paul diuide the charge betweene themſelues, that Peter, James, and Iohn ſhould haue the Iewes for their portion: and Paul and Barnabas for their portion ſhould haue the Heathens? Be not theſe S. Pauls owne expreſſe and plaine words: When Iames, Peter, and Iohn, that are taken as the pillers, or chiefe among them, had knowen the grace that was ginen to me, they ioyned with mee and Barnabas, the right hands of fellowſhip, that wee ſhould preach among the Heathens, and they in the Circumciſion among the Iewes? Weigh well theſe words, M. Harding. What ſignifie they? What meame they? Was not this the concluſion of their agreement, that Iames, Peter, and Iohn ſhould vſe their Apoſtolike Authoritie ouer the Iewes: and Paul and Barnabas their like Authoritie ouer the Heathens? If you can deuiſe vs any other expoſition hereof, I pray you ſhew it.

Orig. in Matth. Tract. 14.

Origen writing vpon the Goſpell of S. Matthew, expoundeth it thus: Peter and Paul gaue right hands of fellowſhip the one to the other, that Peter ſhould goe vnto the Circumciſion, to preach vnto the Iewes liuing vnder the Law, as vnto an Aſſe vnder the Yoke: but Paul ſhould goe vnto the Heathens, as vnto a colt that had neuer beene broken.

Aug. in Epiſt. ad Galat. li. 1.

S. Auguſtine expoundeth it thus: They agreed that Paul and Barnabas ſhould goe to the Heathens: and themſelues, Iames, Peter, and Iohn, vnto the Circumciſion, which ſeemed contrary to the Heathens.

Hiero. in Epiſt. ad Gala. cap. 2.

S. Hierome thus: Vnus atque idem &c. One God hath committed vnto me the preaching of the Goſpell among the Heathens: and to Peter among the Iewes. He ſent me vnto the Gentiles, and placed Peter in Iurie. By Gods prouidence one Apoſtle is giuen to the Iewes, and another vnto the Heathens.

Chryſ. in Epiſt. ad Galat. ca. 2.

Chryſoſtome thus: One thing pleaſed them both, that Peter and his ſide ſhould preach to the Iewes: and Paul and Barnabas to the Heathens.

Afterward he imagineth S. Paul thus to ſay: In prædicandi munere partiti ſumus inter nos Orbem terrarum: In the office of preaching we haue diuided the World betweene our ſelues. And a little before he ſaith thus: Paulus nihil opus habebat Petro, nec illius egebat voce, ſed honore par erat illi. Nihil enim hîc dicam amplius: Paul had no lacke of Peter, nor ſtood in need of his voice: but in honour was his Peere. I will ſay no more.

Ambro. ad Galat. cap. 2.

S. Ambroſe ſaith thus: Paul ſaith that the grace he had receiued of God, was allowed of them, that hee might be thought worthie to haue the Primacy in preaching among the Heathens, as Peter had in preaching among the Iewes.

Anſelm in Epiſt ad Galat. ca. 2.

Anſelmus a latter writer ſaith thus: Theſe two principall Apoſtles were choſen to the Saluation of two Peoples: Peter to the Saluation of the Iewes: and Paul to the Saluation of the Heathens.

What ſhall we néd moe Authorities in a matter ſo euident? This is the Expoſition of all the learned Fathers, both Greekes and Latines. Yet will you ſtill tell vs, The leudneſſe of this licentious Miniſter paſſeth all reaſon? Will you ſtill crie out, Shame, Impudencie, and Ignorance, &c.?

M. Har. 222.

But you ſay, I haue left out this word Enim, which in Engliſh doth ſignifie, For. This word For (you ſay) giueth great light to S. Paules meaning. A foule fault, no doubt, M. Harding, and well worthie to be proclamed by printed bookes vnto the world. Perhaps ye would rather I had begunne the firſt ſentence with Enim, as doth your Hippolytus. But if there be any ſuch ſpeciall vertue in Enim, let him come in againe hardly, M. Harding, and take his place.

Theop. in Epiſt. ad Galat. ca. 2.

Theophylactus vpon this Enim, hath written thus: Quin etiam parem hoc loco ſe Petro demonſtrat: Yea further Paul in this place ſheweth himſelfe to be equall to Peter.

Chryſoſtom. ad Galat. cap. 2.

Likewiſe vpon the ſame Enim ſaith Chryſoſtome: Now Paul ſheweth himſelfe to be equal in honour vnto the reſt: not only vnto others, but alſo vnto (Peter) the chiefe of all.

Hieronym ad Galat. cap. 2.

Likewiſe it is written in the ſhort Scholies, that beare the name of S. Hierome: Ego in nullo ſum illi inferior: I (ſaith S. Paul) am in nothing inferiour vnto Peter. Verily if he thought not himſelfe inferiour to Peter, then he thought not Peter to be his head.

Eraſ. Paraphr.

Now haue you your Enim, M. Harding, and as we may learne by theſe ancient Fathers, the very light of S. Pauls meaning: that is, that Paul ſhould deale among the Heathens, and Peter among the Iewes. And therefore Eraſmus expoundeth it thus: Fœdus ac ſocietatem inierunt, vt idem Euangelium concordibus animis in ſua quiſque portione prædicaremus: illi inter Iudæos, nos inter Gentes: They ioyned in league and fellowſhip with vs: that with conſenting mindes we ſhould preach one Goſpell, each man within his owne portion: they among the Iewes, and we among the Heathens. Thus were they charged by their owne agreement, each of them within his owne particular portion. By their owne agreement, I ſay. For other wiſe Chriſt ſaith, not only to Peter, but alſo equally vnto them all, Goe you into the whole world, and Preach the Goſpell. But by this Commiſſion Thomas and Thaddee might haue preached in Rome, as well as Peter. By their owne agreement they knew their portions. It is no euen dealing M. Harding, to diuide portions betwéne two, or more, and afterward to giue ouer the whole to one alone.

Pére

Heere will you say, Had Peter then nothing to do among the Heathens? Or, Had Paul nothing to doe among the Iewes? Yes verily, M. Harding. For we know that Peter preached vnto the Heathen Centurion: And Paul often times entered into the Synagogues of the Iewes, as by the Acts of the Apostles it may appeare: and of himselfe he saith thus: Factus sum Iudæis quasi Iudæus: Vnto the Iewes I was as a Iew. And againe, I wish my selfe to be accursed, and diuided from Christ, for (the Iewes sake, which are) my brethren, and kinsmen according to the flesh. Act. 9. 22. & 26. 1 Cor. 9. Cupio anathema esse.

Confirmation.

Wheresoeuer they saw occasion offered, they were alwaies readie to doe good to all men, without choice of persons, whether they were Iewes, or Heathens.

Conſecration.

Howbeit, this question is very well moued, and answered by S. Hierome. Thus he saith: Occulta hic oritur quæstio. Quid igitur; Petrus si inuenisset ex Gentibus, non eos adducebat ad fidem? Aut Paulus &c. Heere ariseth a secret question; If Peter had found any of the Heathens, did he not traine them to the Faith? Or if S. Paul had happened vpon any of the Iewes, did he not exhort them to be Baptized? This question, saith he, is thus assoiled. Wee must say that either of them had a Principall, or a Speciall Commission, the one ouer the Iewes, the other ouer the Heathens: that the Iewes that defended the Law might haue One, whom to follow: and the Heathens that chose rather the free grace of God, and left the Law, might likewise haue a Teacher to go before them. But generally this purpose was common to them both, that out of all Nations, as well Iewes as Heathens, they might gather a Church vnto Christ. That is to say, Peters Apostleship was Ordinarie among the Iewes, and Extraordinarie among the Heathens: of the other side, Pauls Apostleship was Ordinarie among the Heathens, and Extraordinarie among the Iewes. Hieronym. ad Galat. cap. 2. Principalis singulis in Iudæos & gentes fuisse mandatum.

Thus much haue I added for your sake, M. Harding. For otherwise it had been needelesse. Heereby it is euident, That by Gods secret prouidence, and by the Apostles agreement betweene themselues, Peter was placed in Iurie, and Paul among the Heathens: For so saith S. Hierome, That Paul had the Primacie among the Heathens, as Peter had among the Iewes: For so saith S. Ambrose, That Paul was equall vnto Peter: For so saith Chrysostome, That Paul was in no point inferiour vnto Peter: For so saith he that beareth the name of S. Hierome: Briefly, that either of them was allotted to his seuerall portion, and neither had the charge Vniuersall of the whole. This is neither lewdnesse, nor licentious Ministerie, nor shame, nor villanie. Leaue such wilde talke, M. Harding, and learne your tongue to speake better.

Where you say, that according to the Ecclesiasticall Canons, euer from the Apostles time Bishops haue euermore been consecrate by three other Bishops, with the Confirmation of the Bishop of Rome, as if without him no man might be allowed to be a Bishop, ye should not so vnaduisedlie repoort so manifest vntruth. For, I beseech you, where be these Ecclesiasticall Canons? Who deuised them? Who made them? Who gaue the Pope that singular Priuiledge, that no Bishops should be admitted in all the World, but only by him? I remember your Canonists haue said, Papa potest solo verbo facere Episcopum: The Pope may make a Bishop only by his word, without any farther Consecration. And Abbat Panormitane moueth a doubt, whether the Pope by the fulnesse of his power may depriue all the Bishops in the world at one time. But thus they saie, that care not greatlie what they say. Felin. de Constitu. Ca. Canonum Statuta. Colum. 3. Ver. Fallit. Panor. de Constitution. translato.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding answereth heereto, Among the Canons of the Apostles this is the first: Episcopus à duobus aut tribus Episcopis ordinetur. Yet can you aske, where be these Ecclesiasticall Canons? Who deuised them? Who made them? The Answer. You forget your selfe much, M. Harding. This was not the question. You are demanded one thing, and answer another. We denie not the Consecration of three Bishops. We denie not the Confirmation of the Metropolitane. We our selues are so consecrated, and so confirmed. The matter that lieth betweene vs is this, Whether thorow the whole Church of Christ no man may be allowed for a Bishop, without the Confirmation of the Pope. Thereto I say, Where be your Ecclesiasticall Canons? Who deuised them? Who made them? If ye haue any, shew them forth hardly: they will further your cause. If ye haue none at all, why should you thus vaunt your selfe of emptie store? Why should you talke so vainly of your Ecclesiasticall Canons, so old, so ancient, so long continued in the Catholike Church, from the Apostles time, vntill this day? M. Hard. Confutat. 58. a.

Christ (you say) loued Peter, and inspired him, and gaue the Bishop of Rome, Peters Successor, this Priuiledge, that no Bishop ought to be a Bishop without his consent. Verily this had been a follie large Commission. And was it granted vnto the Pope, as you say, and not vnto Peter? For so you say. Behold your words: Christ gaue the Bishop of Rome, Peters Successor, this Priueledge: that no Bishop ought to be a Bishop without his consent. Of Peters Priuiledge or consent you tell vs nothing: You speake only of the consent and Priuiledge of the Pope, the M. Hard. Detection. 223. b.

Confirmation. Consecration.

Successour of Peter. But where may wee finde this Commission? In what Gospell? In what Scripture? In what Generall Councell? In what ancient Father? Are such Monuments laid vp only in the Roles and Pipes of your memorie? Or is it sufficient for you to tell vs, Christ inspired and loued Peter: Christ gaue Priuileges to the Pope: without any maner word of proufe? I beseech you, M. Harding, how many Bishops can you reckon that were confirmed by S. Peter? Where dwelt they? Where preached they? What were their names? Cardinall Cusanus saith, Tam Petri Primatus inter Apostolos & Judæos, quàm Pauli Primatus inter Gentes immediatè à Christo conferebatur: &c. Nec in hoc alter alteri suberat: sed ambo sub Christo immediatè: Aswell Peters Primacie among the Apostles and Iewes, as also Pauls Primacie among the Heathens, was giuen by Christ immediately, (that is to say) without the Consecration and Confirmation of any man, &c. And in this respect neither of them was vnder other: but either was immediately vnder Christ. That is to say, S. Paul was no more confirmed by S. Peter, then S. Peter was confirmed by S. Paul. And may we thinke S. Peter knew not his owne Authority? Or that he had such Priuileges and Chartars giuen him by Christ, and would not vse them? Heere, it seemeth, somewhat would yee tell vs of Pope Anacletus, if yee wist what it were. But what saith hee? That Peter confirmed all the rest of the Apostles? Or, that the Pope ought to confirme all other Bishops thorow the world? It pitieth me, M. Harding, in your behalfe, to see these follies.

Nilus de Primatu Romani Pontificis.

Verily, Nilus a Greeke writer saith thus: Constantinopolitanus Cæsariensem Episcopum, aliósque sibi subiectos ordinat: Romanus verò nec Constantinopolitanum, nec alium quenquam Metropolitanum: The Bishop of Constantinople doth order the Bishop of Cæsaria, and other Bishops vnder him: but the Bishop of Rome doth order neither the Bishop of Constantinople, nor any other Metropolitane.

M. Harding fol. 225. a.

Addition ☞ M. Harding answereth hereto: It skilleth not much what Nilus doth say. He speaketh of a matter of Fact, and not of Power. He saith not that the Bishop of Rome is not able, or hath no power to Order some Metropolitane; but only that he doth not so. Or if hee were so foolish to thinke so, yet you, M. Iewell, should not in that behalfe beare the bable with him. You that can call so many Glosses to your remembrance, could you not remember that Agapetus that good Bishop of Rome consecrated and ordered with his owne hands Mennas, making him Bishop of Constantinople? Addition ☜

The Answer. And must Nilus, and poore M. Iewell needs beare the bable? I pray you, M. Harding, what will you doe the while? Will you stand by, and doe nothing? Verily, Nilus was a Bishop, and, as it may appear by his writings, a learned man, and would thinke scorne to beare the bable in your presence. But you say, Could you not remember that Pope Agapetus with his owne hands ordered Mennas, and made him the Bishop of Constantinople? Yes, M. Harding, I remember it verie well. And further, I can remember that Liberatus your Authour saith, Tunc Papa Principis fauore Mennam ordinauit Antistitem: The Pope (saith he) ordered Mennas the Bishop of Constantinople (not by any right or authority of his owne, but) by the licence and fauour of the Emperour. Againe, I can remember that Pope Agapetus was then present in Constantinople, to deale with the Emperor about certaine great matters touching the State. And being there present in his owne person, and a new Bishop being by occasion to be enstalled, it was most meet that hee should haue the honour of Consecration. And, as for the taking of that long and painefull iourney, thus much also I can remember, that whensoeuer the Emperor by his messenger had willed the Pope to come vnto him, although it were from Rome to Constantinople, straightway he went along, all occasions set apart, yea although he certainly knew that hee should neuer returne home againe, but bee sent into banishment. Further, I can remember that Pope Agapetus himselfe said thus at the time of the said Consecration, in the behoufe and commendation of the said Mennas: Et hoc dignitati eius accedere credimus, quòd à temporibus Petri Apostoli nullum alium vnquam Orientalis Ecclesia suscepit Episcopum nostræ Sedis manibus consecratum: This also may be an augmentation to his dignity, that from the time of Peter the Apostle vntill this day (which was by the space of fiue hundred yeeres) the East Church neuer receiued any one Bishop Consecrat by the hands of any Bishop of Rome, but onely Mennas. Mennas was the first, as it appeareth by the Popes owne witnesse: and for ought that I knowe to the contrarie, hee was also the last. And had not Pope Agapetus vpon occasion beene there present in his owne person, then had hee not consecrated Mennas neither. Consider better what yee bring vs, M. Harding. Yee shall hardly thriue by such Authorities. Last of all, I can remember that the Bishop of Rome himselfe is alwaies consecrate by the Bishop of Hostia. Yet is not the Bishop of Hostia therefore aboue the Bishop of Rome. It is no great masterie to remember these things, M. Harding. But I maruell much wherein this remembrance should releeue you.

But

But hereof I haue spoken more at large in my former Replie to M. Harding. Certainly S. Cyprian willeth, that Sabinus, being lawfully elected, and consecrated Bishop in Spaine, should continue Bishop still, yea although Stephanus being then Bishop of Rome would not confirme him. Art. 4. Div. 25 Cyprian. lib. 1. epist. 4.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ By this a man may know, what a dodger you are, and whence your great Bookes proceed. Verily from certaine Heretical Notebookes, made by some Grammarians or Schoolemasters of Germany. The Answer. I maruell, M. Harding, you said not as well, from Tailers and Shoomakers: for we poore men must take our learning at Delinery, as it may like you to allow it. The matter it selfe by your own confession is true. For S. Cyprian willed, that Sabinus being once elected and consecrated Bishop in Spaine, should continue so still, yea although the Bishop of Rome had disallowed him. If ye doubt hereof, leane dodging in your note Bookes, and read S. Cyprian, and ye shall find it. Twice together in one place ye tell vs, that Pope Stephanus restored Basilides by his Decree: as if his only authority had borne sufficient to set vp Bishops, and to pull them downe at his pleasure. But in so saying, you condemn Pope Stephanus of manifest folly. For what wisdome had it been to be so ready with his Sentence, & to publish his Decrees, before he had heard both parties together? A Iudge must walke with feet of lead. A certaine graue wise man saith thus: Cyprian. lib. 1. epist. 4.

Confirmation. Consecration.

Qui statuit aliquid, parte inaudita altera,
Æquum licèt Statuerit, haud æquus fuit. Seneca.

Whosoeuer Decreed any thing, before he heard both parties, although his Decree were iust, yet was he no iust man in his doing.

Pope Stephanus, M. Harding, intreated only for Basilides, that he might be restored. As for Decree or Sentence in Iudgement, he gaue none. But, if S. Cyprian had made such account of the Popes pleasure, and had thought it vnlawfull, for Sabinus to occupie the rome of a Bishop without his speciall confirmation, he would haue written vnto Stephanus, to call the parties before him, and to consider better of the matter. He would also haue written to the Clergie, and people of Spaine to stay their attemps, vntill the Pope had taken further order. But contrariwise, notwithstanding hee knew what the Pope had written, yet he saith vnto them, Plebs ipsa habet potestatem, vel eligendi dignos Sacerdotes, vel indignos recusandi: The people haue power of themselues, either to chuse worthy Bishops, or else to refuse them that be vnworthy. As if he would say, Thus may the people doe of themselues, whether the Pope will, or no. Cyprian. lib. 1. epist. 4.

And to come nere vnto the matter, thus he saith: Ferè per prouincias vniuersas tenetur, vt ad Ordinationes ritè celebrandas, ad eam plebem, cui præpositus Ordinatur, Episcopi eiusdem prouinciæ proximi quique conueniant, & Episcopus Deligatur, plebe præsente, quæ singulorum vitam plenissimè nouit: &c. Quod & apud vos factum videmus in Sabini Collegæ nostri Ordinatione, &c. Neque rescindere Ordinationem iure perfectam potest, quòd Basilides post crimina sua detecta, Romam pergens, Stephanum collegam nostrum longè positum fefellerit, &c. This order is kept welnere thoroout all Countries, that at the Consecration of a Bishop, the Bishops of the same Province next adioining, resort together to the people of that Diocesse, ouer which the Bishop must bee Consecrate, that the Bishop may be chosen in the presence of the people, that best knoweth each mans life. This order, I see you haue kept in the Consecration of my Brother Sabinus. Neither may that thing hinder his Consecration, being lawfully done, that Basilides, after his faults were espied, went to Rome, and beguiled my Brother Pope Stephanus dwelling so farre off. Marke well these words, M. Harding: Neither Basilides running to Rome, nor the Popes Letters written in his fauour, were able to auoid the Consecration of the other Bishop, notwithstanding it was neuer confirmed by the Pope.

But you will say, The Bishop of Rome dwelling so farre from Spaine, yet had authority ouer the Bishops of Spaine. I denie it not. So had S. Cyprian the like authority, notwithstanding he dwelt from Spaine a great way further then the Bishop of Rome. For as Basilides fled to Rome for succour to Pope Stephanus: so Sabinus his aduersary fled to Carthage for succour to S. Cyprian. As the Pope Decreed, that Sabinus should not be Bishop: so S. Cyprian Decreed, that Sabinus should be Bishop. There was like authority in them both. This onely was the difference: The Popes Decree was auoided by a writ of Errour: But S. Cyprians Decree toke place and continued still. And lest you should think, I imagin vainely of S. Cyprian, extending his power from Carthage into Spaine, Gregory Nazianzene of his authority writeth thus: Pastor erat, & Pastorum potentissimus, & spectatissimus. Non enim Carthaginensium tantùm Ecclesiæ præfuit &c. Cyprian was a Bishop, the mightiest and noblest of all Bishops. For hee had rule not onely ouer the Church of Carthage, Nazian. De Cypriano.

nor onely ouer Aphrica, that vntill this day is famous of him, and by his meanes, but also ouer all the West, and in a maner ouer all the East, likewise ouer both North and South. Ouer all these Coasts and Countries, saith Nazianzene, S. Cyprian bare Rule: And yet was he onely the Bishop of Carthage, and not Pope of Rome. O, M. Harding, if you could shew vs but one such sentence of the Pope, who should be able to stay your triumph? Deale substantially hencefoorth. It will better become you. Thus vainly trifling with your Grammarians, and Note-bookes (to vse your owne words) ye shew your selfe to bee but a dodger.

Neque dissimus.

Confirmation. Consecration.

Indeed, touching euery Metropolitanes seuerall Iurisdiction, Gratianus noteth thus: Illud generaliter clarum est, quòd si quis præter sententiam Metropolitani fuerit factus Episcopus, hunc magna Synodus definiuit Episcopum esse non oportere: This is generally cleare, that if any man be made Bishop, without the consent of his Metropolitane, the great Councell (of Nice) hath decreed, that such a one may not be Bishop.

Dist. 64. ca. fin.

So likewise saith Socrates of the Bishop of Constantinople: Præter Sententiam Episcopi Constantinopolitani Electio Episcopi ne fiat: Without the Consent of the Bishop of Constantinople let no man be chosen Bishop. Heere is a right, specially reserued to the Bishop of Constantinople, and to euery Metropolitane within his own prouince: but of the Bishop of Romes Vniuersall right of Confirmation, we heare nothing.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Heereto M. Harding saith, For lacke of the Popes Confirmation, any Bishop newly elected could not rightly haue enioied his Bishopricke, as it appeareth by many examples, which would require a discourse ouer long for this place. The Answer. O, M. Harding, will you deale so craftily with your friends? Of so many, and so many examples, may we not see so much as one? I speake not now of Bishops within the Territory of the Romane Prouince: For they were confirmed by the Bishop of Rome. I speake of the Bishops of all other Churches, and Iurisdictions throughout the world. You say, It would require a discourse ouer long for this place. Therefore it was good skill, thus cursorily to passe it ouer. Silence serueth best, where nothing can be said.

Anaclet. epi. 3. Dist. 93. iuxta Sanctorum.

Neither doth M. Hardings counterfet Anacletus claime all the Bishops throughout the world, as belonging to his Admission, but onely a part. These be his words; Omnes Episcopi, qui huius Apostolicæ Sedis Ordinationi subiacent: All the Bishops that are vnder the Ordering, or Confirmation of this Apostolike See. So likewise writeth Damasus to the Bishops of Illyricum, Par est, omnes, qui sunt in Orbe Romano, Magistros consentire: It is meet that all the Teachers within the Romane Iurisdiction, should agree together.

Sozomen. lib. 6. cap. 23.

Fol. 228. a.

Addition. ☞ M. Hardings answer heerto is this: The Roman world or Iurisdiction was both East and West, as farre as the Romans had conquered. The Answer. And doth the Iurisdiction of Rome reach from the East to the West; from the North to the South, and so ouer and ouer the whole World? How happeneth it then, that no Learned Father, nor ancient Writer, Greeke, or Latine, what soeuer, vouchsafed euer to tell vs of it? Did no man euer heare it, or know it, but M. Harding? Or is it enough for M. Harding to speak it, and to shew vs nothing? At least he should haue brought forth Constantines Donation, or some other such Antiquity of like value. But if the Romane Iurisdiction were so large, as it is heere imagined, wherefore then doth S. Hierome say, Maiorest Authoritas Orbis, quàm Vrbis? The Authority of the World, is more then the Authority of the Citie of Rome? For by M. Hardings supposals, the one had beene equall to the other. Or wherefore doth Gennadius the Patriarke of Constantinople, together with the whole Councell of Bishops there assembled, write thus vnto the Bishop of Rome? Curet Sanctitas tua Vniuersas tuas Custodias, tibique subiectos Episcopos: Let your Holinesse see vnto your own charge, and vnto the Bishops that be vnder you. It had beene wrong to restraine the Pope to a few, hauing, as you say, a charge generall ouer the whole.

Iohan. Maior in 4. Sent. Dist. 24. Quæst. 3.

Againe, that you say, A Bishop hath alwaies been Consecrate by other three Bishops: whether it be true or no, it may well be called in question, as being of your part hitherto very weakely affirmed. Surely Petrus de Palude, one of your own Doctours, would haue told you thus: In Ecclesia Vnus Episcopus sufficit ad alium consecrandum: nec est, nisi propter solennitatem ab Ecclesia inuentum, vt Tres concurrant: In the Church One Bishop is sufficient to Consecrate another: and it is nothing else, but for the solemnity of the matter, that the Church hath deuised, that Three Bishops should ioine together. Likewise Iohannes Maior, another of your own Doctours, would haue said vnto you, Quis ordinauit Petrum? Non dabunt Tres Ordinatores. Dico ergo, esse constitutionem Humanam, quòd Episcopus Ordinetur à Tribus. Paulus enim non quæsiuit Duos pro Ordinatione Titi, & Timothei: Who Ordered Peter, and made him Bishop? They cannot shew mee Three Bishops that Ordered him. Therefore I say, that a Bishop be Ordered by other Three Bishops, it is an Ordinance made by Man. For Paul, when he Ordered Titus & Timotheus sought not about for other Two Bishops.

Where-

Whereas it further pleaseth you, to call for my Letters of Orders, and to demand of me, as by some authority, Whether I be a Priest or no? What hands were laid ouer me: and by what Order I was made? I answer you, I am a Priest, made long sithence, by the same Order and Ordinance, and I thinke also by the same man, and the same hands, that you, M. Harding, were made Priest by, in the late time of that most vertuous Prince King Edward the Sixth. Therefore ye cannot well doubt of my Priesthod, without like doubting of your owne. Confirmation. Consecration.

Further, as if you were my Metropolitane, yée demand of mée, Whether I be a Bishop or no? I answer you, I am a Bishop, and that by the frée and accustomed Canonicall election of the whole Chapter of Sarisburie, assembled solemnlie together, for that purpose. Of which companie you, M. Harding, were then one, and, as I was enformed, being present there in your owne person, amongst your Brethren, gaue frée, and open consent vnto the election. If you denie this, take hæd your owne breath blow not against you.

As for the impertinent tales of Ischyras and Zacchæus, they touch vs nothing. They were none of ours: We know them not. Our Bishops are made, in Forme and Order, as they haue béene euer, by frée Election of the Chapter; by Consecration of the Archbishop and other three Bishops: and by the Admission of the Prince. And in this sort, not long sithence, the Pope himselfe was admitted; and, as Platina saith, without the Emperours Letters Patent, the Pope was no Pope, as hereafter it shall be shewed more at large. Platina in Seuerino Papa.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ What forme or order meane you? (saith M. Harding.) In the Old Forme, after the Election, notice was giuen to the Bishop of Rome, and to all the Bishops of the Church, that such a man was lawfully chosen in the Church, and not schismatically, &c. But so ye were not made Bishops. If ye were, shew vs to what Bishops out of England ye wrote any such Letters. The Answer. What follie is this M. Harding? What such letters haue the Bishops of Spaine vsed to write to the Bishops of England? Or what letters haue the Bishops of France vsed to write to the Bishops of Spaine? or when did the Pope write his letters Communicatorie to the Patriarkes of Constantinople, of Alexandria, of Antioche, or to the other Bishops of the East? But you confesse, this order is broken by your selues. Behold your owne words. Thus you say, The custome of these Letters is out of vse. And hauing broken it your selues, M. Harding, would ye haue vs to kæpe it? Or would ye haue vs to reuerence those things, that your selues haue refused? M. Harding Fol. 134 a. Fol. 234. b.

But you say, After that the Custome of those Letters became to be out of vse, the only Bishop of Romes confirmation was in stead of the said notice. Thus you say, and say it onely, and proue nothing: as if there were some weight in your saying. But who made vs these Lawes? Where sprang they? When began they? In what Synode, in what Councell were they written? If ye had any good thing to shew, it is likely, yee would not hide it. ☞

Therefore we neither haue Bishops without Church, nor Church without Bishops. Neither doth the Church of England this day depend of them, whom you often call Apostates, as if our Church were no Church without them. They are no Apostates, M. Harding: that is rather your owne name, and of good right belongeth vnto you. They are for a great part learned and graue, and godly men, and are much ashamed to se your follies. Notwithstanding, if there were not one, neither of them, nor of vs left aliue, yet would not therefore the whole Church of England flée to Louaine. Tertullian saith, Nonne & Laici Sacerdotes sumus? Scriptum est, Regnum quoque, & Sacerdotes Deo, & Patri suo nos fecit. Differentiam inter Ordinem, & Plebem constituit Ecclesiæ authoritas, & honor per Ordinis consessum sanctificatus à Deo. Vbi Ecclesiastici Ordinis non est consessus, & Offert, & Tingit Sacerdos, qui est ibi solus. Sed & vbi Tres sunt, Ecclesia est, licèt Laici. Vnusquisque enim de sua Fide viuit: And wee being Laymen, are we not Priests? It is written, Christ hath made vs both a Kingdome, and Priests vnto God his Father: The authoritie of the Church, and the honour by the assembly, or Councell of Order sanctified of God, hath made a difference between the Lay, and the Clergie. Where as there is no Assembly of Ecclesiasticall Order, the Priest being there alone, (without the company of other Priests) doth both minister the Oblation, and also Baptize. Yea, and be there but Three together, and, though they be Laymen, yet is there a Church. For euery man liueth of his owne Faith. Tertullian in Exhorta. ad Castitatem.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ For answer hereto. M. Harding hath yeelded vs words enow. A thousand faults (he saith) and many thousand lies are in my Bookes: Yea would Iusin (he saith) if any shame were in you, &c. The totall summe hereof is this: Tertullian was an Heretike, and wrote this Booke against the Church: There is a difference between Priests and Laymen: There is Priesthood Internall, and Priesthood Externall: where the Externall Priesthood is denied, as among the Lutherans, and Caluinists, there is no Church, &c. M. Harding fol. 238. a. Fol. 140. a.

Touching the first part hereof, I grant, Tertullian, in some part fell from the truth of God,

God, euen as you haue also, M. Harding, and followed Montanus the Heretike in his errors. The errours of Montanus were these: First, he said, He knew more then the Apostles of Christ: and that the Apostles knowledge was vncertaine, and wanted perfection. Further hee said, That Second Marriage was fornication and filthinesse. But the thing, wherein you haue taken holde, touching Priests and Lay people, was no part of Montanus errours. If it were, bring it foorth out of some recorde: let it appeare that we may see it. Neither may you iustlie conclude, because Tertullian in one or two points was an Heretike, that therfore euerie sentence in his Booke is full of heresies. As for these words, he had them not out of Montanus the Heretike, but out of S. Peter the Apostle of Christ. Thus saith S. Peter, Vos estis Regale Sacerdotium: You are the Kingly Priesthood. And thus he saith not onely vnto Priests and Bishops, but also vnto the whole Christian people. Likewise S. Iohn the Euangelist saith, Christ with his blood hath washed vs from our sinnes, and hath made vs Kings and Priests vnto God his Father. But ye tell vs, There is a Priesthood Internall, and a Priesthood Externall, and there is a difference between Lay men and Priests. What needed this talke, M. Harding? There is not one of vs, that euer taught otherwise. We know, that the Priest or Minister of the Church of God is diuided from the rest of his brethren, as was the Tribe of Leui from the children of Israel, and hath a speciall Office ouer the people. Neither may any man force himselfe into that Office, without lawfull calling. But as touching the Inward Priesthood, and the exercise of the soule, we say, euen as S. Peter, and S. Iohn, and Tertullian haue said; in this sense euery faithfull Christian man is a Priest, and offereth vnto God spirituall sacrifices. In this onely sense, I say, and none otherwise.

Numer. 8. Deuter. 10.

Now, if any man shall thinke it strange, to heare a Lay man in any sense called a Priest, may it please him to peruse some part of that heereafter followeth, in this Defense. There shall he find by the authorities of S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, S. Hierome, and S. Chrysostome, that whosoeuer is a member of Christs bodie, whosoeuer is a child of the Church, whosoeuer is baptized in Christ, and beareth his name, is fullie inuested with this Priesthood, and therefore may iustly be called a Priest. And whersoeuer there be three such together, as Tertullian saith, yea though they be only Lay men, yet haue they a Church.

Defens. part. 3. cap. 11. Diuis. 4 & 5.

The old Father Origen saith: Omnes quicunque vnguento Sacri Chrismatis deliburi sunt, fiunt Sacerdotes: All they, that are bathed with the ointment of Holy Chrisme, are made Priests. S. Augustine saith: Holocaustum Dominicæ Passionis offert quisque pro peccatis suis, &c. Euery man offereth vp the sacrifice of our Lords passion for his sinnes. Likewise S. Cyprian, Omnes qui à Christi nomine dicuntur Christiani, offerunt Deo quotidianum Sacrificium, ordinati à Deo sanctimoniæ Sacerdotes: All men, that of the name of Christ, bee called Christians, offer vp vnto God the daily Sacrifice, being ordained of God, the Priests of Holinesse. Thus wee see, all Christian men are Priests, and offer vp to God the daily sacrifice, that is, the sacrifice of Christs passion. Therefore, M. Harding, if yee condemne Tertullian in this behalfe, yee must also condemne so manie holie and learned Fathers for the same.

Origen. in Leuit. Homil. 9. August. in Expositione inchoata, ad Roman. Cypr. de Vnctione Chrismatis.

But you Protestants (ye say) haue no Externall Sacrifice, and therefore ye haue no Church at all.

M. Harding fol. 240. a.

It pitieth me, M. Harding, to see the vanitie of your dealing. Haue wee no Externall Sacrifice, say you? I beseech you, what Sacrifice did Christ or his Apostles euer command that we haue refused? Leaue your milky clouds, and generalities of words, and speake it plainly, that ye may seeme to say some truth.

Sacrifice.

We haue the Sacrifice of Praier, the Sacrifice of Almes deeds, the Sacrifice of Praise, the Sacrifice of Thankesgiuing, and the Sacrifice of the Death of Christ. We are taught to present our owne bodies, as a pure, and a holie, and a wel pleasing Sacrifice vnto God, and to offer vp vnto him the burning Oblation of our lips. These (saith S. Paul) be the Sacrifices wherewith God is pleased. These be the Sacrifices of the Church of God. Whosoeuer hath these, we cannot say, he is void of Sacrifice. Howbeit, if we speake of a Sacrifice Propitiatory for the satisfaction of sinnes, we haue none other but only Christ Iesus, the Sonne of God vpon his Crosse. He is that Sacrificed Lambe of God, that hath taken away the sinnes of the World.

Roma. 12. Hosee 14. Hebræ. 13.

You will say, Ye offer not vp Christ really vnto God his Father. No, M. Harding: neither we, nor you can so offer him: nor did Christ euer giue you Commission to make such Sacrifice. And this is it, wherewith you so foulie beguile the simple. Christ offereth and presenteth vs vnto his Father. For by him we haue accesse to the Throne of Grace. But no creature is able to offer him. Christ Iesus vpon his Crosse was a Priest for euer, according to the Order of Melchisedech. As for our part S. Augustine saith, Holocausti eius Imaginem ad memoriam passionis suæ in Ecclesia celebrandam dedit: Christ hath giuen vs to celebrate in his Church, an Image or token of that Sacrifice for the remembrance of his passion.

Againe he saith, Huius sacrificij Caro, & Sanguis post Ascensionem Christi per Sacramentum memoriæ celebratur: After Christs Ascension into Heauen, the Flesh and Blood of this Sacrifice, is continued by a Sacrament of remembrance. Eusebius saith, Sacrificium incendimus illi memoriam magni illius Sacrificij, &c. Iussit nos offerre memoriale pro Sacrificio: We burne a Sacrifice vnto God, the remembrance of that great Sacrifice vpon the Crosse, &c. Christ commanded vs to offer vp a remembrance (of his death) in stead of a Sacrifice. It were an infinit labour to repeat al that may be said. To be short, S. Hierome saith, turning himselfe vnto Christ: Tunc acceptabis Sacrificium, vel cum te pro nobis offert Pater, vel cùm à nobis laudes, & gratiarum actiones accipis: Then shalt thou, O Christ, receiue Sacrifice, either when thou offerest vp thy selfe for vs vnto thy Father, (which was only vpon the Crosse) or else, when thou receiuest of vs praises and thankesgiuing.

All these things are true, M. Harding: you cannot denie them. You may therefore lay vp the thousand faults, and so many thousand lies, with the shame and blushing, that ye spake of. Slander no more, neither Montanus, nor Tertullian. Though in some points they were deceiued as Heretikes, yet herein they were Catholike, and agreed with others the godly learned Fathers of the Church. Gods name be blessed for euer, we want neither Church nor Priesthood, nor anie kind of Sacrifice, that Christ hath left vnto his Faithfull.

Againe ye demand of me, What Bishop of Sarisbury euer sithence Augustines time, maintained this Doctrine? I might likewise, and by as good authority demand of you, what Bishop of Rome euer before the same English Augustines time maintained your Doctrine? Or, as I said before, what Bishop of Rome euer before that time either said, or knew your priuate Masse?

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. The questions are not like, M. Iewell: Many things haue been, or might haue beene lawfully concluded betweene this, and Augustines (the Italian Monkes) time, albeit the same had not beene vsed before, &c. The Answer. I grant you, M. Harding, many pretty things haue sprung vp within these thousand yeeres, your halfe Communions, your priuate Masses, your vnknowen Prayers in strange tongues, your adoration of Images, your Pardons, &c. But how well, and how lawfullie, it were hard to say. Verily, these be the things, that neither Peter euer planted, nor Paul euer watered.

M. Harding. All the Bishops of Rome, aswell before Augustine (the Monks) time, as sithence, maintained our Religion. That I proue, because the Bishop of Rome that now is, doth allow our Religion. For we communicate with him, and hee with vs. And this Pope agreed with his Predecessour Pius the fourth: and so vpward from Pope to Pope, &c. The Answer. This doubtlesse, is a mightifull argument, and concludeth from Pope to Pope, A primo ad vltimum. By this reason ye might very well iustifie Annas and Caiphas. For either of them, followed the Bishops their predecessors, that had beene before them, and so vpward vnto Aaron, that was the first. Yet Christ saith vnto them, Ye haue broken the Commandements of God, to maintaine your owne traditions: From the beginning it was not so: They are blind guides, and lead the blind: They haue defaced the house of God, and turned it into a caue of theeues.

By the same reason ye may say thus; The Bishop of Rome that now is, alloweth the Stewes; and therein we Communicate with him and he with vs: for in all Catholike Townes and Countries of our religion, open Stewes be mainteined, aswell as in Rome. And this Pope agreeth with his predecessour, Pius the Fourth; and hee againe with his predecessour, Paulus the Fourth; and so vpward from Pope to Pope, &c. Ergo, S. Peter, that was the first Bishop of Rome, maintained the Stewes. So weighty, M. Harding, be the Arguments that you send vs.

M. Harding. But, seeing M. Iewell can name no man, who began to say, or allow priuate Masse, and yet, seeing it is said and allowed thorowout all Christendome, it is S. Augustines own rule, that the said vse of priuate Masse came from the Apostles themselues. For thus he writeth: Quod vniuersa tenet Ecclesia, nec in Conciliis institutum, sed semper retentum est, non nisi Authoritate Apostolica traditum rectissimè creditur: What thing the whole Church keepeth, and hath not bin instituted in Councels, but hath bin alwaies retained, the same is most rightly beleeued to haue bin deliuered none otherwise, then by Apostolike authority. The Answer. S. Augustines rule I like very well M. Harding: But your vnhandsome vsing and applying of the same, I cannot like. For the matters ye speake of are no way applicable to the Rule. Marke, I beseech you, S. Augustines words: Quod vniuersa tenet Ecclesia: Quod semper retentum est: That thing (saith S. Augustine) that the whole Vniuersall Church vseth: That thing, that hath alwaies and euermore beene obserued. Such a thing must it be, M. Harding, if ye will haue S. Augustines Rule to agree vnto it. Now thinke you, that your priuate Masse hath beene Vniuersally allowed thorowout the whole Church of God: Indeed ye haue said so; but ye haue said it full vntruly, as in place hereafter more conuenient it shall appeare. Or thinke you, that your priuate Masse

Masse hath bene holden and vsed alwaies, and euermore from the beginning? Or if it be so, is your learning or your lucke so ill, that for the space of so many hundred yeres, out of the Records of so many learned Fathers, with such conference of study, such helpe of friends, such time, and such leasure, ye are not able to shew vs one good prose, neither of place where it is said, nor of Priest that said it, nor of Witnesse that heard it? No, no, M. Harding, if you stand to S. Augustines Rule, then must your Masse nedes be condemned. It was neuer Vniuersally vsed, throwout the whole Church of God: It hath not bene continued alwaies, and euermore from the beginning: S. Augustine himselfe, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, S. Ambrose, and other holy Fathers neuer knew it, nor heard of it. Therefore, it was neuer delinered from the Apostles.

Notwithstanding, you say, You cannot tell when your priuate Masse first began, or who was the first that euer said it. God be thanked, that thus hath forced you to vtter some truth. Yet are we able to tell you, when the holy Communion first began. We know, in what place, and at what time it was first ministred: we know that Christ Iesus the Sonne of God was the first, that euer said it.

But because ye are not able to shew vs the antiquitie and first originals of your Masse, must we therefore thinke, M. Harding, that Christ, or his Apostles were the first that euer said it? Or, is your ignorance cause sufficient to prowe it good? What if you cannot tell, as I reckon, you cannot, in what time, or vnder what Pope, your Stewes and Pardons were first deuised? Will you therefore tell vs, and must we beleeue, that Christ and his Apostles first deuised them? As for your priuate Masse, you your selfe haue confessed, It grew not, either from the Apostles, or of the Spirit of God, but only of the negligence and want of deuotion of the people. Christ saith by way of a Parable vnto his Disciples: The kingdome of heauen is likened vnto a man that sowed good seed in his ground: but when the folkes were asleepe, that mans enemie came and sowed Tares and Cockle among the Corne. Christ is the husbandman: Hee planted the holie Communion in his Church: And so it continued manie hundred yeres. Afterward when the Priests and Bishoppes became careless, and fell fast aslepe, the Diuell came with negligence, and ill disposition, and want of deuotion of the people, and planted your Masse. The Seruants said to their Master, Sir, did not you sow good Corne in your field? From whence then bee these Tares? Euen so may we say, Did not Christ deliuer vs the holie Communion, that the people should feast and Communicate together, and publish the benefits of his passion? From whence then is this priuate banket, that one man receiueth all alone? The Seruants knew not who sowed the Tares: Neither doe you know, who founded your Masse. Notwithstanding there is no lesse difference in the Church of God betweene your Masse, and the holie Communion, then is in the field betweene wilde Tares, and holesome Corne. The one was planted by day, the other by night. But Christ saith, Euery plant, that my Heauenly Father hath not planted, shall bee taken vp by the roote.

Matth. 13.

Touching the Bishops of Sarisbury, you your selfe haue alreadie named two, Bishop Chaxton, and Bishop Capon, both learned and graue Fathers, and both Preachers and professors of the Gospell. For the rest of the Bishops that were before them, what faith they held, and what they either liked or misliked, by their writings or Sermons, it doth not greatly appeare. I trust, they held the foundation, and liued and died in the faith of Christ. If they had liued in these daies, and seene that you see, they would not haue been partakers of your wilfulnesse.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. These be the words of an Antichrist, who seeking to make himselfe equall with Christ, doth vse such phrases by his wicked members. The Answer. The sobriety of these words nedeth no answer.

Addition. ☞

To be short, wee succeed the Bishops that haue beene before our daies. We are elected, consecrate, confirmed, and admitted, as they were. If they were deceiued in any thing, we succeed them in place, but not in errour. They were our Predecessours, but not the Rulers and Standerds of our faith. Or rather, to set apart all comparison of persons, the doctrine of Christ this day, M. Harding, succeedeth your doctrine, as the day succeedeth the night: as the light succeedeth darkenesse: and as the truth succeedeth errour.

Now forasmuch as ye haue thought it so good, to examine the Petite degree of the Bishops of Sarisburie, I trust yee will not thinke it ill, if I a little touch the like in the Bishops of Rome: that we may thereby be the better able to see some of the branches of your Succession. Therefore shortly to say, you know that Pope Marcellinus committed Idolatry.

S. Peters Succeſſour, and ſate in the firſt See, was in caſe for the roome he occupied to be iudged of no man in the earth, as the Councel of the three hundred & thirty Biſhops aſſembled at Sinueſſa pronounced aboue twelue hundred yeeres paſt. The anſwer. The reaſon hereof is declared in a Succeſſiõ

Councel holden about the ſame time at Rome by Syluester the Firſt. Præſul ſummus non iudicabitur à quoquam: quia ſcriptum eſt, Non eſt Diſcipulus ſupra Magiſtrum: The higheſt Prelate ſhall bee iudged of no man, For it is written, There is no Scholar aboue his Maſter. Concil. Rom. 1. Matth. 10. Thus the Pope is the Schoolmaſter, and all the Biſhops thorow the world are his Scholars, and may not controle him whatſoeuer he doe: and all this he claimeth by the Authoritie of the Scriptures. If it be ſo, M. Harding, then is it true that the Accuſers of Pope Symmachus ſaid in the preſence of King Theodoricus: Succeſſores Petri, vnà cum Sedis Priuilegijs, peccandi quoque licentiam accepiſſe: That the Popes, Peters Succeſſours, together with the Priuileges of their See, haue receiued libertie to doe ill. Ennodius, Concil. Tom. 1.

Indeed the Councell of Sinueſſa vſed the Pope Marcellinus with much courteſie, as it may appeare. Yet, good Reader, that thou maiſt ſee the ſimplicitie and plainneſſe of M. Hardings dealing, whereas he ſaith, It was decreed by the Councell of Sinueſſa, that Marcellinus being Peters Succeſſor, ſhould be iudged of no man in earth, hee might alſo haue told thee, that the ſame Pope Marcellinus the Idolatour, notwithſtanding the Succeſſion of S. Peter, and al the Priuileges of his See, is found fiue times, not only iudged, but alſo condemned in the ſame Councell. And, for that the matter it ſelfe is not otherwiſe weightie, ſauing that it may witneſſe the truth of M. Hardings reports, for ſhortneſſe ſake I will lay forth the words thereof only in Latine without tranſlation.

Thus therefore it is written in the Councell of Sinueſſa: Introiuit & Marcellinus Vrbis Romæ Epiſcopus, adhuc nomen tenens Epiſcopatus: nondum enim fuerat damnatus, &c. Againe, Epiſcopus Quirinus dixit, Inſudiſti cor tuum, Pontifex, malitia, &c. Vulneraſti vniuerſa membra tua. Againe, Te non condemnamus, Præſul: quoniam ex ore tuo iuſtificaberis, & ex ore tuo condemnaberis: Marcellinus in conſpectu Synodi cecidit in terram. Ibi ergo iacentem eum, & moram facientem, damnauerunt. Againe, Subſcripſerunt igitur in eius damnationem, & damnaueruntcum extra Ciuitatem. Againe, Sacerdos Helchiades ſubſcripſit primus in eius damnationem, nõ tantùm pro hoc tempore, ſed etiam in exemplum futuri temporis. And againe, Diocletianus Imperator audiuit, quòd trecenti Epiſcopi in eandem damnationem conuenirent. Now you ſay, What haue you wonne by this example? Thus much verily, M. Harding: Firſt, that the Succeſſor of Peter may be an Idolatour, for ſo was Marcellinus. Secondly, that the ſame Marcellinus was iudged by the Councell of Sinueſſa: wherein alſo you may find your ſelfe guiltie of great vntruth, vnleſſe yee will ſay, So many graue Fathers condemned the Pope openly without iudgement. Conc. Sinueſſ. de condemnat. Marcell. Concil. Tom. 1. Alia. Et ecce. Singulis autem in fine.

That Pope Syluester 2. was a Coniurer, and gaue himſelfe wholly bodie and ſoule vnto the Diuell, and by the Diuels procurement was made Pope: That Pope Zoſimus, for ambition and claime of gouernment, corrupted the holy Councell of Nice.

Addition. Addition. M. Harding. You ſay it: but neuer did any honeſt man ſay it from the beginning of the world. You ſhew your ſelfe to bee a man of ill diſpoſition. No man euer ſaid it but Illyricus or bawdy Bale. You maintaine the Succeſſion of your generation. M. Harding fol. 249. a. & b. The anſwer. This is M. Hardings ordinarie eloquence, good Reader, therefore let it not offend thee. For the truth of this matter, I referre thee to the Councell of Aphrica, whereat were preſent S. Auguſtine, Alypius, and two hundred and fiftéene other Biſhops. The diſcourſe is long. Shortlie to open it, thus it ſtandeth. Zoſimus the Biſhop of Rome claimed a Soueraignetie in Iudgement and iuriſdiction ouer all Aphrica. The Biſhops there withſtood him, and ſaid he had no ſuch right to deale among them. Zoſimus, for proofe of his claime, alleged a Canon of the Councell of Nice, touching the Vniuerſall Authoritie of the Pope. They anſwered, they had likewiſe the Councell of Nice, but in all the ſame could finde no ſuch Canon. Alypius the Biſhop of Tagaſta, ſpeaking hereof, ſaith thus: This thing mooueth mee much, that when wee laid together and examined the Originals of the Nicene Councell, written in Greeke, theſe things (concerning the Superioritie of the Pope) were found not there. But how it commeth to paſſe I cannot tell. Concil. Aphric. Cap. 101. 102. 103. 104. 105. Concil. Carthag. 6. cap. 4. The Pope ſheweth forth one Copie of the Councell: they ſhewed forth an other. They were not ſo ſuppliant or ſimple to thinke the Popes Copie was vndoubtedly true, and therefore to yeeld vnto him without further ſearch. They imagined that either hee ſought to deceiue them, or was deceiued himſelfe. In concluſion, they agreed that either partie ſhould ſend into the Eaſt, to the Biſhops of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and Antiochia, for a Copie of the ſame Councell, taken out of the very Originals that remained among them, that thereby it might appeare whether their Copie were falſified, or the Popes. Hereunto Atticus the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and Cyrillus the Biſhop of Alexandria returned their Anſwers. Their Epiſtles are extant to bee ſeene vntill this day, as well in Greeke as in Latine. By this Certificate it was euident to all men that the Popes Copie diſagreed from all the reſt, and was corrupted: but by whom, and to what purpoſe, a Babe may eaſilie vnderſtand. All other Copies were true: The Popes onely Copie was falſe. If this bee not Falſifying and Corruption, M. Harding, giue it any other name that may like you better. And withall I beſeech you to conſider whether of theſe two things in your owne iudgement ſeemeth more likely, either that the Pope, to maintaine his eſtate and Authoritie, ſhould falſifie one Copie, or elſe that all the Biſhops of Aphrica, Aſia Minor, Ægypt, and Græcia, without cauſe or hope of any maner gaine, ſhould falſifie all the Copies thorow the world. Verily the one is not vnlikely: the other almoſt impoſſible.

Succeſsiõ.

But you ſay, That Pope Zoſimus corrupted the Nicene Councell, neuer did any honeſt man ſay it from the beginning of the world. No man euer ſaid it, but Illyricus or bawdy Bale. Yes, M. Harding, there were ſome that ſaid it before either Illyricus or Bale was borne. And that M. Cope, one of your Pewfellowes, could haue told you. For thus he ſaith, although diſdainfully and in ſcornefull meaning: Certè doctiſſimi quique ex omni Græcia, & inter eos Beſſarion, cum florentino Concilio intereſſent, ita ſtabant Nicenum Canonem per Romanos Pontifices depraua tum: Verily the beſt learned men of all Græcia, and among them Beſſarion, being preſent at the councell of Florence, make crakes, that the Canon of the Nicene Councell was corrupted by the Biſhops of Rome. Indeed theſe words they ſpake, and ſpake them with modeſtie as might become them: as for their crakes and brags, I remember none.

Thus there ſaid Marcus the Archbiſhop of Epheſus in the name of all the reſt: Nonne vides, Reuerende Pater, ſummum Pontificem (Zoſimum) falſum Decretum, & non in Synodo promulgatum ad tantum Concilium, pro re tam magna miſiſſe? And ſee you not, right Reuerend Father, that Pope Zoſimus being the higheſt Biſhop, for a matter of ſo great weight, ſent vnto that worthie Councell of Aphrica a falſe, or a falſified Decree, ſuch as neuer was publiſhed in the councell of Nice? Againe he ſaith, Nullam equidem de Zoſimo feciſſem mentionem, Reuerende Pater, niſi incum de eo ſermonem verum eſſe poſſem oſtendere: I would not haue ſpoken one word of Pope Zoſimus, Reuerend Father, vnleſſe I had beene able to proone my tale to be true. They that gaue conſent hereupon, and auouched the ſame, and at that time ſate preſent in the Councell, were Ioſephus, the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, Beſſarion the Archbiſhop of Nice, and afterward Biſhop of Tuſculum and Cardinall of Rome, Iſidorus the metropolitan of Syria, beſides ſeuentie other Archbiſhops and Metropolitanes, with a great number of other inferiour Biſhops and learned Fathers that attended vpon them.

It were very hard for you, M. Harding, to ſay that all theſe were vnhoneſt men, or of ill diſpoſition, or the maintainers of the Succeſſion of lies. They liued in the light and commendation of the world aboue an hundred and fortie yeares agoe, long before either Flaccius Illyricus, or Iohn Bale was heard of. They ſaid openly in the Councell of Florence, That Pope Zoſimus had falſified the Councell of Nice: and further ſaid, they were able to proone it, and that otherwiſe they would not haue ſaid it. Marke therefore, M. Harding the truth and courteſie of your words. Thus you ſay: Neuer did any honeſt man thus ſay from the beginning of the world.

That Pope Liberius was an Arian Heretike.

M. Harding 249. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Or elſe ye are an errant ſlanderous Lier. How ſeemeth not this wicked generation to ſpring of the Diuell, ſeeing it maketh the worſt of euery thing, ſpeaking ill of that which may well, and ought charitably to be defended? And yet if hee had beene an Arian with all his heart, ſo long as he neuer decreed any thing according to the Arian hereſie, nor did ſet it forth by publike Authoritie of the See of Rome, that ſhould not hurt our matter of Succeſſion. The Anſwer. Who ſo is able to allege the allowed Authoritie of good Writers, and imagineth nothing of himſelfe, M. Harding, is neither a Slanderer, nor a Lier. Firſt your ſelfe haue granted, that Pope Liberius ſubſcribed, and gaue his hand vnto the Arian Heretikes. Wherein it may reaſonably be thought, that the Arians beleeued he gaue alſo the inward agreement of his heart, and therefore embraced him as one of their owne. Further Rhegino ſaith in plaine wiſe: Liberius reuerſus ab exilio Hæreticis fauet: Pope Liberius after he returned from exil of baniſhment bare good will to the Heretikes.

Iewell himſelfe, who in his pretenced Defenſe writeth thus, where without all error, ye may be ſure, he bringeth much matter to ſhew that the Pope doth erre. Certainly Alphonſus ſaith, &c. fuisse Arianum: & Anastasium Papam fuisse Nestorianis, qui Historias legerit, non dubitat. Quòd autem alij dicunt, eum qui errauerit in Fide obstinatè, iam non esse Papam, ac per hoc affirmant, Papam non posse esse Hæreticum, est in re seria verbis velle iocari. Non enim dubitamus, an Hæreticum esse, & Papam esse in vnum coire possint: sed id quærimus, an hominem, qui alias in fide errare potuisset, dignitas Pontificalis efficiat in fide indeuiabilem. Non enim credo, aliquem esse adeò impudentem Papæ assentatorem, vt ei tribuere hoc velit, vt nec errare, nec in Interpretatione sacrarum Scripturarum hallucinari possit. Nam cùm constet plures eorum adeò esse illiteratos, vt Grammaticam penitùs ignorent, qui fit vt sacras Literas interpretari possint? Euery man may erre in the Faith, yea, although it be the Pope. For as touching Pope Liberius, it is certaine that he was an Arian Heretike. Neither can any man doubt, that hath read the Stories, but Pope Anastasius was a fauourer of the Nestorians. But whereas some say, that he that erreth wilfully in the Faith, is now no longer Pope, and therefore say, the Pope cannot be an Heretike, they seeme in a sad matter to dally with words. For we make no doubts, whether the Pope and an Heretike may agree in one person: but this is our question, Whether a man, that otherwise might haue erred in the Faith, by vertue of the Papal dignity be made such as cannot erre. For I doe not beleeue that there is any so impudent a flatterer of the Pope, that will giue him this preeminence, that he can neither bee deceiued, nor misse in the expounding of the Scriptures. For seeing it is well knowne that many Popes be so vtterly void of learning, that they know not the Principles of their Grammar, how may it bee that they should be able to expound the Scriptures?

Yea although it be the Pope. It is certaine.

Wee make no doubt.

So impudent a flatterer.

Popes know not their Grammar Rules.

Alphons. Colonia An. 1539.

Thus saith my Alphonsus, M. Harding, printed at Paris fiue and thirtie yeres a goe. In like sort, and with the very same words was the same booke afterward printed at Colaine by Arnold Brickman, An. 1539. What other new bookes, or new spectacles, you haue gotten you, I cannot imagine. Euen to like purpose writeth Nicolaus Cusanus, a Cardinal of Rome: Iudicium Fidei non est semper in nutu vnius Pontificis definibile, quia Hæreticus esse potest: The iudgement of Faith is not alwaies to be determined by the becke of the Pope alone: for the Pope may possibly be an Heretike.

Nicol. Cusan. de Concordan. Lib. 1 Ca. 15.

The Pope may be an Heretike.

That Pope Leo, as appeareth by the Legend, was likewise an Arian.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. As it appeareth by the Legend. What an obscure proofe is this? Forsooth there is an old Moth-eaten book, wherein Saints liues are said to be conteined, &c. It shal not greatly skill who was the Author of it. Certaine it is, that among some true Stories there be many vaine Fables written. Among which is one, &c. The answer. This booke was not so much moth-eaten, nor so farre out of credit, M. Harding, as you tell vs. It was read sadly vnto the people, and had in reuerence, when the holy Scriptures of God were moth-eaten, and throwen into corners: and it was called Aurea Legenda, as you know, The Golden Legend, for the excellencie that it seemeth to haue aboue all other Stories. Thus were you able in your Kingdome of darkenesse to giue the people drosse, and to call it gold: and to lead them into the clouds and shadowes of death: and yet to make them beleeue they walke in the light.

M. Harding 251. a. b.

As for this matter of Pope Leo, I report it not as a certaine truth, as it might appeare vnto you by my words. I leaue the credit thereof to the Authour. If it be a fable, it is your owne: it is not ours. Thus much at the least we may reasonablie gather hereof: Although Pope Leo were no Arian, yet, notwithstanding his Popedome, and the Succession of Peter, by this Authours iudgement, he might well haue bene an Arian.

That Pope Cœlestinus was a Nestorian Heretike.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Who euer heard such an impudent man? It was Cœlestinus, which condemned Nestorius, &c. A most impudent Lier; A wicked Slanderer. The answer. These outcries full well become you, M. Harding. Bestow your shame vpon him that hath best deserued it. Pope Cœlestinus (you say) condemned Nestorius and all his heresies. So did Pope Liberius, as it is said before, condemne the Arians: and yet afterward himselfe became an Arian. This is a case that often happeneth, and may be proued by sundrie examples. You your selfe, M. Harding, haue preached mightily and terriblie against the Romaine Religion, as you may remember: and yet sithence, ye know, ye are become a Defender and Patron of the same. This matter that so much grieueth you, touching Pope Cœlestinus, is recorded by Laurentius Valla, no Lutheran, I trow, but a great learned man, and a Canon of the Church of Rome. His words be these: Neque aliquem sua dignitas ab increpationibus tutum reddit, quæ Petrum non reddidit: multosque alios eodem præditos gradu, vt Marcellum, quòd dijs libasset, vt Cœlestinum, quòd cum Nestorio Hæretico sentiret. No mans dignitie may defend him from controlment, (if he offend) for Peter was not so defended, nor many others that were aduanced to the same degree: as Pope Marcellus (or rather Pope Marcellinus) for that hee had offered vp Sacrifice vnto Idols: And as Pope Cœlestinus, for that hee agreed with the Heretike Nestorius. Here you finde plainly by by expresse words, M. Harding, that Pope Cœlestinus was a Nestorian Heretike. Now if you be so much ashamed hereof, returne the shame to Rome again hardly, from whence it came: either to Laurentius Valla, that sent it hither: or to the Pope himselfe, that best deserued it.

Pope Cœlestinus a Nestorian Heretike.

That Pope Honorius was a Monothelite Heretike.

Addition. Addition. M. Harding. Now at length, M Iewell, you say that which hath some face of truth. For Honorius indeed fell into the Heresie of the Monothelites: but he fell into it when as yet it was not euidently condemned by the Church in any General Councell, &c. It standeth well together, that Pope Honorius, albeit in his owne person hee fauoured that Heresie, yet durst not to publish it in common assemblie: but contrariwise did there as they gaue him counsell. Whereby it came to passe that he both deposed the Monothelites openly, and yet fauoured their opinion priuily. And this is the only Pope who may iustly be burdened with Heresie. The Answer. Here is a proper Defence, and a proper Pope. Openly, abroad he condemneth them as Heretikes, whom priuilie in his heart he alloweth and liketh as Catholikes. This only Pope (you say) may be iustlie charged with Heresie. For indeed he fell into the Heresie of the Monothelites. All this is your owne confession, M. Harding: and yet whereas I say the same Pope Honorius was a Monothelite Heretike, you tell me, That this tale hath some face of truth. Some face, you say, and no more. For truth it selfe ye dare not allow me, be it neuer so true.

M Harding 121.

Iustly charged.

Indeed.

That Pope Iohn 22. was reproued by Gerson and the Schole of Paris for an Heretike; Petrarcha saith, Rome is a Sanctuary of all Heresies. Lyra saith, That many Popes haue fallen into Heresies.

Nicol. Lyra in Matt. cap. 16.

Addition. Addition. M. Harding. He saith many, as well Princes as Chiefe Priests, haue fallen from the Faith; but not that many haue decreed Heresies, as to be followed. But I finde not those many, nor yet M. Iewell himselfe, as diligent as he is about it. The Answer. I maruell not, M. Harding, though ye finde not these Many. For yee seeke as a man that would not finde them. I haue alreadie reckoned seuen Popes that were Heretikes. Yee may adde thereunto Pope Anastasius 2. an Arian Heretike. If all these may not be counted Many in the See of Rome, ye may at your pleasure call them Few. The Law saith, Decem faciunt populum: Ten men are enow to make a people. Much more eight men are enow to make Many. Verily I know not any one See in all Europe wherein you can lightlie finde so Manie Heretikes as we haue found sitting in Peters Chaire. Nicolaus Lyra saith, Many Popes haue fallen from the Faith. But you make small account of his Authoritie. Adde therefore to him the Councell of Basil. There shall you finde the selfe same words, Multi pontifices in Errores & Hæreses lapsi esse leguntur: We read that many Popes haue fallen into Error and Heresies. Adde also Æneas Syluius, being afterward a Pope himselfe. Thus he saith: De Romanis Pontificibus liceret exempla admodum multa adferre, si tempus sineret: quoniam aut Hæretici, aut alijs imbuti vitijs sunt reperti: Of the Popes of Rome wee might shew forth very Many examples, if time would suffer it, that they haue ben found either Heretikes, or else defiled with other vices. Thus you haue by the witnesse both of a Pope, and of a Councell, that Many, and Very Many Popes haue been Heretikes.

Very Many.

You know that Pope Hildebrand, as he was charged by the Councell of Brixia, was an Aduouterer, a Church-robber, a Periured man, a Man-killer, a Sorcerer, and a Renegate of the Faith.

Addition. Addition M. Harding. I know that you lie: I may say it, sauing my charitie rather then your worship. For Pope Gregorie the seuenth was a very holy man, &c. If you were but a ciuill honest man, M. Iewell, you would not take that for a truth which one enemy saith of another. By perusing of Marianus Scotus, Platina, Lambertus Scaphnaburgensis, and Nauclerus, you shall find your selfe a Lier, and Pope Hildebrand a vertuous man. The Answer. No doubt, M. Harding, a holy and a vertuous man, and very much like vnto the Apostles of Christ: but wherein I beleeue, ye cannot readily tell vs: vnlesse it were for that he was proud and stately aboue all measure, and suffered the Emperour Henrie the Fourth to wait vpon him in Italie before the gates of Canossus, without his Imperiall Robes, in the Winter-season, in hard frost and extreame cold, with bare legs and bare feet, three daies together, before he would once admit him to his presence. Thus, I trow, Peter and Paul but seldome did.

Sabel. Ennead. 9 Lib. 3. Blondus Decad. 2. Lib. 3.

Beno (you say) was his enemie, and wrote of displeasure, and therefore his words weigh the lesse. So may I say, Marianus Scotus was his friend, and wrote of fauour, and therefore his words likewise weigh the lesse. Indeed Beno, that liued with him, and best knew him, saith thus: That Hildebrand, being as yet but a Cardinall, smote Pope Alexander with his fist, and laid him in prison: That he poisoned sir Popes his Predecessours to make himselfe way to the Popedome: That he was a Coniurer, and a raiser of Diuels, and that in his furie he threw the Sacrament into the fire. But lest onely Beno should beare all the blame, a great number of Catholike Bishops in Italie, at the Councell of Brixia, called Hildebrand, then being Pope, A false Monke: An Vsurper of the See of Rome:

Vrspergen. An. 1080.

Popes Heretikes.

Not appointed by God, but intruded by fraud and mony: A disturber of the Empire: A subuerter of the Church. Howbeit, you say, All these Bishops conspired together against our Lord, and against his Vicar.

M. Har. 257. a Anselmus Rid.

Anselmus Rid saith, That Pope Hildebrand by his meanes had made the leaden Sword of the Popes Authoritie so mightie, that it had vtterly dulled and defaced the iron Sword of the Empire: and that in the time of his Popedome both the Ecclesiastical, and the Temporall Iurisdiction was shaken, and broken with infinite miseries.

Sigebert Gemblacensis, Anno 1074.

Sigibertus Gemblacensis saith, Pope Hildebrand troubled the States of Christendome, raised vp the Saxons against their liege Prince, discharged the Subiects from their Oth of Fidelitie, caused Rodolphus the Duke of Burgundie to proclaime himselfe Emperour, and sent him a Crowne Emperall with this Posee:

Petra dedit Petro: Petrus Diadema Rodolpho.

Sigebertus Anno 1085.

In the end the Citizens of Rome expelled him, and chased him out of the Citie: not for anie his great vertue or holinesse, I trow: for Rome is holy. By meane of the griefe and agonie heerof he fell into melancholie and deadly diseases, and finding himselfe past all recouerie, he called vnto him one of his Cardinals, whom he specially trusted, and confessed vnto him that he had foulely abused his Pastorall Office, and that he had troubled mankind with malice and mischief, by the procurement and counsell of the Diuell. And yet, M. Harding, must we beleeue you vpon the credit of your word, that Pope Hildebrand was so vertuous and so godly a man? Or is it a matter of such vertue and holinesse to trouble the Church of God with wars and murders, and to follow the counsell of the Diuell? Though you may safely discredit others, yet may you not discredit the Pope himselfe. This is the Popes owne confession, deuoutly vttered vnto his Ghostly Father, immediatelie before his death. Though Beno were an enemie vnto him, yet was he no enemie vnto himselfe.

M. Harding 257. a. Lambertus Scaphnabur.

But you say, Read Lambertus Scaphnaburgensis, Nauclerus, and others; and you shall finde your selfe to be a lier. What say they then, M. Harding? Verily Lambertus saith thus, Clerici clamant, Hildebrandum esse hominem planè Hæreticum, & vesani Dogmatis: The Priests crie out against Pope Hildebrand, and call him a plaine Heretike, and a man of wicked Doctrine. You will say, Lambertus vttereth not this as his owne Iudgement. I grant you that. Yet he vttereth it as the iudgement of the Clergie.

Naucler. Gener. 36.

In like sort also saith Nauclerus, The Clergie said that Pope Hildebrand, for good causes, was excommunicate by all the Bishops of Italie: That he had defiled the See Apostolike with Symonie, Heresie, Murder, and Aduouteries: That he was an Apostata, and had forsaken the Faith of Christ. And lest you should say, Hee vttereth these words as spoken by his enemies, and not as of himselfe; in the end he concludeth thus: Quæ Hildebrandi tempore in Republica Christiana sunt acta, huiusmodi ferè sunt, vt Scriptores dubitent an honestatis argumẽto & fidei zelo ab eo gesta sint: The things that were done in the time of Pope Hildebrandus, were such for the most part, that the Writers doubt whether they were done in consideration of honest Order, and zeale of Faith, or rather otherwise.

Nauclerus Generatio. 37.

M Harding 257. a. Sigebert. Gemblac. an. 1074.

You say, He was zelously bent to correct such faults as were in the Clergie at that time, specially Simony. Yea, M. Harding, but Sigibertus saith thus, speaking of Pope Hildebrand by name: Notam Auaritiæ honesto nomine prætexunt, dum hoc quod se gratis dare iactant, sub Charitatis nomine vendunt: vt de Montanis dicit Eusebius, Sub nomine Oblationis artificiosiùs munera accipiunt: They couer the shame of their Couetousnesse with the cloke of an honest name: They sell things vnder the name of Charitie: and yet they boast, they giue them freely. So saith Eusebius of the Heretikes called Montanists, They take bribes cunningly and with better skill vnder the name of Oblations.

Now, M. Harding, I beseech you iudge vprightlie: Hee that smiteth the Pope violentlie with his fist, and with force and villanie imprisoneth his person, that is a false Monke, a Poisoner, a Coniurer, a Burner of Sacraments, a Simonist, an Vsurper of the See, a Disturber of the Empire, a Subuerter of the Church, an Aduancer of Traitors, a Raiser of Rebels, a Person iustly excommunicate, and an Heretike; may he neuertheless be called a vertuous and a holy man? Is vertue and holinesse so rife in Rome?

Saue your charitie hardly, and what worship you list. Whatsoeuer yee presume to finde in others, it is wisedome to see afore hand what may bee found worthilie in your selfe.

Platina in Romano 1. Petr. Pariſien. in Speculo, citatur ab Illyrico de Teſtibus.

That Platina calleth the Popes sometimes in scorne, Pontificulos, Little Petite Popes, sometimes Monstra, & Portenta, Monsters, and vnnaturall and ill shapen creatures. Pope Adrian the fourth was wont to say, Succedimus, non Petro in Pascendo, sed Romulo in Parricidio: Wee succeed, not

Peter

Peter in Feeding, but Romulus in Killing. And to leaue Dame Iohane the woman Pope, with many others moe of like vertue and holinesse, as hauing no pleasure in this rehearsall: And for asmuch as M. Harding began this matter with Sarisburie, to end it with the same: Iohannes Satisburiensis saith, In Romana Ecclesia sedent Scribæ & Pharisæi: In the Church of Rome (by Succession) sit the Scribes and Pharisees. Succession of Popes. Iohan. Sarisburien. in Polycratico.

This is M. Hardings holy Succession. Though faith fall, yet Succession must holde. For vnto such Succession God hath bound the holy Ghost. For lacke of this Succession, for that in our Sées in the Churches of England, we finde not so many Idolaters, Necromancers, Heretikes, Aduouterers, Churchrobbers, periured Persons, Mankillers, Runnagates, Monsters, Scribes, and Pharisees, as we may easily finde in the Church of Rome; therefore, I trow, M. Harding saith, we haue no Succession: we are no Bishops: we haue no Church at all.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Are you not ashamed thus notoriously, and withall most slanderously to belie that most blessed Succession of the Bishop of Rome? ☜

But S. Paul saith, Faith commeth (not by Succession, but) by hearing: and hearing commeth (not of Legacie or inheritance from Bishop to Bishop, but) of the word of God. They are not alwaies godly that succéed the godly. Manasses succeeded Ezechias: and Hierobeam succéeded Dauid. By Succession the Turke this day possesseth and holdeth the foure great Patriarchall Sées of the Church, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Hierusalem. By Succession Christ saith, Desolation shall sit in the holy place. And Antichrist shall presse into the rome of Christ. Matth. 24.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Doth Christ say, It shall be so by Succession? you falsifie the words of God and Man, and that verily by Succession. For so haue all Heretikes your Forefathers done before you. Succession is the chiefe way for any Christian man to auoid Antichrist, &c. For Antichrist commeth not, except Defection and Apostasie goe before. The Answer. I would be loth, M. Harding, to falsifie the words either of God, or of man. Touching the Succession of place, whereof only we speake, Christ saith, Desolation shall stand in the holy place. And S. Paul saith, Antichrist shall sit in the place of Christ. The same place that receiued the one, shall receiue the other. Otherwise, tell vs, I pray you, M. Harding, in what other Place shall he sit? Or, why doth S. Paul say, Antichrist shall sit in the Temple of God? Or, why doth S. Augustine, and S. Chrysostome say, Antichrist shall sit in the Church of Christ? M. Harding 266. b. 267. a. 2. Thess. 2. Aug. de Antichristo, tom. 9. Chrys. in 2. ep. ad Thess. Ho. 3.

Succession (you say) is the chiefe way for any Christian man to auoid Antichrist. I grant you, if you meane the Succession of doctrine. Therefore S. Paul saith, In the latter daies some shall depart from the Faith. He saith not, They shall Depart from their Place, but from their Faith. And S. Iohn saith If any man come vnto you, and bring not this Doctrine, salute him not. He saith not, If he keepe not his Place, but, If he bring not this Doctrine. It is the Doctrine, whereby Antichrist shall be knowen, and not his Place. For as I haue said, He shall sit in the Place of Christ. 1. Tim. 4. 2. Iohan.

You say, Antichrist shall not come except a Defection or Departing goe before. What Defection, or what Departing, M. Harding? Meane you a Departing from the Pope? Whatsoeuer you meane, verily S. Paul meaneth a Departing from Christ. And so the old learned Fathers haue expounded it. In like sense S. Paul saith, The time shall come, when they shall not beare holesome Doctrine. They shall stop their eares against the Truth. They shall turne themselues to heare fables. And what if the Pope himselfe be Departed from Christ? Yet must we needs keepe him company, and Depart together? Verily, as I haue otherwhere reported, the Bishop of Bitonto doubted not openly to say in the late Councell of Trident, Vtinam non à Christo ad Antichristum, velut prorsus vnanimes, declinassent: Would God, they were not gone from Christ to Antichrist, as it were, with one consent. And thus he pronounceth of the Pope, and of his Clergie of the Church of Rome. Nicolaus Lyra aboue two hundred and fiftie yéeres agoe, said thus: Ab Ecclesia Romana iam diu est, quod recessit Gratia: It is long sithence the grace of God is Departed from the Church of Rome. This this, M. Harding, is the Departing that S. Paul speaketh of. Not our Departnig from the Pope, but the Popes Departing from the Grace of God. From which Grace, whosoeuer is Departed, is Departed from Christ. 2. Thess. 2. 4. Conc. Trident. Nicol. Lyra in 2. ad Thess. 2.

Now M. Harding, if the Pope, and his Roman Clergie, by his owne friends confession, be fallen from Gods Grace, and Departed from Christ to Antichrist, what a miserable ☜ claime is it for them to hold onely by bare Succession? ☞

It is not sufficient to claime Succession of Place: It behoueth vs rather to haue regard to the Succession of Doctrine. S. Bernard saith, Quid prodest, si Canonicè eligantur, & non Canonicè viuant? What auaileth it, if they be chosen in Order, and liue out of Order? So saith Bern. in Concil. Remen.

Aug. cont. Donat. li. 6. 1. 9. 3. S. Auguſtine, Ipſum characterem multi, & Lupi, & Lupis imprimunt: The outward marke or right of a Biſhop, many giue to Wolues, and be Wolues themſelues. Therefore the ancient Father Irenæus giueth vs this good counſell: Eis qui ſunt in Eccleſia Presbyteris, obaudire oportet, qui Succeſſionem habent ab Apoſtolis, qui cum Epiſcopatus Succeſſione, Charisma Veritatis certum, ſecundùm beneplacitum Patris acceperunt: It becometh vs to obey thoſe Prieſts in the Church, which haue their Succeſsion from the Apoſtles: and together with the Succeſsion of their Biſhopricks, according to the good will of God the Father, haue receiued the vndoubted gift of the truth. S. Cyprian being likewiſe charged for diſſenting from his Predeceſſors, anſwereth thus: Si quis de Anteceſſoribus meis non hoc obſeruauit, & tenuit, quod nos Dominus exemplo, & Magiſterio ſuo docuit, poteſt ſimplicitati eius venia concedi: Nobis verò ignoſci non poteſt, qui nunc a Domino admoniti & inſtructi ſumus: If any of my Predeceſſours haue not obſerued and kept the ſame, that our Lord hath taught vs both by his example, and alſo by his Commandement, his ſimplicitie may be pardoned: But wee (if we doe the like) can hope for no pardon, being now admoniſhed and inſtructed of our Lord.

Lib. 2. Epiſt. 3.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Cough vp man. It wil choake you, if you let it tarrie within your throat. Heere is but halfe the bone. There is yet in Cyprian no full point. It followeth in the ſame ſentence, Vt calicem Dominicũ vino mixtum, ſecundum quod Dominus obtulit, offeramus. That we ſhould offer our Lords Cup mixt with wine, accordingly as our Lord offered the ſame &c. Do they offer our Lords Chalice at all? Or, doe they grant that our Lord in his Supper offered it? Do they mingle water with wine at the time of Conſecrating the Myſteries? What follie, what madneſſe, &c. The Anſwer. There is no ſuch danger of bones, M. Harding. The child ſhall doe well enough by Gods grace. I make no mention (you ſay) of offering our Lords cup. I grant you. No more doe I of many other things in the ſame Epiſtle contained. What then? Should I for your pleaſure haue alleged, and tranſlated the whole Epiſtle? Or, haue you Decreed it to be an Hereſie, if a man allege no more, then is needfull? Or, haue I reported any maner vntruth? Or, ſtand the words otherwiſe, then I haue reported them? In this place I had cauſe only to ſpeake of Succeſsion: but to ſpeake of Sacrifice, I had no cauſe. Howbeit, as you know, in fiue hundred other places, as time required, I haue ſpoken alſo fully and largely of the Sacrifice: and yet ye wille without any great danger of choaking. Such childiſh toies are meet for children.

S. Cyprian ſaith, We offer our Lords Cup mixt with Wine. But hee ſaith not as you ſay, We offer vp the Sonne of God Subſtantially and Really vnto his Father. Take away only that blaſphemie, wherewith you haue deceiued the world: and then talke of mingling the Cup, and of the Sacrifice, while ye liſt. S. Cyprian ſaith, We offer the Lords Cup, meaning thereby, the Wine contained in the Cup. So likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Eccleſia offert Sacrificium Panis, & Vini: The Church offereth vp the Sacrifice of Bread and Wine. If there be any darkeneſſe in this maner of ſpæch, both S. Cyprian, and S. Auguſtine haue plainly expounded their meaning. S. Cyprian in the ſame Epiſtle before alleged ſaith thus: Calix in Commemorationem Chriſti offertur: Vino Chriſti Sanguis oſtenditur: Jdeo Vinum ponitur, vt Domini Sanguis Vino intelligatur: Aqua ſola (ſine Vino) non poteſt exprimere Sanguinem Chriſti: In Aqua Populus intelligitur: In Vino oſtenditur Sanguis Chriſti: Paſſionis Chriſti memoriam in omnibus Sacrificijs facimus: Paſſio Domini eſt Sacrificium quod offerimus: The Cup is offered in remembrance of Chriſt: By the Wine Chriſts Blood is ſhewed (or ſignified): Therefore Wine is vſed, that by Wine we may vnderſtand the Lords Blood: Water only without Wine, cannot expreſſe the Blood of Chriſt: In the Water we vnderſtand the People: In the Wine Chriſts Blood is repreſented: In all our Sacrifices, we worke the memory of Chriſts Paſſion: The Sacrifice that we offer, is the Paſſion of our Lord. Thus much S. Cyprian in the ſame Epiſtle. S. Auguſtine ſaith: In hoc Sacrificio eſt gratiarum actio, & Commemoratio Carnis Chriſti, quam pro nobis obtulit, & Sanguinis eius, quem pro nobis effudit: In this Sacrifice is a thankeſgiuing, and a remembrance of the Fleſh of Chriſt, that hee hath offered for vs, and of the Blood of Chriſt that hee ſhed for vs. Thus ſaith S. Cyprian: Thus ſaith S. Auguſtine: Thus ſay the old godly learned Fathers of the Church of Chriſt. Theſe are no bones, M. Harding: They are the foode of euerlaſting life. ☜

Aug. de Fide ad Petr. c. 19.

Cyprian. lib. 2. epiſt. 3.

Aug. de Fide ad Pet. cap. 19.

Compare the vſe and order of our Churches, M. Harding, with the Primitiue Church of God, and ye ſhall eaſily ſee the right of our Succeſsion. S. Cyprian ſaith: Si Canalis aquæ, quæ copioſè priùs & largiter profluebat, ſubitò deficiat, nonne ad Fontem pergitur? &c. Hoc & nunc facere oportet Dei Sacerdotes Præcepta Diuina ſeruantes, vt in aliquo ſi nutauerit & vacillauerit Veritas, ad originem Dominicam, & Euangelicam atque Apoſtolicam Traditionem reuertamur: & inde ſurgat actus noſtri ratio, vndè & Ordo, & Origo ſurrexit: If the Pipes of the Conduit, which before ran with abundance, happen to faile, doe we not vse to search the Head? &c. The Priests of God keeping Gods Commandements, must doe the same: that if the Truth haue fainted or failed in any point, wee returne to the very Originall of our Lord, and to the Tradition of the Gospell, and of the Apostles: that therehence we may take the discretion of our doings, from whence the Order it selfe, and Originall first began.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. It is to be knowen, Mi lewel, that S. Cyprian vsed that saying in an euill case. And therefore, he defending a Falshoood, was driuen to the very same shifts, whereunto all Heretikes are driuen. The Answer. Whatsoeuer were S. Cyprians case, verily, M. Harding hath diuised but a poore defence for himselfe. For, alasse, what a simple shift is this, to say, that so holy a Father and Martyr of Christ, was driuen to vse the shifts of all Heretikes? Grant we, that S. Cyprian stood in some errour. Yet let vs see what were his Hereticall shifts. Thus he saith: if the Truth faint or faile in any point, we ought to returne to the Originall of our Lord, and to the Tradition of the Gospell, &c. And is this the shift of all Heretikes, to submit themselues and their causes, to the triall of Gods Truth? Or doth no man vse this kinde of shift, but only Heretikes? Wherefore then doth Christ so often vse the same? Wherefore doth Christ say: From the beginning it was not thus: It is written in the Scriptures: Search the Scriptures? Wherefore doth the Prophet Esay say, Resort to the Law, and to the Testimony of our Lord? Wherefore doth Tertullian say, Peræque ad Vniuersas Hæreses iam hinc præiudicatum est, id esse verum, quodcunque primum: id esse adulterum, quodcunque posterius? By this Rule, wee may equally prescribe against all Heretikes: That is true, that was first appointed: That is false, that was afterward deuised? It were hard to say, that Christ, his Apostles, the Prophets and holy Fathers were shifters, and Heretikes. M. Harding. 271. Matthæ. 19. Iohan. 5. & 7. Tertul. aduers. Prax. pa. 316.

Yet notwithstanding, M. Harding saith, Wee may not bee led by S. Cyprians Rule. It is a shift and a practise of Heretikes. This therefore must be his Rule: Although the Truth faint or faile in any point, yet may we not returne to the Originall of our Lord, nor to the Tradition of the Gospell. S. Cyprian saith: Non debemus hominis Consuetudinem sequi, sed Veritatem Dei: Wee may not follow the Custome of man, but the Truth of God. Nay, saith M. Harding, This is the shift of all Heretikes. We may not follow the Truth of God, but the Custome of man. S. Cyprian saith: Relicto Errore, sequamur Veritatem: Forsaking Errour, let vs follow the Truth. Nay, saith M. Harding, So doe Heretikes: This is but a shift. Wee must leaue the Truth, and follow Error. If you will needs shift off, and so miserably glose S. Cyprians sayings, M. Harding, thus verily must you say: And indeed this Rule hath of long time beene Canonized in the Church of Rome, and accounted Catholike. But such are they, of whom Christ saith: Yee haue broken the Commandements of God, to maintaine your owne Traditions. ☞☜ Cyprian. lib. 2. epist. 3. Cyprian. ad Pompeium contra epist. Stephani. Matthæ. 15.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision 1.

Moreouer wee say, that Christ hath giuen to his Ministers power to Binde, to Loose, to Open, to Shut.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The difference that is betweene vs and our Aduersaries in this whole matter, is not great: sauing that it liketh well M. Harding to busie himselfe with needlesse quarrels without cause. Three kindes of Confession are expressed vnto vs in the Scriptures. The First made secretly vnto God alone: The Second Openly before the whole Congregation: The Third Priuately vnto our Brother. Of the two former kindes there is no question. Touching the Third, if it be discreetly vsed, to the greater comfort and better satisfaction of the penitent, without superstition or other ill, it is not in any wise by vs reproued. The abuses and errours set apart, we doe no more mislike a Priuate Confession then a Priuate Sermon.

Thus much onely wee say, that Priuate Confession to be made vnto the Minister, is neither commanded by Christ, nor necessary to Saluation. And therefore Chrysostome saith: Non dico tibi, vt te prodas in publicum, neque vt te accuses apud alios. Sed obedire te volo Prophetæ dicenti, Reuela Domino viam tuam: I will thee, not to bewray thy selfe openly, nor to accuse thy selfe before others: But I counsell thee, to obey the Prophet saying, Open thy way vnto the Lord. Chrys. ad Hebræos, hom. 31.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. S. Chrysostome in this place speaketh not indeed of Sacramentall Confessiō, but of that which is daily to be made to God alone, &c. But in other places he hath taught vs, that vnto our Priests it is giuē vtterly to cleanse, not the Leper of the Body, but the filth of the Soul &c. The Answer. S. Chrysostome (you say) in these words speaketh not of Sacramentall Confession. M. Harding fol. 274. b. M. Harding fol. 275. a.

No

Confeſſion not neceſſarie.

No great maruell, M. Harding. For, I beleeue, you cannot finde, that any Confeſſion was knowen by that name in Chryſoſtomes time. But in theſe words, hee ſpeaketh of Confeſſion to be made vnto others. Call it Sacramentall, or Priuate, or Auricular, or what you liſt. Of this kind of Confeſſion Chryſoſtome ſaith: I will thee not to betray thy ſelfe openly, nor to accuſe thy ſelfe before other. Thus, I trow, he would not haue ſaid, had hee thought this kind of Confeſſion to be neceſſary.

Sozo. li. 5. c. 19.

But you ſay, S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Our Prieſts haue power vtterly to cleanſe the filth of the Soule. And who ſaith otherwiſe? When we Conſecrate Prieſts, we pronounce Chriſts words ouer them: Whoſe ſinnes you doe forgiue, they are forgiuen. But are ſinnes forgiuen onely by Priuate Confeſſion? If ſo, how happened it then, that there was no Priuate Confeſſion vſed in the Church of Conſtantinople, during the whole time, that S. Chryſoſtome was Biſhop there?

Chryſo. de Sacerdo. li. 3.

Notwithſtanding, good Chriſtian Reader, that thou maiſt vnderſtand the truth of M. Hardings dealing, in that whole place of Chryſoſtome, there is no mention at all of any Confeſſion, either Priuate, or Publike, or Sacramentall, or Auricular, or any other. Read the place. If thou find it otherwiſe, I will yeeld. You will ſay, He ſpeaketh of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. I know it well: yet not of Confeſſion. He ſpeaketh of the Sacrament of Baptiſme: of Preaching and of Prayer. By theſe meanes S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, The Prieſt remitteth ſinnes, and reconcileth God vnto the people. Who would thinke, that Doctor Harding would allege thoſe places for Priuate Confeſſion, whereas is not ſo much as one word once ſpoken of Confeſſion?

M. Harding Fol. 275. b.

M. Harding. Againſt your Hereticall propoſition I will ſet S. Baſils Catholike iudgement. Thus he ſaith: It is neceſſary to confeſſe ſinnes vnto them, to whom the Diſpenſation of the Myſteries is committed. For ſo they, that in old time did penance, are found to haue done before the Saints. For it is written in the Goſpell, that they confeſſed their ſinnes to Iohn Baptiſt. In the Acts, that they confeſſed them to the Apoſtles. By S. Baſil it is neceſſary to confeſſe ſinnes vnto the Prieſts. By M. Iewel it is not neceſſary at all. Who is the likelier of theſe two to be a liar? The Anſwer. O M. Harding, why do you thus abuſe your ſimple Reader? My words are theſe, as they lie plainelie before you: That Priuate Confeſſion be made vnto the Miniſter, it is neither commanded by Chriſt, nor neceſſary to Saluation. To proue this Hereticall Propoſition, for ſo it pleaſeth you to call it, you haue brought in the Catholike iudgement of S. Baſil. But, I beſeech you, among all theſe words of S. Baſil, is there any one word of Priuate Confeſſion? If there be any, let it appeare. If there be none, why doe you allege it? Marke the words and examples that S. Baſil vſeth. Thus (ſaith he) the people confeſſed their Sinnes to Iohn Baptiſt: Thus they confeſſed their Sinnes to the Apoſtles. Thus ſaith S. Baſil. But did either the Apoſtles, or Iohn Baptiſt, heare Priuate Confeſſions? Did they ſit downe vpon a ſtoole, in a corner, and hearken what each man ſhould ſeuerally ſay vnto them? No, no, M. Harding, S. Baſil ſpake only of Publike offences, that were knowen to many. Such offences it was neceſſary for the ſatisfaction of the Church to be confeſſed vnto the Prieſt, as vnto the common Miniſter of the whole, not ſecretly, or in a corner, but openly, and in the hearing of all the people. This Confeſſion, M. Iewell ſaith, is ſtill neceſſary in the Church of God. Now therefore your ſelf may iudg, to vſe your own courteous words, Whether of vs is likelier to be the liar?

De Pœnit. diſt. 1. Quamuis plenitudo.

And Gratian hauing thoroughly diſputed, and debated the whole matter of both ſides, in the end leaueth it thus at large: Cui harum ſententiarum potiùs adhærendum ſit, Lectoris Iudicio reſeruatur: Vtraque enim fautores habet Sapientes, & Religioſos Viros: Whether of theſe two opinions it were better to follow, it is left to the diſcretion of the Reader: For either ſide is fauoured, both by wiſe, and alſo by godly men. Therefore the Gloſſe there concludeth thus: Melùs dicitur Confeſſionem inſtitutam fuiſſe à quadam Vniuerſalis Eccleſiæ Traditione potiùs, quàm ex Noui, vel Veteris Teſtamenti authoritate: It is better to ſay, that Confeſſion was ordained by ſome Tradition of the Vniuerſall Church, then by the authority of the New or Old Teſtament. Likewiſe ſaith Theodorus, ſometime Archbiſhop of Canturburie, a Græke borne: Quidam Deo ſolummodo confiteri debere peccata dicunt, vt Græci: Some ſay, we are bound to confeſſe our ſinnes onelie to God, as doe the Grecians. Whereupon the Gloſſe noteth thus: Apud Græcos Confeſſio non eſt neceſſaria: quia non emanauit ad illos Traditio talis: Among the Grecians Confeſſion is not neceſſary, for that no ſuch Tradition euer came amongſt them.

But what need many words? M. Harding himſelfe in the diſcourſe hereof, is forced to confeſſe, that the expreſſe Terme of Auricular or Secret Confeſſion, is ſeldome mentioned in the ancient Fathers. His tale had beene truer, if he had ſaid thus, The Expreſſe terme of Auricular or Secret Confeſſion, is neuer mentioned in the ancient Fathers. Now to paſſe ouer certaine other M. Hardings vnneceſſarie talkes, hee groweth to the matter in this ſort:

M.

M. Harding.

Concerning the Miniſters of the Church, we ſay, that they open and ſhut by diſpenſing the Sacraments, who haue their vertue of the merits of Chriſt. For whereas the Sacraments haue iſſued & flowed out of the ſide of our Sauiour Chriſt ſleeping on the Croſſe (as by alluſion we may vſe the words of the old figure) wherewith the Church is builded, therfore in the Sacraments of the Church, the efficacie of the paſſion remaineth. And for that cauſe to the Miniſters alſo of the Church, who be diſpenſours of the Sacraments a certain power is giuen to remooue the barre that excludeth vs from Gods fauor, not through their own but through Gods vertue & power, and merit of Chriſts Paſſion. And this power is called by a metaphor, the Key of the Church, which is the Key of Miniſtery: whereof wee ſhall ſpeake hereafter. This power ſo much as concerneth releaſe of ſinnes, is exerciſed in the Sacrament of Penance, to the benefit of them, that after Baptiſme be relapſed, and fallen into ſinne againe. Of which power, no Chriſtian man doubteth, vnleſſe he hold the Hereſie of the Nouatians, who were condemned for Heretikes by the Church, becauſe they denied, that Prieſts in the Church had authority to remit Sinnes, * and ſo denied the Sacrament of Penance.

K. y of Church. whom eth the rament enance. natians ied Pe- ce.

* This ſauoureth of vntruth. For Nouatus denied not Priuate, but Open Penance.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

That duly receiuing the holy Sacraments ordained by Chriſt, we receiue alſo the Remiſſion of ſinnes, it is not any way denied. For the ſubſtance of all Sacraments is the word of God, which S. Paul calleth Verbum Reconciliationis: The word of Atonement. 2. Corinth. 5. This Word is the Inſtrument of Remiſſion of ſinne. The Sacraments are the Seales affixed to the ſame: The Prieſt is the meane. S. Auguſtine ſaith: In Aqua Verbum mundat. Detrahe Verbum: quid eſt Aqua, niſi Aqua? In the Water is the Word of God, that maketh cleane. Take the Word away: and what is Water elſe but Water? Hereof we ſhall haue cauſe to ſay more hereafter. Aug. in Ioh. tract. 80.

All that is here brought in touching Nouatus, it is vtterly from the purpoſe. For Nouatus neuer denied, but a ſinner might Confeſſe his ſinnes, either ſecretly to God alone, or publikely and openly before the whole Congregation. As for Auricular Confeſſion to the Prieſt, for ought that may appeare, he neuer heard of it. But herein ſtood his whole errour, that he thought, whoſoeuer had committed any great notorious ſinne after Baptiſme, notwithſtanding any ſubmiſſion or ſatisfaction he was able to make, yet might he neuer be reconciled vnto his Brethren, or be receiued againe into the Church: not that he would hereby driue the penitent ſorrowfull ſinner to deſpaire of Gods mercie, but (as ſome learned men haue thought) onely for example and terrour vnto others. And therefore Beatus Rhenanus ſaith, In hac ſententia veterum permulti fuerunt, & in iis etiam Auguſtinus. B. Rhenanus in Argumento libelli Tert. De Pœnitent. Auguſtinus, epiſtola 54.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, Cautè, ſalubriterque prouiſum eſt, vt locus illius Humilimæ Pœnitentiæ ſemel in Eccleſia concedatur: ne medicina vilis minùs vtilis eſſet ægrotis: It hath beene diſcreetly and holeſomely prouided, that it ſhould not be granted to any man, to do that moſt humble Open penance, but only once in the Church, and neuer more afterward: leſt the medicine, being made ouer common, ſhould not be profitable to the Sicke.

Thus much difference therefore, we ſee, there was betweene the Church, and Nouatus. The Church granteth the Open Sinner one onely time of Open Reconciliation, and neuer more: But Nouatus granteth none at all. Therefore the whole matter of Nouatus, might haue ſerued M. Harding to ſome other purpoſe. For Confeſſion, whether it were Priuate or Publike, was no part of his error.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuiſion 2.

And (we ſay) that the office of Looſing conſiſteth in this point: that the Miniſter, either by the Preaching of the Goſpell, offereth the Merits of Chriſt & full Pardon to ſuch as haue lowly and contrite hearts, and doe vnfeinedlie repent themſelues, pronouncing vnto the ſame a ſure, and vndoubted forgiueneſſe of their ſinnes, and hope of Euerlaſting Saluation: Or elſe that the ſame Miniſter, when any haue offended their Brothers mindes with ſome great offence, or notable and open crime, wherby they haue, as it were, banniſhed and made themſelues ſtrangers from the Common Fellowſhip, and from the Body of Chriſt, then after perfect amendment of ſuch perſons, doth reconcile them, and bring them home againe, and reſtore them to the Compame, and Vnitie of the Faithfull.

M.

M. Harding.

The ſumme of all theſe gay words abridged doth attribute Looſing or Abſolution firſt to Preaching, next to aſſoiling ſuch as bee Excommunicate. As touching the firſt, theſe Defenders confound the offices of Preaching and Abſolution. The Preacher teacheth the hearers, and reporteth the words of Chriſt, as out of the mouth of Chriſt, ſaying: Thus ſaith Chriſt. &c. The Prieſt, which is the Miniſter of Abſolution, according to the authoritie giuen to him by Chriſt, in his owne perſon aſſoileth the Penitent, ſaying: * I abſoile thee in the name of the Father, &c. * The Preacher in that hee preacheth onely, doth not aſſoile ſinners, neither giueth hee the Merits of Chriſt, nor full pardon by pronouncing vnto them the Goſpell. * For if that great benefit conſiſt in pronouncing or denouncing of the Goſpell, then why might not euerie lay man, yea women, yea yongue boies, and girles abſolue ſinners? yea why might not euerie man aſſoile himſelfe? And would yee Sirs appoint vnto vs ſuch for Iudges conſtituted by Chriſt?

* Vntruth. For Chriſt neuer gaue the Prieſt any ſuch Commiſſion.

For the words of Chriſt be ſo plaine, as they cannot be ſo violently wrefted. For Chriſt ſaid not, To whom yee offer by preaching of the Goſpell my Merits, and Pardon, or whoſe ſinnes yee pronounce by the Goſpell to be remitted, but quorumcunque remiſeritis, whoſe ſoeuer ſinnes yee remit, they are remitted to them. For as the ſonne of man remitted ſinnes to him that was ſicke of the Palſie, and to Mary Maudelene, that ye may know (ſaith he) that the ſonne of man hath Power to remit ſinnes, &c. Euen ſo he hath transferred * the ſame Power vnto Prieſts, ſaith Chryſoſtome. Which Prieſts he hath ſent, as the Father ſent him. And it Abſolution conſiſt in pronouncing of the Goſpell, which profiteth ſo much as it is beleeued, * then the power of the Keies which Chriſt hath giuen to the Church, conſiſteth not ſo much in the Miniſter, as in the ſinner that heareth and beleeueth, and ſo is forgiuen by Luthers opinion. And by this meanes the Prieſt hath no ſpeciall power. But we ſay with the Church, that a Sacrament hath his efficacie of the inſtitution of Chriſt in him, to whom it is adhibited. In this ſenſe the Catholike Church of Chriſt hath euer taught, that God worketh our ſaluation by Sacraments, and in this faith it hath alwaies Baptized infants, that their ſinnes being remitted, they might be made the children of God. * Likewiſe by the Keies of the Church, it hath aſſoiled perſons bereaft of the vſe of ſpeech and reaſon, as the learned and ancient holy Father Leo, teacheth in his Epiſtle ad Theodorum Epiſcopum Foroiul. cenſem, and S. Auguſtine, de adulterinis coniugijs, lib. 1. cap. 26. & vltimo.

* Vntruth: By M. Hardings owne Doctrine. Read the Anſwere.

* The ſame power, becauſe they haue the ſame word, and not otherwiſe.

* Vntruth ioyned with vaine follie.

* Vntruth. For the Church aſſoiled not mad men: but onelie pronounced them to bee aſſoiled before, when they were ſober.

Finallie, if the Office of Looſing, that is, Abſolution, conſiſteth in Preaching the Goſpell, and offering the Merits of Chriſt by pronouncing the words, in which the remiſſion of our ſins is expreſſed, as this Defender teacheth: then had not the Catechumens of old time, neither now ſhould they bee in any danger, if they ſhould die without Baptiſme, and the grace of reconciliation, that is, not being aſſoiled. For they lacked no preaching, as now they lacke not where any ſuch be. The contrary whereof, the Church hath euer taught; and for witneſſe of the ſame, beſides other Fathers, wee haue the plaine doctrine of S. Auguſtine: Who ſaith, that a Catechumene, how much ſoeuer he profiteth, beareth ſtill the burthen of his iniquity, ſo long as he is not Baptized.

Tract. 11. Ioh. 13.

I denie not, but caſes of iuſt neceſſity bee excepted in the one, and the other, hauing right and firme wils and deſire in each caſe: When not the contempt of Religion, but the point of neceſſity excludeth the Myſtery of Baptiſme, as S. Auguſtine ſaith. Then how dangerous and pernicious is the Doctrine of theſe Defenders, our New Miniſtring Prelates, who more with ſweet and holy words, then with truth, teach Chriſtian people, that the office of Looſing conſiſteth in offering, by preaching of the Goſpell, (as they call it) the Merits of Chriſt, and full pardon, and by pronouncing (I know not how) a ſure and vndoubted forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and hope of euerlaſting Saluation to ſuch, forſooth, as haue lowlie and contrite hearts, and do vnfainedly repent them? The contrition of heart they ſeeme to ſpeake of, ſufficeth not for Looſing of ſins, vnleſſe it be contrition formed with charity, as the Diuines teach. Which charity ſeeketh and requireth the Sacrament of Penance and the grace of reconciliation, which cannot be miniſtred but by a Prieſt * Neither is it poſſible, the Prieſt to iudge truly, who are lowly and contrite of heart, and repent them vnfainedly, foraſmuch as he cannot ſearch the heart, vnleſſe the Penitents humble themſelues vnto him, and declare their repentance by ſimple and lowly Confeſſion of their ſinnes. Which Confeſſion, theſe new Goſpellers haue abandoned out of their Congregations. How much is more the Catholike and wholſome Doctrine of S. * Auguſtine to bee imbraced and followed, which he vttereth in theſe words? Do ye penance, ſuch as is done in the Church, that the Church may pray for you. Let no man ſay to himſelfe, I doe penance ſecretly before God I doe it: God who forgiueth me, knoweth, that I do it in my heart. But what ſaith S. Auguſtine hereunto? Why then (ſaith he) it was ſaid in vaine, What things ye Looſe in Earth, they ſhall be Looſed in Heauen. Then without cauſe the Keies be giuen to the Church. We make void the Goſpell of God; wee make fruſtrate the words of Chriſt.

O dangerous Doctrine!

*. Vntruth. Read the Anſwer.

* Manifeſt vntruth For S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh theſe words of Open Confeſſion before the people.

Lib. 50. Homiliarum Hom. 49.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, doe yee penance, not ſuch as liketh your ſelues, not ſuch as New fangled ſelf-pleaſing Preachers teach you, but ſuch as is done in the Church, which conſiſteth in Contrition of heart, Confeſſion of mouth, and Satisfaction of worke, that ſo yee may bee aſſoiled, and perfectly reconciled.

Touching the ſecond point, we doe not attribute the Looſing of ſuch as be excommunicate, to the offering of Chriſts merits, and pronouncing of the Goſpell vnto them, as you doe, but to the power of Iuriſdiction by Chriſt giuen to the Church.

By the Fathers Excommunication in conſideration of the neceſſity of it, is called Neruus Eccleſiaſtice Diſcipline, the ſinew of Churchly Diſcipline; by the Canons, Mucro Epiſcopi, the Sword of a Biſhop; by S. Auguſtine, Epiſcopalis Iudicij damnatio, qua pœna nulla in Eccleſia maior eſt; The condemnation of a man by Biſhoply Iudgemeut, then the which there is no greater puniſhment in the Church.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

We commit the Keies of the Kingdom of Heauen, onely vnto the Prieſt, and to none other: and to him onely wee ſay, Whatſoeuer thou bindeſt in Earth, ſhall bee bound in Heauen. Yet neuertheleſſe hath not euerie Prieſt the vſe of theſe Keies. Peter Lombard himſelfe ſaith, saith: Sanè dici potest, quòd alteram istarum Clauium, id est, Scientiam discernendi, non habent omnes Sacerdotes: We may safely say that all Priests haue not the one of these two Keies: I meane the knowledge to discerne. If they haue not the Keies, then can they neither Open, nor Shut. Sent. 4. dist. 19.

A Laiman remitteth Sinne.

Neither doth it follow of our Doctrine, that either Children, or Lay-men do, or may forgiue sinnes. And yet Gods word may be mighty, be the Pronouncer of it neuer so simple. S. Augustine saith: Cùm Christus Petro diceret, Tibi dabo Claues Regni Cœlorum, vniuersam significabat Ecclesiam: When Christ said vnto Peter, Vnto thee will I giue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen, he signified thereby the whole Church. And againe: Quæcunque ligaueris super Terram, erunt ligata in Cœlo. Cœpisti habere frattem tuum tanquam Publicanum: Ligas illum in Terra. Cùm autem correxeris, & concordaueris cum fratre tuo, soluisti illum in Terra. Cùm solueris in Terra, solutus erit in Cœlo: Whatsoeuer things thou shalt Binde in Earth, they shall be Bound in Heauen. Thou (being a Lay-man) hast begunne to haue thy brother as a Publicane: Thou bindest him in Earth. But when thou hast corrected him, and hast agreed with thy brother, thou hast Loosed him in Earth. And when thou hast Loosed him in Earth, he shall be Loosed in Heauen. Aug. in Iohan. Tractat. 124. Aug. de Verb. Dom. Secund. Mat. Serm. 16

Likewise Theophylact saith: Si tu offensus, habes eum qui te affecit iniuriâ, sicut Publicanum & Gentilem, erit ille & in Cœlo talis: Si autem Solueris eum, hoc est, Si illi condonaueris, erit illi & in Cœlo condonatum. Non enim solùm quæ soluunt Sacerdotes, sunt soluta: sed quæcunque & nos, iniuriâ affecti, vel ligamus, vel soluimus, & ipsa erunt ligata, vel soluta: If thou being offended, haue him that hath done thee wrong, as a Publicane, and as an Heathen, such shall hee be also in Heauen. But if thou Loose him, that is to say, if thou pardon him, he shall be pardoned also in Heauen. For not only the things that Priests Loose, are Loosed: but also what soeuer we (being Lay-men) hauing taken wrong, doe Binde or Loose, the same things shall also be Bound, or Loosed. Theophylact. in Mat. cap. 18.

This Doctrine may not seeme so strange to M. Harding, vnlesse hée bée a stranger amongst his owne. For by the Order of his owne Church of Rome, an Old Wife, or a Yong Girle may minister the Sacrament of Baptisme. And I trow he will not say, they may minister Baptisme without Remission of Sinnes.

In this Church of Rome the power of the Keies is lapped vp often times in a Bull of Lead, and sent abroad into the World by a Lay Pardoner: and is thought neuertheless good, and sufficient vnto the Receiuer for Remission of Sinnes, notwithstanding the messenger be no Priest.

Some of the late Doctours of his said Church haue taught vs, that a man may make his Confession by a bill of his hand, and receiue Absolution by a Truthman, or by a Broker. Peter Lombard the Grand Master of their whole Schole saith: Si tamen defuerit Sacerdos, Proximo, vel Socio est facienda Confessio: If thou want a Priest, thou must make thy Confession vnto thy Neighbour, or vnto thy Fellow. And Beda saith, as he is alleged by the said Peter Lombard: Cœqualibus quotidiana & leuia: grauiora verò Sacerdoti pandamus: Let vs open our small and daily sinnes vnto our fellowes, and the greater vnto the Priest. De Pœn. dist. 1. Quem pœnitet. Scotus 4. Sent. Dist. 17. Artic. 3.

And to be short, vpon the Decretals it is noted thus: In necessitate Laicus potest & audire Confessiones, & Absoluere: In case of necessitie a Lay-man may both heare Confessions and Absolue. Sent. 4. dist. 17. Nunc primò quæritur. Sent. 4. Eadem Dist. Extra. De offi. Iudicis ordinar. Pastoralis, In Glossa.

This is the Order and Doctrine of M. Hardings owne Church. His owne Doctours tell him, that Lay men and women may Absolue the Penitent, and forgiue Sinnes. Therefore he hath the lesse cause to mislike it.

M. Harding saith further: Christ saith not, To whom ye offer by preaching of the Gospell, my merits and pardon: or whose sinnes ye pronounce by the Gospell to be remitted; but Quorumcunque remiseritis, whose soeuer sinnes yee remit, they are remitted. If M. Harding will conclude of this Negatiue, Ergo, Sinnes bee not forgiuen by the preaching of the Gospell: I trow it will bée but a simple Argument. For Chrysostome saith: Clauicularij sunt Sacerdotes, quibus creditum est Verbum Docendi & Interpretandi Scripturas: The Keybearers bee the Priests, to whom is committed the Word of Teaching and Expounding the Scriptures. And S. Hierome saith: Quæcunque Solueritis super Terram, erunt Soluta & in Cœlo. Soluunt autem eos Apostoli Sermone Dei, & Testimonijs Scripturarum, & Exhortatione Virtutum: Whatsoeuer things ye Loose vpon Earth, they shall be Loosed also in Heauen. But the Apostles Loose them by the word of God, and by the Testimonies of the Scriptures, & by exhortation vnto Vertue. Chrysostom. in Matth. in Opere imperfect. cap. 44. Hier. in Esai Lib. 6. cap. 14.

Likewise S. Augustine saith: Iam vos mundi estis propter Verbum quod loquutus sum vobis. Quare non ait, Mundi estis propter Baptismum quo loti estis? Nisi quia & in aqua Verbum mundat: Now are you cleane because of the Word that I haue spoken to you. Why saith he not, You are cleane because of the Baptisme wherewith yee are washed? Sauing that euen in the water it is the Word that maketh cleane. Likewise S. Ambrose: Remittuntur peccata per August. in Iohan. Tract. 80. Ambros. De Cain & Abel, Cap. 4.

per Verbum Dei, cuius Leuites eſt Interpres: Sinnes be forgiuen by the Word of God, the Expounder where of is the Leuite, or Prieſt.

Roman.1. All the Power is in the Word of God, which S. Paul calleth, The Power of God vnto Saluation: and Verbum reconciliationis, The Word whereby we be reconciled vnto God.

2.Cor.5. And for this cauſe Chryſoſtome ſaith, as it is alleged by M. Harding, that the Prieſt

Chryſoſt. De Sacerd. li.3. hath the ſame Power that Chriſt had, for that he preacheth the ſame word of God that Chriſt preacheth. And in this ſenſe Chriſt ſaith vnto his Diſciples: As my liuing Father Iohan.6. ſent me, euen ſo (and with like Commiſſion) doe I ſend you.

Otherwiſe the Power of Chriſt farre ſurmounteth and paſſeth all Creatures: not only in Earth, but alſo in Heauen. Chriſt himſelfe thereof ſaith thus: All things are deliuered to me of my Father. And the Prophet Eſay ſaith: Ponam Clauem Domus Dauid ſuper humerum eius. Aperiet, & nemo claudet: claudet, & nemo aperiet: I will ſet the Key of Mat.11. Eſay cap.22. the Houſe of Dauid vpon his ſhoulder. He ſhall open, and no man ſhall ſhut: he ſhall ſhut, and no man ſhall open.

Of this Doctrine ſaith M. Harding, followeth a great inconuenience. For then (ſaith he) the power of the Keies conſiſteth not ſo much in the Miniſter, as in the ſinner that heareth & beleeueth. This inconuenience is nothing ſo great as it is pretended. The Errour hereof ſtandeth in the Equiuocation, or doubtfull taking of one word. For one thing may be in another ſundry waies: As Remiſſion of Sinnes may be in the Prieſt, as in the Meſſenger: In the Word of God, as in the Inſtrument: In the Penitent partie, as in the Receiuer. The offering hereof is in the Miniſter: but the effect and force is in the Sinner.

Actor.16. Mark.16. Therefore S. Luke ſaith: God opened the heart of the Silke-woman, that ſhe ſhould giue eare vnto the words that were ſpoken by S. Paul. And Chriſt ſaith: Whoſoeuer ſhall beleeue, and bee Baptized, ſhall be ſaued: but hee that beleeueth not, ſhall bee damned. Likewiſe Peter

4 *Sententiar. Diſt.*18. Sed quæritur. Lombard himſelfe ſaith: Ex his apertè oſtenditur, quòd Deus ipſe Pœnitentem ſoluit, quando intus illuminat inſpirando veram cordis contritionem: Hereby it plainly appeareth that God himſelfe looſeth the Penitent, when by giuing him inward light, he inſpireth into him the true contrition of the heart. And therefore Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith: Fides noſtra eſt

Clemens in Paranetico. Clauis Regni Cœlorum: Our Faith is the Key of the Kingdome of Heauen. And S. Auguſtine likewiſe ſaith: Cor clauſum habent, quia Clauem Fidei non habent: They haue their hearts ſhut, becauſe they lacke the Key of Faith. Againe he ſaith: Suſcitari mortuus, Aug. in Iohan. Tractat.39. niſi intus clamante Domino, non poteſt: The dead man cannot bee raiſed againe, vnleſſe the Lord crie within him.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm.101. And to come nære to the purpoſe, Gratian himſelfe ſaith: Voluntas Sacerdotis nec prodeſſe, nec obeſſe poteſt, ſed meritum benedictionem poſcentis: The will of the Prieſt

1.Quæſt 1. Dictum eſt. can neither further, nor hinder, but the merit of him that deſireth Abſolution.

Touching the Obiection of frantike perſons, and mad men, in what ſort, and how farre Abſolution taketh place in them, foraſmuch as it is an extraordinarie caſe, I thinke it neither needfull, nor eaſie to define. Indeed a queſtion is moued by Pope Innocentius the third, Whether, and in what ſort a man, either in his madneſſe, or in his ſléepe may bee Baptized. And S. Auguſtine ſéemeth to witneſſe that Children ſomtime were Baptized in their Mothers Wombe. Likewiſe hée writeth of a friend of his owne: Cùm

Extra. de Baptiſmo, & eius effectu. Maiores Eccleſiæ. §. Item quæritur. Auguſt Contra Iulian. lib. 6 cap.5. iaceret ſine ſenſu in dolore letali, & deſperaretur, Baptizatus eſt neſciens: Whereas hee lay in a Trance, without ſenſe, in deadly paine, and was deſpaired of, hee was Baptized, and knew not of it.

Auguſt. Confeſſion. lib.4. cap.4. Bonauentura addeth ſome force vnto the matter, and demandeth this queſtion: An aliquis poſſit Abſolui inuitus? Whether a man may be abſolued againſt his will, or no?

Bonauentur. in 4. Senten. Diſt. 18 Quæſt.6. But concerning the Abſolution of mad men in the time of their phrenſie, it ſéemeth this was both the meaning of Leo, and the godly diſcretion of the Church at that time, that if a man, ſtanding excommunicate, had happened to be bereft of his ſenſes, and being in that caſe, had béene likely to depart this life, vpon proofe of his former repentance, he ſhould be reſtored, that he might depart in peace, as a member of the Church of God. The practiſe hereof wée may finde in the Councell of Carthage by theſe words: Si is qui Conc. Carthaginen 4. ca 76. Pœnitentiam in infirmitate petit, in phreneſim verſus fuerit, dent Teſtimonium qui eum audiuerunt, & accipiat Pœnitentiam: If hee that deſired reconciliation by Penance in his ſickneſſe, afterward fall mad, let them that heard him beare witneſſe with him, and ſo let him receiue Penance.

Abſolutiõ of mad mẽ

This was only a publike Teſtimonie vnto the Church, that the partie Excommunicate was repentant before, when his minde was quiet. And what thing elſe M. Harding can gather hereof, I cannot tell. Certainely in this order and maner they reſtored, not

24. quæ. 2. de Conſm. in gloſſ. only mad men, but alſo dead men vnto the Church. For it is noted vpon the Decrees: Ex quo, cùm per eum non ſtabat, ei Communicare debemus. Et ita eſt Abſoluendus poſt mortem: Wherefore, seeing there was no lacke in his part, we ought to Communicate with him. And so he must be Absolued after his death.

The words that S. Augustine often vseth vnto Beginners, or Enterers of the Faith, called Catechumeni, are vttered rather for terrour of others, then for rigour of truth, as shall appeare. For otherwheres hee writeth thus: Catechumeni secundùm quendam modum per Signum Christi sanctificantur: The Catechumeni, or Beginners, after their sort, are sanctified by the Signe of Christ. Againe hee saith to them: Non dum renati estis, sed per Crucis Signum in vtero Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ iam concepti estis: Yee are not yet borne anew, but by the Signe of the Crosse, yee are already conceiued in the wombe of the Holy Church your Mother. Aug. de Pœnitentiæ, & Remissione, lib. 2. cap. 16. Augustin. ad Catechumen. lib. 2. cap. 1.

Therefore hauing thus once entered into the Faith of Christ, although they happened afterward to depart this life without Baptisme, yet the Church often times thought it good to iudge well of them. S. Ambrose doubted not but the Emperour Valentinian departed hence in Gods fauour: and yet was the same Emperour but a Beginner, and a Nouice in the Faith, and departed hence without Baptisme. Ambros. de obitu Valentiniani.

M. Harding saith further: Vnlesse the Penitent make particular rehearsall of al his sins, the Priest, or Minister can be no Iudge. Whereunto I adde also further. Notwithstanding any rehearsall that may be made, yet can the Priest neuer be but a doubtfull Iudge. S. Augustine saith: Quid ergo mihi est cum hominibus, vt audiant Confessiones meas, quasi sanaturi sint omnes languores meos? Vnde sciunt, cùm à meipso de meipso audiunt, an verum dicam? Quandoquidem nemo scit hominum quid agatur in homine, nisi spiritus hominis qui est in homine: What haue I to doe with men, that they should heare my Confessions, as if they were able to heale all my greifes? When they heare me speake of my selfe, how can they tell whether I doe say the truth, or no? For no man knoweth what is done in man, but the Spirit of man that is in man. Aug. Confess. lib. 10. cap. 3.

Open Cõfession.

Howbeit, hereof haue growen many vnnecessarie and curious questions: What Yeres, what Moneths, what Daies, what Houres, what Paner, what Order of Penance should serue for euery seuerall Sinne. In Resolution of which doubts stood the iudgement of the Priest. And therefore Carolus Magnus in his Lawes straitly commandeth, that the Priests should be skilfull in the Booke of Penance. Beat. Rhenan. in Tertull. de Pœnitent. Vt Sacerdot. Pœnitent. librum bene calleant.

But as touching the Iudge of Sinnes, S. Chrysostome saith: Ante Deum confitere peccata tua. Apud Verum Iudicem cum oratione delicta tua pronuntia: Confesse thy Sins before God. Before the True Iudge, with prayer pronounce thine offences. And againe: Cogitatione fiat delictorum exquisitio: Sine Teste sit hoc iudicium: Solus te Deus confitentem videat: Let the examination of thy sinnes be wrought in thy heart: Let this iudgement be without Witnesse: Let God Onely heare thee when thou makest thy Confession. And againe hee saith: Medicinæ locus hic est, non Iudicij: non pœnas, sed peccatorum remissionem tribuens: Deo soli dic peccatum tuum: Heere is place of medicine, and not of Iudgement: giuing not punishment, but remission of sinnes. Open thy sinne to God Alone. Chrysost. ad Hebr. Hom. 31. Chrys. in Ser. de Confess. & Pœnitentia. Chrys. Hom. 9. de Pœnitentia.

And therefore in M. Hardings owne Canons it is noted thus: Confessio fit ad ostensionem pœnitentiæ, non ad impetrationem veniæ: Confession is made (vnto the Priest) not thereby to obtaine forgiuenesse, but to declare our repentance. And againe: Confessio Sacerdoti offertur in Signum veniæ acceptę, non in causam remissionis accipiendæ: Confession is made vnto the Priest in token of Remission already obteined, and not as a cause whereby to procure Remission. De Pœnitent. Dist. 1. Omnis qui. In eod. cap.

And yet is the Priest a Iudge, all this notwithstanding: and pronounceth sentence as a Iudge, of Doctrine, of Open Sinne, of the Offense of the Church, and of the Humility and Meauinesse of the Penitent: and as a Iudge, together with the Elders of the Congregation, hee hath Authority, both to Condemne, and to Absolue. Peter Lombard himselfe saith: Etsi aliquis apud Deum sit solutus, non tamen in facie Ecclesiæ solutus habetur, nisi per iudicium Sacerdotis: Albeit a man be Absolued before God, yet is he not accounted Absolued in the face of the Church, but by the iudgement of the Priest. 4 Sen. dist. 18. Non autem.

Likewise saith S. Augustine: Hortor, prius publicâ pœnitentiâ satisfacere, & Sacerdotis Iudicio reconciliatum Communioni sociari: I exhort you first to make satisfaction (vnto the Church) by Open Penance, and so to bee restored to the Communion by the discretion of the Priest. Augustin. De Ecclesiast. dogmatib. lib. 1. cap. 53.

The Order hereof, as it is set forth by S. Cyprian, was this: First, the Sinner by many outward gestures and tokens shewed himselfe to be penitent, and sorrowfull for his sin: After that he made humble confession thereof before the whole Congregation, and desired his brethren to pray for him: Lastly, the Bishop and the Clergy laid their hands ouer him, and so reconciled him. So saith Origen: Qui lapsus est, procedit in medium, & Exomologesin facit: He that hath offended, commeth forth into the mids (of the people) and Cyprian. lib. 3. Epist. 15. Orig. in Ps. 37.

Zozomen. lib. 7 cap. 16. maketh his Confession. Sozomenus likewise describing the same Order, saith thus: Rei ad terram sese pronos abijciunt cum planctu & lamentatione; Episcopus ex aduerso occurrit cum lachrymis, & ipse ad pauimentum lamentando prouoluitur; & vniuersa Ecclesiæ multitudo lachrymis suffunditur: They that haue offended fall downe flat with weeping and lamentation to the ground: The Bishop commeth to him with teares, and himselfe likewise falleth downe: and the whole multitude of the Church is powred ouer and ouer with teares.

Open Cõfession.

I vse the moe words herein, for that the whole matter is long sithence growen vtterly out of vse. Notwithstanding, this is the Confession and Penance that S. Augustine speaketh of. Of Open Confession, M. Harding, he saith, The Keies were not giuen to the Church in vaine. Of Open Confession he saith, Whatsoeuer ye loose in Earth, shall be loosed in Heauen. Of Open Confession he speaketh all these words, and not of any Auricular, or Priuate dealing. If M. Harding happen to doubt hereof, let him looke better vpon his bookes. There shall he finde, euen in the very same place he hath alleged, these words, partly going before, partly following: Agite Pœnitentiam, qualis agitur in Ecclesia, vt oret pro vobis Ecclesia: Iob dicit, Si erubui in conspectu populi confiteri peccata mea: Propterea Deus voluit vt Theodosius ageret Pœnitentiam Publicam in conspectu populi: Nolite permittere viros vestros fornicari: Interpellate contra eos Ecclesiam: Do Penance, such as is done in the Church, that the Church may pray for you: Iob saith, I was not ashamed in the sight of all the people to confesse my sinnes: Therefore God would that Theodosius (being the Emperour of the world) should doe Open Penance euen in the presence of all the people. Ye wiues, suffer not your husbands to liue in fornication: Come before the Congregation, and cry against them.

August. in lib. 50. Homiliar. Homil. 49.

This is the Confession that S. Augustine speaketh of: not Secret, or Priuate, or vnder the Eare: but Publike, and Open, and in the Sight and Hearing of all the people. In like maner saith S. Ambrose: Multos necesse est vt ambias, & obsecres vt dignentur interuenire. Fleat pro te Mater Ecclesia, & culpam tuam lachrymis lauet: Thou must needs humble thy selfe, and desire many, to intreat for thee. Let the Church, thy Mother, weepe for thee, and let her wash thy offence with her teares.

Ambros. De Pœnit. lib. 2. cap. 10.

This therefore, M. Harding, was no plaine dealing, with such sleight to turne Publike into Priuate, and the Open audience of the whole people into One only mans secret eare: and so much to abuse the simplicitie of your Reader. Certainely these words of S. Augustine, Open Penance: Confesse Openly: In the sight of all the people: That the whole Church may pray for thee: these words, I say, will not easily serue to proue your purpose for Priuate Confession.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision 3.

Binding & Loosing. Sin forgiuen without Confession.

We say also, that the Minister doth execute the Authority of Binding and Shutting, as often as hee shutteth vp the Gate of the Kingdome of Heauen against vnbeleeuing and stubburne persons, denouncing vnto thẽ Gods vengeance, & euerlasting punishment: Or else, when he doth quite shut them out from the bosome of the Church by open Excommunication. Out of doubt, what sentence soeuer the Minister of God shal giue in this sort, God himselfe doth so wel allow it, that whatsoeuer heere in Earth by their meanes is Loosed and Bound, God himselfe will Loose and Binde, and confirme the same in Heauen.

M. Harding.

*Vntruth. For we confound them not.

* Heere againe you confound the power of Binding, and the office of preaching, as you did before, speaking of the power of Loosing. Where to we say, as wee said before of that other, that Binding and Shutting consisteth not in denouncing of Gods vengeance, but in the exercise of the Key of Iurisdiction committed to the Church. The Ministers whereof find sinners, whom for iust cause they Loose not, but know that they are not to bee Loosed. And to that Key perteineth Excommunication, and by the same it is exercised.

Vntruths. Fiue together, as may further appeare by the answer.

Whatsoeuer by them is thus Loosed or Bound in Earth, God himself alloweth for Loosed and Bound in Heauen. Such Priests because ye, 1. haue not in your New Church, at least after this wise, 2. vsing priestly authoritie, 3. and none will suffer to be made, 4. nor such Authoritie to be exercised: yee 5. defraud the faithfull people of the great benefit of the Sacrament of Penance, keeping them fast bound to their sinnes after Baptisme committed. And so ye cause their euerlasting damnation, for whom Christ hath shed his blood, the price of their redemption.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

We confound not these Keies, M. Harding, but speake plainly and distinctly of either other. We say that the power, as well of Loosing, as also of Binding, standeth in Gods Word:

Word: and the exercise or execution of the same, standeth either in Preaching, or else in Sentence of Correction, and Ecclesiasticall Discipline.

Binding & Loosing.

Of the latter hereof there is no question: of the former M. Harding pronounceth precisely, although, as it appeareth, not most aduisedly: Binding (saith he) and shutting standeth not in denouncing of Gods vengeance. And hereof he certainly assureth vs, as of a most vndoubted veritie. Howbeit, in so saying, he seemeth not to consider the power and weight of the Word of God.

Sin forgiuen without Confession.

Christ himselfe saith, If any man shall heare my words, and shall not beleeue, I condemne him not. He that refuseth me, and receiueth not my words, hath one that condemneth him. The word that I haue spoken is it that shall iudge him at the last day. Likewise saith S. Paul: Wee are the good sauour of Christ in them that be saued, and in them that perish. Vnto them that perish wee are the sauour of death vnto death: In them that be saued wee are the sauour of life vnto life. And again: If the Gospell be hidden, it is hidden from them that perish. So saith God vnto the Prophet Ezechiel: If thou giue warning to the wicked, and he will not be turned from his wickednesse, he shall perish in the same: yet hast thou discharged thine owne soule.

Iohn 12. 2. Cor. 2. 2. Cor. 4. Ezechiel 3.

To be short, the whole Scriptures are full hereof: and therefore S. Augustine saith: Prædicatur Euangelium quibusdam ad præmium, quibusdam ad iudicium: The Gospell is preached to some vnto reward, to some vnto iudgement.

August. Epist. 49. ad Deo. gratias.

For the rest M. Harding saith: Such Priests because ye haue not in your New Church, at least after this wile vsing Priestly Authoritie, and none will suffer to be made, and such Authoritie to be exercised, ye defraud the faithfull people of the great benefit of the Sacrament of Penance, keeping them fast bound to their sinnes after Baptisme committed: and so ye cause their euerlasting damnation, for whom Christ hath shed his blood, the price of their redemption.

These great words are not very well seasoned: they are bigge in sound, and small in weight: they are full of terrour, and void of wit. For the Church of England hath Authoritie this day by Gods Word, to Binde and Loose, as much as euer Christ gaue any to his Apostles: and by the same authoritie the same Church of England is able to Binde, not only M. Harding and his fellowes, as Peter bound Simon Magus, or as Paul bound Elymas the false Prophet: but also the Pope himselfe, if he be an Open Offender: and, as S. Paul saith, is able to deliuer him ouer vnto Satan: and vndoubtedly being so Bound in Earth, he shall also stand Bound in Heauen.

Our people remaine not Bound, nor perish in their sinnes, as these men so vncharitably and fondly haue imagined. They be so certaine of the remission of their sinnes in the blood of Christ, as if Christ himselfe were present, and spake it to them. They are taught, and know, that The blood of Christ the Sonne of God hath made vs cleane from all our sinnes: and, That there is no name vnder Heauen whereby we shall be saued, but onely the name of Iesus Christ.

1 Iohn 1. Actor. 4.

As for Priuate Confession, Abuses and Errours set apart, as it is said before, we condemne it not, but leaue it at libertie. And therein we may seeme to follow the aduice of Charles the Emperour in his late Interim: for thus he writeth: Confessio & peccatorum enumeratio, vt non nimis laxanda est, ita vicissim non nimis est astringenda.

Interim Caroli 5. Anno 1548.

Touching the Priests of your making, M. Harding, of whom ye seeme to make so great account, your owne Peter Lombard saith of them, as it is said before: Sanè dici potest quòd alteram Clauem, id est, Scientiam discernendi, multi Sacerdotes non habent. And in like maner saith your owne Bonauentura: Omnes ferè ita sunt Simplices & Idiotæ post susceptionem Sacerdotij, sicut antè: All Priests, for the most part, are as Simple and Vnlearned after the receiuing of Order, as they were before.

4. Senten. dist. 19. Post. Bonauent. 4. Sent. dist. 18. qua. 1. E.

But be it graunted that your Priest be fully furnished with all his Keies: yet is it not he that by any his Authoritie forgiueth sinnes. Your owne Gratian saith: Euidentissimè datur intelligi, quòd sine Confessione oris peccata possunt deleri: It is euidently giuen vs to vnderstand, that without confession of Mouth sinnes may be forgiuen. And againe: Ore tacente, veniam consequi possumus: Though wee say nothing, yet wee may haue pardon. Againe: Luce clarius constat, Cordis Contritione, non Oris Confessione peccata dimitti: It is apparent, and more cleare then the light, that sinnes be forgiuen by Contrition of the Heart, and not by Confession of the Mouth. And againe: Dominus ostendit, quòd non Sacerdotali iudicio, sed largitate diuina Peccator mundatur: Our Lord hath taught vs, that the Sinner is made cleane, not by the iudgement of the Priest, but by the mercy of God.

Thus, M. Harding, it is plaine by the iudgement of your owne Doctours, that, were your Auricular Confession quite abolished, yet might the people notwithstanding haue full remission of their sinnes. But of you it may be verified, that Christ said vnto the Pharisies: Yee haue taken away the keies of the Kingdome of Heauen: and neither doe yee en- Luke. 11.

Veſelus de ſubditis & ſuperioribus.

ter your ſelues, nor will you ſuffer others that would enter. Of your Keies Veſelus ſaid long ſithence, Claues Papæ & Prælatorum non aperiunt Regnum Dei, ſed claudunt potiùs: The Popes and the Prelates keies doe not open the Kingdome of God, but rather ſhut it.

The Apology, Chap. 7. Diuiſion 1.

The word is the Key.

AND touching the Keies, wherewith they may either Shut or Open the Kingdome of Heauen, wee with Chryſoſtome ſay, They bee the knowledge of the Scriptures: with Tertullian wee ſay, They be the Interpretation of the Law: and with Euſebius wee call them, The Word of God.

M. Harding.

The let, whereby the whole nature of man is ſhut out of Heauen by the ſinne of our firſt Parent, is taken away by the Paſſion of Chriſt. But becauſe before that benefit be receiued, Heauen yet remaineth ſhut, both for ſinne originall contracted, and ſinne actuall committed, we haue need of the Sacraments, and Keies of the Church.

The holy Fathers, for good conſiderations grounded vpon Scripture, haue diuided the Keies into the Key of Order, and the Key of Iuriſdiction: and either of them into the Key of Knowledge, which they call alſo the Key of Diſcretion, and into the Key of Power.

To theſe Defenders we ſay, that they confound the Keies, & ſeeme not to know what the Keies are. Verily theſe bee not onely the knowledge of the Scriptures, nor the Interpretation of the Law, nor the Word of God although theſe alſo do open or ſhut the Kingdome of Heauen in their kinde, as Chryſoſtome, Tertullian, and Euſebius may well ſay: and not only theſe, but alſo Miracles, and Plagues, and all other things which prepare the will or vnderſtanding of man, whereby he may receiue the benefit of thoſe moſt principall keies that now wee ſpeake of.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Gentle Reader, for the better vnderſtanding hereof, it may pleaſe thee to conſider that the Word of God, according to the ſundry effects and properties thereof, hath ſundry names. For example, for that it increaſeth and multiplieth, it is called Seed: For that it cutteth the heart, and diuideth the fleſh from the ſpirit, it is called a Sword: For that it taketh and encloſeth vs, and bringeth vs together, it is called a Net: For that it waſheth vs cleane, it is called Water: For that it enflameth vs, it is called Fire: For that it feedeth vs, it is called Bread. And euen ſo, for that it openeth, and giueth vs an entry into the houſe, it is called the Key. This houſe is the Kingdome of Heauen: Chriſt is the Dore: The Word of God is the Key.

For thus ſaying, M. Harding telleth vs, Wee confound matters, and ſeeme not to know what we ſay. Notwithſtanding, herein we imagine nothing of our owne, but only report the very words and ſentences of the ancient learned Catholike Fathers.

Tertull. contra Marcion. lib. 4. Hier. in Eſa.

Tertullian ſaith, Quam Clauem habebant Legis Doctores, niſi interpretationem Legis? What Key had the Doctors of the Law, ſauing the Expoſition of the Law? S. Hierome ſaith, Duces Eccleſiæ habent Claues ſcientiæ, vt aperiant Scripturas creditis ſibi populis. Vnde præcipitur, vt Magiſtri aperiant, & Diſcipuli ingrediantur: The Captaines of the Church haue the Keies of Knowledge, to open the Scriptures vnto the people to them committed. Therefore commandement is giuen that the Maſters ſhould open, and the Schollers ſhould enter. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Remittuntur peccata per Dei Verbum, cuius Leuites eſt Interpres: Sinnes be forgiuen by the Word of God, the expounder whereof is the Prieſt.

Ambroſ. de Cain & Abel, Lib. 2.

Thus theſe and other like ancient Fathers haue opened the meaning of theſe Keies: and yet were they neuer therefore condemned of ignorance, as men that wiſt not what they ſaid. Certainly Chryſoſtome ſaith, Clauis eſt ſcientia Scripturarum, per quam aperitur ianua veritatis: The Key is the knowledge of the Scriptures, whereby is opened the gate of the truth. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, Clauis eſt dicenda, qua ad Fidem pectorum dura reſeruantur: That ought to bee called the Key, wherewith the hardneſſe of mens hearts is opened vnto Faith.

Chryſo. in Opere Imperfecto, Homil. 44. Auguſ. de Sanctis, Hom. 27.

Multiplication of Keies.

Here hath M. Harding well multiplied and increaſed his Keies, and hath brought vs forth a whole bunch of them altogether: The Keies of Orders: The Keies of Iuriſdiction: The Keies of Diſcretion: The Keies of Power: The Keies moſt Principall, and the Keies not ſo Principall: and thus hath he Keies of Order without Iuriſdiction, and Keies of Iuriſdiction without Order: Keies of Diſcretion without Power, and Keies of Power without Diſcretion. And all theſe prittie ſhifts of Keies hath he deuiſed to auoid confuſion: and to make vp his tale, as if the Popes Croſſe Keies were not ſufficient, Plagues and Miracles, and I know not what things elſe, are brought forth vnto vs in the likeneſſe of Keies.

Keies. And this diſtinction and limitation of Keies, (ſaith he) hath vpon good conſiderations been diuiſed by the holy Fathers. And yet of all theſe holy Fathers, for modeſties ſake, he nameth not one.

What anſwer were it beſt to make to ſuch vanities? Indeed, when the right Key of Knowledge was loſt and gone, it was time to deuiſe ſome other prette picklocks to worke the feat. Bonauentura hereof writeth thus, as it is partly alleged before: Omnes ferè Sacerdotes ita ſunt ſimplices & idiotæ poſt ſuſceptionem Sacerdotij, ſicut antè. Dicendum ergo, quòd Scientia non eſt Clauis Principalis, nec per ſe, ſed prout iuncta eſt authoritati Ligandi vel Soluendi. Et hæc Clauis non eſt de eſſe Ordinis, ſed de bene eſſe: All Prieſts for the moſt part, are as ſimple, and as rude after the receiuing of the Prieſthood, as they were before. Therefore we muſt ſay, that Knowledge is not the Principall Key, nor any Key at all of it ſelfe: but as it is ioined with the authoritie of Binding or Looſing. And this Key (of Knowledge) is not of the Subſtance of the Order of Prieſthood, but of the better beeing of the ſame. And therefore to encreaſe M. Hardings number of Keies, hee ſaith: Quidam habent Scientiam Clauium: quidam Clauiculam: quidam nullam: Some haue the Knowledge of the Keies: ſome a pretie little Key: ſome no Key at all. In this caſe it were good for M. Harding, to reſolue his Reader, when the Prieſt hath nothing elſe but a prette little Key, or no Key at all, what authority he hath, either to Open, or to Shut. Bonauen. 4. Sent. Diſt. 18. Qu. 1. E. Eodem loco.

M. Harding replieth farther. Wee haue Remiſſion of Sinnes in the miniſtration of the Sacraments: Therefore wee haue it not onely by the hearing of the Word of God. This Obiection is touched and partly anſwered a little before. S. Auguſtine calleth the Sacraments, Verba Viſibilia: Words Viſible: for that in them, as in liuely Images, the death of Chriſt is ſenſiblie ſet before our eies. For the word of God is the Subſtance, and Life of all Sacraments: and without the ſame, Sacraments, whatſoeuer, are no Sacraments. And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, as it is alleged before: Quare non ait, Vos mundi eſtis propter Baptiſmum, quo loti eſtis: Sed ait, propter Verbum quod locutus ſum vobis? Niſi quia & in Aqua Verbum mundat. Detrahe Verbum; & quid eſt Aqua, niſi Aqua? Why ſaith not Chriſt, You are cleane becauſe of the Baptiſme, wherewith yee are waſhed: But, becauſe of the Word, that I haue ſpoken to you? Sauing for that, it is the Word, that cleanſeth in the Water. Take the Word away, and what is Water elſe, but Water? Auguſt. contra Fauſtum li. 19. cap. 16. Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract. 80.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuiſion 2.

Moreouer that Chriſts Diſciples did receiue this authority, not that they ſhould heare the Priuate Confeſſions of the people, and liſten to their whiſperings, as the common Maſſing Prieſts do euery wher now adaies, and doe it ſo, as though in that one point lay all the Vertue and Vſe of the Keies: but to the end, they ſhould Goe, they ſhould Teach, they ſhould Publiſh abroad the Goſpell, & be vnto the Beleeuing a ſweet Sauour of Life vnto Life: and vnto the Vnbeleeuing & Vnfaithfull, a Sauour of Death vnto Death: and that the mindes of Godly perſons being brought low by the remorſe of their former Life and errors, after they once began to looke vp vnto the Light of the Goſpell, and beleeue in Chriſt, might be opened with the Word of God, euen as a doore is opened with a Key. Contrariwiſe, that the Wicked and Wilfull, and ſuch as would not beleeue, nor returne into the right way, ſhould be left ſtill as faſt locked, and ſhut vp, and, as S. Paul ſaith, wax woorſe and woorſe. This take we to bee the meaning of the Keies: and that after this ſort mens Conſciences be either opened or ſhut. 2. Timoth. 3.

M. Harding.

Heere yee Harpe much vpon one ſtring, which ſo iarreth in the eares of the Hearers, as your confuſe Harmonie can like no man, vnleſſe hee bee a Miniſtrell of your owne Sect. The authoritie and power of the Keies conſiſteth not altogether, nor Principally in Preaching or pronouncing of the Goſpell as already we haue prooued. What may we iudge of you? proceedeth this of Malice or of Ignorance, that thus yee confound the Keies, the Powers and the Miniſteries?

Preaching is one thing, to gouerne the Church is another, to remit and retaine ſinnes is another, to diſtribute the Sacraments is another. Doth not S. Paul in cleere words ſpeake ſeuerally and diſtinctly of Miniſteries, where he ſaith, That hee was not ſent of Chriſt to Baptize, but to Preach the Goſpell? This Doctrine of yours, whereby ye confound the Keies, Powers, and Miniſteries, doth not only obſcure 1. Corin. 1.

the Scriptures, and bring the people to great errors; but also vnder pretence of a loue toward preaching of the Gospell, leadeth them into contempt of the Sacraments, and specially of the Sacrament of Penance, without which, if after Baptisme we haue sinned (not being letted by case of necessity, wherein Will, Desire, and Vow is accepted) (a) wee cannot attaine to Saluation. As you follow Caluine your Master in this and sundrie other false and perillous Doctrines, so it is to be feared if your wicked temeritie be suffered to proceed, that at length hauing brought all Religion to bare Preaching, ye will abandon all the Sacraments of the Church, as things not necessary. For so that wicked Master of yours teacheth: That, where Christs death may be remembred otherwise, there (b) all the Sacraments be superfluous. And that I seeme not to slander him, I remit you to his Commentaries vpon the first Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, where expounding these words, Doe this in my remembrance, he saith thus; The Supper is a token of remembrance ordained to lift vp, or helpe our infirmitie; for if otherwise we were mindfull enough of Christs death, this helpe (he meaneth the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar) were superfluous, which is common to all the Sacraments, for they be helpes of our infirmitie. Lo by Caluines doctrine, if we remember the death of Christ, both the Eucharist, and all other holy Sacraments be void and superfluous. And then because no other thing bringeth to our remembrance the Death of Christ, more then Preaching, to what purpose serue all the Sacraments?

(a) Vntruth: as by the Answer may further appeare.

(b) A great vntruth ioined with a slander, Read the Answere.

Caluines wicked doctrine against the Sacraments.

Thus these Defenders with their Master Caluine haue found a shorter way to Heauen, then was knowen before.

Comment. in 1. Cor. 11.

In another place he seemeth to derogate much of the necessitie of Baptism of Christian mens Children. Where he saith, that by reason of Gods promise the issue which commeth of Faithfull parents (c) is borne Holy and is a Holy Progenie, & that the children of such, being yet inclosed in the womb, before they draw breath of life, be neuertheless chosen into the couenant of life euerlasting. This doctrine, when it shall take place, as by you Defender it is set in a good furtherance, what shall we looke for but that the necessary Sacrament of Baptisme (without which, who is to be counted a Christian man?) and the most Blessed and comfortable Sacrament of the Altar, and the wholesome Sacrament of penance and absolution, and the rest of the Sacraments, shall be no more esteemed and vsed, then now ye esteeme and vse the Masse, Holy Bread and Holy Water? This being once brought to passe, shall not the people easily be induced either to receiue Mahomets Religion, or some other, as farre from God as that is, or to allow the pleasant trade of life of the (d) Epicureans, the most part being already thereto inclined, and no small number well entred?

(c) These bee not M. Caluins words, but S. Pauls: Filij vestri sancti sunt, 1. Cor. 7. Quid si Cœlum ruat?

(d) Otherwise called the Romanes.

But to returne again to the Keyes, which seem to you to haue no force ne vse but in preaching: First as touching the scornful sceffes vttered by you, Sir Defender in Latine, and by your Interpreter in English, against Priuate Confessions, and against the Ministers of the Church appointed by God for grace of reconciliation to be imparted to penitents: your light mocking spirit delighteth your selues not so much as it pitieth vs to see you both so fast bound in Satans fetters. Next concerning Confessiō (e) necessarily required to the vse & power of the keyes, which you speake of at your pleasure, thus we say according to the Scriptures: Among sundry effects for which Christ gaue the Keies to the Apostles, and their Successors, this is one, that by power of thē they should remit and retain sins, as himself said, whose sins ye remit, they are remitted vnto them: and whose sinnes ye retaine, they are retained. (f) But sinnes cannot duly be remitted, or retained, vnlesse they be knowne to him, that hath authority thereto and knowledge of sinnes (specially such as are priuie) cannot be had of man, who cannot see into the heart of man, (f) but by confession of the sinner: Wherfore consequently it followeth, that they receiued this authority to heare the confession of Christian people desirous to be assoiled and reconciled.

(e) Vntruth. For it is not required of necessity, as shall appeare.

(f) Vntruths, two together. See the Answer.

Mat. 18. Iohan. 20.

Wherefore the Confession yea of Secret sins is necessary to Saluation by (g) the institution of Christ. For in that he instituted the end, he instituted also the meanes, which should be necessary to the obtaining of the end: vnlesse we would make Christ our Lawmaker to haue failed his Church in things necessary. That sins cannot either be remitted or retained, except the Priest know them, wee are bold to say with the Fathers, and specially with S. Hierome, who so (h) vnderstood the words of Christ; where hee propounded the Keies of the kingdome of Heauen to Peter: Sacerdos pro officio suo cum peccatorum audierit Varietates, scit qui Ligandus sit qui Soluendus: The Priest (saith he) when as according to his office hee hath heard the diuersitie of sins, knoweth who is to be bound, who is to be loosed. Right so as in the time of Moses Law he pronounced not, who was cleane of Leaper, who was not, before that hee had viewed the colour, the bunches, and all other tokens of that disease. And thus it followeth of the words of Christ, that Confession of all Sinnes, at least deadly, must be made to the Priest, before they can bee remitted. Which Priest is the Minister of this Sacrament, and hath authority to absolue, either Ordinary, or by Commission of the Superiour.

(g) Vntruth. For M. Hardings owne Doctours say. It was ordained by Tradition and not by Christ.

(h) Vntruth. In mistaking and abridging S. Hieromes words.

Mat. 16. Comment. Mat. 16.

This Consistory stood sometime in Excommunication; sometime in Preaching.

Againe, for proofe that confession is necessary, we say, that to remit and retaine sinnes committed against God, as to bind & to loose, be iudicial acts. And therfore by these words Christ ordained a court, a Consistory, a seat of Iudgement in the Church, and appointed the Apostles & their Successors, to be Iudges. And that this may appear not to be a fantasie of our owne heads, S. Austine expoundeth these words of S. Iohn in his Reuelation: Et vidi sedes, &c. And I saw seats, and some sitting on them & Iudgment was giuen. We must not thinke (saith he) this to be spoken of the last Iudgement, but wee must vnderstand the Seats of the Rulers, and the Rulers themselues, by whom now the Church is gouerned. And as for the Iudgement giuen it seemeth not to be taken for any other, then for that, whereof it is said, What things ye bind in Earth, they shall be bound also in Heuen: and what things ye loose in Earth they shall be loosed also in Heauen. Sundry other Fathers haue vttered in their writings the same Doctrine. Hilarius vpon the sixteenth Chapter of Mathew, saith, Beatus (alij ianitor, &c. Blessed is the Porter of Heauen, whose earthly Iudgement (that is to say, which is giuen heere on Earth) is a foreiudged authority in Heauen, that what things be bound or loosed in Earth, they haue the conditiō of the same Statute also in Heuen. S. Cyprian hath the like saying in an Epistle to Cornelius. Chrysostom saith, That Christ hath translated al Iudgment which he receiued of the Father vnto the Apostles & Priests. Gregory Nazianzene in an Oration to the Emperor and his Princes, saith to the Emperour, Ouis mecum es, & non habemus Tribunalia: Thou art my sheepe, and we haue our seats of Iudgement. S Gregory the Pope cōpareth the Sacrament of Penance with a Court of Iustice, in which causes be first examined & tried & afterward iudged. That the same is to be done by the Priest S. Bernard sheweth; who, as also the lerned Father Hugo de S. Victore, Be not afraid to say after S. Cyprian, Hilary and Chrysostom, that the sentēce of Peter remitting sinn s, goeth before the sentence of Heauen. This Ordinance of Christ requireth, that all Trespasses, Offences, Disorders, Transgressions and Sinnes committed against him and his Lawes, bee referred to his Consistory.

Priuate Confession.

Whether these Defenders allow Publike Confession, or no, we know not: but whereas they inueigh against Priuate Confession, and say in spightfull words, which they haue learned in the Schoole of Satan, being loth the sinnes of the people, whereby he holdeth his kingdome, should bee remitted, that Christs Disciples receiued not the authoritie of the Keies, that they should heare Priuate Confessions of the people and listen to their whisperings. we tell them, that Confession of all deadlie sinnes is of the (i) institution of God, not of Man. But concerning the maner of confessing secretly to a Priest alone, it is most agreeable to Naturall Reason, that secret sinnes be confessed secretly.

(i) Vntruth: As it is proued before.

(k) Clement amongst those things that he acknowledgeth himselfe to haue receiued of Peter, this is One, as he writeth in his first Epistle translated by Rufine the Priest; That if it fortune either Enuie or Infidelity priuily to creepe into any mans heart, or any other like euill; he which regardeth his soule, be not ashamed to confesse those things to him, that is in Office ouer him, to the end, that by him, through the Word of God, and holesome Counsell, he may be healed. So as by perfect Faith and good workes he may escape the paines of euerlasting Fire, and come to the rewards of Life that endureth for euer. No man speaketh more plainely of Secret Confession (l) then Origen, and that in sundry places, to which for breuities sake I remit the Reader. In 2. cap. Leuitici Homil 2. De Principijs, lib. 1. In Psal. 37 Homil 2. Where he compareth the state of a Sinner, to a man, that hath euill and vndigested humours in his stomacke. And saith, that as by remaining of such euill matter, the man feeleth himselfe very sicke, & by vomiting of it foorth, he is eased; so the sinner by keeping his sinnes secret, is the more grieuously charged in his owne conscience, and standeth in danger to be choaked with the flegme & humour of his sins. But if he accuse himselfe and confesse his faults, he both vomiteth forth his sinnes, and digesteth the cause of the same. S. Cyprian as in many other places, so most plainely speaketh of Secret Confession, Sermon. 5. De lapsis. Although, (saith he of certaine deuout persons) they be intangled with no great sin, yet because at least they thought of it, the same vnto the Priests of God Confesse they sorowfully and simply. They make Confession of their Conscience, they lay forth the burden of their minde, &c.

(k) A vaine forgery.

(l) Vntruth. For he speaketh only of open Confession.

All this belongeth to open Confession.

Confession of euill thought.

S Augustine treating of the power of the Keies in many places, but specially of Confession, In Psalm. 60. where speaking much of the necessitie of Confession, he saith thus; Why fearest thou to bee Confessed? If not being Confessed, thou remaine hidden, not being Confessed thou shalt bee damned. And afterward thus: To this end God requireth Confession, to deliuer the humble; to this end he damneth him that confesseth not, to punish the proud. Therefore be thou sorrie before thou be Confessed; being Confessed reioice, thou shalt be hole.

By these and many other holy Fathers, of whom there is no doubt, but they had the Holy Ghost for their Teacher and prompter of all Truth, the Catholike Church hath bin perswaded, that the recitall & rehearsing of (m) all Sins before the Priest is necessary to Saluation; vnlesse necessity for lacke of a Priest or otherwise, exclude vs from it; and that a (n) Generall Confession in no wise sufficeth. True Faith acknowledgeth, that Confession is to be made of al (n) sins, as (n) commanded by Christ & the Apostles, commended to vs by the (n) Fathers of the Primitiue Church, by all (n) learned Doctors, & generall vse of the (n) whole Church. And if the expresse terme of Secret or Auricular Confession be (o) seldome mentioned in the ancient Fathers, as that of Publike Confession is often times vsed, as in the Nicene Councell, & in sundrie other places; that is nothing repugnant to the doctrine of the Catholike Church.

(m) Vntruth. Read the Answer.

(n) Vntruths, many and manifest, as shall appeare.

(o) Vntruth. For it is neuer found. Otherwise let him shew it.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

All this great shew of Authorites, of Fathers and Doctors, M. Harding himselfe in the end dischargeth easily with one Word. For, notwithstanding all, that hee could best deuise to say herein, his Conclusion at the last is this, The expresse Terme of Secret or Auricular Confession is seldome mentioned in the ancient Fathers. Seldome, hee saith, as if it were sometimes vsed, although but Seldome. But if hee had left Seldome, and said Neuer, I trow this tale had been the truer.

Addition.

Addition. ☞ Heere M. Harding alleageth against mee, the authority of Pope Leo, condemning Publike Confession offered vp in writing; to be published openly to the people, and allowing rather Confession made onely priuately to the Priest: Lest (saith Leo) the Penitents should bee ashamed or afraid to open their deeds vnto their enemies, of whom they may be troubled, therefore by the Ordinance of the Lawes, &c. The Answer. The name of Pope Leo is great: But his reasons are very weake. For touching the first reason, for that speciall cause, in Old times, the Penitents were forced to make open Confession, to the end they might shew themselues ashamed of their sinnes, and bee an example vnto others. As for feare of enemies & troubles, and sutes in Law, that might happen to grow vpon such Confessions, if the ancient holy Fathers had cast such doubts, Publike Confession had neuer beene vsed. ☜

For the rest, we say, as before: We make no Confusion of the Keies. Our Doctrine is plaine, that there bee two Keies in the Church of God: The one of Instruction, the other of Correction. Whereof the one worketh inwardly, the other outwardly. The one before God, the other before the Congregation. And yet either of these standeth wholy in the Word of God. And therefore S. Paul saith, Omnis Scriptura Diuinitùs inspirata vtilis est ad Doctrinam, ad Redargutionem, ad Correctionem, ad Institutionem, &c. All Scriptures inspired from God, are profitable, to teach the Truth: to reproue the Falshood: to correct the Wicked: to nurture and informe the Godly. 2. Tim. 3.

Of

Actor. 16. Of the former of theſe Beies S. Paul ſaith, Beleeue in the Lord Ieſus: and thou ſhalt bee ſafe, with all thy Houſe.

2.Cor.10. Of the other he ſaith, The Weapons of our warfare are not fleſhly: but mighty through God, to throw downe holds, caſting downe euery High thing, that is builded vp againſt the knowledge of God, and to bring all vnderſtanding captiue to the Obedience of Chriſt.

This Doctrine ſeemeth to be ſimple and plaine and without Confuſion.

Sacramēts neceſſary.

Touching M. Caluine, it is great wrong vntruly to report ſo Reuerend a Father, and ſo Worthy an Ornament of the Church of God. If you had euer knowen the order of the Church of Geneua, and had ſeene foure thouſand people or moe, receiuing the Holie Myſteries together at one Communion, ye could not without your great ſhame and want of modeſtie, thus vntruly haue publiſhed to the world, that by M. Caluines Doctrine, the Sacraments of Chriſt are ſuperfluous. Certainely to leaue all, that hee hath otherwiſe ſpoken of the Sacraments in generall: of the Sacrament of Chriſts laſt Supper, hee writeth thus: Magnum conſolationis, ac ſuauitatis fructum ex hoc Sacramento colligere poſſunt piæ animæ: quòd in hic teſtimonium habeant, Chriſtum ſic nobis adunatum eſſe, ſic nos illi viciſſim inſertos, adeoque in vnum corpus cum ipſo coaluiſſe, vt quicquid ipſius eſt, noſtrum vocare liceat: The godly mindes may take great fruit of pleaſure and comfort of this Sacrament: for that, therein they haue a witneſſe, that Chriſt is ſo made one with vs and wee ſo grafted into him, and are ſo growen both into one Body, that whatſoeuer is his, wee may now call it ours.

Inſtitut. cap. 18.2.

But Caluine (you ſay) writeth thus; The Supper is a token of remembrance, to lift vp, or to help our infirmity. For if otherwiſe wee were mindefull enough of Chriſts Death, this helpe were ſuperfluous. O, M. Harding, how farre malice may beare a man! Becauſe M. Caluine ſaith, Wee are weake and haue need of outward Sacraments, to quicken the dulneſſe of our Senſes, ſaith he therefore, That the Sacraments be ſuperfluous? If he had likewiſe ſaid, Our Bodies be weake, and haue need to be refreſhed with Meat and Drink, would you gather therof, that Meat and Drinke are ſuperfluous? Nay contrariwiſe hee concludeth, Wee haue need of Sacraments: Therefore Sacraments be needfull. And the greater our weakenеſſe is, the more need haue we of ſuch remedies. His words amongſt many others of like ſenſe be theſe: Sic eſt exigua noſtra Fides, vt niſi Vndique fulciatur, atque omnibus modis ſuſtentetur, ſtatim concutiatur, fluctuet, vacillet: So ſmall is our Faith, that vnleſſe it be borne vp of euery ſide, and by all meanes be maintained, it ſhaketh, it wauereth, and is like to fall.

Inſtitut. cap. 16.3.

If this be ſo dangerous a Doctrine as you tell vs, why then are the ancient Catholike Fathers ſuffered to holde and maintaine the ſame? Dionyſius, whom you ſo often call S. Pauls Scholar, writeth thus: Nos imaginibus ſenſibilibus, quantum fieri poteſt, ad Diuinas adducimur Contemplationes: We, as much as may be, by Senſible Images, or Sacraments, are brought vnto Diuine Contemplations.

Eccleſiaſt Hierarch. cap 1.

Likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, Sacramenta propter Carnales Viſibilia inſtituta ſunt: vt ab illis, quæ oculis cernuntur, ad illa, quæ intelliguntur, Sacramentorum gradibus transferamur: Viſible Sacraments are ordained for Carnall men, that by the ſteps of Sacraments wee may be led from the things, that we ſee with eie, vnto the things that we vnderſtand. So ſaith S. Cyprian, Fidei noſtræ infirmitas ſenſibili argumento edocta eſt, &c. The weakneſſe of our Faith is taught by the vnderſtanding of the Sacrament, &c. So S. Chryſoſtome: Si incorporei eſſemus, nuda & incorporea nobis hæc ipſa daret. Nunc, quia corporibus inſertas habemus animas ſub viſibilibus ſpiritualia tradit: If wee were Bodileſſe, God would giue vs theſe things bare and Bodileſſe. But foraſmuch, as we haue Soules faſtened vnto our Bodies, therefore God giueth vs things Spirituall Vnder things viſible. Againe he ſaith: Rectis & Fidelibus Scripturæ non ſunt Neceſſariæ, dicente Apoſtolo, Lex iuſtis non eſt poſita: To the Godly and Faithfull the Scriptures are not neceſſary: For ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, There is no Law prouided for the iuſt. And againe: Oportuerat quidem nos nihil indigere auxilio Literarum, ſed tam nudam in omnibus vitam exhibere, vt Librorum vice Gratia Spiritus vteremur: It behooued vs to haue no need of the Scriptures: but in all things to ſhew our Liues ſo pure and cleane, that in ſtead of Bookes we might vſe the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt.

Cypr. De Cœna Domini. Chryſ. ad Pop. Antioc. ho. 60. Chryſ. in Mat. Homil 22. In opere imperf. Chryſ. in Mat. Hom. 1.

In like maner S. Hierome ſaith: Cùm meruerimus eſſe cum Chriſto, & ſimiles Angelis fuerimus, tunc Librorum Doctrina ceſſabit: When wee ſhall obtaine to be with Chriſt, and ſhall be like vnto the Angels, then the Doctrine of Bookes ſhall giue place.

Hieronym. in Proœmio in Lamen. Hieremiæ.

Now tell vs, M. Harding, muſt wee hereof conclude, as you doe, that theſe holy Fathers, S. Cyprian, S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, Held falſe and perillous Doctrines, and with wicked temerity (as you ſay) would abandon both Scriptures and Sacraments, as things not neceſſary? Certainly for full reſolution hereof, M. Caluine himſelfe ſaith thus: Facilè patior, vt, quæ Chriſtus nobis dedit, Salutis adiumenta, eorum vſus Neceſſarius dicatur: quando, ſcilicet, datur facultas. Quanquam ſemper admonendi ſunt Fideles, Ioh. Caluinus in Antidoto ad 7. Seſſ. Concil. Tridentini.

non aliam esse cuiusuis Sacramenti Necessitatem, quàm Instrumentalis Causæ, cui nequaquam alliganda est Dei virtus. Vocem sanè illam nemo pius est, qui non toto pectore exhorreat, Sacramenta res esse Superfluas : I can well suffer, that whatsoeuer helpes of Saluation Christ hath giuen vs, the vse thereof be counted Necessary : I meane, when wee may haue opportunity and time to vse them. Howbeit, thus much the Faithfull must bee warned, that the Necessity of any Sacrament is none otherwise, but as of a Cause Instrumentall : vnto which Cause we may not in any wise binde the Power of God. But that the Sacraments bee things Superfluous, no Godly man can abide to heare it.

Whereas you further charge M. Caluine, for saying, The Children of the Faithfull are borne Holy, yée should rather herewith haue charged S. Paul. For thus hee saith, Nunc Liberi vestri Sancti sunt : Now are your Children Holy. Yée should haue remembred, M. Harding, that these bee S. Pauls words, and not M. Caluines. His meaning is, that the Children of the Faithfull, notwithstanding by Nature, they bee the Children of Anger, yet by Gods free Election they be Pure and Holy. This is S. Pauls vndoubted Doctrine : Which notwithstanding, Hee neuer neither despised the Sacraments of Christ, nor led the people (as you say) to Mahomet or Epicure. 1. Cor. 7.

Heere at the last, M. Harding, to returne, as he saith, to his Reles, first beginneth with the spightfull words and scornefull scoffes, and light spirit of Sir Defender, which (he saith) he learned in the Schoole of Satan, and now lieth bound in Satans fetters.

To answer all such M. Hardings vanities, it were but paine. Wise men will not greatly waigh these childish Tragedies.

But he saith, The Priest holdeth a Consistorie, and is a Iudge ouer the Sinnes of the People. But being a Iudge he cannot discerne Sinnes vnlesse hee know them. Neither can hee know them, but by Confession. Therefore (saith M. Harding) we tell them, that Confession of all Deadly Sinnes is of the Institution of God, and not of Man. Marie (saith he) touching the maner of Confession, secretly to the Priest alone, it is most agreeable to Naturall Reason, that secret Sins be Confessed secretly.

Heere, I beseech thee, good Christian Reader, note this one thing by the way : M. Harding, contrarie to common order, hath brought vs the Institution of God, without any maner Word of God. And thus (he saith) we tell them : As if his bare telling should stand for proofe.

Verily notwithstanding Christ gaue his Apostles power of Binding and Loosing, yet it appeareth not, that he spake any one word of Secret Confession. And Gratian a famous Doctor of that side doubteth not to say, Latentia peccata non probantur Necessariò Sacerdoti Confitenda : It is not proued, that Priuy sinnes ought of Necessitie to bee Confessed vnto the Priest. And againe : Datur intelligi, quòd etiam, ore tacente, Veniam Consequi possumus : We are giuen to vnderstand, that although we vtter nothing with our mouth, yet we may obtaine pardon or Absolution of our Sinnes. Therefore notwithstanding all this M. Hardings telling, his owne Doctor Gratian telleth him, that Auricular Confession is not Gods Institution. De Pœn. Dist. 1. Quis aliq. De Pœn. Dist. 1. Conuertim.

But wherefore speaketh M. Harding so precisely, and specially of Deadly Sinnes? Or, why may not his Veniall Sinnes come likewise in the reckoning as well as others? Indéede it is specially prouided in the late Chapter at Trident, that little Petite Sinnes néede not to be vttered in Confession. And Robert Holcot saith, De Venialibus Confiteri, magis est Supererogationis, quàm Necessitatis : To make Confession of Veniall Sinnes, is more of Deuotion, then of Necessity. And Thomas of Aquine saith, Quidam probabiliter dicunt, quòd per ingressum Ecclesiæ Consecratæ, homo consequitur Remissionem peccatorum Venialium : Some say, and that not without good reason, that a man may obtaine Remission of his Veniall Sinnes, onely by entring into a Church, that is Consecrate. And it is purposely noted in the Glosse vpon the Decretales, Venialia tolluntur, vel per Orationem Dominicam, vel per Aquam Benedictam : Veniall Sinnes may bee remooued, either by a Pater noster, or by Holy Water. And therefore perhaps M. Harding will say, according to the iudgement of these, and others his owne Doctors, that his Little Pretie Veniall Sinnes ought not of duty to be reckoned in Confession : but may otherwise be remitted, and haue no néede of Christs Blood. This is a shorter way to Heauen, then either Christ or his Apostles euer taught vs. Concil. Trid. cap. 5. De Confessione. Rob. Holcot in 4. Sent. Qu. 4. 4. Sent. Qu. 83. Artic. 3. Extra. de Pœnit. & Remiss. Omnis vtriusq; in Glossa.

Howbeit, all this errour séemeth first to haue growen of misstaking these words of Beda : Coæqualibus quotidiana & leuia : graviora verò Sacerdoti Pandamus : Let vs open our small and daily Sinnes vnto our fellowes : and our great Sinnes vnto the Priest. For the rest, M. Hardings Resolution may stand with good fauour. For séeing his Auricular Confession can hold no better by Diuinity, that it may séeme to hold by somewhat, he did well to say, it holdeth well by Naturall Reason. Beda in 5. cap. Iacobi: Citatur à Magistro 4. Sent. Dist. 17.

M. Harding saith, The Priest can be no Iudge without particular knowledge of euerie Sin : Nor can he know without hearing: Nor can he heare without Confession. For answere hereto, Chry-

Chrysost. De Pœnit. Hom. 9. sostome saith, as he is before alleged: Medicinæ locus hic est, non Iudicij: Non Pœnas, sed Peccatorum Remissionem tribuens: Deo Soli dic Peccatum tuum: Heere is a place of Medicine, and not of Iudgement: rendring not Punishment, but Remission of Sinnes: Open thine offences to God onely.

Iudge ouer sinne.

But, if the Priest can be no Iudge without knowledge, then doubtlesse, M. Harding, your Priests, for the most part, can be no Iudges at all. For your owne Peter Lombard saith, Scientiam discernendi Omnes Sacerdotes non habent: All Priests haue not knowledge to discerne betweene sinne and sinne. And many of them be vtterly ignorant, and know nothing.

4. Sent. Dist. 19. Post quam.

Notwithstanding, be the Priest neuer so wise, or well learned, yet how is he able to enter into the breast of man, and to know the secrets of the heart? S. Paul saith, What man knoweth, what is in man, but the Spirit of man, that is within him? Salomon saith, God onely knoweth the thoughts of men. S. Paul saith, God Onely searcheth the Heart and Reines. And S. Augustine purposely speaking hereof, as it is said before, saith thus: Vnde sciunt, cùm à me ipso de me ipso audiunt, an verum dicam? How know they, when they heare mee speake of my selfe, whether I say truth or no? Therefore the Priest iudging that, that hee cannot know, must néds wander vncertainly, and be a very doubtfull Iudge.

1. Cor. 2. 3. Reg. 8. Rom. 8. Aug. Confess. lib. 10. cap. 3.

Neuertheless, admitting the Priest to bee a Iudge, yet, if it may bee proued, either, that he may be a Iudge ouer the sinnes of the people, without Particular knowledge of the same: or, that hee may come to certaine, and Particular knowledge thereof without any maner Auricular Confession, then, I trust, this whole matter will soone bee answered.

First therefore I say, that a Priest hauing authority to pronounce the Word of God, is thereby a Iudge ouer Sinne. For the words that he speaketh, Is the Power of God vnto Salnation: and a two edged sword, able to sunder the Soule, and the Spirit, and the marow from the Bones: and is able to Iudge, (for so S. Paul saith) the thoughts and cogitations of the Heart. And thus M. Harding himselfe graunteth, That a Priest pronouncing Gods Words, may there with both Binde and Loose. That is, in this case, to doe the office of a Iudge. S. Augustine saith, Clauis ea dicenda est, qua pectorum dura reserantur: That thing ought to be called the Key, wherewith the hardnesse of the heart is opened.

So saith Tertullian, Ipse clauem imbuit. Vides, quam? Viri Israelitæ, auribus mandate, quæ dico; Iesum Nazarænum, Virum a Deo nobis destinatum: Hee endued the Key. And know you, what Key? This Key I meane: Yee men of Israel, marke, what I say: Iesus of Nazareth, a man appointed vnto you from God. These words, saith Tertullian, are the Key. So saith S. Augustine, Loquimur in auribus vestris. Vnde scimus, quid agatur in Cordibus vestris? Quod autem intus agitur, non a nobis, sed ab illo agitur. Prospexit ergo Deus, vt Soluat filios mortificatorum. Wee speake in your eares. But how know we, what is wrought in your hearts? Howbeit, whatsoeuer is wrought within you, it is wrought, not by vs, but by God. God therefore hath looked foorth, to Loose the Children of them, that were appointed to Death. Thus is the Priest a Iudge, and Bindeth and Loseth, without any hearing of Priuate Confessions.

Tertul. De Pudic. pag. 643. Actor. 2.

Of the other side, I say, that in open crimes and Publike Penance, the Priest is likewise appointed to be a Iudge. For notwithstanding in the Primitiue Church, either the whole people, or the Elders of the Congregation had authority herein, yet the direction and Iudgement rested euermore in the Priest. And in this sense S. Paul saith vnto Timothie, Receiue no accusation against an Elder, vnlesse it bee vnder two or three witnesses.

2. Tim. 5.

And, notwithstanding these Orders, for the greatest part thereof, be now vtterly out of vse, yet, I trust, it shall not be neither impertinent to the matter, nor vnpleasant vnto the Reader, to consider how the same were vsed in Old times. Therefore as it is Learnedly noted by Beatus Rhenanus, The Sinner, when he began to mislike himselfe, and to bee penitent for his wicked life, for that hee had offended God and his Church, came first vnto the Bishop and Priests, as vnto the Mouthes of the Church, and opened vnto them the whole burthen of his heart. Afterward hee was by them brought into the Congregation, and there made the same Confession Openly before his Brethren; and further was appointed to make Satisfaction by Open Penance. Which Penance being duly and humbly done, he was restored againe openly vnto the Church, by laying on of the hands of the Priests and Elders.

Hereof S. Paul saith vnto the Corinthians: If you haue forgiuen any thing to any man, I haue likewise forgiuen it. For I my selfe, whatsoeuer I haue forgiuen, I haue forgiuen it for your sakes in the person of Christ. In this limitation of Penance, lest any thing should passe vn-aduisedly and out of order, the Priest was appointed to be the Iudge. S. Basil saith: Modus Conuersionis debet esse conueniens illi qui peccauit: The Order of Conuersion, or Open Penance must bee agreeable vnto him that hath offended. And therefore S. Augustine saith: Quia plerunque, &c. Forasmuch as for the most part the griefe of one mans heart is vnknowne vnto another, neither commeth foorth into the knowledge of others either by words, or by other tokens, as being before him vnto whom it is said, My mourning is not hid from thee: therefore it is very well, that by them that haue the ouersight of the Church, certaine times of Penance are appointed, that the Congregation may be satisfied. Againe hee saith: Hortor, priùs Publica Pœnitentia satisfacere, & ita Sacerdotis Iudicio reconciliatum, Communioni sociari: I counsell him, that first he make satisfaction by Open Penance; that being so reconciled, he may afterward be restored vnto the Communion by the Iudgement and discretion of the Priest. Likewise saith Cassiodorus: Rei expectant Communionis tempus, quod decreuit Episcopus: The Penitent parties wait for the communion time, appointed vnto them by the Bishop.

Basil. que. 228. ὁ τῆς μετανοίας τρόπος. Aug in Enchirid. ad Laurentium, Cap. 65. Augst. de Ecclesiast. dogmatibus, Cap. 35. Cassiodor. li. 9. cap. 53.

S. Ambrose demanded of the Emperour Theodosius, being then excommunicate, Quibus medicamentis incurabilia vulnera tua, plagásque curasti? By what medicines haue you healed your wounds and cuts, that were incurable? The Emperour answered: Tuum opus est, & docere, & medicamenta temperare: meum verò, oblata suscipere: It is your part to instruct me, and to minister medicines: and it is my part to receiue that you Minister. And therefore Peter Lombard saith: Etsi aliquis apud Deum sit solutus, non tamen in facie Ecclesiæ solutus habetur, nisi per Iudicium Sacerdotis: Although a man be assoiled before God, yet is he not accounted assoiled in the Face or Sight of the Church, but by the Iudgement of the Priest.

Cassiodor. li 9 cap. 30. 4. Sen. dist. 18. Non autem.

By these, M. Harding, I doubt not but ye may see that the Priest may be a Iudge ouer Sinne, notwithstanding he neuer heare Priuate Confessions, nor haue particular knowledge of euery seuerall sinne.

Iudge ouer Sinne.

This is that Confession that the holy Fathers haue so often spoken of. It was made, not secretly, or in a corner: but publikely, and openly, and in the sight of the Congregation. Hereof Origen saith, as it is reported before: Si quis sibi sit conscius, procedat in medium, & ipse sui accusator existat: If any man finde himselfe guilty, let him come foorth into the mids of the Church, and let him be his owne accuser. Likewise Tertullian saith: Aduolui Presbyteris, & Aris Dei adgeniculari, & omnibus Fratribus legationes deprecationis suæ iniungere: To fall downe before the Priests, To kneele before the Altar, or Communion Table, and to desire all the Brethren to pray for him.

Origen. in Psalm. 37. Tertull. de Pœnitentia 382.

Touching S. Hierome, M. Harding, yee lay in his words as faithfully as Ananias sometimes laid in his money at the Apostles feet. Yee serue vs with a parcell, and hold backe the rest. It is true that S. Hierome saith, It is the Priests part to discerne the diuersitie betweene sinne and sinne: as in cases of Excommunication, and publike offenses. But wherefore could yee not espie: or rather, why would you so closely dissemble so many and so plaine words going immediatly before? For thus S. Hierome writeth of the Power of the Keies, and of the vse of Confession: Istum locum Episcopi & Presbyteri non intelligentes, aliquid sibi de Pharisæorum assumunt Supercilio: vt vel damnent innocentes, vel soluere se noxios arbitrentur: cùm apud Deum non sententia Sacerdotum, sed reorum vita quæratur: This place the Bishops and Priests not vnderstanding, take vnto them some part of the proud lookes of the Pharisees: thinking themselues able either to Condemne the innocent, or to Absolue the guilty: whereas indeed it is not the Absolution of the Priest, but the life of the Sinner that is weighed before God. These words, M. Harding, would not thus haue bene dissembled if ye had meant simple dealing. S. Hierome saith plainly, That your Bishops and Priests vnderstand not the vse of the Keies: That yee haue taken vpon you some part of the Proud lookes of the Pharisees: And, That it is not the Absolution of the Priests, but the Life of the partie, that is accepted before God.

Hieronym. in Matt. cap 16.

In the end he concludeth thus: Alligat vel soluit Episcopus vel Presbyter, non eos qui insontes sunt, vel noxij; sed pro officio suo, cùm peccatorum audierit varietates, scit qui ligandus sit, qui soluendus: The Bishop or Priest neither Bindeth the innocent, or Looseth the guilty: but according to his office, when he hath heard the diuersitie of Sinnes, (as in publike offenses) he knoweth who ought to be Bound, who ought to be Loosed. In like sort writeth Peter Lombard: Dominus tribuit Sacerdotibus potestatem Ligandi & Soluendi, id est, ostendendi hominibus Ligatos, vel Solutos: God hath giuen to Priests Power to Binde, and to Loose, that is to say, to declare vnto men, that the Penitents be either Bound, or Loosed.

4. Sen. dist. 18. Nec ideo.

All this notwithstanding, albeit M. Harding were able to proue that the Fathers had some where made mention of Confession in Secret, yet should not that greatly either further his purpose, or hinder ours. For, Abuses and Errors remoued, and specially the Priest being learned, as we haue said before, we mislike no maner Confession, whether it be Priuate, or Publike. For as we thinke it not vnlawfull to make Open Confession before many, so we thinke it not vnlawfull, Abuses alwaies excepted, to make the like Confession in Priuate, either before a few, or before one alone. And as the holy Fathers vpon good considerations were forced to remoue the vse of Open Confession, euen so we say, that vpon like good considerations, Priuate Confession also may be remoued.

Only this we say, that Christ, when he sent his Disciples into the World, and gaue them authoritie to Binde, and to Loose, made no maner mention of any such hearing of Confessions, but only bade them, Goe, and preach the Gospell.

Hilarie, Bernard, and Hugo, as ye haue alleged them, seeme to say, That the Iudgement of man goeth before the Iudgement of God. Other the like, or rather more vehement speeches ye might haue found in Chrysostome: Cœlum accipit Authoritatem Iudicandi à Terra: Iudex sedet in Terris: Dominus sequitur Seruum: Heauen taketh Authoritie of Iudgement from the Earth: In Earth sitteth the Iudge. The Lord followeth the Seruant. These and such other the like extraordinarie speeches, with good Construction, may be comfortable to the afflicted minde. But as one said sometime, they must be receiued with a Graine of Salt: For otherwise, of themselues they be vnsauorie. For S. Hierome saith, as I haue alleged before. Apud Deum non sententia Sacerdotis, sed reorum vita quæritur: It is not the Sentence or Absolution of the Priest, but the life of the Penitent that is accepted before God. And againe: Tunc vera est sententia Præsidentis, quando Æterni sequitur sententiam Iudicis: Then the iudgement of the President or Priest is true, (not when it goeth before, but) when it followeth the Iudgement of the Euerlasting Iudge. And Gratian himselfe saith: Non sacerdotali Iudicio, sed largitate Diuinæ Gratiæ Peccator emundatur: The Sinner is made cleane, not by Iudgement of the Priest, but by the abundance of the Heauenly Grace.

De Pœn. dist. 1. Conuertimini.

But Nazianzene, as he is here alleged, said vnto the Emperour, Quis nostra es: Thou art our Sheepe. No maruell. He meant that the Emperour was one of the Flocke and Fold of Christ. So S. Ambrose said sometime vnto the Emperour Valentinian: Quid honorificentius, quàm vt Ecclesiæ Filius dicatur Imperator? Imperator enim bonus intra Ecclesiam, non supra Ecclesiam est: What thing is there more honourable, then for the Emperour to be called a Childe of the Church? For a good Emperour is Within the Church, but not Aboue the Church. S. Chrysostome saith: Deus ipse subiecit Caput Principis manui Sacerdotis: God himselfe hath set the Head of the Prince vnder the Hand of the Priest. For, as touching Faith, and the Obedience of the Gospell the Highest Prince is but a Subiect. All this proueth well the Authoritie and Dignity of Gods Word: but it maketh nothing for Confession.

Ambro. ab Valent. Epist. 32.

Chrys. de verb. Esaia. Hom. 5.

To conclude, M. Harding saith, It hath beene perswaded, that the reckning and rehearsall of al sins before the Priest, is necessarie to Saluation: & that a Generall Confession is in no wise sufficient.

And againe he saith, True Faith acknowledgeth that Confession is to be made of all Sinnes, as commanded by Christ and his Apostles, commended vnto vs by the Fathers of the Primitiue Church, & by all learned Doctors, and Generall vse of the whole Church.

God Reader, thou wouldest thinke that amongst so many great words there were some truth, and that M. Harding of his modestie, and for his credits sake, would not speake so boldly without some good ground. But I beseech thee, consider these few, and thereby iudge indifferently of the rest.

Chrysostom. in Psal. 50. Ho. 2.

Chrysostom. in Homil. de Pœnitent. & Confessione.

Chrysostome saith, Non dico vt Confitearis Conseruo tuo peccata tua. Dicito Deo, qui curet ea: I will thee not to Confesse thy Sins vnto the Priest, that is thy fellow Seruant. Confesse them vnto God, that may heale them. Againe: Cogitatione tua fiat delictorum exquisitio: Sine teste sit hoc Iudicium: Solus Deus te confitentem videat: Examine thy Sins in thy heart within thee: Let this Iudgement be without witnesse: Let God only see thee making thy Confession. Beatus Rhenanus, a man of great reading, and singular iudgement, hereof writeth thus: Tertullianus de Clancularia ista Confessione ad missorum nihil loquitur. Neque eam vsquam olim Præceptam legimus: Tertullian of this Priuie Confession of Sinnes saith nothing. Neither doe we read that the same kinde of Priuie Confession in Old Times was euer Commanded.

Beat. Rhenan. in Argum. Libelli Tertull de Pœnitentia.

Confessiō not Commanded.

M. Harding saith, It was Commanded: Rhenanus saith, It was not commanded. If Rhenanus words be true, as they be indeed, then are M. Hardings words most vntrue. Likewise it is noted in the very Glosse vpon M. Hardings owne Decrees: Fortè tunc (tempore Ambrosij) non erat facta institutio Confessionis, quæ modò est: Perhaps then (in the time of S. Ambrose, which was foure hundred yeres after Christ) the manner of confession that now is vsed was not appointed.

De Pœn. dist. 1. Petrus in Glos.

And

And Gratian saith: Antequam Sacerdoti Ora nostra ostendamus, id est, Peccata nostra Confiteamur, a Lepra Peccati mundamur: Before we open our mouth vnto the Priest, that is to say, before we make Confession of our Sinnes, The Leprosie of our sinne is made cleane. Theodorus saith, Quidam Deo solummodò confiteri debere peccata dicunt, vt Græci: Some say, we ought to confesse our Sins only vnto God, as do the Grecians. Peter Lombard the chiefe Founder of M. Hardings Diuinitie, saith thus: Sanè dici potest, quòd sine Confessione Oris, & solutione Pœnæ exterioris, Peccata delentur per contritionem & humiliatē cordis: We may safely say, that without Confession of the Mouth, and Absolution of the outward paine, Sinnes be forgiuen by the Contrition and humilitie of the heart.

De Pœn. dist. 1. Conuertimini.
De Pœn. dist. 1. Quidam.
4. Sen. dist. 17. Quidergo.

Confessiō not Commanded.

Briefly, Gratian hauing throwly debated the matter of both sides, that is to say, both for Confession, and against Confession, in the end concludeth thus, as it is said before: Cui harum sententiarum potiùs adhærendum sit, Lectoris iudicio reseruatur. Vtraque enim sententia fautores habet Sapientes, & Religiosos viros: Whether of these sayings it is best to follow, it is left to the iudgement of the Reader: For either saying is maintained and fauoured both by Wise, and by Godly men. And whereas M. Harding saith, Confession of all Sinnes is commended by Christ and his Apostles, his owne Glosse vpon his owne Decrees openly reprooueth his errour, and teacheth him the contrarie. The words be these: Melius dicitur, Confessionem institutam fuisse a quadam Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ Traditione, potiùs quàm ex Noui vel Veteris Testamenti Authoritate: It is better said, that Confession was appointed by some Tradition of the Vniuersall Church, then by any Authoritie or Commandement of the New, or Old Testament.

De Pœn. dist. 5. in Pœnitentia, The Glosse.

Now good Christian Reader, I beseech thee, examine a little the truth of M. Hardings tale. First he saith, The reciting and rehearsall of all Sins before the Priest, is necessary to Saluation. Chrysostome answereth, Let God Onely heare thy Confession. There is one Untruth. M. Harding saith, Generall Confession is not sufficient. Peter Lombard answereth, Sine Confessione Oris, &c. Without any Confession made by Mouth our Sinnes may bee forgiuen. There are two Untruths. 1 2

M. Harding saith, Confession of all Sinnes is Commanded by Christ and his Apostles: His owne Glosse saith, It is Only a Tradition of the Church, commanded neither in the Old Testament, nor in the New. There are three vntruths. M. Harding saith, It was commended vnto vs by the Doctors and Fathers of the Primitiue Church. Rhenanus saith, We read not that this kind of priuie Confession, in the Old times, was euer commanded. And his owne Glosse saith, in the time of S. Ambrose, (which was foure hundred yeres after Christ) perhaps it was not vsed. There are foure, and fiue Untruths. M. Harding saith, It hath euer beene allowed by all the learned Doctors: His owne Gratian answereth him: The contrary hath beene maintained and fauoured both by Wise and by Godly Fathers. There are six Untruths. 3 4 5. 6

To be short, M. Harding saith, It hath beene commended vnto vs by the Generall vse of the whole Church. Theodorus answereth him, The whole Church of Græcia vseth it not. There are Seuen apparent and great Untruths, disclosed by M. Hardings owne Doctours. Ye could not haue compriſed so much Untruth, in so narrow rome, without some study. 7

Erasmus a man of great iudgement saith thus: Apparet tempore Hieronymi nondum Institutam fuisse Secretam admissorum Confessionem: quam postea Ecclesia salubriter instituit: si modò rectè vtantur ea & Sacerdotes & Laici. Verùm in hoc labuntur Theologi quidam parùm attenti, quòd, quæ Veteres scribunt de huiusmodi Publica, & Generali Confessione, ea trahunt ad hanc Occultam, & longè diuersi generis: It appeareth, that in the time of S. Hierome (which was foure hundred yeres after Christ) Secret confession of Sinnes, was not yet ordained: Which notwithstanding was afterward holesomely and profitably appointed by the Church, so that it be well vsed, as well by the Priests, as by the People. But heerein certaine Diuines, not considering aduisedly what they say, are much deceiued: for whatsoeuer the ancient Fathers write of Generall and open Confession, they wrest and draw the same to this Priuie and secret kinde, which is farre of another sort.

Eras. in Schol. in Epitaphium Fabiolæ.

Heere, M. Harding, Erasmus telleth you, ye are foulely deceiued: and sheweth you also the cause of your error: for that, as he saith, Ye consider not aduisedly, what ye either read, or write: but whersoeuer ye heare this word Confession, ye imagine straightway, it must needs be your owne Auricular Confession, and can be none other.

Last of al, ye grant, The expresse Terme of Auricular or Secret Confession is seldome mentioned in the Ancient Fathers. Heere wanteth, M. Harding, some part of your simplicitie. If ye would haue your Reader to beleeue you, ye should haue alleged certaine of the Ancient Fathers, One at the least, if yee could haue found so many that had at any time vsed the expresse terme of Auricular or Secret Confession. Otherwise it had beene the better and plainer way, to haue confeſſed expreſſly, that the ſame expreſſe terme is neuer vſed in any one of all the Ancient Fathers. Howbeit, if Auricular, or Secret Confeſſion had then beene vſed, it could neuer ſo long haue lackt a name.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuiſion 3.

Wee ſay, that the Prieſt indeed is a Iudge in this Caſe, but yet hath no maner of Right to challenge an Authoritie, or Power, as ſaith Ambroſe.

M. Harding.

Whereas ye make preaching of the Goſpell to be the Keies, how call ye the Prieſt Iudge in this caſe? Preach ye neuer ſo much, the conſcience of man being ſo ſecret a thing as it is, how can ye iudge who inwardly and thorowly repenteth, and who repenteth not? And though one repent, and be ſory, and haue remorſe of his former life, though he looke vnto the light of the Goſpell, as ye ſay, & beleeue in Chriſt, what then? How can ye iudge of ſuch a perſon? *And doe yee know his heart by looking in his face?

*And doe yee know his heart by looking in his eare? *Vntruth. For the words be theſe: Null us poteſtatis iura exercet.

The Prieſt duly vſing the Key of knowledge and diſcretion, doth the office of a Iudge, & as he ſeeth cauſe, either Looſeth or Bindeth. As touching the Prieſts Authoritie or Power, which to challenge he hath no right, for ſo your Interpreter maketh you to ſpeake, and impute it to S. Ambroſe: we deny that S. Ambroſe ſaith *euen very ſo. But, as we may gather of his words, as he meaneth that a Prieſt exerciſeth not the right of any his owne proper power in remitting ſinnes; ſo in the very place by you alleged, he ſaith the contrarie to your Doctrine. For the Right of Loeſing and Binding (ſaith hee) is granted to Prieſts only, and therefore the Church challengeth it rightly, which hath true Prieſts. Loe, he vſeth the word of challenge. Againe in the ſame place he auoucheth, that he which receiueth the Holy Ghoſt (who Prieſts receiue when they be conſecrated in the Sacrament of Order) receiueth alſo Power to Looſe & Binde ſins. For proofe therof he alleged the Scripture: Take ye the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted: and whoſe ſinnes ye reteine, they are reteined. And if you, Defender, were accuſtomed to make your humble confeſſion, and ſo to be aſſoiled, you ſhould heare ſome Ghoſtly Father ſay to you, after certaine other words, Authoritate mihi commiſſa ego te Abſoluo, &c.

De Pœn. Diſt. 1. c. Verbum. Iohan. 20.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

In what ſenſe the Prieſt without hearing Confeſſions may be a Iudge, we haue ſufficientlie ſaid before. Neither know I what fantaſie M. Harding can haue in ſo often rehearſall of one thing. With what words, or colour of Commiſſion M. Harding can furniſh out his Authoritie, it forceth not greatly. Verily, without ſome ſhew, or countenance, his credit would not hold. Indeed, Hugo and Bernard ſay, The iudgement of God followeth the iudgement of man. And Pope Iulius ſaith, Habet Sacroſancta Romana Eccleſia poteſtatem, ſingulari ſibi Priuilegio conceſſam, Aperire, & Claudere ianuas Regni Cœleſtis, quibus voluerit: The Holy Church of Rome hath Power granted vnto her by ſingular Priuilege, to Open, and to Shut the gates of the Kingdome of Heauen, to whom ſhe liſteth. And Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith, Hæc Ligandi & Soluendi Poteſtas non minor eſt in Eccleſia, quàm in Chriſto: This Power of Binding and Looſing is no leſſe in the Church, then it is in Chriſt.

Council. Tom. 1. de Primatu Rom. Eccleſ.

Nicol. Cuſan. ad Bohemos, Epiſt. 2.

But it is no great wiſdome to giue ouer much credit vnto them that ſo often haue deceiued vs. If their Authoritie be ſo great as they make it, let them ſhew forth the words of their Commiſſion.

De Pœn. diſt. 1. Verbum Dei.

The ſaying of S. Ambroſe is cleare and plaine: Verbum Dei dimittit peccata. Sacerdos eſt Iudex. Sacerdos quidem officium ſuum exhibet: ſed nullius poteſtatis iura exercet: The Word of God forgiueth ſinnes. The Prieſt is the Iudge. The Prieſt executeth his office: But he exerciſeth the right of no Power. And to this end in another place he allegeth the words of the Prophet Eſay, ſpoken in the perſon of God: Ego ſum, ego ſum, qui deleo iniquitates tuas: I am he, I am he, that put away thine iniquities.

And, to lay more weight to S. Ambroſes words, S. Auguſtine ſaith in like ſenſe: Officium Baptizandi Dominus conceſſit multis: Poteſtatem verò & Authoritatem in Baptiſmo remittendi peccata, ſibi Soli reſeruauit: Our Lord hath granted the office of Baptizing vnto many: but the Power and Authoritie in Baptiſme to forgiue Sinnes, he hath reſerued Only to himſelfe. So ſaith S. Ambroſe: Noſtrum eſt, onera remittere: Illius eſt, reſuſcitare: Illius eſt, educere de Sepulchro: It is our part, to remoone the ſtone from the graue (by Preaching, by Counſell, and by Exhortation:) But it is the Lords worke, to raiſe vp the dead: It is the Lords worke, to bring him from the pit.

Aug. de Scalis Paradiſi.

Ambroſ. de Pœnitent. lib. 2. cap. 76.

Ambroſ. lib. 9. Epiſt. 76.

Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Neque Legatus, neque Nuntius, ſed ipſe Dominus ſaluum fecit populum ſuum. Solus remanet: quia non poteſt hoc cuiquam hominum cum Chriſto eſſe commune, vt peccata condonet. Solus hoc munus eſt Chriſti, qui tulit peccata mundi: It is not the Embaſſadour: It is not the Meſſenger, but the Lord himſelfe that hath hath saued his people. The Lord remaineth alone. For no man can bee partner with God in forgiuing of Sinnes. This is Christs Onely Office, that hath taken away the Sinnes of the World.

Authoritie & Power.

And yet is not therefore the Priests office void of Power. Hee hath Power and Commission to open the Will of God, and, as S. Paul saith, To speake vnto the people, euen as in the person of Christ. So Tertullian saith: Dandi Baptismi ius habet Summus Sacerdos, id est, Episcopus: The Chiefe Priest, that is to say, the Bishop, hath Right, and Power to giue Baptisme. But S. Augustin saith: Ministerium dedit seruis: Potestatem sibi retinuit: God gaue the Ministerie (of Remission of Sinnes) vnto his Seruants: But the Power thereof he reteined to himselfe. So when Christ sent out his Disciples to preach the Gospell, hee gaue them Authority and Power, as it is written in S. Luke.

Εξουσιαν δυναμιν.

If M. Harding will say, There is no Power or Authority in the Reading or Publishing of Gods Word, his owne Doctor Hosius will tell him, that when the Bishop ordereth a Reader, euen after the manner of the Church of Rome, hee saith vnto him: Habe Potestatem legendi Epistolas in Ecclesia Sancta Dei, tam pro Viuis, quàm pro Defunctis: Haue thou Power to read the Epistles in the Holy Church of God, as well for the Quicke, as for the Dead.

Hosius in Confessione Petricouien. cap. 52.

Indeed this is a very speciall Power, such as, I trow, Christ and his Apostles neuer taught vs. Neither would I haue noted it in this place, sauing that Hosius, the profoundest Proctour of that side, thought it a matter worth the noting. Such Power therefore belongeth to Priests, and Ministers in the Church of God. But the Power of giuing Remission of Sinne belongeth to God alone, and to none other. If any man will presume further, S. Hierome saith, as it is alleged before: Hee bath spit on the proud lookes of the Pharisees. And saith further, that such Priests and Bishops vnderstand not the words of Christ. For he saith hee, It is not the Iudgement or Absolution of the Priest, but the Life of the Penitent that is regarded before God. And therefore S. Augustine saith: Inde nata sunt Schismata, cùm homines dicunt, Nos Sanctificamus immundos: Nos Iustificamus impios: Nos Petimus: Nos Impetramus: Heereof grew Schismes, and Diuisions in the Church, when men say, Wee Sanctifie the vncleane: Wee Iustifie the wicked: Wee Pray: Wee Obteine.

Hier. in Mat. cap. 16.
Aug. de Fide & Operibus, Cap. 14.

Howbeit, here commeth in Richardus de Sancto Victore, God wot, with a full cold distinction betweene these two words, Dimittere, and Remittere. For thus hee saith: Christus potuit Dimittere Peccata: Nos verò non possumus Dimittere Peccata, sed tantùm Remittere.

Rich. de Sancto Victore, De Potestat. Ligan. & Solu. Par. 1. Cap. 24.

Peter Lombard saith much better: Christus Sacerdotibus tribuit potestatem Ligandi & Soluendi, id est, ostendendi hominibus Ligatos, vel Solutos: Christ hath giuen Power vnto Priests to Binde and to Loose: that is to say, to declare vnto men who be Bound, who be Loosed.

4. Sen. dist. 18. Nec ideo.

So saith Bonauentura of the Priests vnder the Law of Moses: Mundare dicebantur, quia mundatum ostendebant: They were said to cleanse the Leprosie, because they shewed who was cleansed. So saith S. Augustine: Nec voluntas Sacerdotis obesse, vell prodesse potest, sed Meritum Benedictionem poscentis: The will of the Priest can neither further, nor hinder, But the Merit of him that desireth Absolution.

Bonau. 4. Sentent. Dist. 1. In Proœmio. 1. que. 1. Dictum est.

This therefore is the meaning of S. Ambrose: The Priest is a Iudge to discerne betweene sinne and sinne, as well Priuate, as Publike. But Right, Power, or Authoritie to forgiue Sinnes, hee hath none.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision 4.

And therefore our Sauiour Iesus Christ, to reproue the Negligence of the Scribes and Phariseis in teaching, did with these words rebuke them, saying: Woe bee vnto you Scribes and Phariseis, which haue taken away the Keies of knowledge, and haue Shut vp the Kingdome of Heauen before men.

Seing then the Key whereby the way and entrie to the Kingdome of God is opened vnto vs, is the Word of the Gospell, and the Expounding of the Law and Scriptures, we say plainly, where the same Word is not, there is not the Key.

By this we are induced to grant, that the knowledge of the Scripture is a Key, whereby the gate to the Truth is opened, the vse whereof consisteth in expounding of the Law and Prophets, as they shew

Chriſt. But we ſay, this not to be the ſpeciall Keies which Chriſt gaue to the Church, but one Key alone. And ſo Chriſt calleth it, where he rebuked the Scribes and Phariſeis, though you haue put it, otherwiſe then the Goſpell hath, in the plurall number. And this Key is common to the Law, and to the Goſpell. But the Keies which we ſpeake of are an nother thing. By the name of theſe Keies wee vnderſtand the whole Spirituall Power which Chriſt firſt promiſed to Peter, and afterward gaue to the Apoſtles, & from them is transferred to all Biſhops and Prieſts. By which Power Prieſts Teach the Goſpell, Conſecrate the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and Miniſter the Sacraments, through Authority of the Word Abſolue Penitents, and Excommunicate publike and hainous ſinners. The Key that you confuſely ſpeake of, naming it to be the Word of the Goſpell, and Expounding of the Law and Scriptures, is one part perteining to this Spirituall Power, it is not the whole Power. And where this Worde is not, that is to ſay, where the Scriptures be not taught, and the Goſpell preached, there is not the Key, ſay ye: there is not the exerciſe of that Key, ſay we. Yet there is this Spirituall Power, that is to wit, there be the Keies. Yea, we ſay that a ſimple Prieſt * though he haue no great learning, yet hath he the Keies, though he might doe better, and more worthily vſe them; hauing learning and knowledge.

The Key of knowledge. Scripture a Key.

* Vntruth. The Key of Knowledge, without knowledge.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Confuſion of Keies.

M. Harding much and often complaineth of the Confuſion of the Keies: for that we appoint not diſtinctly, as he ſaith, eache Key to his ſeuerall office. Marke therefore, I beſeech thee, gentle Reader, how diſtinctly and plainly M. Harding himſelfe intreateth of the ſame.

Firſt, of the two Keies that Chriſt hath deliuered vs in the Goſpell, he hath made a great many Keies: The Key of Knowledge: The Key of Order: The Key of Power: The Key of Diſcretion: The Key of Sacraments: And, foraſmuch as Sacraments by his Doctrine be Seuen in number, there muſt alſo bee of this ſort Seuen other ſeuerall Keies. And yet ouer and beſides all theſe Keies, being ſo many, the Pope hath alſo One Speciall Maſter Key. Afterward, by a ſleight, and by nimbleneſſe of his fingers, hee conueieth all this heape of Keies into two Onely Keies: Whereof the One hee calleth the Key of Knowledge, and the other the Key of Power: Which two Keies notwithſtanding, in the end are ſuddenly conſumed both into One onely Key. For whereas the Key of Knowledge is loſt, there, by M. Hardings iudgement, Power onely remaineth without Knowledge: And that Key alone diſchargeth all Offices, and is vtterlie all in all.

De Pœn. diſ. 1. Verbum Dei. Luke. 22. 4. Senten. Diſ. 19. Poſt quam. Alexand. de Hales, Par. 4. Queſt. 79.

This Key of Power without Knowledge muſt néds be the Key of Ignorance: Or, as they themſelues haue vſed to call it, Clauis Errans: The Key of Errour. Of which Key vndoubtedly Chriſt ſaid ſometime, Hoc eſt tempus veſtrum, & Poteſtas Tenebrarum: This is your time, and the Power of Darkeneſſe. Peter Lombard himſelfe ſaith, Many Prieſts be Ignorant, and haue not the Key of Knowledge. Alexander of Hales ſaith, Scientia non eſt Clauis: Knowledge is no Key at all.

Yet M. Harding anſwereth vs, that the ſimple Ignorant Prieſt, that knoweth nothing, hath not onely One Key, but both Keies (for ſo he calleth them in the plurall number) that is to ſay, as well the Key of Knowledge, as the Key of Power. And thus haue they forged a Key of Knowledge, without knowledge: and with the ſame Key they expound and open the Scriptures: they Miniſter the Sacraments: they Bind: they Looſe: and breake vp a by-way into the Kingdome of Heauen. Yet muſt wee beléeue that they ſpeake ſimply and plainly of theſe Keies, and without Confuſion.

The Apology, Chap. 7. Diuiſion 5.

And ſeeing one maner of Word is giuen to al, & one only Key belongeth to all, we ſay, there is but one only Power of all Miniſters, as concerning Opening, and Shutting. And as touching the Biſhop of Rome, for all that his flattering Paraſites ſing theſe words in his eares, To thee will I giue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen (as though theſe Keies were fit for him alone, and for no body elſe) except he goe ſo to worke, as mens conſciences may be made pliant, and be ſubdued to the Word of God, we deny that he doth either Ope, or Shut, or hath the Keies at all.

And although he taught, and inſtructed the people (as would God he might once truly do, and perſwade himſelfe it were at the leaſt any peece of his dutie) yet we thinke his Key to be neuer a whit better, or of greater force then other mens. For who hath ſeuered him from the reſt? Who hath taught him more cunninglie to Open, or better to Abſolue then his brethren?

M. Harding.

M. Harding.

Your ground being falſe, what ye build theron ſoone faileth. The whole power of the Keies pardy (how often times muſt we tel you one thing?) ſtande thinot in Preaching onely, but in ſundry other excellent Miniſteries allo, as we haue prooued. If the Biſhop of Rome preach not, he doth neither Open nor Shut by preaching we grant. Yet mens Conſciences being made pliant and ſubdued by the Word of God, by others that preath at his appointment, he may by vertue of the Keies, either Open or Shut, Looſe or Binde, as by diſcretion he ſeeth cauſe. And whereas Chriſt ſaid to Peter, and therefore to the Biſhop of Rome Peters Succeſſour, To thee will I giue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen, will ye call them flattering Paraſites, that yeeld to him that, which Chriſt gaue to him? Such vomit ſheweth what humor your ſtomacke is charged withal. Denying the Biſhop of Rome, whom, for all the ſpight ye bare toward him, ye muſt acknowledge to be a Biſhop, to haue the Keies at all, vnleſſe he preach in his owne perſon, ye declare your great ignorance and foule temerity. Know ye not, that a Power annexed to an Order and Vocation, is not taken away from one by not exerciſing the ſame in his owne perſon? Matthæ. 16.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

The effect hereof, beſides other ordinary idle talke, ſtandeth in two points. Firſt, M. Harding ſaith, The Pope, though he doe nothing himſelfe in his owne perſon, yet he may ſufficiently feed the Flocke of Chriſt, and Binde, and Looſe, and diſcharge all duties by his Deputies and vnder-Vicars, that is to ſay, by his Cardinals and Biſhops, which are as carefull and zealous for their offices, and tender their charge, as much as he. This ground, I trow, is not falſe: and therefore whatſoeuer M. Harding ſhall build thereon, it can neuer faile. Notwithſtanding, I doe not remember that either Chriſt or his Apoſtles euer vſed to doe the like. One ſaid ſometime, Impudens eſt Imperator, qui, cum alienis oculis omnia ei agenda ſint, poſtulet ſibi aliorum Capita, & Fortunas committi: Hee is a ſhameleſſe Captaine, that whereas he muſt needs guide all things by the eies of others, will require other mens liues and goods to be committed to his hands. Preach by a Deputy. Tit. Liu. Decad. 3 lib. 6.

Pope Damaſus ſaith: Illi Epiſcopi, qui talia ſibi præſumunt, videntur mihi ſimiles eſſe Meretricibus: quæ ſtatim, vt pariunt, infantes ſuos alijs nutricibus tradunt educandos, vt ſuam citiùs libidinem explere valeant. Sic & iſti Infantes ſuos, id eſt, populos ſibi commiſſos, alijs educandos tradunt, vt ipſi ſuas libidines expleant, id eſt, vt pro ſuo libitu Sæcularibus curis inhient, & quod cuique viſum fuerit, liberiùs agant: Such Biſhops taking ſuch matters vpon themſelues, ſeeme like vnto harlots: which as ſoone as they be once deliuered, ſtraightway deliuer out their Children vnto Nurces, that they may the rather follow their pleaſures: Euen ſo theſe Biſhops deliuer ouer their Children, that is to ſay, the people committed to their Charges, to be reared and brought vp by others, that they themſelues may the better accompliſh their pleaſures, that is to ſay, that they may giue themſelues ouer to worldly cares, and doe whatſoeuer ſhall like them beſt. Damaſus Papa epiſt. 4.

Further ſaith M. Harding, Chriſt ſaid vnto Peter: To thee will I giue the Keies: Feed my Sheepe. Confirme thy Brethren: Ergo, The Pope is a Lord Paramount, and hath a Power Perelleſſe ouer all the World. Peter of Palus hereof writeth thus: Chriſtus dixit Apoſtolis, Quæcunque ligaueritis in Terra, erunt ligata & in Cœlo: Non dixit, In Cœlis, ſicut Petro dixerat: Sed in Cœlo Vno. Vnde non ſunt tantæ perfectionis, ſicut Petrus: Chriſt ſaid vnto the Apoſtles, Whatſoeuer ye ſhall Binde in Earth, it ſhall bee bound in Heauen. He ſaid not, It ſhall be bound in Heauens, as he ſaid to Peter: But in One Heauen. Therefore the other Apoſtles were not of ſuch perfection, as Peter was. Petr. De Palud. de poteſt. collat. Apoſt. Artic. 1.

Againe he ſaith: Illa verba, Quæcunque ligaueris, intelliguntur de vtroque Foro, & de vtraque Poteſtate. Illa autem verba, Quorumcunque ligaueritis, intelliguntur tantùm de Foro Conſcientiæ: Theſe words (ſpoken vnto Peter) Whatſoeuer thou ſhalt Binde, are vnderſtood of both Courts, as wel of the Court of Iudgement, as of the Court of Conſcience. But theſe other words (ſpoken vnto the other Apoſtles) Whatſocuer you ſhall Binde, &c. are vnderſtood onely of the Court of Conſcience. Petr. de Palud.

This fantaſie, it ſeemeth, he learned out of theſe words of Origen: Non modica differentia eſt, quòd Petro quidem datæ ſunt Claues, non Vnius Cœli, ſed multorum Cœlorum: vt quæcunque ligauerit ſuper Terram, ſint ligata, non tantùm Vno in Cœlo, ſed etiam in Omnibus Cœlis. Ad alios dicit, vt ſoluant & ligent, non in Cœlis, ſicut Petrus: ſed in Vno Cœlo: quia non ſunt in tanta perfectione, ſicut Petrus, vt ligent, & ſoluant in Omnibus Cœlis: The difference is great: for vnto Peter are giuen the Keies, not of One Heauen, but of many Heauens: that, whatſoeuer he bindeth in Earth, ſhall be bound not onely in One Heauen, but alſo in All the Heauens. But vnto the reſt he giueth Power to binde and looſe, not in the Heauens, as Peter doth, but in One Heauen: for that they were not in ſuch perfection, as Peter was, to binde or looſe in All the Heauens. Orig. in Matt. Tract. 6.

This multiplication of Heauens, as I haue ſaid, is but a fantaſie: and yet to M. Hardings dings purpose it maketh nothing. For Origen by this word Peter, meant not Peter the Apostle, but any other godly learned Priest, or Bishop: whom he expresseth here vnder the name of Peter. For it followeth immediately, Ergo, quantò melior fuerit, qui soluit, tantò beatior erit, qui soluitur: quoniam in omnibus solutus est Cœlis: Therefore the better man he is, that looseth, the more blessed is he, that is loosed: for that he is loosed in all the Heauens. Againe he saith: Quod si nos idem loquimur, quod Petrus loquutus est, efficimur Petrus. Et nobis dicetur, Tu es Petrus. Petra enim est, quisquis est Discipulus Christi: If wee speake the same, that Peter spake, we are made Peter. And vnto vs it shall be said, Thou art Peter. For he is the Rocke, that is, the Disciple of Christ.

Equall Power.

In eodem Tractatu.

And againe he saith: Hoc dictum, Tibi dabo Claues Regni Cælorum, Cæteris quoque commune est. Et, quæ sequuntur, velut ad Petrum dicta, sunt omnium communia: This saying, To thee will I giue the Keies of the kingdome of Heauen is common to the rest of the Apostles. And the words that follow, as spoken vnto Peter, are common vnto all.

Aug. in Ioh. Tract. 50.

So saith S. Augustine: Petrus, quando accepit Claues, Ecclesiam Sanctam significauit: Peter When he receiued the Keies, signified the holy Church. So saith S. Basil: Petre, inquit, Amas me? Pasce Oues meas: Et consequenter Omnibus Pastoribus & Doctoribus eandem Potestatem tribuit, Cuius signum est, quòd omnes ex Æquo, & ligant & absoluunt quemadmodum ille: Christ said vnto Peter, Louest thou me? Feed my Sheepe. And in like sort vnto all Pastors and Doctors he gaue the same Power. A token wherof is this, that all others binde, and loose equally, as well as Peter.

Basil. in Vita Solitar. ca. 22.

Ambr. de Dignit. Sacer. ca. 2.

Likewise saith S. Ambrose: Dominus dixit Petro, Pasce Oues meas. Quas Oues, & quem Gregem non solùm tunc Beatus Petrus suscepit, sed & nobiscum eas suscepit, & cum illo eas nos suscepimus omnes: Our Lord said vnto Peter, Feed my Sheep. Which Sheepe and Flocke, not Onely Blessed Peter then receiued, but he receiued the same together with vs: And all we haue receiued the same together with him. Likewise S. Cyprian: Christus eandem dedit Apostolis omnibus potestatem: Christ gaue vnto all his Apostles Like, and Equall Power.

Cypr. de Simpl. Prælatorum.

So likewise saith Beda: Potestas Ligandi & Soluendi, quamuis soli Petro à Domino data videatur, tamen absque vlla dubietate noscendum est, quód & Cæteris Apostolis data est: The Power of Binding and Loosing, notwithstanding it seeme to be giuen Onely vnto Peter, yet without all doubt we must vnderstand, that it was giuen also to the rest of the Apostles.

Beda in Homil. in Euang. Quæ me dicunt.

Briefly, M. Hardings olvne Scholasticall Doctors confesse that the Power of the Apostles was One and Equall. But they say, that the whole multitude of the Church was committed onely vnto Peter, and not likewise to any other: and that therein onely standeth all the difference. Hernæus saith, Quamuis Apostoli eandem habuerint à Christo, & æqualem potestatem Clauium, & Iurisdictionis, tamen Iurisdictionem, siue materiam suiectam, non habuit, nisi Petrus, & cui eam Petrus committere Voluit: Notwithstanding the Apostles receiued of Christ Equall Power of the Keies and Iurisdiction, yet the Iurisdiction, or matter wherein to vse their power, none had, but Onely Peter, and to whomsoeuer Peter would commit the same. And thus he imagineth, that all the Apostles, saving Only Peter, had Keies giuen them, but no House to open: and Iurisdiction of Gouernment, but no People to gouerne.

Ioh. in de Pariſ. de potest. Regia & Papali, cap. 12.

Verily Alphonsus De Castro saith: Quando Absoluit simplex Sacerdos, tantùm Absoluit de Culpa, sicut Papa: When a simple Priest Absolueth, he Absolueth as much touching Sinne, as doth the Pope.

Alphons. aduers. Hæres. lib. 2. de Absol.

But touching the Pope, how great soeuer he fancie his Key to be aboue all others, if he neuer vse the same, and if he either know not, or vtter not the Word of God, wee say, as before, well may hee shut vp the Kingdome of God before men: but open it hee cannot. Origen saith: Qui funibus peccatorum suorum constringitur, frustrà vel Ligat, vel Soluit: Hee that is bounde with the bands of his owne Sinnes, Bindeth and Looseth but in vaine.

Aug. de Agone Christiano, cap. 30.

To conclude, S. Augustine saith: Cùm Petro dicitur, Omnibus dicitur, Amas me? Pasce Oues meas: These words of Christ, Louest thou me? Feed my Sheepe: when they are spoken vnto Peter, they are spoken vnto All Priests or Ministers. He addeth further, Itaque miseri, dum in Petro Petram non intelligunt, & nolunt credere, datas Ecclesiæ Claues Regni Cælorum, ipsi eas de manibus amiserunt: Therefore wretched men while in Peter, they vnderstand not (Christ, that is) the Rocke, and while they will not beleeue that the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen are giuen (not vnto Peter alone, but) vnto the Church, they haue quite lost the Keies out of their hands.

The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuision 1.

VVE say that Matrimony is Holy & Honorable in all sorts & dates of persons, as in the Patriarks, in the Prophets, in the Apostles in the Holy Martyrs, in the Ministers of the Church, & in Bishops: and that it is an honest and lawful thing (as Chrysostome saith) for a man, liuing in Matrimony, to take vpō him therwith the Dignity of a Bishop.

M. Harding.

Matrimony is Holy and Honourable in all persons, and an vndefiled bed, as saith S. Paul. Yet is it not lawfull for them to marrie* which either haue by deliberate vow dedicated all manner their Chastity vnto God,* or haue receiued Holy Order. For the vowed bee forbidden Marriage by expresse Word of God. Those that haue taken Holy Orders, by Tradition of the Apostles, and ancient Ordinance of the Church.

Hebræ. 13.

* Vntruths, two together, as better appeareth by the Answer.

Touching the first, the Scripture is plaine: because a Vow is to bee performed: Vouete, & reddite Domino Deo vestro: Vow ye and pay (or render that ye vow) to our Lord God. Christ also saith in the Gospel, There be some Eunuches that haue made themselues Eunuches for the Kingdom of Heauens sake. He that can take, let him take. Again, S. Paul speaking of yong Widowes, which haue vowed and promised Chastity, saith, that when they waxe wanton against Christ, they wil marrie, hauing damnation, because they haue broken their first Faith. Whether these Scriptures pertaine heereto, and be thus to be vnderstanded, we referre vs to the Primitiue Church and to all the Holy Fathers.

Psalm. 75.

Math. 19.

Such Marriages, or rather ridings and fals from the holier Chastity, that is Vowed to God, S. Austine doubteth not but they be worse then aduoutrie. S. Cyprian calleth this case plaine Incest. S. Basil accounteth the Marriages of vailed Virgins to be void, of no force and Sacrilegious.

The first Faith S. Hierome expoūdeth, The Faith of Baptisme. See the Answer.

She that hath despoused her selfe to our Lord (saith S. Basil) is not free. For her Husband is not dead that she may marry to whom she list. And whiles her immortall Husband liueth she shal be called an Aduoutresse, which for lust of the flesh hath brought a mortall man into our Lords Chamber.

Touching the second, the Apostles forbid those, that come single to the Clergy, to Marry, except such as remaine in the inferior Orders, and proceed not to the greater, as we finde in their Canons: Can. 25. Paphnutius, as Socrates and Sozomenus record in their Ecclesiasticall story, said at the Nicene Councel, that it was an old Tradition of the Church, that such as come to the Degree or Order of Priesthood single should not Marry wiues. And this is that Holy Bishop Paphnutius, whom these Euangelical Vowbreakers pretend to be their Proctor for their vnlawfull Mariages.

Clerks bound to continēcy. Lib. 1. cap 11. Paphnutius li. 2. cap. 25.

Read who list the Epistle of Siricius ad Himerium Tarraconensem, cap. 7. the second Epistle of Innocentius to Victritius Bishop of Roen, cap. 9 and his third Epistle to Exuperius Bishop of Tolouse, cap. 1. and weighing wel these places he shall perceiue, that these holy Popes forbad the Ministers of the Church the vse of Wedlocke, by the same reason, by which the Priests of Moses Law were forbidden to come within their own houses in the time, when their course came to serue in the Holy Ministeries. By the same reason also by which S. Paul requireth married folke for a time to forbeare the vse of their wiues, that they might attend praying.

The Pope Siricius shamefully abuseth the words of S. Paul, & condemneth all Marriage.

The place of Chrysostom alledged by this Defender, well considered, disprooueth no part of the catholike Doctrine in this behalfe, but condemneth both the Doctrin and common Practise of his cōpanions these new fleshly Gospellers. His words be these vpon the saying of S. Paul, that a Bishop ought to be without crime, the Husband of one Wife. The Apostle (saith he) stoppeth the mouths of Heretickes, which condemne Mariage, shewing, that it is not an vnclean thing, but so reuerend that with the same a man may ascend to the Holy Throne, or seat (he meaneth the state of a Bishop:) and heerwith he chastiseth and restraineth the vnchast persons, not permitting them, who haue twice Married, to attain such a roome. For wheras he keepeth no beneuolence towards his wife* deceased, how can he be a good gouernour? yea what grieuous accusations shal not he be subiect vnto daily? For ye all know right wel, that albeit by the Laws the second Marriages be permitted; yet that matter lieth open to many accusations. And therefore he would a Bishop to giue no occasion (of euill) to those that bee vnder him. Hee putteth bigamie,* that is to wit, marrying another after the first or a widow, to be lawfull rather then commendable.

1. Corin. 7. Answer to Chrysostoms place. In 1. ca. ad Timoth. Homil. 2

Twice Married may not be bishops, and why.

* Vntruth. For M. Harding fouly mistaketh S. Chrysostomes meaning.

* Vntruth, standing in false exposition.

So we see the impure bigamie of our holy Gospellers condemned both by Chrysostom and S. Paul, of whom many being Priests, and (as they say) Bishops, at least presuming to occupy that holy Seat for custody of their Chastity, after their former old yokefellowes decease, solace themselues with new Strumpets. By a better name I would call them, if I wist I should not offend. For what woman soetter coupleth her selfe in such damnable yoking, how can she appeare either to be honest, or to haue care of her souls health? As for the simple that be deceiued by the importunity and craft of those Lurdens, as they are not to be borne withall, so yet I thinke them to be pitied.

Strumpets.

But if this Defender presse vs with Chrysostome, we answer, that though Chrysostome grant that a Maried man may ascend to the holy Seat, yet he saith not, that a man may descend from that holy Seat to the Bride Bed. For we denie vtterly that any man after that he hath receiued holy Orders, may marry. * Neither can it be shewed, that the Marriage of such was euer accoūted lawful in the Catholik Church. Indeed we know, that in Germany, and in England, and certaine other Prouinces at dissolute times, when the discipline of the Church was shaken off, Priests haue bin Married, as we read of the time in which Anselmus was Bishop of Canturbury. But that disorder was alwaies by* due correction of Bishops punished and redressed.

After holy Orders receiued, Mariage neuer coūted lawful among Catholikes. Priests married in England in the time of Anselmus.

* Vntruth. For it was vndoubtedly counted lawfull.

* That is, by allowing of Concubines.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here, I grant, M. Harding is like to find some good aduantage, as hauing vndoubtedly a great number of the holy Fathers of his side. For single life in the cies of Politike litike wise men, for many causes seemeth worthy of fauour. But, good Christian Reader, that thou maist be the better able to see, and iudge how vprightly and indifferently the Fathers haue dealt heerein, either in the aduancing of Virginity, or else in the disgracing of Lawfull Matrimonie, it may please thee to consider the forme and manner of their sayings.

Orig. in epist. ad Rom. cap. 12 lib. 9. Indeed Origen saith: Potest aliquis de castitate plus sapere, quàm oporteat sapere: A man may thinke more of chastity then is conuenient. Likewise saith S. Hierome: Declinare ad Dextram, est abstinere a Cibis, quos Deus creauit, & Condemnare Matrimonium, & incurrere in illud, quod dictum est, Noli iustus esse nimium: To turne to the right hand, is to abstaine from Meats which God hath made, and to Condemne Matrimony: and to fall into the danger of the words written by the Wiseman, Neuer be ouer iust.

Hieronym. in Malach. cap. 2. Vos autem recessistis. Eccl. 7. First therefore Tertullian in the dispraise of Matrimony, saith thus: Ecquid tibi videtur Stupri affine esse Matrimonium? Quoniam in illo deprehendo, quæ stupro competūt: Doest not thou thinke that Matrimony is like vnto Fornication? Certainely I find the same things in the One, that I find in the Other. Further he saith: Ergo, inquies, iam & Primas, id est, vnas Nuptias destruis. Nec immerito: Quoniam & ipsæ ex eo constant, quod est stuprum: Then, thou wilt say to me, thou condemnest also the First Marriage. Yea verily, and not without cause: For both Matrimony and Fornication, consist both of one thing. Chrysostome saith, Hæc ipsa Coniunctio Maritalis malum est ante Deum. Non dico, Peccatum, sed malum: The very Copulation of Matrimony is an euill thing before God. I say not, It is Sinne: but I say it is an euill thing. And yet immediatly after hee saith: Si in Maritis & Adulteris vna est libido, quomodo potest fieri, vt vna eademque res pro dimidia parte sit iustitia, pro dimidia autem sit peccatum? Aut enim tota est Iustitia, aut tota est Peccatum: Quia res Vna est: If the Married man, and the Aduouterer haue one kind of pleasure, how can it be, that one and the selfe same thing, for the one halfe should be righteousnesse, and for the other halfe should be Sinne? Either it is all Sinne, or all Righteousnesse : For the thing it selfe is One.

Tert. in exhort. ad Castitatem, pag. 458. Eodem loco.

Chrysost. in Opere Imperfecto, Homil. 1.

Addition. ☞ Here M. Harding saith, I doe falsly demeane my selfe, and beguile my vn- learned Reader. For the Author by these words, Coniunctio Maritalis, meant not the Copulation of Matrimony, as you translate it, as though he said, Matrimony it self were an euill thing. God forbid any should so speake of Gods holy Ordinance. But he meaneth the Coniunction of the Husband with his Wife in the Act of Generation. Besides all this he telleth vs of Fides, Proles, & Sacramentū: of Malū Culpæ, & Malum Pœnæ: Of Immoderate Concupiscence, Inordination, and Rebellion of the Flesh, &c. And all to excuse these words written in Opere Imperfecto, vnder the name of Chrysostome, The Copulation of Matrimony, or the Coniunction of Man and Wife is an euill thing before God.

M. Harding fol. 284. a.

The Answer. First, M. Harding, where you charge mee with false translation and corruption of mine Author, besides that my words of themselues be plain enough, I meant also the very same thing that you meane. Onely I thought to expresse my meaning modestly, and in comely termes without offence. Neither euer was there any Heretike, that I haue heard of, that condemned the very state of Matrimony of it selfe, otherwise then in respect of the Coniunction that followeth afterward. Therefore it was needlesse for you so spightfully to cry out, God forbid, any man should so speake of Gods holy Ordinance, to say that Matrimony it selfe were an euill thing. And yet God ordained, not onely the state of Matrimony it selfe, but also the very act it selfe of Generation. And therefore you haue brought vs a vaine Distinction, M. Harding, without sense or sauour. You might better haue said, God forbid, that any man should say, The Act of Generation it selfe were an euill thing, or should so speake of Gods holy Ordinance.

M. Harding fol. 283. b.

But you tell vs a tale of Malum pœnæ, and Malum Culpæ. Malum pœnæ, is that necessitie, infirmity, and misery that is fixed, and moreised vnto our bodies, as Care, Trouble, Hunger, Thirst, Sicknesse, Death and such other. But are these ill things before God? Are these the things whereof S. Paul complaineth of himselfe, saying: I doe not that good thing, that I would doe: but I do that euill thing that I would not doe?

Rom. 7.

You will say, The Author of the Worke, called Opus Imperfectum, speaketh not of these Naturall infirmities of the body: but of that Concupiscence, which you call a Rebellion of the flesh. If the Author meant thus, then, I pray you, against what thing doth Concupiscence worke this Rebellion? you must needs say, Against the Will and Spirit of God. For so saith S. Paul. And will you say, This is onely an ill thing? It is no sinne? Is it no sinne, to rebell against Gods holy Spirit, and to withstand his will?

Aug. cont. Iul. lib. 5. cap. 3. Verily S. Augustine saith plainely, Concupiscentia Carnis, aduersus quam bonus concupiscit Spiritus, & Peccatum est, & pœna peccati, & causa peccati: The Concupiscence of the Flesh, against which the good Sprit desireth or laboureth, is both sinne it selfe, and also the paine of Sinne, and the cause of Sinne. Here S. Augustine saith, that the same Concupiscence and Rebellion Rebellion, whereof you speake, is not onely an euill thing, but also very Sinne indeed. Therefore leaue this niceneſſe, M. Harding, and tell vs plainely, that the Coniunction of Man and Wife is not onely an euill thing, but also Sinne before God.

But S. Auguſtine ſaith farre otherwiſe: Paulus modeſtè deterret à Nuptijs, non tanquã re mala, & illicita: ſed tanquam ab onerosa & moleſta. Aliud eſt enim admittere Carnis turpitudinem, aliud habere Carnis tribulationem. Illud eſt Criminis facere: Hoc laboris eſt pati: S. Paul in modeſt manner withdraweth men from Mariage: not, as from a thing euill, & vnlawfull: but, as from a thing greeuous, and burthenous. For, to commit the filthineſſe of the Fleſh it is one thing: To haue the trouble of the fleſh, it is another thing. The one is to commit a fault, the other is to ſuffer a paine. Thus, by S. Auguſtines iudgement, Marriage is not an euill or vnlawfull thing, but onely a burthenous and a grieuous thing. Aug. de Sancta Virginitate cap. 16.

But why ſhould you thus Defend an open errour? This Author bearing the name of Chryſoſtome, ſaith, that the Copulation, which is in Marriage, notwithſtanding it bee no ſinne, yet is an euill thing before God. Where did God himſelfe euer ſo ſay in all the Scriptures? Where did the Holy Ghoſt euer ſay, that Wedlocke is an euill thing? Neither doe I heere meane the degree or ſtate of Wedlocke, but the very fellowſhip and vſe of Wedlocke. Where did the Holy Ghoſt euer ſay heereof, It is an euill thing before God?

Verily S. Paul ſaith: Mariage is Honourable in all degrees, and a bed vndefiled. The Mariage bed, ſaith S. Paul, is no euill thing before God: It is pure and holy, and vndefiled. God himſelfe ordained Matrimony: He ordaineth no ill. God himſelfe commanded the Coniunction it ſelfe & vſe of Matrimony: He commandeth no ill. Vnto the cleane, all things are cleane. He that beſtoweth his Virgin in Marriage (ſaith S. Paul) doth well. S. Paul ſaith not, He doth euill before God: But contrariwiſe, He doth well. But how could hee do well in giuing her occaſion to doe ill? The holy Father Paphnutius in the great Councel of Nice ſaid thus: Congreſſus cum legitima vxore, eſt Caſtitas: The company of a man with his lawfull Wife, is Chaſtity. Touching the diſordered affections, that may happen in the vſe of Marriage, I will ſay nothing. If ye reaſon thus: Such affections be ill: Ergo, the vſe of Marriage it ſelfe is ill: Ye fall into a foule errour in arguing, called, as you know, Paralogiſmus Accidentis. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non quia incontinentia malum eſt, ideò Concubinum, vel id, quo incontinentes copulantur, non eſt bonum: We may not ſay, becauſe Incontinencie is an euill thing, therfore Wedlocke or that Copulation that is between (Man and Wife) that containe not, is no good thing. S. Auguſtine calleth the very Copulation of Man and Wife, and the vſe of Matrimony, a good thing, and that foure times together in the ſame one place. How then can you ſay, that the ſame Copulation and vſe of Matrimony, is an euill thing before God? Beware M. Harding, yee be not found in the Company of them that ſay, Good is euill, and euill is good. Heb. 13. 1. Tim. 1. 1. Cor. 7. Sozo. li. 1. c. 22. Eſa. 5.

S. Hierome ſaith, Si bonum eſt, Mulierem non tangere, malum eſt ergo tangere. Nihil enim Bono contrarium eſt, niſi Malum: If it be good for a man not to touch his wife, then is it euil to touch his wife. For there is nothing contrary to Good, but Euill. Again he ſaith, Quamdiu impleo Mariti officium, non impleo Chriſtiani: As long as I doe the duty of a Husband, I doe not the duty of a Chriſtian man. Againe, Non negamus Viduas, non negamus Maritatas Sanctas Mulieres inueniri. Sed quæ Vxores eſſe deſierint: quæ in ipſa neceſſitate Coniugij Virginum imitentur Caſtitatem: We deny not, but Widows and Married Women may be Holy. But ſuch, as haue left and forſaken Wiues duties, and in the very neceſſity of Matrimony do counterfet the Chaſtity that is in Maidens. Hier. contr. Iouinian. lib. 1. Ibidem. Hieron. contr. Heluidium.

The like account wee may make of ſundry others: Theſe few may ſuffice for this preſent.

Now, touching the Mariage of Widowers and Widowes, a great many of the ancient Fathers ſeeme expreſſly and vtterly to condemne it.

Athenagoras ſaith, Secundæ Nuptiæ decorum quoddam ſunt Adulterium: The Second Marriage (of Widowers or Widowes) is a faire kind of Aduourry. And S. Hierom calleth Widowes ſo married, Harlots and Naughty Women, Malas & Proſtitutas: And ſaith: Digamia non naſcitur in terra bona: Second Marriage groweth not in good ſoile. Againe he ſaith: Tolerabilius eſt, vni proſtitutam eſſe, quàm multis: More tollerable it is, to bee Concubine vnto one, then vnto many. Againe, Vbi numerus Maritorum eſt, ibi vir, qui propriè vnus eſt, eſſe deſiit: Where as there is a number of husbands, there the Husband, that in proper ſpeech is but one, is no Husband. Likewiſe againe: Non damno Digamos. Etiam Scortatorem recipio Pœnitentem. Quicquid æqualiter licet, æqua lance penſandum eſt: I condemne not Widowers, or Widowes that haue Married againe. No, I refuſe not the Fornicatour vpon his repentance. Whatſoeuer is equally lawfull, muſt be weighed in One ballance. Athenagor. in Apolog. pro Chriſtianis. Hieron. ad Gerontiam. Hier. contr. Iouinian. lib. 1. In eod. libro.

Nazianzenus

Nazian. in dictum Euang. Cum perfeciſſet Ieſus.

Nazianzenus ſaith: Hic ſermo videtur mihi reijcere Secundas Nuptias. Si enim Duo ſunt Chriſti, Duo item ſunt Mariti, & Duæ Vxores. This ſaying ſeemeth to condemne Second Mariage. For, if there bee Two Chriſts, then are there Two Husbands and Two Wiues.

Origen in Lucam Hom. 17.

Origen ſaith, Nunc & Secundæ, & Tertiæ, & Quartæ Nuptiæ repetuntur: & non ignoramus, quòd tale coniugium eijciet nos de Regno Dei: Now the Second, and Third, & Fourth Mariage is receiued. And we know, that ſuch Mariage ſhall caſt vs out of the Kingdome of God.

Second Marriage.

By theſe few examples wee may ſée, It was hard for theſe holy learned Fathers, in ſo large amplifications of Praiſing or Diſpraiſing, to hold meaſure. Yet, all theſe vehement words and amplifications notwithſtanding, partlie the ſame, partly other the like holy and learned Fathers, both vſed Mariage themſelues in their owne perſons, and alſo otherwiſe wrote, and ſpake thereof with great reuerence.

Hilarius.

Addition. ☞ The authority of Hilary (ſaith M. Harding) is a ſimple ragge and a peeuiſh Apocryphall forged write &c. The Anſwer. It is euen ſo indéed. I neuer tooke it to bée otherwiſe. Neither doe I allege it in ſuch great ſooth, as you imagine, but onely as a Pamphlet of your owne. For, howſoeuer you weigh it now, they were your owne friends, that firſt forged this forgerie; they were not of vs. If you would ſhake off all ſuch the like ragges, that you and your Fathers haue patched vp vnder the names of Anacletus, Athanaſius, Amphilochius and others, a great part of your Bookes muſt néeds goe naked. But notwithſtanding theſe Writs bee forged, and full of Fables, yet the Fathers themſelues, whoſe names they beare, in their owne perſons, were not forged. For Anacletus indéed was Biſhop of Rome: Athanaſius indéed was Biſhop of Alexandria: Amphilochius indéed was Biſhop of Iconium. Euen ſo, although this Epiſtle, which ſome of you haue forged, vnder the name of S. Hilary, bee a Fable, yet S. Hilary indéed in his owne perſon was a learned Father and Biſhop of Poiters in France, aboue eleuen hundred yeres ago: and might indéede haue a wife: and Abra indéed might be his daughter. And what maruell? For the Prieſts in France liued ſtill in wedlocke vntill the time of Pope Hildebrand, which was aboue ſeuen hundred yéres after the death of S. Hilarie. Addition. ☞

So was Gregory S. Baſils Brother, the Biſhop of Nyſſa. So was Gregory the Biſhop of Nazianzum, Father vnto Gregorie Nazianzene, as appeareth by Ruffinus: Yet was he neuertheleſſe A Faithfull Seruant, and a Steward of the Myſteries of God: A man of Spirituall deſires: The God of Pharoa: The Pillar and Buttreſſe of the Church: and the Starre of the World. For in ſuch wiſe his owne Sonne Gregory Nazianzene reporteth of him. Such a one was He, his Wife and Family notwithſtanding. So was Proſper of Aquitania, the Biſhop of Rhegium, as it appeareth by his Epigramme written vnto his Wife:

Proſper.

So was the holy Father Cheremon the Biſhop of Nilus: who, as Euſebius writeth, was ſent into baniſhment with his Wife. So Polycrates being likewiſe a Biſhop, ſometime ſaid, that ſeuen of his Fathers or Anceſtors had béene Biſhops. The Greeke word is συγγενεῖς. Ruffinus tranſlateth it, Parentes.

Euſ. lib. 5. ca. 25: Nouell. Conſtit. 3. §. finale. E Greco.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. The Greeke word (you ſay) is συγγενεῖς; and Ruffinus tranſlateth it Parentes, &c. You meane not, I trow, that Polycrates had ſeuen Fathers. For that were too many by ſix, you know. One Father is enough pardy for one man. What gather you heereof, that Polycrates was Married, becauſe he had ſeuen Anceſtours? The Anſwer. You are a pleaſant man, M. Harding: I ſée, a little thing may make you merry. But, you ſay further: I haue belied Ruffinus. For hee tranſlateth not συγγενεῖς, Patres, but Parentes; which (you ſay) goeth further off in ſignification then the word Patres, doth, as the learned in the Ciuill Laws do know. Indéed herein, I confeſſe, there was an ouerſight. It is true, Ruffinus hath not Patres, but Parentes. And yet where you ſay, I belie Ruffinus, ye are ouer bitter. You know the difference betweene Patres and Parentes is not ſo great. For oftentimes in good ſignification both Patres be Parentes, and Parentes be Patres. Cicero ioineth them in one, and ſaith, Pater, Parenſque, both together. You ſay, This word, Parentes, goeth further in ſignification, then this word, Patres, as the learned in the Ciuill Law doe know. I denie it not, M. Harding. But will you alſo ſay, that Ruffinus was ſo curious in choiſe of words, or that he went to the Ciuilians to learne Latine? Verilie S. Hierome ſpeaketh ſcornefully of him in that behalfe, and thinketh him not able to ſpeake good Latine. Howbeit, let vs ſee, what ſignification this word Parentes beareth among the Ciuilians. Thus therefore ſaith Caius one of the Fathers

Hieron. in Apologia aduerſus Ruffinum. Συγγενικὸν ἐξαμάρτος.

Fathers of the Law: Appellatione Parentis, non tantùm Pater, sed etiam Auus, & Proauus, & deinceps omnes superiores continentur: sed & Mater, & Auia: Vnder this name Parens, is conteined, not only Father, Grandfather, and Greatgrandfather, and all other orderly going vpward: but also Mother, and Grandmother. All these, saith Cauus, are conteined vnder this word, Parens. Now M. Harding, for that it liketh you to make needlesse quarrels, and to play with words, I reckon, ye will not say, that Polycrates Mother, or Grandmother, or Greatgrandmother were Bishops before him. For so, I trow, your learned Ciuilians will not say. Then it resteth, that Polycrates said, his Father, his Grandfather, and his Greatgrandfather, &c. were Bishops, and that one of them had bene Father vnto another. And this is all that I said. Therefore your mirth is at an end. De verb. & rerum significant. Lib 50.

Bishops & Priests married.

Iustinianus the Emperour semeth the more to esteeme Epiphanius the Bishop of Constantinople, for that his Father, and other his Ancestors had bene Priests, and Bishops.

Ignatius, S. Iohn the Euangelists Scholar, saith: Peter and other the Apostles of Christ were married men. So writeth Clemens Alexandrinus. So writeth Eusebius. Origen saith, by the report of others his Ancestours, That S. Paul and his wife were called to the Faith both at one time. *Ignat. ad Philadelphien. S. Ambrose saith: Omnes Apostoli, excepto Iohanne, & Paulo, Vxores habuerunt: All the Apostles had Wiues, only Iohn and Paul excepted. Lib. 1.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Here saith M. Harding, Whether is truer man, M. Iewell that wrote the Reply, or M. Iewell that wrote this pretensed Defense? There he saith thus: The twelue Apostles, saith S. Ambrose, only S. Iohn excepted, were all married: Heere he saith otherwise: S. Ambrose saith, All the Apostles had wiues, only S. Iohn and S. Paul excepted. Heere S. Paul hath no wife: There S. Paul hath a wife. If you were a true man there, then are you false heere. If you be true heere, then were you false there. Or he had a wife, or he had not. Say which ye will; M. Iewell is contrary to M. Iewell. Faine would I know which of these M. Iewels were to be trusted. The Answer. Here we haue M. Iewel in his Reply, and M. Iewel in his Defense: M. Iewel contrary to M. Iewel: True heere, and False there: False here, and True there. Oh, what a merry pang was this, M. Harding? Pee lacke but somewhat to make your selfe sport. S. Ambrose saith, The twelue Apostles, only S. Iohn excepted, were all married. Againe S. Ambrose saith, All the Apostles had wiues, only S. Iohn and S. Paul excepted. I pray you, good M. Harding, what contrariety finde you in these words? Doe I make S. Ambrose first to say, S. Paul had a wife? And doe I make him afterward to say, S. Paul had no wife? I trow ye were not awake. Ye laught at somewhat in your dreame. You know, though S. Paul were an Apostle of Christ, yet was he none of the twelue Apostles. What should you be told of those things that Children know? Ye much misreckon your selfe. These things may well stand together. All the twelue Apostles, Iohn only excepted, had wiues. And yet S. Paul, being none of the twelue, had no wife. What meane you then with this M. Iewell, and that M. Iewell: M. Iewell heere, and M. Iewell there? Both here and there M. Iewll saith truth. But both heere and there you are one man still. Why should you so vainly bestow your wits? Ambros. in 2. Corint. cap. 11.

As touching S. Heere haue you Doctours against Doctours: three against three: and that namely touching the marriage of S. Paul. Will you therefore come in with these gewgawes, and tell vs, Faine would I know which of these Doctours were to bee trusted? Leaue, leaue this vnseemely sporting. M. Harding. M. Harding fol. 287. a.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. What ſhall I ſay vnto this fellow? Who euer ſaw ſo impudent a man? Doth Pope Damaſus ſhew you all this, M. Iewell? Fie for ſhame man. You a Miniſter of Gods Word? Nay, a Miniſter of vaine Fables, and a Miniſter of open Lies. What may wee call this in you? Fooliſh ignorance, or ſhameleſſe malice? How could you be ſo ignorant, or ſo witleſſe, as once to dreame that Damaſus, that learned Pope, ſhould thus write? That you might ſeeme a iolly proctour for your brothers, the married Apoſtates, Sacrilegious, Inceſtuous, & abominable yoking, muſt Damaſus needs be made a Prophet? Conſider, Reader, I pray thee (for it booteth not to tell it M. Iewell) how this tale hangeth together. Damaſus was the 39. Pope: Syluerius was the 60. Pope: Deusdedit was the 70. Pope: Adrianus 2. was the 109. Pope, &c. What a maruellous Prophet then was M. Iewels Damaſus, that could thus Prophecie of ſo many Popes ſo long to come after his death? As for Pope Hoſius, hee is a Pope of M. Iewels owne making. In the Regiſters of the Popes I finde none ſo named. Gratian hath not ſo many Popes by three. For he nameth not Iohn 10. nor Iohn 15. nor Adrian 2. &c. The anſwer. What meane theſe terrible exclamations, M. Harding? You cry out, Vaine, Fooliſh, Ignorant, Witleſſe, Impudent, Shameleſſe, Sacrilegious, Inceſtuous, Abominable yoking. Who hath thus offended you? What wiſe man would be ſo vehement without ſome cauſe? It were much better for you to come againe to your ſelfe and to learne to be ſober. Pope Damaſus (you ſay) could not write of Syluerius, and Deusdedit, and Adrianus, and Fœlix, & others that were borne ſo many yeeres after his death. What then? Will you therefore thus fondly fall out, and rage with me? It is your owne friend Doctor Gratian, M. Harding, that thus hath written. I am the reporter only: I write it not. Call him Vaine, Fooliſh, Ignorant, Witleſſe, Impudent, Shameleſſe, and what you liſt. Fall out rather with them that haue called his Bookes, The Foundation of the Canon Law. Fall out with Pope Eugenius, that commended his Bookes vnto the world. As for me, I know what he is. I allege him as I finde him. Compare my words with Gratian: you ſhall ſee I doe right. Onely I left out certaine Popes names for ſhortneſſe ſake: which fault here for your pleaſure I haue reformed.

Diſt. 56. Hoſius.

Fundamentum Iuris Canonici.

But you ſay, Hoſius is a Pope of M. Iewels owne making. For in the Regiſter of Popes yee finde none ſo named. Yet if you had better conferred with Gratian, you ſhould haue found, that Pope Hoſius is the firſt in all the ranke. How truely he is either ſo named, or ſo placed, I make none account. It is your owne Gratian that ſo reporteth: and, as I haue ſaid before, it is the ground and foundation of all your Lawes. Pope Damaſus (you ſay) could not write of thoſe Popes that ſo many hundred yeeres followed after him. That, I grant you, is alſo an error. Bid your Gratian reforme it. For his only errour it is: It is none of ours. Howbeit, as for the truth of the matter it ſelf, read the lines of al theſe Popes; and ye ſhal finde it true, that Gratian ſaith, that euery of them had a Prieſt to his Father. For example, Platina ſaith, Pope Siluerius was the ſonne of Biſhop Hormiſda: Pope Bonifacius 1. was the ſonne of Iucundus a Prieſt. And ſo the reſt. Therefore, ſomewhat to releaſe your Gratians credit, notwithſtanding he erred in the name of Damaſus, yet in the true ſtory of theſe Popes, and of their fathers, he erred nothing. For indeed all they, whoſe names he rehearſeth, were Prieſts ſonnes.

Platina in Syluerio & in Bonifacio 1.

Further you ſay, Gratian hath not ſo many Popes names by three, as I haue reckoned. For he nameth not Pope Iohn 10. nor Pope Iohn 15. nor Pope Adrian 2. This, I confeſſe, was mine owne ouerſight, in that I mingled theſe names with the reſt, neither alleging nor noting mine Author. Notwithſtanding, this errour proceeded onely of negligence, and not of malice, as to any indifferent man it may ſone appeare. For touching the truth of the matter it ſelfe, Platina ſaith, Euery of theſe three Popes had a Prieſt to his Father, as had the others, whom we haue named. Theſe be his words: Pope Iohn the eleuenth (which in other computations is reckoned the tenth) was ſonne vnto Pope Sergius: Pope Iohn the ſixteenth (who of ſome others is counted the fifteenth) was ſonne to a Prieſt, called Leo: Pope Adrian the ſecond was the ſonne of a Biſhop, named Taralus. Here ye haue your whole reckoning, M. Harding, and no cauſe why ye ſhould be further offended.

M Harding fol. 287. b.

But you tel your Reader, That this Authority is brought in by Gratian vnder the name of Palea: and that Palea is as much to ſay, as Chaffe, and ſignifieth, that all that followeth is little worth. Such Chaffe (ſay you) is M. Iewell driuen to take hold at, to maintaine his brothers filthineſſe, for lacke of better ſtuffe. And is it true, M. Harding, that all that Gratian ſaieth out vnder the name of Palea, is nothing elſe but Chaffe, and vaine ſtuffe of little worth? What wil you then doe with your great Donation of Conſtantine, whereby the Pope claimeth his Iuriſdiction ouer the other three Patriarks, his whole Triple Crowne, and the whole Empire of the Weſt? Shall this alſo goe for Chaffe, and Forgerie, and Vaine ſtuffe? Doe you not know that the ſaid Donation is intituled Palea, as well as this? Will you for for the safegard of your Priests children, leaue the Pope with all his Vniuersall Power, and authoritie in the Chaffe? Thus you vse your Authours, and Doctours, M. Harding: Sometimes they are Chaffe: Sometimes they are Corne: Sometimes they are Drosse: Sometimes they are Gold.

Bishops married.

Here you haue the whole matter truly proued: All these Popes, by your Gratian alleged, found Priests sonnes: The other three Popes with the Priests their fathers fully auouched: Your vaine Chaffe blowen into the winde: And your Gratians errors, touching the names of Damasus and Hosius, sufficiently answered. Leaue therefore your ordinarie table of Foolish, Witlesse, Impudent and Shamelesse men, M. Harding, lest your Reader happen to open his eies, and espie whole dealing is Impudent.

Pope Pius saith: A married man, hauing his wife aliue, may bee chosen Pope. His words be these: Cur enim disputant Doctores, An electus in Papam Vxori suæ debitum soluere teneatur, &c. For wherefore dot he Canonists moone this doubt, Whether a man being chosen Pope be bound to yeeld marriage duty to his wife, vnlesse a married man may bee chosen to that roome? Polydorus Virgilius saith, that the restraint of Priests marriage was first attempted in England, about the yeere of our Lord, Nine hundred threescore and ten: and that the same was afterward concluded in the West Church, about the yeere of our Lord, A thousand and a hundred, and neuer before.

These two Principels being thus laid, the one of Immoderate and Extraordinarie speech of the Holy Fathers, the other of the Continuall and Ordinarie practise of the Church, wee may now bee the better able to consider the Substance of M. Hardings reasons.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. What, will M. Iewell make this fond and childish Argument: Certaine Fathers spake ouer vehemently concerning Matrimony: Item, Some of them were called to dignitie of Bishops from the state of married men: Ergo, Priests, Monkes, Friers, Nunnes, who haue vowed Chastitie, may lawfully marry wiues, and take husbands? Of what small substance this reason is, the veriest Coblers of all their Ministers, if they can read any English besides their Communio. book, may easily perceiue. The Answer. Coblers wee haue none in the holy Ministerie, M. Harding. And yet if we had any such, I see no cause but they might doe God better seruice in his Church, then many that haue beene, and yet are Priests and Cardinals in the Church of Rome. And what great wonder were it if a good simple godly man were made a Priest? You may remember that Iulius the 2. a man vtterly void both of learning and vertue, from a wherry-slaue, not long sithence, became a Pope. Verily S. Chrysostome is not ashamed often times to call S. Paul, Sutorem Pellium, which words you may English, A Clowter of Skinnes, or A Cobler. But to leaue these your vaine and needlesse quarrels, there is no Cobler so simple, but it pitieth him to see you in so weighty matters to shew such folly.

Erasm. in Prouerbio, A Remo ad Tribunal. Chryso. in 2. ad. Timo. Hom. 5.

The Childish Arguments that you haue imagined, are your owne M. Harding: you know full well they are none of mine. Thus onely I say: Diuers the Holie Fathers haue written ouer basely, I will not say vilely and slanderously of the state of Matrimonie in generall, calling it in all kinde of men, Fornication; An ill thing, and like to Aduouterie: Therefore, I say, they may much lesse bee taken as indifferent Iudges in Priests Marriage. Againe: Diuers the Holy Fathers, being themselues Priests and Bishoppes, had wiues, and liued in Matrimonie: Therefore, I say, they condemned not Priests marriage. ☞

First of all, his Obiection of Vowes nothing toucheth the Clergie of England. For it is known and confessed, that the Priests of England were neuer Votaries.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ Further, where I say, The Clergie of England was neuer bound to such Vow of Chastitie: you say, What mooueth you to say, The Priests of England are no Votaries? What priuiledge haue they aboue all other Priests of Christendome, at least, of the Latine and West Church? &c. The Answer. You know, M. Harding, neither the Priests of England euer offered any such Vow, nor the Bishop euer required it. And how can hee bee a Votarie, that maketh no Vow? Or how can there be a Vow, where nothing is Vowed?

M. Harding fol. 290. b.

You say, This Vow is annexed to Holy Orders by statute of Holy Church. And Bishops, Priests, and Deacons be tied to Chastitie. To Chastitie, say you, M. Harding? Would God it were so. Would God the world saw not the contrarie. Howbeit, here you allege Pope Gregorie, the Emperour Iustinian, the Councell of Carthage, Pope Leo, and others. Yea although the Bishop require nothing, and although the Priest promise nothing, Yet (you say) Oaths and promises may lawfully passe without words. And heere you bring in many proper things, of Laying hands on a booke, of Holding vp two fingers, of Souldiers Badges, and I wot not what. In the end you conclude, A becke is as good as a Dieugard. All these words, M. Harding, are not worth one word of Answer.

M. Harding fol. 293. b.

Bishops & Priests maried

If the Priests of England were alwaies Votaries, and haue so continued from the beginning, how is it then that the same Priests nevertheless continued still in lawfull Matrimonie, for the space of more then a thousand yeres together after Christ, and that without reproofe, and without offence of the Church of God? Were they all bound by Vow to liue single? And yet did they altogether, all that while, contrarie to their solemne Vow, liue lawfully in open Wedlocke? Who would thus say, but M. Harding? Where then was the Pope, that should haue depriued them? Where was then M. Harding, that should haue cried out vpon them, Fleshly, Incestuous, Sacrilegious Vowbreakers? Was Incest and Sacrilege so lightly weighed among our Fathers, so long a time? Was there neither Bishop, nor Priest, nor other holy man within this Realme, during the space of so many hundred yeres, that would reproue it? Did all the godly Priests of this Realme make solemne Vowes for no other cause, but only to breake them? Let vs think better of our Fathers, M. Harding. Certainly they made no such Vow, neither by Becke, as you say, nor by Dieu gard.

Againe, If the Vow of Chastitie be of it selfe annexed to Orders, as you say, what shall wee then thinke of the Priests of Græcia, and Asia, and of all other Christened Countries throrow the world? Are they all bound to Chastitie by Solemne Vow, and yet liue they all in open Matrimonie against their Vow? Are they all Fleshly, Incestuous, Sacrilegious Vow-breakers, without exception? Wherefore then doth Pope Stephanus say, Aliter se Orientalium Traditio habet Ecclesiarum, aliter huius Sanctæ Romanæ Ecclesiæ. Nam illarum Sacerdotes, Diaconi, & Subdiaconi Matrimonio copulantur? The Tradition of the East Church is one, and the Tradition of this holy Church of Rome is another. For the Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons of the East Church are ioined in Matrimonie? Wherefore is it noted there in the Rubrike, Orientalis Ecclesia Votum Castitatis non obtulit? The East Church hath not offered the Vow of Chastitie? Wherefore doe you your selfe, M. Harding, secretly confesse, that the Priests of the East Church are no Votaries? Remember your words: Thus you say: What Priuiledge haue the Priests of England aboue all other Priests of Christendome, at least of the Latine and West Church, you say: you dare not say, the East Church was euer subiect to any such Vow. Wherefore doth Cardinall Caietaine say, Nec Ordo, in quantum Ordo, Nec Ordo, in quantum Sacer, est impeditiuus Matrimonij? Neither the Order of Priesthood, in that it is an Order, nor the same Order, in that it is Holy, is any hinderance to Matrimonie? Neither Pope Stephanus, nor Gratian, nor Cardinall Caietane, nor you your selfe might thus haue written, if the Vow of Chastitie were necessarily annexed to Holy Orders.

Dist. 31. Aliter

M. Harding fol. 290 b. Cardinal. Caietan. in Quodlibetis.

You allege a Canon of the Councell of Ancyra, where, you say, It is thus decreed touching Deacons: If a Deacon receiue Orders of the Bishop, and hold his peace, it shal not be lawfull afterward for him to marry. By this Canon you teach vs, that the Vow of Chastitie is euermore ioyned with Holy Orders. But in the same Canon it is also Decreed, That if the Deacon make Protestation, and tell the Bishop that he will marry, for that he is not able to liue single, then if he afterward marry, he shall still continue in the Ministerie. All this, I say, is written in the same Canon: I say not in any other, but in the same. Ye would not thus haue beguiled your Reader, if ye had meant plainly. Notwithstanding, I will not heere touch your credit, M. Harding, nor vse your ordinary exclamations of Falshood and Forgerie. Yet heer you see in this case, the Councell thought it lawfull for a Deacon to marrie, notwithstanding hee were in Holy Orders. And thus it is plaine by the same Canon ye haue heere alleged, That then your Vow was not annexed to Holy Orders.

M. Harding fol. 292. a. Concil. Ancyr. cap. 10.

Further you say, Origen, whom I may well allege for witnesse of the Church of his time, saith that none may offer the Continuall Sacrifice, but such onely, as haue Vowed Continuall Chastitie. The Answer. By the Continuall Sacrifice you would beare vs in hand, that Origen meant onely that Sacrifice, that you haue imagined in your Masse. But indeed M. Harding, Origen in that place speaketh not one word, neither of your Masse, (for hee neuer knew it: he would haue abhorred it) nor of your imagined Sacrifice, nor of Priest, nor of Deacon, nor of any outward ministerie of the Church. If it be otherwise, for your credits sake, let the words appeare. If there be in Origen not one such word, no not one, what opinion may your friends haue in your dealing, whom they see so sutly to iuggle before their eies? Verily, Origen by the Continuall Sacrifice meant none other but onely the Sacrifice of Faithfull Praier: which Sacrifice also thus many waies he exacteth: Si sine intermissione, &c. If we Pray without ceasing. If our Praier early in the morning rise vp as a pleasant perfume in the sight of God. If the lifting vp of our hands be vnto him an Euening Sacri- fice. This is the Sacrifice that Origen there speaketh of, M. Harding. Of any other your Sacrifice he speaketh nothing. Of this Sacrifice he saith, No man can offer it that liueth in Wedlocke. And thus he saith not onely of Priests and Deacons, as you seeme to tel vs, but generally of euery of Gods Faithfull People. No man (saith he) can offer vp this continuall Sacrifice of Praier, vnlesse he continue in Chastity, and liue a Virgin. And this M. Harding, was not the Generall Order of the Church in that time, as you report it, but one of Origens particular and knowne errours. Bishops & Priests married.

Thus you haue proued, That your Vow was annexed to holy Orders, by the authority of him that speaketh not one word, neither of Priest, nor of Deacon, nor of any other Ecclesiasticall Order: but generally of all faithfull Christian people: and of the particular errour of one man ye haue framed a Generall Order of the Church.

Yet for further Answer, we grant it is reason and conuenient, that who so hath made a Vow vnto God, should keepe his promise. Cyrillus saith: Si castitatem promiserit, & seruare non poterit, pronunciet peccatum suum: If ye haue promised, or vowed Chastity, and cannot keepe it, let him pronounce and confesse his sinne. Cyril. in Leuiticum, Lib. 3.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. As for the saying you alledge out of the third book of Cyrillus in Leuiticum, it can serue you to no purpose, but to witnesse your forgerie and falshood. For there is no such saying in that booke. The Answer. Oh, M. Harding, why should you take so vaine pleasure in euill speech? Is there no such saying in all that Booke? What Booke had you to seeke in? Or what spectacles had you to behold it? Your manner is to pronounce ouer boldly before you know. I grant I haue not alleged all the words that S. Cyril vseth: Otherwise I should haue taken out of him more then thirty lines al together. Notwithstanding I haue neither forged, nor altered, nor deuised any maner thing of my selfe, as it shall appeare. M. Harding. fol. 290. a.

First S. Cyril saith thus: Nos, cùm venimus ad Dominum, & Vouemus nos ei in Castitate (velle) seruire, pronunciamus labijs nostris, & iuramus nos (velle) castigare carnem nostram, &c. When we come to our Lord, and make a Vow, that wee will serue him in Chastity, we pronounce with our lips, and make an oath, that wee will chasten our flesh, &c. Heere haue wee by expresse words a Vow, and a Vow of Chastity. After certaine lines it followeth thus: Si istum Ordinem promiseris, & seruare non quiueris, audi quid Legis ordo præcipiat: Si peccauerit, inquit, vnum aliquod de istis, pronunciet peccatum suum quod peccauit: If thou haue promised to keepe this Order, and canst not keepe it, heere what the Order of the Law commandeth thee. Thus saith the Law, If a man shall offend in any of these things, let him pronounce the sinne that he hath sinned. Heere you may not say, M. Harding, that these last words were vttered vpon occasion of some other matter that went betweene. For S. Cyril spake these selfe same words namely and onely of him that hath Vowed and sworn Chastity. We make a Vow (saith Cyril) to serue God in Chaste life: Wee pronounce it, and giue it out from our lips: We sweare that we will Chasten our flesh. Yet, saith he, If thou haue promised to keepe this Order, and canst not keepe it, pronounce thy sinne that thou hast sinned. These, M. Harding, bee the words that you say cannot be found in S. Cyril. This is my Falshood: This my forgerie. You see your ouer hasty iudgement may soone deceiue you. Cyril. in Leuiticum, Lib. 3.

Howbeit, touching Virginity, or Chastity, wee say, It standeth not in our Choice, or Vow, but in the singular gift of God. Christ himselfe saith: All men take not this Word, but they vnto whom it is giuen. Iustinus Martyr saith: Multi castrauerunt se propter Regnum Cœlorum. Verùm hoc non cuiuis datum est: Many haue gelded themselues for the Kingdome of Heauen. But this thing is not giuen to all men. S. Ambrose saith: Sola virginitas est quæ suaderi potest, imperari non potest: Onely Virginity is a thing that may bee counselled, but commanded it may not be. So S. Hierome: Vnde infert Dominus, Qui potest capere, capiat: vt vnusquisque consideret vires suas: vtrùm possit. Virginalia, pudicitiæ præcepta implere. Per se enim Castitas blanda est, & quemlibet ad se alliciens. Sed considerandæ sunt vires: vt qui potest capere, capiat. Our Lord addeth, He that can take, let him take: that euery man may consider his owne strength, whether he be able to accomplish the Lawes of Virginity and Chastitie, or no. For Chastity of it selfe is faire, and pleasant, and able to allure any man vnto it selfe But we must weigh our ability, that he may take it that can take it. Matth. 19. Iustinus Apologia. 2. 32 Quæst. 1. Integritas. Hieronym. in Matt. cap. 19.

Heereof the Ancient Father Origen began to complaine so long ago in his time: Non solùm quæ docent, non faciunt, sed etiam crudeliter, & sine misericordia iniungunt aliis maiora virtute ipsorum, non habentes rationem virium vniuscuiusque: vt, qui prohibent nubere, & ab eo quod expedit, ad immoderatam munditiem compellunt: Not onely they doe not that they teach but also cruelly and without mercy they command others to do that they be not able, not considering or weighing each mans strength. Such bee they that forbid men Orig. in Matt. Tractat. 24.

to marry, and from that thing that is lawfull, driue and force men to an immoderate kind of cleannesse.

Hieron. contra Iouinian. lib. 1.

S. Hierome saith: Si quis consideret virginem suam, id est, carnem suam lasciuire, & ebullire in libidinem, nec refrænare se potest, duplex illi incumbit necessitas, aut capiendæ coniugis, aut ruendi: If any man consider that his owne virgin, that is to say, his owne flesh, groweth proud, and waxeth vnto lust, and cannot stay it, there is laid vpon him a double necessitie, either to take a wife, or else to fall.

Bishops married.

Cyril. in Leuiticum. lib. 16.

In this case S. Cyril saith: Oportet compati & commetiri Doctrinam pro virium qualitate: & huiusmodi qui non possunt capere Sermonem de Castitate, concedere nuptias: We must haue consideration of men, and measure our Doctrine according to euery mans ability: and vnto such men as cannot take the word of Chastity, wee ought to grant Marriage.

22. Quæst. 4. In malis.

If M. Harding will replie, that this Counsell may take place in all others, but not in them that haue vowed or promised the contrary; let him vnderstand his owne rule written in the Popes owne Decrees: In malis promissis rescinde fidem: In turpi Voto muta decretum: Quod incautè vouisti, ne facias: Impia est promissio quæ scelere impletur: In an euill promise, breake thy faith: In an vnhoneſt Vow, change thy purpose: That thou hast vnaduisedly vowed, see thou doe it not: It is an euill promise, that is kept with wickednesse.

Vowes

M. Harding fol. 296. a.

Addition. M. Harding. What reliefe bringeth al this vnto his cause, vnlesse he be able to prooue, that Chastity is an ill, and a wicked thing? The Answer. No, M. Harding, Chastitie is no ill thing: It is the speciall gift of God. But an vncleane and a filthy life vnder colour of a Vow, or the name of Chastity, is a wicked thing before God. You know it is commonly said vnder the name of S. Hierom, Simulata sanctitas duplex est iniquitas: Counterfet holinesse is double wickednes.

Gift of Chastitie.

Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist. 11.

S. Cyprian hauing occasion to write of certaine Maids, that had Vowed Virginity, and liued in disorder, saith thus: Quòd si perseuerare nolunt, vel non possunt, melius est vt nubant, quàm vt in ignem delicijs suis cadant. Certè nullum Fratribus, aut Sororibus scandalum faciant: If they either cannot, or will not continue in Chastitie, better it is for them to marrie, then to fall in to the fire (of Hell) with their pleasures. At the least let them breed no slander to their Brother or Sister.

Augu. de Bono Coniugal. Dist. 27. Quidam.

S. Augustine saith: Quidam nubentes post votum, asserunt adulteros esse. Ego autem dico vobis, quod grauiter peccant qui tales diuidunt: Some men there be that say, They be Aduouterers that marry after that they haue made a Vow. But I tell you, that they Sinne grieuously, that put such asunder.

Epipha contra Haref. 61. Apostolic. lib. 2. παμπόλ ἄμεινον γαμεῖν γυναῖκα κατὰ νομίν.

Epiphanius likewise saith: Melius est vnum habere peccatum, quàm multa. Melius est cadentem à studio, apertè sibi vxorem asciscere secundum Leges, &c. Et à virginitate longo tempore agere Pœnitentiam, &c. Et non quotidiè occultis iaculis vulnerari: Better it is to haue one Sinne, then many Sinnes. Better it is for a man falling from his course, openly to take vnto him a wife, according to the Law, &c. And a long time to repent himselfe of the breach of his Virginity, &c. And not to be wounded with priuie darts euery day.

Hieron. ad Virginem Demetriadem.

S. Hierome saith: Sanctum Virginum Propositum, & Cœlestis, Angelorumque familiæ gloriam quarundam non bene se agentium nomen infamat. Quibus aperte dicendum est, vt aut nubant, si se non possunt continere: aut contineant, si nolunt nubere: The name of certaine Virgins not well behauing themselues, defameth and shameth the holy purpose of Virgins, and the glory of the Heauenly and Angelicall Familie. Whom we must plainly charge, that either they marry, if they cannot containe: or that they containe, if they will not marrie.

Aug. de Sancta Virginitate. Cap. 34.

To like purpose S. Augustine saith: Multas earum reuocat à nubendo, non amor præclari propositi, sed aperti dedecoris timor, veniens & ipse à Superbia: qua formidatur hominibus magis displicere, quàm Deo. Nubere nolunt: & ideo non nubunt, quia impune non possunt: quæ melius nuberent, quàm vrerentur, id est, quàm occulta flamma concupiscentiæ in ipsa conscientia vastarentur: quas pœnitet Professionis, & piget Confessionis: Many of them are kept from marriage, not for loue of their goodly purpose of Virginity, but for feare of open shame, which shame also proceedeth of pride, for that they are more afraid to displease man, then God. They will not marry: and therfore they marry not, because they cannot without rebuke. Yet better were it for them to marry, then to burne, that is to say, then with the flame of their Concupiscence in their owne Conscience to be wasted. They are sorry of their Profession, and yet it grieueth them to Confesse, &c.

Marc. 6. Actor. 23. 22. Quæst. 4. Inter cætera.

It is not sufficient to say, I haue vowed. Herod Vowed Iohn Baptists head: The Iewes Vowed S. Pauls death. Hubaldus, as it is noted by Gratian in the Decrees, made a Vow that he would neuer helpe his owne Mother, or Brethren, were their neede neuer so great.

Alphonsus

Alphonsus Virucsius, one of M. Hardings greatest Doctors saith thus: Si quis vouerit, & continere non possit, & omnia experrus, nihil promouerit, ego illi author essem, non vt proprio Consilio, sed vt authoritate Pontificis saluti suæ consulat per Matrimonium: If any man haue vowed, and cannot containe, and hauing assaied all meanes, yet be neuer the neere, I would aduise him, that he should prouide for the safety of his Soule by Marriage: And yet not of his owne Counsell, but by licence and authority of the Pope. Alphonsus Philippica 19.

Vowes.

Likewise Thomas of Aquine saith, Potest contingere, quòd in aliquo casu sit, vel simpliciter malum, vel inutile, vel Maioris boni impeditiuum, & ideo necesse est, quod determinetur, in tali casu, Votum non esse seruandum: It may happen, that in some case a Vow may be either vtterly ill or vnprofitable, or an hinderance vnto some other good thing of more weight. And therefore it must of necessitie be determined, that in such a case, a Vow ought not to be kept. Thom. 2. 2. qu. 88. Artic. 10.

Therefore it was thus Decreed in the Councell of Toledo: Non est seruandum Sacramentum, quòd malè, & incautè promittitur: A Vow ill, and vnaduisedly promised, ought not to be kept. Conc. Toletan. 8. Can. 2.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Here M. Iewel alleged the sayings of sundry holy Fathers, counselling those, that either cannot, or wil not keepe Chastity, to take the remedy, that God hath ordained, that is to say, to Marry. Which Counsell is vnderstanded to be giuen vnto them, that haue made no Vow at all to the contrary. The answer. How then, M. Harding, if you be not able to keepe Chastity? Is your Vow sufficient to make you able? or will you keepe your Vow and liue in filthinesse? Or, if you so liue, shall you be excused by your Vow? S. Paul saith, Fornicatours, and Aduouterers the Lord will iudge: They shall haue no part in the Kingdome of Christ and God. Woe be to that Vow, that worketh the destruction of the Soule. M. Harding. 294. a.

But (you say) this Counsell is giuen to them, that haue made no Vow. Thus you say, and yet you know, you say vntruly. Behold the Authorities: The words be plaine: The holie Fathers spake expresly of them, that haue Vowed. Let S. Cyprian be an example for the rest. Thus he saith: Quod si se ex Fide Christo dicauerint, pudicè, & castè sine vlla fabula perseuerent, &c. Sin autem perseuerare nolunt, vel non possunt, melius est, vt nubant, &c. If they haue in faith Vowed themselues to Christ, let them continue Chastely and honestly without guile, &c. But, if they will not or cannot continue, better it is for them to marry, then with their pleasures to fall into the fire of Hell. Behold M. Harding, S. Cyprian speaketh namely of them that haue Vowed themselues to Christ. Vnto them he directeth his Counsell: Of such he saith: It is better for them to Marry. M. Harding. 294. a Cyprian. Lib. 1. epist. 11.

You say, S. Cyprian speaketh of them that haue made no Vowes: S. Cyprian himselfe saith, He speaketh of them that haue made a Vow. And must we beleeue you before S. Cyprian? Why should you with such vntruths and vanities deceiue the worlde?

Yet notwithstanding you tell vs, contrarie to all that S. Cyprian hath taught you: If a man haue once made a Vow, though hee bee not able to liue Chaste, yet he may in no wise Marrie; That is to say, he must liue in Fornication or other Filthinesse. S. Paul saith, If they liue not Chastely, let them Marrie: better it is to Marrie, then to Burne. But by your aduice, we must take S. Pauls words, and turne them backeward, and say thus: Marry not, though you liue vnchastly: Better it is to burne in Concupiscence, then to marry. ☜ ☞

Here, M. Harding, ye cry out in your inordinate heate: Fleshly Gospellers: Euangelicall Vow-breakers: Impure Bigamine. Filthy railing rabble. Lordaines: Strumpets. and I wot not what: as if this were the onely way to winne the Victory. Vnto this kinde of eloquence I will make you none other answer, then that Demetrius sometime made vnto Lysimachus: Scortum apud nos modestius viuit quàm apud vos Penelope: One of these whom it liketh you to call Strumpets, liueth more soberly amongst vs, then doth amongst you your Chaste Penelope.

It appeareth by S. Augustine, M. Harding, that your error is ancient, and began long agoe. For he saith, that euen then in his time there were some that maintained the same. But he answered them then, as we doe you now. They spake fondly and vnaduisedly, and vnderstood not what they said. His words be these: Qui dicunt, talium Nuptias non esse Nuptias, sed potius Adulteria, mihi non videntur satis acutè ac diligenter considerare quid dicant: They that say, The Marriage of such men or women (as haue vowed Chastity) is no Marriage, but rather Aduoutery, seeme vnto me not to consider discreetly and wisely what they say. And againe: Fit per hanc minùs consideratam opinionem, vt cùm volunt eas separatas reddere Continentiæ, faciant Maritos earum Adulteros Veros, cùm, suis Vxoribus viuis, alteras duxerint: It commeth to passe by this Vnaduised Opinion, that whereas they will remoone these women, that so haue Vowed, from their Husbands, and force them to continue in their Single Life, they make the Husbands of them Aduouterers indeed, in case they Marry againe, their owne Wiues being still aliue. Aug. de Bono Viduitatis, cap. 10. In eod. Capite.

Thus therefore, M. Harding, you may imagine, S. Augustine saith vnto you as as he did vnto them: Ye ſpeake fondly and vnadviſedly, and vnderſtand not what ye ſpeake.

Dorman fo. 16. And yet one of your Companions there telleth vs, That hee is vndoubtedly the Diuels Miniſter, that wil ſay (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) that the Marriage of ſuch perſons is true, and very Marriage. Thus by the iudgement of your late Louanian Clergie, S. Auguſtine is become the Miniſter of the Diuell.

Worſe then Aduoutery.

But M. Harding hath further to ſay, that S. Auguſtine called this kind of Marriage Worſe then Aduouterie: Another calleth it Inceſt: and another Sacriledge. That the ancient Fathers haue thus written, it is true, and not denied. Howbeit, good Reader, as I haue partly ſhewed before, theſe, and other like words haue proceded, more of zeale and heat of mind, then of profound conſideration and iudgement of the cauſe. Neither may we alwaies ſtraine ſuch ſayings to the vttermoſt. For, whereas S. Auguſtine ſaith, Such Marriage is worſe then Aduoutry, hee ſaith neuertheleſſe immediately after in the ſame place: It is true, and very Marriage indeed before God and Man, and no Aduoutry. His words be theſe: Non quòd ipſæ Nuptiæ vel talium damnandæ iudicentur. Damnatur Propoſiti fraus: Damnatur fracta Voti Fides, &c. Damnantur tales, non quia coniugalem Fidem Poſteriùs inierunt, ſed quia Continentiæ Primam Fidem irritam fecerunt: Not that the Marriage of ſuch perſons is to be blamed; That defrauding of their purpoſe, and the breach of their Vow is blamed. Such are blamed, not for that they haue entred into the Faith of Matrimony: but for that they haue broken their Firſt Faith or promiſe of continent life. So likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith of a woman, that vſed to paint her face: Etſi impudica circa homines non ſis, tamen corruptis, violatiſque, quæ Dei ſunt, Peior Adultera detineris: Although thou be no euill Woman, as touching men, or the miſuſing of thy body, yet thus colouring & corrupting thy face, which thou haſt of God, thou art worſe then an Aduoutreſſe. Heere by way of compariſon, and in heat of ſpeech, S. Auguſtine ſaith, That painting of the face is worſe then Aduoutry. In like ſenſe S. Cyprian ſaith: Diabolo peior eſt, qui fœminarum aſpectibus feritur: He that is ſtricken or moued with the ſight of Women is worſe then the Diuel. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Multo grauior & Peior eſt Mœchi cauſa, quàm Libellatici: An Aduouterers caſe is worſe, then is the caſe of him that hath betraied the Faith.

Aug. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 4. cap. 21.

Cypr. de Singular. Clericorũ.

Cyprian. lib. 4. epiſt. 2.

Such compariſons, as I haue ſaid, may not well be racked to all purpoſes: but muſt bee taken to farre forth onely, as they were meant. Otherwiſe the ſame S. Cyprian, ſaith: Peius eſt, quàm mœchari, Continentiam ducere criminoſam: To liue vnchaſtely vnder the colour of Chaſte life, (as your Clergy doth) is worſe then an Aduoutery. Heere M. Harding, S. Cyprian ſaith, that your vnchaſte Chaſtity, and coloured vaunt of Virginity, is worſe then Aduoutry.

Cyprian. de Singularitate Clericorum.

So S. Ambroſe, when hee had ſaid, If ſhe haue a mind to Marrie, ſhe committeth Aduoutry, ſhe is made the Handmaid of death; he addeth further as of a greater euill, Si hoc ita eſt, quid de illa dicendum eſt, quæ occulta, & furtiua turpitudine conſtupratur, & fingit ſe eſſe quod non eſt? Bis Adultera eſt: This being ſo, what then ſhall wee ſay of her, that is defiled with ſecret and priuy filthineſſe: and faineth her ſelfe to be, that indeed ſhe is not? She is twice an Aduoutreſſe.

Ambr. ad Virginem Lapſam. cap. 5.

Heere S. Ambroſe calleth your painted Virginity, Double Aduoutery. So S. Chryſoſtome, Virginitas iſta cum Viris plus ab omnibus arguitur, quàm ſtuprum ipſum: This Virginity of women amongſt men, is more reproued of all men, then Fornication it ſelfe.

Chryſ. Tom. 5. Quòd Regulares Fœminæ cũ Viris cohabitẽt.

By theſe few we may the better vnderſtand the place, that M. Harding hath heere alledged of S. Paul vnto Timothy: When they wax wanton againſt Chriſt, they wil marry, hauing damnation, becauſe they haue broken their firſt Faith. Notwithſtanding indeed S. Paul ſpake theſe words, neither of Widowes, nor of Vow breakers: but of the Widowes that were appointed to attend vpon the old and ſicke perſons, and therfore were releeued, and found by the Church.

1. Timoth. 5.

But let vs imagine, as M. Harding would haue vs, that S. Paul ſpake all this of the breach of Widowes. And let Prima Fides, The firſt faith, bee the Vow of Chaſtitie. Howbeit, indeed our Firſt Faith, is the Faith, that we promiſe in Baptiſme, and none other. And ſo S. Hierome ſeemeth to take it. For thus he writeth: Non ſunt digni Fide, qui Primam Fidem irritam fecerunt: Marcionem loquor & Baſilidem: They bee not worthy to be beleeued, that haue forſaken their Firſt Faith: I meane Marcion and Baſilides. Theſe two famous Heretikes Marcion and Baſilides, were not condemned for breaking any Vow of Chaſtity, but for refuſing the Faith of Chriſt, which S. Hierome calleth the Firſt Faith.

Hieronym. in Præm. in epiſt. ad Titum.

S. Paul maketh no mention of any Vow, but onely rebuketh ſuch light and wauering Women, as being of long time found by the charges of the Congregation, purpoſely to releeue the ſicke and the feeble, afterward forſooke both the Congregation and Chriſt too, and became Heathens, and followed the Diuell. For so S. Paul saith: Nonnullæ iam deflexerunt post Satanã: Many such Women are already gone after Satan. But if S. Paul spake this of the breach of Vowes, with what eies then, M. Harding, doe you read his wordes? Or what aduantage can you hope to finde in such authorities, as doe so expresly crie against your selfe? S. Paul saith euen there, in the same place: Vidua eligatur non minor annis sexaginta. Iuniores Viduas reijce. Volo Iuniores Viduas nubere: Liberos gignere: domum administrare: nullam occasionem dare Aduersario, vt habeat maledicendi causam: Let no Widow be chosen vnder threescore yeeres of age. Refuse yong Widowes. I wil, that yong Widowes be Married: bring vp their Children: ouersee their house: and giue no occasion to the aduersary to speake ill. 1. Tim. 5.

If these wordes of S. Paul must needs be taken of Vowes, and none otherwise, why doe you so violently, contrarie to S. Pauls commandement, either force or suffer yong Maides and Girles to receiue these Vowes? Why doe you not stay them vntill they be stricken in age, as S. Paul willeth you, that they may bee therefore yeres olde, before they Vow? It is no reason, ye should in one place claime by one Word and breake so many. Vow annexed, &c.

You say, The Vow of Chastitie is annexed vnto Holy Orders by the ancient Constitution of the Church, and by the Apostles of Christ. For triall of your truth herein, I beseech you, to consider these few in stead of many. Fol. 79. b.

Your owne allowed and principall Doctour Gratian saith thus: Copula Sacerdotalis, vel consanguineorum, nec Legali, nec Euangelica, nec Apostolica, authoritate prohibetur: Priests marriage is not forbidden by anie Authority, either of the Law of Moses, or of the Gospell, or of the Apostles. 26. qu. 2. Sors.

Clemens Alexandrinus saith: Omnes Apostoli Epistolæ, quæ moderationem docent, & continentiam, cùm & de Matrimonio, & de Liberorum procreatione, & de domus administratione innumerabilia præcepta contineant, nunquam tamen honestum, moderatumque Matrimonium prohibuerunt: All the Epistles of the Apostles, which teach sobrietie, and continent life, whereas they containe innumerable Precepts touching Matrimony, bringing vp Children, and gouernment of House, yet they neuer forbade Honest and sober Marriage. Clemens Stromat. lib. 3.

Cardinall Caietanus saith: Nec Ratione, nec Authoritate probari potest, quòd, absolutè loquendo, Sacerdos peccet contrahendo Matrimonium. Nam nec Ordo, in quantum Ordo, nec Ordo, in quantum Sacer, est impeditiuus Matrimonij. Siquidem Sacerdotium non dirimit Matrimonium contractum, siue antè, siue post: secluſis omnibus Legibus Ecclesiasticis: stando tantùm ijs, quę habemus à Christo, & Apostolis: it cannot bee prooued, neither by reason, nor by authority, speaking absolutely, that a Priest sinneth in Marrying a Wife. For neither the Order of Priesthood, in that it is Order, nor the same Order, in that it is Holy, is any hinderance to Matrimony. For Priesthood breaketh not Marriage, whether it be contracted before Priesthood, or afterward: setting all Ecclesiasticall Lawes apart, and standing only vnto those things, that we haue of Christ and his Apostles. Card. Caietan. in Quodlibetis, cont. Lutherũ.

Abbat Panormitane saith: Continentia non est de Substantia Ordinis, nec de Iure Diuino: Single life is not of the Substance of the Order of Priesthood, nor of the Law of God. Panormitan. de Cleric. Coniug. Cùm Olim.

Likewise Antonius saith: Episcopatus ex Natura sua non habet opponi ad Matrimonium: The Office or Degree of a Bishop, of the Substance or Nature of it selfe, is not contrarie to Matrimony. Whereby yee may easily see, M. Harding, how true it is, that you say, The Vow of Chastitie is annexed to holy Orders, and that by the Apostles ancient Constitution. Antonin. in Summa, part. 3. Tit. 1. cap. 21.

But this Order (you say) was taken, for that, hauing the vse of Wedlocke wee cannot pray. And to that end ye allege the authority of S. Paul; where also ye might haue alleged the names and sayings of sundry Fathers. Origen saith: The Holy Ghost in time of Copulation forsaketh a man, yea although he were a Prophet of God. Another saith: Virginitas Sola potest animas hominum præsentare Deo: Onely Virginity is able to present the Soule of a man vnto God. S. Hierome saith: Quotiescunque vxori debitum reddo, orare non possum: As often as I doe my duty to my wife, I cannot pray. And to this purpose Pope Siricius vndiscreetly and fondly abuseth the holy Word of God. Thus he saith: Qui in Carne sunt, Deo placere non possunt: They that be in the Flesh, cannot please God. Orig. in Num. Hom. 6. Extra. De Probationib. in Glossa. Hieron. aduers. Iouin. lib. 1. Inter Decreta Siricij, cap 7. Rom. 8.

These wordes seeme very hard, and sound much to the derogation of Gods Ordinance. And therefore Ignatius S. Iohns Scholar, saith: Si quis Legitimam Commixtionem, & Filiorum Procreationem, Corruptionem, & Coinquinationem vocat, ille habet cohabitatorem Dæmonem Apostatam: If any man call lawfull Copulation and Begetting of Children, Corruption and Filthinesse, hee hath the Diuell that fell from God dwelling within him. Ignatius ad Philadelphie.

Concil. Gangren cap. 4.

In like maner say the learned godly Bishops in the Councell of Gangra: Si quis discernit Presbyterum Coniugatum, tanquam occasione nuptiarum, quòd offerre non debeat, & ab eius Oblatione abstinet, Anathema sit: If any man make difference of a Married Priest, as if he may not minister the Oblation (or holy Communion) because of his Marriage, and abstaineth from his Oblation, accursed be he.

Letteth Praier.

1. Dist. 3. Quoniam.

Likewise it is written in the Councell of Constantinople: Si quis præsumpserit, contra Apostolicos Canones, aliquos Presbyterorum & Diaconorum priuare à Contactu, & Communione legalis vxoris suæ, Deponatur. Similiter & Presbyter, aut Diaconus, qui Religionis causa Vxorem suam expellit, excommunicetur: If any man contrary to the Apostles Canon, presume to remoone either Priest or Deacon from the vse and company of his lawfull wife, let him be Deprined. And in like manner let the Priest or Deacon bee excommunicate, that putteth away his wife vnder the colour of Religion.

1. Corinth. 7.

As touching the place of S. Paul, Defraud not your selues, One another, vnlesse it bee of consent for a season, that ye may attend vnto Fasting and Praier. He speaketh not this of that kind of Praier, that is commonly and daily vsed of all the Faithfull, as well Married as Unmarried, but onely of the Generall and solemne Praier of the whole Congregation, which then, as in time of Persecution, and feare of enemies, was kept only in the night, and all the whole multitude of the Faithfull was charged to be present at the same. At which times it was necessarie, that both the man and the wife should leaue the one the others company, and resort to Praier.

So it is written in the Prophet Ioel, Blow vp the Trumpe in Sion: Proclaime a solemne Fast: Call together a Congregation of the People. Let the Bridegrome leaue his bed: Let the spouse come from her Chamber. Let the Priests, the Ministers of God, weepe betweene the Entrie and the Altar: And let them say, O Lord spare thy people, and giue not ouer thine inheritance vn- to Confusion. Of the like kinde of Generall and Solemne praier, Tertullian saith thus: Quis Solemnibus Paschæ abnoctantem Vxorem securus sustinebit? What man (being an Heathen) can without mistrust, suffer his wife, (being a Christian Woman) to bee away from him at the Solemnitie of the Easter Praier?

Of such Solemne and Seldome meetings, S. Paul speaketh: and not of the Daily, Vsuall and Common Praiers of all Christians.

Augu. de Bono Coniugali, li. 1. cap. 11.

Otherwise, touching the Purity and Holinesse of Married people, S. Augustine saith: Quòd Paulus ait, Quæ innupta est, cogitat ea, quæ sunt Domini, vt sit sancta & Corpore & Spiritu, non sic accipiendum est, vt putemus, non esse Sanctam Corpore Christianam Coniugem Castam. Omnibus quippe Fidelibus dictum est, Nescitis, quoniam Corpora vestra Templum sunt Spiritus Sancti? Sancta sunt etiam Corpora Coniugatorum, fidem sibi, & Domino seruantium: Whereas S. Paul saith, Shee that is vnmarried, thinketh of the things that pertaine vnto the Lord, that shee may be holy both in Body and in Spirit, it may not so bee taken, as though we should thinke a Christian wife liuing Chastely with her husband is not holy in Body. For it is generally said vnto all Faithfull: Know yee not, that your Bodies bee the Temple of the holy Ghost? Therefore if the Man and Wife, keepe their Faith both betweene themselues, and to the Lord, their Bodies are holy.

But these Euangelicall Vowbreakers (saith M. Harding) pretend Paphnutius to bee their Proctour. Whether he be our Proctour, or no, it forceth not greatly. Notwithstanding it is plaine, he was then the onely Proctour for the Truth: and that against the generall consent of all the whole Councell besides. And although he were but One man alone, yet the whole Councell gaue place vnto him. Sozomenus saith, Synodus laudauit sententiam Paphnutij, & nihil ex hac parte sanciuit: sed hoc in vniuscuiusque voluntate, sine vlla Necessitate reliquit: The Councell commended Paphnutius iudgement; and touching this matter of Marriage, made no Decree at all, but left it to each mans owne Will, without any force of Necessitie.

συμφωνοῦντα δὲ καὶ ἑαυτοῖς τοὺς ἰδίους γυναικὸς συνιστᾶν.

Of our side thus much Paphnutius saith: Marriage is Honourable: And the Companie of Man and Wife is (not filthinesse, as these men seeme to say, but) Cleannesse and Chastitie.

But, M. Harding, if the same holy Father Paphnutius weigh so much of your side, as you pretend, wherefore then doth one of your companions of Louaine so lightly, and so disdainfully controle that whole Story, with the vtter discredit and condemnation of the Writers? For thus hath he not doubted to publish his iudgement therin to all the world:

Copus Dialogo 1. Pag 154.

Mihi, nescio quomodo, in dubium venit fides huius Historiæ de Paphnutio. Sunt enim, quæ suspicionem important, eam esse Arianorum, aut Impudicorum hominum Commentum. Tota enim hæc res à Socrate pendet & Sozomeno: quorum alter Nouatianus fuit: alter Theodorum Mopsuestensem à quinta Synodo damnatum magnis laudibus extulit: I know not how, this Story of Paphnutius, seemeth to mee to be of doubtfull credit. For there bee matters, that make me to suspect, that it is but a vaine forged tale, either of the Arian Heretikes, or of some other filthy persons. The whole matter hangeth of Socrates & Sozomenus: Of which two, the one was a Nouatian Heretike: the other highly commendeth Theodorus of Mopsuesta, being condemned by the fifth Councell.

Thus your Fellowes make this whole Story to be but a vain Fable: and the Authors and Writers hereof, Socrates and Sozomenus, to bee Heretikes, Nouatians, Arrians, vnhonest and shamelesse persons. And therefore, I trow, ye will not say, they are your Proctours.

Whereas S. Chrysostome saith, Marriage is so reuerend a thing, that a man may therwith ascend into the holy Throne, and be made a Bishop, notwithstanding hee haue a wife: and that S. Paul suffereth not them that haue twice married, to attaine such a room: By these words, saith M. Harding, Chrysostome condemneth the impure Bigamy of our holy Gospellers. Againe he saith: If this Defender presse vs with Chrysostome, we answer, that although Chrysostom grant, that a Married man may ascend to the holy seat, yet he saith not, that a man may descend from that holy Seat to the Bridebed. For we deny vtterly, that any man, after that he hath receiued holy Orders, may Marrie. Neither can it bee shewed, that the Marriage of such was euer accounted lawfull in the Catholike Church. Chrys. in epist. ad Tit. Hom. 2.

I doubt not, good Reader, but it shall easily appeare, that M. Harding in either of these two parts was foully deceiued. For first Chrysostome, as it is plain by his words, which M. Harding in his translation hath purposely falsified, expoundeth these words of S. Paul, The Husband of one Wife, not of a man, that neuer had but one Wife in all his time, but of a man, that hath but one wife at one time. If M. Harding shall thinke, this Exposition to be strange and vnlikely, let him remember that Chrysostome himselfe thereof writeth thus: Vnius Vxoris Virum. Non hoc, veluti sanciens, dicit, quasi non liceat absq; Vxore Episcopum fieri, sed eius rei modum constituens. Iudæis quippe licitum erat, etiam Secundo Matrimonio iungi, & Duas itidem simul habere Vxores: The Husband of One Wife. S. Paul writeth not this, as making a Law, as if it were not lawfull for a man to bee made a Bishop without a wife: but he appointeth an order in that behalfe. For it was lawfull for the Iewes to bee coupled in the Second Matrimony, and to haue two Wiues at one time. Chry. in epist. 1. ad Timoth. Homil. 10.

In like sort saith S. Hierom: Quidam de hoc loco ita sentiunt: Iudaicæ, inquiunt, Consuetudinis fuit, vel binas vxores habere, vel plures. Et hoc nunc volunt esse Præceptum, ne is, qui Episcopus eligendus est, vno tempore Duas pariter Vxores habeat: Touching this place, some men thinke thus: By the custome of the Iewes it was lawfull for a man to haue Two Wiues, or moe at once. And this they take to be the Apostles Commandement, that hee, that is to be chosen a Bishop, haue not Two wiues, or moe together at one time. Againe he saith: Diaconi sint vnius Vxoris viri: Non, vt si non habuerint, ducant: Sed ne duas habeant: Let the Deacons be the Husbands of One wife: not that they should needs Marrie a Wife, if they haue none: but that they should not haue two wiues together. Likewise saith Cardinall Caietane: Apostolus Episcopis permittit Vnam Vxorem, cæteris plures: The Apostle suffereth a Bishop to haue One Wife. Others he suffereth to haue moe. Hieron. in epist. ad Titum, ca. 1. Hier. in epist. 1 ad Tim. cap. 3. Catherinus cõtra errores Caietan. Error. 99

And to this purpose, Isidorus seemeth to say, Castimoniam non Violati Corporis perpetuò obseruare studeant: aut certè Vnius Matrimonij vinculo fœderentur: Let them study to keepe and continue the Chastity of their Body vndefiled: or else, let them be coupled with the band of one Marriage. Dist. 23. his igitur.

Of such a one, Pope Leo wrote sometime vnto the Bishop of Mauritania: Sicut ad nos relatum est, Duarum simul est Maritus Vxorum: As wee are enformed, he is at one time the Husband of Two wiues. And therefore he addeth his iudgement of him: Priuandum honore decernimus: We think him meet to be deprined of his promotion. Leo, ad Episcopos Mauritan.

Of this kinde of Second Marriage Chrysostome speaketh, I meane, of hauing two wiues aliue together: and not of Marrying the Second wife after the death of the Former. And therefore he saith: Secundam quidem accipere secundùm Præceptum Apostoli licitum est: Secundùm autem Veritatis rationem Verè Fornicatio est. Sed cùm, permittente Deo, Publice, & licenter permittitur, fit Honesta Fornicatio: To take the Second wife (while the first is aliue) according to the Apostles commandement, it is lawfull: But by the iudgement of the Truth, indeed it is Fornication. But while as by Gods permission it is openly & lawfully suffered, the Fornication is made Honest. The last clause the Glosse there expoundeth thus: Fornicatio cum ea, quam permisit Moses post repudiatam assumi: Fornication, I meane, with her, whom Moses suffered to be taken to wife, after the Diuorce of the First. 31. Que 1. Hac ratione.

Thus therefore S. Chrysostome saith, that such a man as had two wiues together at one time, or was Diuorced from One Wife, and had married another, might not be chosen to be a Bishop. For otherwise, Tertullian saith vnto the Bishops of the Catholike Church:

Apud

Tertullian. de Monogamia. Apud vos Epiſcopi ſunt Digami: There be Biſhops among you, (he meaneth among the Catholikes) that haue married two wiues, the one after the death of the other.

Chryſ. in Epiſt. ad Tit. Hom. 2. τῶ ἐστιλβωμένω. If all this will not ſuffice, I referre my ſelfe to Chryſoſtomes owne wordes: thus hee writeth: S. Paul reſtraineth vnchaſte perſons, not permitting them that haue married two wiues, to be choſen to the gouernment of the Church. His reaſons be theſe: Nam qui vxori quæ deceſſit (à ſe) benouolentiam nullam ſeruaſſe deprehenditur, quo pacto poteſt ille eſſe bonus Præceptor Eccleſiæ? Imò quibus criminibus non ſubijcitur indies? Noſtis enim, quòd etſi per Leges ſecundæ nuptiæ permittuntur, tamen ea res accuſationibus multis patet: For he that is found to haue borne no good will vnto his wife (not that is dead, but) that is gone from him, how can he be a meet Maſter for the Church of God? Nay rather, to what quarrels and accuſations (by meane of theſe two wiues) ſhall he not be ſubiect euery day? For you know, although by the Law the Marriage of the ſecond Wife (after the Diuorce of the firſt) be ſuffered, yet the matter lieth open to many offences.

Marriage in Holy Orders.

It appeareth (ſaith Chryſoſtome) that he bare no good will towards his former wife, not that now is dead, but that is diuorced, and ſo departed from him. And therefore often times grow many accuſations and grieſes betweene the wiues, the children, the friends, and others, for parting of goods, for reckoning of Dowries, and other like quarrels. For to haue ſpoken of good will, or affection towards the former wife, being dead, it had been impertinent, and to no purpoſe.

Thus much touching Chryſoſtomes iudgement vpon theſe wordes of S. Paul, The Huſband of one Wife. Notwithſtanding, I deny not but certaine other ancient and learned Fathers haue taken it otherwiſe.

Laſt of all, M. Harding vnawares falleth into the ſame Negatiue Diuinitie that hee ſo often, and ſo much abhorreth. For thus he ſaith: We denie vtterly that any man after that he hath receiued Holy Orders, may marry. Neither can it be ſhewed that the marriage of ſuch was euer accounted lawfull in the Catholike Church. If this tale be true, then be all the Greeke Prieſts Votaries, as well as the Latines. But it is noted vpon the Decrees: Græci continentiam non promittunt, vel Tacitè, vel Expreſſè: The Greekes make no Promiſe of Continent or Single life, neither Secretly, nor Expreſly. And in the Councell holden at Ancyra it is concluded thus: Diaconi quicunque Ordinantur, ſi in ipſa Ordinatione proteſtati ſunt, & dixerunt velle ſe Coniugio Copulari, quia ſic manere non poſſunt, hi, ſi poſtmodum Vxores duxerint, in Miniſterio maneant: Propterea quòd Epiſcopus illis licentiam dederit: Deacons, as many as be Ordered, if at the time of receiuing Orders they made Proteſtation, and ſaid that they would Marry, for that they finde not themſelues able ſo to continue without Marriage, if they afterward Marry, let them continue in the Miniſtery: foraſmuch as the Biſhop hath giuen them licence. M. Harding, I trow, will not deny, but Deaconſhip is one of the Holy Orders. Yet Deacons at the time of their Conſecration, making Proteſtation ſolemnly before the Biſhop, were licenſed by this Councell to Marry at any time afterward: and the ſame Marriage, contrary to M. Hardings poſition, was euermore in the Catholike Church accounted lawfull.

Diſt. 31. Quotiam. In Margine. Concil. Ancyran. Can. 9.

M. Harding fol. 298. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. This prooueth not that Deacons did Marry, nor that any Biſhop euer gaue them leaue to Marry. The Anſwer. What then doth it prooue, M. Harding? Or to what purpoſe was it thus Decreed by the Councell? Whether Deacons Married or no, I will not ſtriue. Certainly it appeareth hereby, it was lawfull for them to Marrie. Yea although they were within Holy Orders, and that by the Authoritie and warrant of this Councell. ☜

Diſt. 31. Aliter. Gloſſ. Diſt. 31. Aliter. So ſaith Pope Steuen: Græcorum Sacerdotes, Diaconi, aut Subdiaconi Matrimonio Copulantur: The Greeke Prieſts, Deacons, or Subdeacons, are Coupled in Matrimonie. Vpon which wordes the Gloſſe noteth thus: Multi ex hac litera dixerunt, quòd Orientales poſſunt contrahere in Sacris Ordinibus: Many haue ſaid, vpon occaſion of this text, that the Prieſts of the Eaſt Church (contrary to that M. Harding ſo certainly heere aſſureth vs) may Marry, being within Holy Orders.

M. Harding fol. 299. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. If you had rehearſed the whole Decree, as you found it, you had mard your cauſe, and plaid the ſimple proctour, &c. And whereas you allege the Gloſſe for you, you make all that be able to read the place, witneſſes of your impudencie. Whereas the Decree hath matrimonio Copulantur, the Gloſſe expoundeth it thus, id eſt, Copulato vtuntur. As for the other wordes of the Gloſſe, many, vpon occaſion of this text, haue ſaid, that they of the Eaſt Church may marry within Holy Orders, it is not the minde of the Gloſſe, but as ſome ſay, &c. The anſwer. You ſay, If I had rehearſed the whole Decree, I had marred my cauſe. Neuer a whit, M. Harding. A little before I rehearſed it whole: and yet is the cauſe nothing empaired. The Gloſſe, you ſay, is againſt me. I grant you: Weigh better my wordes: I deny it not. What moueth you thus to cry out, Impudencie and Corruption of Gloſſes? Lay our wordes together,

M.

M. Harding. I say none otherwise, but as the Glosse hath said. I haue neither added, nor diminished, nor altered or changed one syllable. I beseech you, doth not the Glosse say thus: Multi ex hac litera dixerunt, quòd Orientales possunt contrahere in Sacris Ordinibus? Vpon occasion of this Text, many men haue said, that the Priests of the East Church may marry, notwithstanding they bee within Holy Orders. And doe not I from syllable to syllable say the same? Yee deale vncourteously, M. Harding. Yee are to blame, with such vpbraidings and outcries so much to abuse your simple Reader. But you say, The Glosse is directly against mee. So is the same Glosse directly against the ancient Councell of Ancyra before alleged. Will you therefore say, The Councell was Impudent? Compare them well together. You shall finde them plaine contrary: The Glosse directly against the Councell. Now iudge you, M. Harding, whether of these yee will beleeue, either the Councell, or your Glosse. Howbeit, let the Councell giue place: and let Glosses preuaile. Yet, not long after, the same Glosse saith thus: Dicunt, quòd olim Sacerdotes poterant contrahere, ante Siricium: They say, that in Old times, before the time of Pope Siricius, it was lawfull for Priests to Marry. And Pope Siricius was wellneere foure hundred yeares after Christ. To conclude, I haue not any way corrupted one syllable of your Glosse. The words thereof be cleare: Vpon occasion of this Text, many men haue said, that the priests of the East Church may Marry, notwithstanding they be in Holy Orders.

Athanasius saith: Multi quoque ex Episcopis Matrimonia non inierunt: Monachi contrà Parentes liberorum facti sunt: Many of the Bishops (he saith not all, but Many) haue not Married. (By which words he giueth vs to vnderstand that some haue Married.) Contrariwise Monkes haue become Fathers of Children.

Cassiodorus writeth thus: In illo tempore ferunt Martyrio vitam finisse Eupsychium Cæsariensem (Episcopum) ducta nuper Vxore, dum adhuc quasi Sponsus esse videretur: At that time they say Eupsychius (the Bishop) of Cæsaria, died in Martyrdome, hauing Married a Wife a little before, being as yet in maner a new married man.

Cassiodor. li. 6. cap. 14.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Fie vpon such shamelesse falsifiers. O lamentable state: Such false Prophets: This shamelesse lie, &c. The truth is, good Reader, neither Cassiodorus wrote thus, nor Eupsychius was euer Bishop of Cæsaria, nor of any other place, nor so much as a Priest, Deacon, or Subdeacon. The Writer of the said Storie, which wee haue of this Blessed Martyr Eupsychius, is Sozomenus the Greeke: who with the Ecclesiasticall Story of Socrates and Theodoretus, was translated into Latine by one Epiphanius Scholasticus, out of which three Cassiodorus gathered the Abridgement that wee haue vnder the name of the Tripartite Historie. The place truly repeated hath these words: In illo tempore ferunt vitam finisse Martyrio Basilium Ecclesiæ Ancyranæ Presbyterum, & Eupsychium Cæsariensem Cappadociæ, ducta nuper vxore, cùm adhuc quasi sponsus videretur. Heere is no mention made, that Eupsychius was the Bishop of Cæsaria. The Storie, as wee haue it in Latine of Epiphanius turning, calleth him onely Eupsychium Cæsariensem Cappadociæ, that is to say, Eupsychius a man of Cæsaria that is in Cappadocia. For thus hee reporteth of him in the Greeke: Εὐψύχιον Καισαρείας τῆς ὑπερτίου: Eupsychium Cæsariensem Cappadociæ Patricium: as much to say, Eupsychius of Cæsaria in Cappadocia, a Noble man, or one of the Lords of the Citie. Thus is Eupsychius, whom M. Iewell hath made a Bishop (as much as hee is himselfe) found to be a Lay Gentleman, or Noble man of the Citie of Cæsaria. Because M. Iewell knew thus much right well, contrarie to the custome he vseth at other times, he dissembled the Greeke Originall, and thought hee might better father this shamefull lie vpon Cassiodorus, meaning the Latine translation of Epiphanius. And to helpe the matter, hee stickt not to put in this word (Episcopum, Bishop) of his owne, and so calleth him boldly, Eupsychius the Bishop of Cæsaria. Let these men haue leaue thus to corrupt and falsifie the Fathers, and by them they shall bee able to proue what they list. The Answer. Fie, M. Harding: why should you thus fare, and torment your selfe without greater cause? Take your owne demand: Let it bee, that Eupsychius was no Bishop: yet is it such Impudencie, or False Prophecie, to thinke that hee was a Bishop? Why more then that one of your fellowes of Louaine saith, That Oza the poore Leuite was a King? An error yee may say it was: But False Prophesie ye cannot call it. Albeit, whether Eupsychius were a Bishop or no, I will not striue. They were both wise and learned, that so haue thought: and if I may bee so bold, M. Harding, to tell you the truth, he hath neither wit, nor learning, that maintaineth the contrary. The words of Cassiodorus, or Epiphanius Scholasticus, seeme very plaine: Ferunt Vitam finisse Martyrio Basilium Ecclesiæ Ancyranæ Presbyterum, & Eupsychium Cæsariensem Cappadociæ, &c. Howsoeuer it were, Eupsychius, for ought that you know, M. Harding, might well haue beene a Bishop: But Oza could in no wise be a King.

Dorman fol. 24.

As for the reasons ye bring to the contrary, to proue that Eupsychius was no Bishop, Cæsariensis. they weigh but little. Thus you say: He is called Eupsychius Cæsariensis, Eupsychius one of Cæsaria: you say, He is called a Noble man, borne of an ancient House, and of Noble Parentage. What then, M. Harding? Will you therefore conclude, hee was no Bishop? What Logike may this be? We say commonly, Augustinus Hipponensis: Eusebius Cæsariensis: Hosius Cardubensis: Ambrosius Mediolanensis. As for Nicephorus, whom you so vnaduisedly say, I haue foulely belied, as he in this place saith, Eupsychius Cæsariensis, not naming him Bishop, so in mother place he saith, Protogenes Sardicensis, Marcellus Ancyranus, Gregorius Perinthius, Narcissus Irenopolitanus, Acacius Cæsariensis, Gregorius Laodicensis, &c. neuer calling any of them by the name of Bishop: and yet, I trow, ye will not deny but they were Bishops, this maner of writing notwithstanding. Againe, S. Ambrose was a Noble man, of Consular Dignity: yet was he the Bishop of Millaine. S. Gregorie was Senatorius, a Noble man of the Dignitie or Degree of a Counseller: yet was he the Bishop of Rome. And not to seke farre abroad for examples, Osmund was the Earle of Dorset: Robert Neuill, Richard Beauchampe, and Edmund Audley were Noblemen, of Noble Parentage, and Lords brethren: yet were they all Bishops of Sarisburie. The Pope himselfe of late yeres hath bene called, Lord of Lords, and King of Kings: shall we therefore thinke he was no Bishop? I weigh not the matter, M. Harding: I weigh only your reasons. If this example of Eupsychius like you not, wee haue others sufficient to proue that good men haue Married within Holy Orders. S. Hierome saith: Hodiè quoque multi Sacerdotes habent Matrimonia: Euen now adaies many Priests liue in Wedlocke. And to answer you with like order and forme of words, as Epiphanius saith, Eupsychius Cæsariensis Cappadociæ, ducta nuper vxore, dum adhuc quasi sponsus videretur, &c. Euen so saith Vincentius of Phileas, a Bishop in Ægypt: Phileas de Ciuitate Thmui, Nobili genere, & non paruis opibus, suscepto Episcopatu, vxorem habuit & liberos: Phileas of the City of Thmuis, a Noble man, and of great riches, being consecrate Bishop, had wife and children. He was a Noble man, and had wife and Children, and yet, that notwithstanding, was a Bishop.

Vincent. lib. 13. cap. 25.

But you will say, It appeareth not hitherto by any thing that is yet alleged, that Eupsychius was a Bishop. What of that, M. Harding? You know there haue been many Bishops in the world, of whom it would bee hard for you to make certain proofe that they were Bishops. Yet notwithstanding, for your pleasure, and for some satisfaction of your friends, that you may the better vnderstand your errour, and know that this Eupsychius was a Bishop indeed, I pray you read the first Oration of Athanasius against the Arians. There shall you finde these words among others: Scripta Syluestri, & Protogenis Episcoporum Daciæ: & Leontij & Eupsychij Episcoporum Cappadociæ: The Writings of Leontius and Eupsychius Bishops of Cappadocia. Marke well these words, M. Harding: Eupsychius a Bishop of Cappdocia. Athanasius saith: Eupsychius was a Bishop, and sheweth the Countrey of his See. You say: Eupsychius was a Noble man, of ancient Parentage. And therefore you tell vs, he was no Bishop. Athanasius knew Eupsychius, or might haue knowen him: for they liued both in one age. And Athanasius wrote an Epistle specially vnto him, as it may appeare in the Second Councell of Nice: In which Councell he is called Eupsychius Præsbyter Cæsariæ: Eupsychius a Priest of Cæsaria, as at that time as yet being no Bishop, but only a Priest. But you, M. Harding, neither knew him euer, nor could euer haue knowne him. And yet will you looke to haue more credit heerein, then that godly and learned Father Athanasius, that wrote vnto him, and either knew him familiarly, or might haue knowne him? Athanasius spake the truth: you gee only by ghesse. Athanasius spake in simplicity: you speake of affection, as a party. Now may your indifferent Reader iudge, whether of both he may better beleeue, either you, or the Ancient Father Athanasius. You say, Eupsychius was no Bishop: Athanasius saith, Eupsychius was a Priest. Againe he saith, Eupsychius was a Bishop. And lest your Reader should think there lieth some error in the name, and that Athanasius meant one Eupsychius, and you another, he sheweth you also of the place of his Bishoprike, and saith he was Bishop of Cappadocia. Now the same Eupsychius, of whom we speake, was the Bishop of Cæsaria: and Cæsaria was the chiefe Citie of Cappadocia. Thus haue wee found (say you) that Eupsychius was a Lay Gentleman, or a Noble man of Cæsaria: but neither Priest, nor Bishop.

Eupsychius a Priest.

Conc. Nicen. 2. Actio. 6. Pag. 82. Coloniæ.

But indeed we haue found that Eupsychius was both a Nobleman, and a Martyr, and a Priest, and a Bishop too. The Name, the Time, the Countrey, the See, and the Citie doe all agree. And this same Eupsychius, being a Bishop, married a Wife, and at the time of his Martyrdome was a new married man. As good a Bishop (say you) as Mr Iewell. This is your pleasure M. Harding. Would God M. Iewell were as good as hee. Take heede for your credits sake: your friends will espie you. There wanteth Consideration and Sobriety in your doings. Yee auouch ouer boldely before you know. You say, Fie vpon such shameleſſe Falſifiers: O lamentable ſtate: Such Falſe Prophets: Such ſhameleſſe Lies. These be your owne words: Yee haue pleasure in them. Beware leſt your friends turne them ouer vpon your ſelfe.

Marriage in Holy Orders.

Likewise M. Harding might haue found it noted in his owne Gloſſe: Dicunt quòd olim Sacerdotes poterant contrahere, ante Siricium: They say that in old times, before Pope Siricius, (which was about foure hundred yeers after Christ) it was lawfull for Priests to Marrie. Dist. 84. Cum in Præterito, in Gloss.

But wee shall haue occasion to speake hereof more hereafter. In the mean season, good Christian Reader, by these few, as by a taste, thou maist easily iudge how true it is that M. Harding telleth thee, that Marriage in them that had receiued Holy Orders was neuer thought lawfull in the Catholike Church.

The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuision 2.

And as Sozomenus saith of Spiridion; and, as Nazianzene saith of his owne Father, we say, that a good and a diligent Bishop doth serue in the Ministerie neuer the worse for that he is Married, but rather the better, and with more ableneſſe to doe good.

M. Harding.

Were it not that the weight of these matters required an vpright and plaine dealing, for Ciuilities sake, I could be content sometimes to spare you, and where yee make manifest lies, to vse a softer word, and terme them fictions. But now if I tell you that you vse your accustomed Figure Pseudologia, which is lying in plaine English, I trust you will bear with my plainnesse: amend your own fault, and consider the Power of Truth, that causeth me to be so bold with you. This I (a) am sure of, that neither Sozomenus, nor Gregorie Nazianzene, nor Eusebius Lib. 10. Cap. 5. as you haue caused your Bookes, both Latine, and English to be noted in the Margent, where ye mistake Eusebius for Ruffinus: (b) nor Nazianzene either in Monodia, as you note also in the Margent, nor in the funerall Oration that he made of his Father, hath any such saying as ye report of them. For how could they say, that a Bishop serueth in his Ministerie neuer the worse, but rather the better, and with more ableneſſe to doe good, for that he is married, the Scripture being so plaine to the contrarie? What, weene yee they were either so ignorant, or so forgetfull, or so much inclined to promote your Carnall Doctrine of Priests Marriages, as to say so, notwithstanding that S. Paul writeth to the Corinthians? Saith he not of them that be married, that such shall haue tribulation of the flesh? Saith he not, He that is without a Wife, careth for the things of our Lord, how he may please God: Or him that hath a Wife, saith he not, that he careth for the things that be the worlds, how hee may please his Wife, and is diuided? Finally, saith hee not, I tell you this thing for your profit, not to tangle you in a snare, but for that which is honest and comely Vnto you, and that which may giue you readineſſe to pray to God without let? Wherefore recant for shame that foule errour, that a Bishop serueth the better in his Ministerie, and is the more able to doe good, for that he is Married.

(a) M. Harding is assured beefore he know.

(b) an vnaduised vntruth: read the Answer.

S. Paul writeth thus, not of Priests and Bishops, but of all other Christian men.

Such men, such Doctrine: fleshly men, fleshly Doctrine.

Now therefore see you not how great is your impudencie, in that you lie your selfe, and father such a foule lie vpon Sozomenus, and that light of the world, in his time, Gregorie Nazianzene? The words of Sozomenus bee these: ἐγένετο γὰρ ὥσπερ ἀγχίστις, γαμετὴν μὲν παῖδας ἔχων· ἀλλ' ὅμως οὔτο τὰ θεῖα χείρων: that is to say, Spiridion was a Husbandman, hauing wife and children, and yet for all that, he was neuer the worse about Gods seruice. Of this place, we grant, yee may may say with Sozomenus, that Spiridion serued God neuer the worse for that he was married. But how, and whereof gather ye that he serued God the better, and was more able to do good because of his Marriage? Spiridion obtained that Priuiledge through (c) especiall grace, by his exceeding vertue, which is granted to few. And the Priuileges of a few make not a Law for all in generall, ye know, as Nazianzene saith.

M. Hardings modeſtie.

Neuer the worse.

(c) Vntruth. For Chrysostome maketh the case Generall.

Furthermore, if the words of Sozomenus that yee build your Carnall Doctrine vpon, be well examined, ye shall finde that he maketh more against you, then with you. For signifiing that he had Wife and Children, he addeth: ἀλλ' ὅμως οὔτο τὰ θεῖα χείρων: Yet for all that hee was neuer the worse about Gods seruice: This reuocation or exception negatiue (yet for all that, &c.) implieth a confession affirmatiue to the contrarie.

Neither maketh the place of Gregory Nazianzene any whit for you more then this of Sozomenus doth, whose words bee these after the translation of Raphael Volateranus, varying much from the Greeke: (d) Hic Basily Pater, Basilius item appellatus, etsi matrimonio se vinxit, ita tamen in eo vixit, vt nihil propterea ad Perfectam Virtutem, ac Philosophiam consequendam impediretur: Basils Father, who was named also Basil, although he put himselfe in bonds of Matrimony, yet he liued so heerein, as hee was letted no whit from the attaining of perfect Vertue, and holy Knowledge. Were not Marriage a let and hinderance to perfection requisite in a Bishop, this learned man could not righly haue said, Ita tamen in eo vixit, &c. Yet for all that he liued so, &c.

Right so it is easie to put him from the hold hee taketh of S. Chrysostome, by Chrysostome himselfe. For leſt any man should thinke, whereas S. Paul saith, a Bishop ought to bee the Husband of one Wife, that the same order continueth still in the Church, thereto he saith in his second Homily, De Pœnitentia Job: Non ea ratione, quòd nunc id in Ecclesia obseruetur. Oportet enim omni prorsus Castitate Sacerdotem ornatum esse: S. Paul (saith he) required this, not in consideration that the same be now obserued in the Church. For it behoueth a Bishop to be garnished with all manner of Chastitie.

Read the Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Hære commeth M. Harding in aloft with Io Triumph, as hauing beaten downe all the world vnder his fæt: and as being already in sure possession of the Victorie, hee crieth out, Impudencies, Lewd Lies, Foule Faults, and pretty Fittons: and full terribly chargeth vs, like a Conquerour, to render our selues, and to recant for shame. This new courage is suddenly blowen vpon him, for that he thinketh wæ haue intruded vpon his office, and as he saith, haue corrupted and falsified the Holy Fathers. But it were a worthy matter to know wherein. For soth wæ say, by the report of Sozomenus, and Gregorius Nazianzenus, that Spiridion, and Gregorie father vnto Nazianzene, being both married Bishops, notwithstanding their Marriage, were neuer the worse able to doe their Ecclesiasticall Offices, but rather the better.

Marriage helpeth.

Hære M. Harding of himselfe and freely confesseth, these Holy Fathers were neuer the worse able to doe their Offices. For so much the words of Sozomenus doe report: Νικῶ δεῖα χάρις. But, that they were the better able to do their Offices, because of their Wiues, that he denieth vtterly: and hærein he saith, We are Corrupters and Falsifiers of the Fathers. And thus the whole difference that is betwæne M. Harding and vs, touching this matter, standeth onely in these two poore words, Rather the better, and Neuer the worse.

Now, gentle Reader, that thou maist bee the better able to iudge betweene vs, I beseech thee indifferently to weigh these words.

Nazia. in Epitaphio Patris: Ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν ἀρχὴς γέγονεν, ἴσως τι καὶ λόγῳ κρεῖττον· τὰ πράγματα δὲ ἑαυτῆς ἄρχουσα τῆς εὐσεβείας, καὶ διδάσκουσα τὰ πρέποντα καὶ διδαχθεῖσα.

Gregorie Nazianzene heereof, that is, of the helpe that his Father, being the Bishop of Nazianzum, had by his wife, writeth thus: Illa quæ data est Adamo, &c. Eua that was giuen to Adam, for an Helper, for asmuch as it was not good for Man to be alone, in stead of a Helper, became his Enemie. It followeth: Meo autem patri, mater mea data illi à Deo, non tantùm Adiutrix facta est, id enim minùs esset mirum, sed etiam Dux & Princeps, Verbo Factoque inducens illum ad res optimas. Et alijs quidem in rebus quamuis optimum esset subditam esse Viro, propter iura Coniugij, tamen in Pietate non verebatur seipsam illi Magistram exhibere: My Mother being giuen to my Father of God, became, not only his Helper, for that had beene no great wonder, but also was his Leader and Captaine, both by Word, and by Deed, training him vnto the best. And albeit in other things it were best, for her to be subiect vnto her husband, for the Right of Marriage, yet in Religion and Godlinesse shee doubteth not to become his Mistresse.

These words, M. Harding, be plaine, and clære, and without fitton. Gregory Nazianzene saith, that his owne Mother was vnto his Father, the Bishop of Nazianzum, a Helper, and a Directour, both by Word and Deed, to lead him to the best: and that in all other things being his inferiour, yet in Religion and Godlinesse shee was his Mistresse. And yet must all these words, so open, so plaine, so cleare, bæ drowned with your simple distinction of Rather the better, and Neuer the worse? May wee not now allow you with fauour to take all these that ye cal Fittons, Lies, Corruptions, and Falsifyings, home againe vnto your selfe?

If you neuer read these thimgs before, it is no great maruell. You must remember, All truth may not be measured be your reading.

Addition. ☞

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. How make you not all men witnesses of your Falshood and impudencie? The store of your Notebookes, which Illyricus, Frier Ball, and certaine others of that cut haue made to your hand. You allege out of Gregorie Nazianzene, that his Mother was to his Father an Helper, a Guide, a Leader, a Captaine, by Word and by Deed training him to the best: Yea further, that in Religion and Godlinesse shee was not ashamed to become his Mistrisse. All this is true, M Iewell, I confesse: And yet it prooueth not your purpose at all. How so? Marke Reader, and consider of it well, how M. Iewell beguileth thee. Heere lieth the deceit, in that he maketh S. Gregorie, Nazianzenes Father, Bishop of Nazianzum, when he had such helpe of his Mother, &c. It is a weake flocke, they say, of sheepe, where an Ewe beareth the bell, &c. Thus then is it. Gregorie the elder, S. Gregorie Nazianzenes Father, was a married man long before he was a Bishop: and before he was married to his wife, and also long after, hee was an Infidell. Shee, S. Gregories Mother, contrariwise was a Christian woman, borne of Christian Parents, &c. Heereby it is made cleere to all men how his Father was holpen by his wife, not as being a Bishop, as M. Iewell doth vntruly say, but as yet being an Infidell. The Answer. It is true indeed. Nazianzene vttereth these things as done by his Mother before his Father was conuerted. Therefore you say, They perteine nothing to the time that followed afterward, when his Father was a Bishop. And why soe, M. Harding? Is this your best Logike of Louaine? Or will you teach vs to reason thus: Gregorie Nazianzenes wife was a helper vnto him before his Conuersion: Ergo, afterward shee did not, or could not helpe him? But this is one of your greatest graces: Whatsoeuer you imagine may serue you to anie aduantage, yee take it, and holde it as your owne, either as sufficientlie proued, because you speake it, or else, as confessed by your Aduersary. Then you spread out your Banner, and blow vp your triumph, and make your selfe merry. Nazianzene declaring the time of his Fathers Infidelity before his Conuersion, saith, That his Wife, being a Christian woman, Watched, Fasted, Sang Psalmes and praied for her Husband, and was carefull for him. Will you therfore say, that after he was once conuerted, shee gaue all ouer, and Watched, and Fasted, and Sang Psalmes, and Praid no more? Verily as shee praid for her Husband, so was shee a helper to her Husband, not onely while hee was an Infidell, but also all the time of his life. And why not? What wanted there in her? Good will, or Vnderstanding? As touching good will, Nazianzene compareth her with Sara, the mother of all faithful women: and saith, That in godlinesse she passed all others. Touching her skill and vnderstanding, he saith: As the Sunne beames are faire and cleare in the morning, and grow brighter and warmer towards noone, euen so my Fathers wife shewing forth the pleasant first fruits of godliness at the beginning, afterward shined out with greater light. Thus we see her light and ability grew more and more, and increased daily. And therfore Nazianzene saith vnto her, in the end of the same Oration: You take it not well, Mother, thus to be counselled at my hands. I blame you not. For you your selfe haue giuen counsell vnto many, whom long time hath led to seeke your wisdome. So saith S Paul: I beseech thee, faithfull Yokefellow, (by which words Ignatius, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Eusebius think he meant his wife) helpe those women that haue laboured with me in the Gospell. Thus did Gregory Nazianzenes wife: shee was godly her selfe, and holpe others, both men, and women, with her godly counsell. She conuerted her Husband from Infidelity: shee conuerted others: she brought vp her children in the feare of God: Her Husband gaue her the charge in deliuering his money vnto the poore. And yet will you tell vs, that shee was no helper to her Husband? Or, that her Husband by her meanes was not the better able to doe his office? It shameth me M. Harding, to see these follies. Whereas Nazianzene saith, She was a helper to his Father, he meaneth not onely the time of his Infidelie, but generally the whole course of all his life. Fiue and forty yeres he liued a Bishop: and all that while she was his helper.

Ignatius ad Philadelphien. Clemens Stromatum lib. 7. Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 30. Totas matri habenas dimisit

A weake flocke (you say) where an Ewe beareth the Bell. This Prouerb might better become a Shepe of Cotswould with his Bell. For the helpe that we speake of importeth no such soueraignty, nor bearing of Bels. God himselfe saith: Let vs make Adam a Helper meet for him. This Helper was his Wife Eua. Yet did not Eua beare the Bel. S. Paul saith: Salute Priscila, and Aquila her Husband, that are my Helpers in Christ Iesus. And, as I haue alleged before, he saith to his owne wife, Helpe these women that haue laboured with me in the Gospell, together with Clemens, and others my Helpers. Yet, I trow, ye will not say, that S. Paul shall come behind: or, that Clemens, or Aquila, or Priscilla, or his owne wife, or any other woman shall beare the Bell. God said vnto Abraham, Heare the voice of Sara thy wife, whatsoeuer she shall say to thee. Shee shall giue thee good counsell: she shal helpe thee. Yet the Soueraignty was in Abraham, and not in Sara: neither was it Sara, but Abraham that bare the Bell.

Genes. 2. S. Roman. 16. Philippen. 4. Genes. 21.

Thus to Cauill at Gods Institution, M. Harding was the maner of the Old condemned Heretikes: Marcion, Valentinus, Tatius, and such others, in whose steps you cannot tread without great danger.

To be short, the resolution hereof is this: Better it is to Marry, then to swelter inwardly with filthy affections. S. Paul saith: I would wish all men to bee as I am my selfe. But euery man hath his gift: One of Chastity, and another of Marriage. Though Chastity bee a singular gift of God, yet is it not good for him that hath not the gift of Chastity. S. Augustine saith: Aliquando hoc expedit, aliquando illud. Nam illis qui se non continent, vtique expedit nubere: Sometime Chastity is good, sometime Marriage. But to them that conteine not (that is to say, that haue not the gift of Chastity) it is better to Marry. Howbeit, in such as haue Vowed Chaste life, he saith, It is neither Lawfull to Marry, nor expedient. But alas, what auaileth a Vow of Chast Life, without Chastity?

1. Corinth. 7. Ad Pollentiam, Lib. 1. Ca. 15.

Indeed Marriage, as also other like outward things, of it selfe is neither good, nor ill: but as it is vsed. S Paul saith: If the Virgin Marry, shee sinneth not. Hee that Marrieth not his Virgin sinneth not. Therefore Gregory Nazianzene saith: Neutrum horum, nec Matrimonium, nec Cœlebs Vita prorsus aut Deo nos, mundoue conciliat: aut à Deo, aut à mundo alienat: vt alterum natura sua omnin ò fugiendum sit, alterum absolutè laudandum. Animus est qui & Virginitati, & Nuptijs rectè imperat: Neither of these two, nor Matrimony, nor Single life, doth either ioine vs to God, or to the world: or withdraw vs from God or from the world: that the one ought to be refused, and the other absolutely, and of it selfe ought to be praised. It is the Mind that ruleth both Mariage, and Virginity.

1. Corinth. 7. Nazianzen. in Epitaphio Gorgonia. Μὴ γὰρ τῶν δύο τούτων ἢ θεὸν ποιεῖ, ἢ κόσμον ἀπολλύει, οὔτε γάμος οὔτε παρθενία καθ' ἑαυτὰ ἐπαινετά. Ὁ τοίνυν ὁ μὲν γάμου ἢ παρθενίας κρατῶν ἐπαινετός.

tie, and specially in times of Persecution. The naturall affection of wife and children often mollifieth and melteth the heart, and causeth a man to loke backward.

Ambr. de Virginitate, lib. 3.

S. Ambrose saith: Bona Vincula nuptiarum; Sed tamen Vincula: Etsi Vincula, tamen Vincula Charitatis: Bonum Coniugium: sed tamen à iugo tractum: Good are the Bands of Matrimonie: Yet are they Bands. And although they be Bands yet are they Bands of Charity. Coniugium (Wedlocke) is good yet it taketh his name of the Yoke.

This is that tribulation of the flesh that S. Paul speaketh of.

And albeit these Cares withdraw and oppresse the Mind, as I haue said, and oftentimes be great lets to godly purposes: yet as it well appeareth by these examples of Gregory Nazianzene, and Spiridion, in a godly man they hinder nothing. Neither was this any such singular Priuiledge as M. Harding imagineth granted onely to these two Bishops, Gregory, and Spiridion, and to none other.

Chrysost. in 1. Epist. ad Tim. Homil. 10.

S. Chrysostome saith, not onely generally of all men, but also specially of Priests and Bishops: Quamuis nuptiæ plurimum difficultatis in se habeant, ita tamen assumi possunt, vt perfectiori vitæ impedimento non sint: Notwithstanding Marriage haue much trouble in it selfe, yet may it so be taken (and vsed) that it shall be no hinderance to perfect life. Againe he saith: Ne excuses te propter nuptias: Dominus tuus nuptijs interfuit, & nuptias coronestauit. Et tu nuptias arguis? Et dicis nuptias esse impedimentum ad Pietatem? Nullum enim ad Pietatem est obstaculum. Vis cognoscere, quòd nihil obsit habere Vxorem & Liberos? Moses nonne Vxorem habuit & Liberos? Vide & Petrum Columnam Ecclesiæ, quòd & ipse Vxorem habuit. Ne accuses Nuptias: Excuse not thy selfe by thy Marriage. Thy Lord was at the Marriage Feast, and honoured Marriage with his presence. And yet doest thou blame Marriag? And saist thou that Marriage is an hinderance vnto Godlines? I tell thee, Marriage is no manner hinderance vnto Godlinesse. Wilt thou know that it hindereth not to haue Wife and Children? Had not Moses Wife and Children? Behold Peter, a Pillar of the Church; he had a wife. Therefore finde no fault with Marriage.

Chrys. in Esaia In illa verba, Vidi Dominũ. To. 1. Hom. 4.

Againe, writing vpon these words of the Prophet Esay, Vidi Dominum, &c. hee saith thus: Quis ista loquitur? Esaias ille spectator cœlestium Seraphim, qui cum Coniuge commercium habuit, nec tamen extinxit Gratiam: Who speaketh these words? Esaias the beholder of the Celestiall Seraphims, who notwithstanding he had company with his Wife, yet he quenched not the Grace of God. Againe: Filium habebat, & Vxorem: vt intelligas non esse malas nuptias, sed malam esse Scortationem: Esay had a sonne, and a Wife: that thou maist vnderstand, that Matriage is not ill, but that Fornication is ill And againe: Num obstabat Matrimonium? Adiutrix tibi data est Vxor, non Insidiatrix: What did Marriage hinder thee? No. Thy wife is giuen to thee to be thy helper, and not to deceiue thee.

August. in quæstionibus Noui & Vet. Testamen. quæ. 127.

Likewise saith S. Augustine: Sanctissimus Samuel filios genuit: non tamen Iustitiæ suæ merita minuit: Zacharias Sacerdos, Vir Iustus, in senectute sua genuit filium. Qua ergo ratione accusatur, quod minimè obesse probatur? Most holy Samuel begat Children: and yet nothing abated the merits of his righteousnesse. Zacharias the Priest in his old age begat a Childe. Wherefore then is that thing accused, that is prooued to do no manner hurt?

Niceph. lib. 11. cap. 19.

Nicephorus writing of Gregorie S. Basils Brother, the Bishop of Nyssa, saith thus: Quamuis haberet Coniugem, alijs tamẽ in rebus non cessit Fratri: Although he had a Wife, yet in other things he was Nothing Inferiour to (S. Basil) his Brother.

Augu. de Bono Coniuga. ca. 11

S. Augustine saith, as he is alleged before: Sancta sunt etiam Corpora Coniugatorum Fidem sibi & Domino seruantium: Where married people kepe their faith both to themselues, and to God, their Bodies be Holy.

Nazianzen. in funer. Gorgon.

Likewise Nazianzene: Etiam illa quæ nupsit & de jis quæ sunt Mariti, & de ijs quæ sunt Domini solicita est, vt sit sancta, & Corpore, & Spiritu: Euen shee that is married, is carefull both for the things that perteine to her Husband, and also for the things thar perteine to God, that she may be holy both in body, and Spirit.

Ambros. in 1. Cor. 7.

Likewise S. Ambrose: Videmus Virgines de sæculo cogitare: & Matrimonio iunctos Dominicis studere Operibus: We see both Virgins carefull for the World: and married men carefull for the works of the Lord.

There be troubles in Marriage: It cannot be denied. But so be there also troubles in single Life: specially to them that feare the Judgements of God, and haue not the gift o Chastity.

Chrys. in Gen. Hom. 21.

But Chrysostome saith: Matrimonium non solùm nihil nobis obstat ad Philosophandum Deo, si voluerimus esse sobrij, sed & magnam adfert Consolationem: Comprimit enim insanum Naturæ impetum: nec turbari sinit, quasi Mare: sed efficit vt scapha fœliciter in Portum appellat. Et ideo Deus Consolationem hanc tribuit humano generi: Marriage not onely hindereth nothing towards the knowledge and Seruice of God, if wee will be sober, but also bringeth vs great Comfort. For it oppresseth the raging fury of Nature, and suffereth vs not to be dasht and tost as the waues of the Sea: but causeth that our ship may luckily arriue into the Hauen. And for that cause hath God giuen this Comfort vnto mankinde.

Therefore Gregory Nazianzene saith: Nuptiæ sunt laudabiles propter eam, quæ in Nuptijs est, animi tranquillitatem: Marriage is worthy of praise, for the quietnes and contentation of Mind that is in Marriage. Nazianzen. in Funere Gorgoniæ.

To be short, Clemens Alexandrinus saith: Habet vt Castitas, ita etiam Matrimonium, propria munera & ministeria, quæ ad Dominum pertinent: as well Matrimony, as also Chastity, hath either of them their peculiar offices perteining vnto God. Clemens Stromat Lib. 3.

And Chrysostome saith: Ne quis prætexat Vxorem, vel Liberos, &c. hæc excusatio, hic prætextus, Diaboli sunt insidiæ: Let no man make his excuse by his Wife, or Children, &c. This excuse and this pretense, is the craft and deceitfulnesse of the Diuel. Thus, M. Harding, to conclude with Chrysostomes words, the ground and foundation of your Doctrine in this behalfe, is the Craft and deceitfulnesse of the Diuell.

Marriage helpeth.

These things considered, I doubt not, but of your curtesie ye will take backe your sittons vnto your selfe. The Conclusion and summe of your whole talke is this: Spiridion serued God neuer the worse, notwithstanding he had a wife: And Marriage is no let or hinderance to perfect Godlinesse.

The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuision 3.

Further we say, that the same Law which by constraint taketh away this liberty from mē, and compelleth them against their wils to liue single, is the Doctrine of Diuels, as Paul saith: And that euer sithence the time of this Law, a wonderful vncleannes of life and manners in Gods Ministers, & sundry horrible enormities haue followed, as the Bishop of Augusta, as Faber, as Abbas Panormitanus, as Latomus, as the Tripartite Worke, which is annexed to the second Tome of the Councels, and other Champians of the Popes band, yea, and as the matter it selfe, and all Histories doe confesse.

Doctrine of Diuels.

For it was rightly said by Pius the Second, Bishop of Rome, that he saw many causes why Wiues should be taken away from Priests: but that hee saw many moe, and more weighty causes why they ought to bee restored to them againe.

M. Harding.

1. Cor. 7. Voluntary Vow imbar. reth liberty of the contrary. 1 Cor. 7. Ad Virginem Lapsam, cap. 5.

There is (a) no Law in the Church, that by constraint taketh away from men liberty to marry. For S. Pauls words be plaine. If thou take a wife, thou sinnest not. And likewise, If a Virgin marry, shee sinneth not. But if any persons haue of their owne wil and deuotion Vowed to God Chastity, the same haue imbarred themselues of this generall liberty, & by their Voluntary Promise haue bound themselues neuer to marry. And in such not only Marriage it selfe, but also a will to marry is damnable, as S. Paul saith of Widowes which haue Vowed to liue chast, that they haue their damnation (not for that they marry, but) for that they will marrie. If the Gospellers alledge against this Doctrine the words of S. Paul, If a Virgin marry, she sinneth not: we answer with Chrysostome and other Fathers, that a Virgin by a Vow of Chastity dedicated to God, if she marry, doubtlesse she sinneth much, for that beside Christ she hath surmaried an Aduouterer. If they obiect, It is better to marry then to burn: let S. Ambrose answer, who saith that this saying perteineth to her that hath not promised, to her that is not yet vailed. And by restraining them from Marriage, the Church vseth no tyranny: nor, if it teach that such ought to forbear Marriage, is that to be accounted the Doctrine of Diuels, but of the holy Ghost, whereby men are kept from wilfull damnation. To forbid Marriage wholly, vniuersally, and altogether, that is the Doctrine of Diuels. But to iudge Marriage for some state and Order of lesse conuenience then the Single Life, or after Vow of Chastity made, to require perpetuall continency, this is not the Doctrine of Diuels. For S. Paul himselfe did both. If these Defenders will not admit this answer, and beeing loth to forsake their fleshly pleasure, pretend to be moued with the Authority of S. Paul, who calleth the forbidding of Marriage the Doctrine of Diuels: I send them to S. Augustine for an answer in his thirteenth Book, & sixth Chapter against Faustus the Manichē. Where, for a sufficient solution of their obiection, they shal find these plaine words: Ille prohibes, quibus bonum malum esse dicit: non qui huic bono aliud melius anteponit: That is to say, He forbiddeth (Marriage) which saith it is euill: not he which preferreth another better thing before this good thing.

The Doctrine of Diuels.

(a) Manifest vntruth. For all Priests are restrained from Marriage. And Priests bee men.

Now, that I may shew in what time, and by what persons this Law of Single Life was ordeined, for breuities sake, I wil content my selfe with witnesse of one only Councel, which is the Second Councell of Carthage, holden in the time of Valentinian and Theodosius the Emperours. Where we find that this order was taken (b) by the Apostles themselues, and that the Antiquity obserued and kept the same. The words of the Councell be these, Canon 1.

Aurelius Episcopus dixit, &c. Aurelius the Bishop said: Whereas in the Councel before this, it was treated of the rule of Continence & Chastity, these three Degrees through their Consecrations be annexed to Chastity by a certaine Decree written, to wit, Bishops, Priests and Deacons: whom it is thought good, as it becommeth the holy Prelates and Priests of God, and likewise Leuites, or such as attend vp on,

(b) Vntruth. For these be the words of the Apostles Canons: Episcopus, aut Presbyter, aut on holy Sacramens, to be continent and chaſt in euery conditiõ, to the intent they may ſimply obtain that they pray to God for, that we keepe and obſerue that which (c) the Apoſtles haue taught, and the Antiquity hath kept. Loe, Sir Defender.

Diaconus, vxorem ſuam præ ſtudio Religionis abiecit, aut fabricarit, à cõmunione ſegregetur. Can. 5.

What if the Biſhop of Auguſta find fault with Prieſts liues? (which Auguſta, and which Biſhop there ye meane, I know not, neither well can I know, except I ſaw your note-booke.) What if the Abbat Panormitane, what if one Faber, and one Latomus, men of our time (I trow) and that zelous man which wrote the little tripartite treatiſe annexed to the Laterane Councell, whatſoeuer he was: what if all theſe (I ſay) mooued with a zeale, and being deſirous of the Clergies Reformation, lamentably complain of their looſe life? What then?

(c) Vntruth in the Anſwer. M. Harding falſely miſtaketh the Councell.

Get you fairer painted, and better filled boxes then theſe bee, or elſe ſhall ye all be taken for poore Pothecaries.

(d) A vaine expoſition. What had this bene to Pius meaning?

Touching Pius, in Platina ye ſhall find theſe words for one of that Popes ſayings: Sacerdotibus magna ratione ſublatas nuptias, maiori reſtituendas videri: As much to ſay in Engliſh, that Marriage was taken frõ Prieſts with great reaſon, and that it ſeemed it were to be reſtored againe with greater. This ſaying reporteth not that Wiues were taken away from Prieſts, as you report, neither that wiues ought to be reſtored to Prieſts againe. (d) It ſpeaketh only of Marriage, which, as before a man enter into Holy Orders no Vow being made, is lawful, ſo by orders taken, a Vow of Chaſtity being ſolemnly made, is vterly vnlawfull. If this ſaying had made ſo much for your pretenſed Marriage, as yee would men to beleeue, (e) ye would neuer haue falſified it by ſuch change of words. Whether it be more expedient, ſuch as come to the Clergy to be required to lead the Single Life, and to bind themſelues therto by Vowes, or to enioy the common libertie of Marriage, (f) that we leaue to the Church to diſcuſſe and order.

(e) Vntruth. For if we had falſified the words, ye would not ſo ſimply haue touched it.

(f) Now at laſt the Doctours ſtand in doubt.

If Pius ſaw many weightier cauſes for Prieſts to haue Wiues, then for their Single Life, as ye pretend he did: why did not hee, or you in his ſtead, ſhew vs what, and how ſubſtantiall they be? if they bee no better then you and your fellowes haue vttered in your Sermons and writings hitherto, they are not worth (g) a Pipt nootte. This ſaying of Pius is well to be weighed and ſcanned.

Doctrine of Diuels.

Whoſoeuer ſhall well conſider the fruits that haue growen of this Tree, may eaſilie iudge by whom it was planted. Certainly S. Paul, when hee had giuen rules touching the Clergy, that Biſhops and Deacons ſhould be the Huſbands of One Wife, immediately afterward in the ſame tenour and courſe of ſpeech, ſaith thus: The Spirit ſaith plainly, that in the later times ſome ſhall depart from the Faith, giuing eare vnto lying Spirits, and to the Doctrine of Diuels, vttering lies vnder hypocriſie, hauing their Conſcience burnt with a hot yron, (and thereby made vnſenſible) Forbidding Marriage, &c. Here we are taught by the Spirit of God, that Forbidding of Marriage is the Doctrine of Diuels.

But M. Harding ſaith, There is no Lawe in the Church to reſtraine Marriage: and that Marriage is not now condemned by him, and others of that ſide, and thought vnlawfull vniuerſally in all men (for that, hee ſaith, was the Hereſie of Valentinus, Marcion, Montanus, and others) but only forbidden and thought vnlawful in a few. By this anſwer M. Harding may ſeem to make himſelfe ſomewhat better then was Valentinus, and Marcion, and other old Heretikes. But further to helpe him, and thoroughly to cleere his Doctrine, it will not ſerue. It is a common knowen Rule in the Schooles, Magis & Minus non mutant ſpeciem. Verily, as he that killeth but a few men is called a Man-killer: euen ſo hee that condemneth Marriage in a few muſt likewiſe be called a Condemner of Marriage. Neither doth S. Paul, when he Propheſieth hereof, ſay, that ſome ſhould condemne all kind of Marriage vniuerſally in all maner of men: but onely he ſaith, There ſhall be ſome that ſhall forbid Marriage: as the Biſhops of Rome haue done.

Neither did all Heretikes condemne Marriage in one ſort. For ſome of them condemned it Generally, and thoroughly, and altogether: ſome others of them condemned it onely in a few, euen as M. Harding and his fellowes doe: For thus S. Auguſtine writeth of the Heretikes named the Manicheis: Auditores qui appellantur apud eos, & carnibus veſcuntur, & agros colunt, &, ſi voluerint, Vxores habent. Quorum nihil faciunt illi qui vocantur Electi: They that among them be called the Hearers, doe both eat fleſh, and till the ground, and marry Wiues too if they liſt. But no ſuch thing may they doe that bee called Electi. The Auditors or Hearers among the Manicheis were as the Lay people: The Electi or Choſen were as the Clergie. Theſe Heretikes the Manicheis condemned Marriage, not generally in all ſorts and degrees of men: but onely, as M. Harding doth, in a few. Yet were they Heretikes notwithſtanding, and their Doctrine was the Doctrine of Diuels.

Aug. Epiſt. 74.

S. Auguſtine ſaith vnto them, as hee would alſo ſay vnto M. Harding: Non Concubitum, ſed, vt longè ante ab Apoſtolo dictum eſt, Verè Nuptias prohibetis: Yee forbid not Copulation, (or Concubines) but euen as the Apoſtle Propheſied long before, Verily and indeed ye forbid Marriage: (albeit it were but in a few.)

Augu. de Morib. Manich. Lib. 2. cap. 18. Chryſoſt. in Opere Imperfecto, Homil. 1.

All this M. Harding, notwithſtanding, that it may plainly appeare whoſe Doctrine ye teach, it ſhall be good, and not from the purpoſe, briefly to diſcloſe ſome part of it. And heere to paſſe ouer theſe words of Chryſoſtome: Hæc ipſa Coniunctio maritalis malum

est ante Deum: This very Copulation of Man and Wife is euill before God. And these of S. Hierome: Quemdiu impleo Mariti officium, non impleo officium Christiani: As long as I doe the duty of a Husband, I do not the duty of a Christian. And other like sayings and authorities before alleged. Pope Innocentius, in the Condemnation of Marriage saith thus: Qui in carne sunt, Deo placere non possunt: They that be in the flesh, (that is to say, in Marriage) cannot please God. And to this purpose he allegeth these words of S. Paul: To the cleane all things are cleane: But to the filthy and Infidels (whereby the same Pope Innocentius vnderstandeth married people) nothing is cleane: but both their minde, and their conscience is defiled. Pope Siricius calleth Marriage, Vitium, Luxuriam, Fœdas Cupiditates: Vice, Lechery, and Filthy Lusts. One of your late English Doctors of Louain saith, that the whole East Church, maintaining the lawfull marriage of Priests, euermore continued there from the Apostles time vntill this day, maintaineth and continueth a Schole of Filthinesse.

Further you may remember, that this Rule is written in a Booke of your owne Doctrine, and is giuen in secret, as a Speciall Lesson vnto your Clergie: Simon castè, tamen cautè: If thou deale not Chastly, yet deale Charily.

Const. Othonis. Licet ad profugandum. in Glossa.

From whence had you this Doctrine, M. Harding? Who set it first abroach? Who taught it? Who confirmed it? Who allowed it? If ye can say, it is not the Doctrine of the Diuell, yet verily, I beleeue, ye cannot say, it is in any point like the Doctrine of God. S. Hierome hauing occasion to speake of Antichrist, saith thus: Simulabit Castitatem, vt plurimos decipiat: He shall make a counterfeit shew of Chastity, that hee may deceiue manie. Euen so S. Paul saith: Habentes speciem Pietatis: Virtutem autem eius abnegantes: Hauing a colour of Godlinesse: but the Power thereof denying vtterly.

Hieron. in Danielem, cap. 11.

2. Timoth. 3.

But somewhat to relieue your selfe ye allege these words of S. Augustine: Ille prohibet Matrimonium, qui illud malum esse dicit: non qui huic bono aliud melius anteponit: He forbiddeth Marriage, that saith Marriage is euill: and not hee that before this thing, being good, setteth another thing that is better. Heere, M. Harding, I beseech you of your indifferent iudgement: He that vseth your words, and saith, as you say, They that liue in Matrimonie, cannot please God: They be filthy: They bee Infidels: Vnto them nothing is cleane: Their whole Minde and Conscience is defiled: He that saith, Matrimony is Vice, Lechery, and Filthy pleasure; saith he not, Matrimonie is an euill thing? Thus you say: Thus you write: These words be apparent, and allowed in your Bookes: euen in those Bookes whereby ye would haue vs to order and to direct our liues and manners. Briefly, this is the very substance of your Doctrine in this behalfe. Therefore euen by S. Augustines iudgement, your Doctrine is the Doctrine of Diuels.

August. contra Faust. lib. 30. cap. 6.

The Apostles Doctrine.

And whereas yee would seeme not vtterly to condemne the state of Matrimonie, but only to set Single Life before it, as a better thing before a good: it may please you to vnderstand, that notwithstanding a thing in it selfe be best, yet is it not therefore vniuersally best for euery man. For notwithstanding Scarlet be the faireſt of all Colours, and the Face the faireſt part of all the Body, yet I reckon, M. Harding, to make your selfe faire ye would not haue your Face died in Scarlet.

Single Life for many causes is the best: I grant. Yet is it not best for euery bodie: but only for him that hath the gift of Chastity, and can with quiet mind, and vpright conscience liue Single. Otherwise Matrimony is much better. And therefore God hath left vs indifferently free to both: that whosoeuer cannot vse the one, may chuse the other. S. Paul saith: Volo omnes esse sicut meipsum: I would euery man would liue Single, as I doe. But he addeth withall a speciall Prouiso: Vnusquisque proprium donum habet à Deo: alius sic, alius autem sic: Euery man hath his owne gift of God: One this, another that.

1. Corinth. 7.

And therefore he saith further: Although Single Life be the better state, Yet whosoeuer is not continent, let him marrie. Better is it to marry, then to burne. Although otherwise hee weigh Single Life before Marriage, yet in this case he saith, it is better to Marry, then so to liue Single.

M. Harding heereto replieth: They that haue Vowed, haue lost this liberty: and by S. Ambrose and S. Augustines iudgement, may not marry. Heereof I haue partly spoken before: and partly shall haue occasion offered to say more heerafter. In the meane season wee are taught heere by M. Harding to take S. Pauls words by the top, and to turne them quite backward: and thus to frame a new Rule of Life, and to say, contrary to S. Paul, Melius est Vri, quàm Nubere: It is better to burne in Concupiscence, then to marry.

Yet S. Augustine saith, euen of them that haue Vowed, as it is before alleged: Qui nubere volunt, & ideo non nubunt, quia impunè non possunt, meliùs nuberent, quàm vrerentur, id est, quàm occulta flamma Concupiscentiæ in ipsa Conscientia vastarentur: They that haue a minde to Marry, and yet Marry not, because they cannot Marry without reproch, proch, Better were it for them to Marry, then to burne: that is to say, then with the prime flame of their Concupiscence to be wasted in their Conscience.

The Apostles Doctrine.

Further M. Harding saith: This order of Single Life was taken by the Apostles themselues: and therefore (saith he) it is not the Diuels, but the Apostles Doctrine. If this be true indeed, then is this matter thoroughly concluded. But where was this Order taken by the Apostles? By what Writing, by what Record, by what Tradition may it appeare? Or how is it likely that the Apostles, being married men themselues, would force other men to liue Single?

Ambros. 2. Cor. 11. Euseb lib. 3. cap. 27. ὡς οὗτοι μεμνῆσθαι τοῦ κυρίου. Ignatius ad Philadelphien. Chrys. in Priorem ad Timot. Homil. 10.

I haue already shewed by Ignatius, by Clemens, by Eusebius, and by S. Ambrose, that the Apostles, S. Iohn only excepted, were all married. Clemens saith, that Peter saw his owne Wife carried by the Officers to suffer death for Christs sake: and cried vnto her comfortably by her name: O Woman, Remember the Lord. Ignatius, S. Iohns Disciple, saith: Opto Deo dignus inueniri, sicut Petrus, & Paulus, & reliqui Apostoli, qui nuptijs fuerunt sociati, qui non libidinis causa, sed posteritatis surrogandæ gratia Coniuges habuerunt: I wish to be found meet for God, as was Peter, and Paul, and the other Apostles that were married: and not for pleasure but for posterities sake had Wiues.

Chrysostome saith: Cur non ait, Oportet Episcopum Angelum esse, nulli humanæ perturbationi, vitioue subiectum? Ne Ecclesiæ negotia, fluctúsque perirent. Idcirco moderatam Virtutem proposuit: non supremam illam, atque Cœlestem? Why saith not S. Paul, A Bishop ought to be an Angell, subiect neither to any worldly affection, nor to anie Vice? Lest the affaires and fruits of the Church should perish, (being without a Gouernour.) Therefore he required of Bishops a moderate and a reasonable kinde of Vertue, (willing them to be Husbands of One Wife) and not that other Vertue; so high, and so heauenly: (that is to say, vtterly to liue vnmarried)

Againe he saith: Idcirco ait, Vnius Vxoris Virum: ne nimis in angustum rem eam concluderet, si exactissimam Virtutem expetisset: idcirco moderatiori admonitione maluit vti: ne ex desperatione perfectæ illius inueniendæ Virtutis, Ecclesiæ sine Episcopis essent. Therefore S. Paul saith, Let a Bishop be the Husband of One Wife: lest he should shut vp the matter into too great a strait, if he had required that most perfect puritie: therefore he would rather vse a reasonable moderation or meane (that a Bishop should be the Husband of One Wife:) lest of despaire of finding that excellencie of Virtue (to liue vnmarried) the Churches should be left without Bishops.

1. Corinth. 7. 1. Timoth. 3. Tit. 1. Leo Epist. 87.

S. Paul saith: Touching Virgins, I haue no Commandement of the Lord: Better it is to Marry, then to burne: Let a Bishop be the Husband of One wife. Which last words Pope Leo expoundeth thus: Is Episcopus ordinetur quem Vnius vxoris Virum fuisse, aut esse constiterit: Let him be Consecrate a Bishop, of whom it may well appeare, that either he is, or hath beene the Husband of One Wife.

Ambros.

S. Ambrose expounding these words of S. Paul, Touching Virgins, I haue no Commandement of the Lord, saith thus: Si Doctor Gentium non habuit, habere quis potuit? If the Doctor of the Gentles had no Commandement of the Lord touching Virgins, what man else then could euer haue it?

Canon. 5.

Among the Rules which commonly are called the Apostles Canons, it is written thus: Episcopus, aut Presbyter, aut Diaconus, Vxorem suam prætextu Religionis ne abijciat: Aut si abiecerit, à Communione segregetur: & si perseueret, deponatur: Let not either Bishop, or Priest or Deacon, put away his Wife, vnder colour of Religion. Or if hee so doe, let him bee put from the Communion (of the Faithfull:) And if he so continue, let him be vtterly deposed from his office.

Hierony. contra Iouinian. lib. 1.

S. Hierome expounding these words of S. Paul, Let euery man remaine in the vocation wherein he was called, saith thus: Ex hoc, habentibus Vxores tollit licentiam dimittendi eas: Hereby S. Paul forbiddeth married men to put away their Wiues.

Dist. 31. Quoniam.

In the sixth Councell holden at Constantinople it is written thus: Antiquum sequentes Canonem Apostolicæ diligentiæ, & Constitutiones Sanctorum Virorum, Legales nuptias posthac valere volumus, nullo modo cum Vxoribus suis eorum Connubia dissoluentes: Following the Old Order of the Apostles diligence, and the Constitutions and Lawes of the Holy Fathers, from henceforth wee will, that the lawfull Marriage (of Bishops and Priests) shall stand in force, not in any wise dissoluing the Wedlocke that they haue with their wiues. And herein they say they follow the Old Canon, or Order of the Apostles.

26. Qu. 2. Sors.

Gratian saith, as he is before alleged: Copula Sacerdotalis nec Legali, nec Euangelica, nec Apostolica Authoritate prohibetur: The Marriage of Priests is not forbidden by any Authority, either of the Law, or of the Gospell, or of the Apostles.

Catharinus contra errores Caietani, error. 112.

Cardinall Caietane saith: Dominus Discipulis suis nullum indixit Votum: Our Lord appointed vnto his Disciples no manner of Vow.

Clemens

Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, as it is ſaid before: Epiſtolæ Apoſtoli nuſquam honeſtum, moderatumq; Matrimonium prohibuerunt: The Epiſtles of Paul the Apoſtle neuer forbad honeſt and ſober Marriage. Clem. Strom. lib. 3.

All theſe things well conſidered, I beſeech thee, gentle Reader, indifferently to weigh M. Hardings words: and to demand of him, with what countenance hee could thus tell thee, that the Order of ſingle life was taken by the Apoſtles themſelues, and therefore muſt be holden as the Apoſtles doctrine.

The Apoſtles Doctrine.

If he happen to tell thee, It is written in the Councell of Carthage; tell him againe, he is deceiued. I ſay, tell him, that the Apoſtles of Chriſt neuer, neither made any Law, nor gaue any Order for the ſingle life of the Miniſters. And therefore tell him hardly, hee is deceiued. He will ſay, The words of the Councell be plaine, Quod Apoſtoli docuerunt, & ipſa ſeruauit Antiquitas: Which thing the Apoſtles haue taught, and the Antiquity it ſelfe hath obſerued. Theſe words be plaine indeed: if they were not peruerſly gloſed. Therefore tell him againe, he ſhould better haue learned, both the maner of the Apoſtles teaching, and alſo the ſcope and reach of this antiquity. Certainly thus much his owne Gloſſe could haue told him: Apoſtoli nihil inſtituerunt, de non vtendo Matrimonio iam contracto: The Apoſtles tooke no Order, touching the not vſing of Matrimony already contracted. Cone Carthag. 2. cap. 2. Diſt. 84. Cum in Præterito, In Gloſſa.

And whereas the Councell ſaith: Apoſtoli docuerunt, The Apoſtles taught: The ſame Gloſſe ſaith: Apoſtoli docuerunt exemplo: non Inſtitutione, vel Conſtitutione: The Apoſtles taught it by their example: but not by appointment, nor by cómandement. Perhaps M. Harding will ſay, The Apoſtles example is ſufficient. Thereto I will anſwer as Clemens Alexandrinus ſometime anſwered certaine of the old Heretikes in like caſe: Dicunt gloriоſi iſti iactatores, ſe imitari Dominum, qui Vxorem non duxit. Illis dicit Scriptura, Deus Superbis reſiſtit: Humilibus autem dat Gratiam: Theſe glorious Braggers ſay, they will follow the Example of our Lord, that Married no Wife. Vnto them the Scripture ſaith, God withſtandeth the Proud: and giueth grace vnto the Humble. Clem. Strom. lib. 7.

And to like purpoſe S. Amboſe ſaith: Præceptum quidem Apoſtolus non habuit: at habuit Exemplum: Indeed the Apoſtle S. Paul had no Commandement to giue of Virginity: but Example he had to giue. Ambroſe de Virginibus lib. 1.

Againe, whereas the Councell allegeth Antiquity, Quod ipſa ſeruauit Antiquitas, the ſame Gloſſe expoundeth it thus: A tempore Siricij Papæ hic vocat Antiquitatem: By this word Antiquity, the Councell meaneth the time after Pope Siricius (which was foure hundred yeares after Chriſt.) And againe, as it is alleged before: Ante tempora Siricij Papæ, Sacerdotes poterant contrahere Matrimonium: Before the time of Pope Siricius, it was lawfull for Prieſts to contract matrimony.

Such good lucke M. Harding hath to his Doctors and Councels. By his owne Gloſſe he hath loſt foure hundred yéeres of his Antiquity.

Panormitane, after he had ſaid, The commandement of Single life is not of the Law of God: He addeth further: Quia alàs Græci peccarent: Non enim excuſaret eos Conſuetudo: Quia illa non valet contra Legem Dei: Otherwiſe the Græcians were offenders. For no Cuſtome could excuſe them: foraſmuch as Cuſtome preuaileth not againſt the Law of God. Extr. de Clericis Coniugatis. Cùm Olim.

Now touching this Councell of Carthage, notwithſtanding it had béene truly conſtrued, yet the Authority thereof muſt néeds ſéeme ſo much the leſſe, for that it decreeth of ſet purpoſe quite contrary to the Councell of Nice. For the Fathers in the Nicene Councell durſt not to remoue Prieſts and Biſhops from their Wiues: for that it was written: Whom God hath ioined, let no man ſunder. But theſe other Fathers in the Councell of Carthage without any ſticking or doubting at the matter, onely with one word, vtterly remoued them: and ſo by force and violence and contrary to the commandement of Chriſt, ſundred and diuided them, whom God had ioined. Which thing, holy Paphnutius ſaith, Was not lawfull for man to doe. Sozomen. lib. 1. cap. 22.

Touching Biſhop Hulderichus, Panormitanus, Latomus and Jacobus Faber, and ſuch others, as haue ſpoken or written in the behalfe of Prieſts Marriage, M. Harding thinketh it ſufficient for him to anſwer, What if they complaine of the looſe life of the Clergy? What then? (that is to ſay) What if the Clergy liue in profeſſed ſhame, and open filthineſſe? What then? As if ſuch ſimple authorities were worthy of none other anſwer.

Yet was Hulderichus ſometime Biſhop of Auguſta in Germany, welnére fiue hundred yéeres agoe, and for his vertue and holineſſe was counted a Saint. Abbas Vſpergenſis in his Story writeth of him in this ſort: Hilrinus Auguſtanus Epiſcopus obijt, cui Sanctus Vdalrichus (qui idem eſt Hulderichus) ſucceſſit: Hiltine the Biſhop of Auguſta died: Abbas Vſperg. Anno 925. Pag. 214

The fruits of Single Life.

To whom succeded Saint Hulderichus. Abbas Panormitanus was a famous Canonist, in iudgement equall with any other.

Faber and Latomus both in our time were accounted learned: and either of them a speciall champion of M. Hardings side. Verily the worst and vilest of all these is a great deale both sounder in iudgement, and deeper in learning, then either Amphilochius, whom M. Harding so highly esteemeth: or Abdias, or Hyppolitus, or Leontius: whom they haue lately rakte out of the dust: or Clement of Rome, whom he so often calleth the Apostles Fellow.

Neither did these writers onely complaine of the looseneſſe of Priests liues, as M. Harding telleth vs: But also, for remouing of publike shame and slander out of the Church of God, wished that the liberty of Marriage might be restored: which thing M. Harding so closely dissembleth.

Plat. in Pio. Touching that Pope Pius was commonly wont to say, As Marriage was taken away from Priests vpon great considerations, euen so now vpon other greater considerations it were to bee restored to them againe: M. Harding, after much other needlesse talke, saith thus; Why did not he, or you in his stead shew vs, what and how substantiall considerations they be?

Gentle Christian Reader, loth I am to disclose, and publish any thing, that may sound to the shame of any one man: much lesse, that may turne to the open shame of so great a number. But M. Harding ouer heauily presseth vs with his importunity, and requireth vs vpon our credit, to shew these causes. Therefore if the report hereof shall seeme vnpleasant, the fault is M. Hardings: it is not mine. I will onely shew forth simply and truely, that I finde written in sundry, both of the ancient learned Fathers, and also in others of his owne side: which neuertheleſſe, had not M. Harding beene, might much better haue beene concealed.

Orig. in Matt. Tract. 24. First of all, the ancient Father Origen for his time, which was twelue foure score hundred yeres agoe, hereof complaineth thus: Non solùm, quæ docent, non faciunt, sed etiam crudeliter, & sine misericordia, non secundùm æstimationem virium vniuscuiusque iniungunt: Vt, qui prohibent nubere, & ab eo, quod expedit ad immoderatam munditiem compellunt. Alligant onera grauia, & faciunt homines cadere sub eis. Et frequenter videmus, eos qui talia docent, contraria facere sermonibus suis. Castitatem docent: & Castitatem non seruant, &c. Omnia faciunt propter personas hominum, & glorias vanas, vt videantur ab hominibus. Et plerunque sunt tales, qui diligunt primos accubitus in conuiuijs, & salutationes in foro, & vocari ab hominibus Rabbi: Qui volunt vocari Episcopi, Presbyteri, Diaconi: not onely they doe not that they teach, but also cruelly and without mercy they lay their Iniunctions vpon others, not considering each mans ability. Such be they, that forbid men to Marry: and from that thing that is lawfull to be done, driue and force men to an vnreasonable Purity. They binde and lay on heauie burthens, and cause men to fall vnder them. And oftentimes we see them, that teach such things, themselues to do contrary to their owne sayings. They teach Chastity: and yet keepe not Chastity, &c. They doe all things for the commendation of men, and vaine glorie, that they may bee seene and noted of the people. And commonly they bee such, as loue the highest places at Feasts and Bankets, and to be saluted and honored in the Market places, and of the people to be called Rabbi: that will bee called Bishops, Priests and Deacons.

Ensl. 4 ca. 22. Μὴ ἐαυὸ φορτίον ἀναγκαῖον τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ἐπιτιθέναι. At the very first attempt hereof, Dionysius the Bishop of Corinth wrote thus vnto Pinytus the Bishop of Gnosus: Noli graue illud onus Necessariæ Castitatis imponere Fratribus: Lay not that heauie burthen of the necessitie of Chaste life vpon the Brethren. Meaning thereby, that it was too heauy a burthen for all men to carrie.

Cypr. De Singular. Cleric. Neither was it for nothing, that S. Cyprian in his time wrote thus: Vt quid sibi adhibuit mulierem, qui ducere contempsit vxorem? Peius est quàm Mœchari, continentiam ducere criminosam: wherefore tooke he a Woman vnto him, that disdained to Marry a Wife? To liue a continent life with reproch, is worse then Aduouterie.

Epiph. contra Orig. hæres. 63. Πιμελετήματα γὰρ παρ' αὐτοῖς ἐν ἀγνίαις, ἀλλα ὑποκρισεις καὶ, ἀγνία τὸ δόγμα καλεμένη. It is not for nothing, that Ehiphanius writeth: Repudiant Nuptias, at non Libidinem. In honore enim est apud illos, non Castitas, sed Hypocrisis: quam tamen appellari volunt Castitatem. They refuse Marriage, but not lust or pleasure. For they esteeme not Chastitie, but Hypocrisie: and yet the same Hypocrisie, they will haue to be called Chastity.

Chr. to. 5. quòd Regulares Fœminæ cum viris cohabitent. It is not for nothing that Chrysostome writeth of the Vowed or Chaste women in his time: Nuptias magis dicere beatas liceat, &c. Posthac melius esset, ne Virgines quidem esse, &c. Perseuerat adhuc nomen & appellatio rei: at negotium totum in corpore sublatum est, &c. In delicijs magis viuunt, quam mulieres in fornice, &c. Frequens, & quotidianus est concursus Obstetricum, ad Virginum domos, &c. Virginitas ista cum viris plus ab omnibus arguitur, quàm ſtuprum ipſum: We may ſay that Marriage is a great deale better (then ſuch Virginity.) Hereafter it were better there were no Virgins at all. The name (of Virginity) continueth ſtill, but Virginity it ſelfe in their body is quite gone. They liue more in pleaſure then Harlots in the Stewes. There is often and daily running of Midwiues to Virgins houſes. This manner of Virginity, of women amongſt men, is more reproued of all men then Fornication it ſelfe.

The fruits of Single life.

It is not for nothing that Sulpitius Seuerus ſaith of S. Hierome: Hieronymus de familiaritatibus Virginum, & Monachorum, & Clericorum, quàm vera, quàm fortia diſputauit? Vnde à quibuſdam, quos nominare nolo, dicitur non amari: How truly, and how ſtoutly hath S. Hierome written of the Familiarity that theſe Virgins haue with Monkes and Priests? And therefore it is ſaid, that of ſome men, whom I will not name, hee is the leſſe beloued.

Sulpitius Seuerus. Dialog. 3

Neither is it for nothing that Saluianus ſaith of his time, which was about a thouſand yeres agoe: Sub ſpecie Religionis vitijs ſæcularibus mancipantur: Vnder the colour of Religion and Holineſſe they are made ſlaues to worldly Vices. And Againe: Nouum prorſus Conuerſionis genus: Licita non faciunt: Illicita committunt: A very ſtrange kind of conuerſion: That they may doe, they doe not: And doe that, they may not doe.

Saluianus de Prouidentia, Lib. 5.

All theſe and other like things were written long agoe, in the olde times, before the fruits of Single Life were thoroughly knowen.

Ibidem.

But after that Pope Hildebrand by Cruelty and Tyranny had fully eſtabliſhed the matter, and brought it to perfection, Auentinus ſaith: Many godly learned men, vtterly forſooke the Miniſterie, Et falſi Prophetæ, Falſi Apoſtoli, Falſi Sacerdotes emerſerunt, qui ſimulata Religione populum deceperunt. Maxima pars, ſub honeſto nomine Caſtimoniæ, Stupra, Inceſtus, Adulteria, paſſim & impunè committunt: Falſe Prophets, Falſe Apoſtles, and Falſe Prieſts ſprang vp, which vnder a counterfet Religion deceiued the people. The moſt part of them, vnder the honeſt name of Chaſtity, commit Whoredom, Aduoutrey, Inceſt, and that commonly, and without puniſhment.

Auentinus in Hildebrando.

S. Bernard ſaith: Epiſcopi & Sacerdotes huius temporis Caſtitatis Sanctimoniam, ſine qua nemo videbit Deum, tam in corde, quàm in corpore, quomodo ſtudent obſeruare? Traditi in reprobum ſenſum, faciunt quæ non conueniunt. Quæ enim in occulto fiunt ab Epiſcopis, turpe eſt dicere: The Biſhops and Prieſts of this time, how do they endeuour to keepe either in heart, or in body, the Holineſſe of Chaſtity, without which no man ſhall ſee God? They are giuen ouer into a reprobate minde, and doe thoſe things that are not conuenient. For it were ſhame to vtter what theſe Biſhops doe in ſecret.

Bernar. in Concilio Remenſi.

Againe he ſaith: Abſtinentes à Remedio Coniugali, poſtea in omne flagitium effluunt: Abſteining from the Remedy of Marriage, afterward they flow ouer into all kind of wickednes.

Bernardus De Conuerſione, ad Clericos, cap. 29.

He that wrote the little booke called Opus Tripartitum, ioined with the Councel of Laterane, ſaith thus: Tanta immunditia luxuriæ notoria eſt in multis partibus mundi, non ſolùm in Clericis, ſed etiam in Sacerdotibus: imò quod horribile eſt audire, in Prælatis maioribus, &c. Such notorious filthineſſe of Lecherie there is in many parts of the World, not onely in the inferiour Clerks, but alſo in Priests: yea and in the greater Prelates too: which thing is horrible to be heard &c.

In Opere Tripart. li. 3. ca. 7.

And in the Gloſſe vpon the Conſtitutions Legantine of England it is written thus: Clerici huiuſmodi Concubinas tenent communiter apparatu honeſto, nomine appellationis Sororiæ: Clerks commonly hold and haue ſuch Concubines in honeſt hauiour, vnder the name of their Siſters.

De Concubinis Cler remouendis. Licet ad proſtigandum.

Nicolaus de Clauengijs, complaining hereof, ſaith thus: Capellani & Canonici ſimiles Epiſcopis, Indocti, Ebrij, Scortatores: The Chaplaines and Canons are like to the Biſhops, Vnlearned, Drunken, and Fornicatours.

Paralipomena Vrſperg pag. 402.

Robert Holcot ſaith: Sacerdotes moderni ſunt Dæmones Incubi per Luxuriam, & Sacerdotes Priapi, vel Beelpheger, & Angeli Abyſſi: The Prieſts of our time by their Lechery are like the Spirits called Incubi, the Prieſts of Priapus, or Beelphegor, and the Angels of the pit of Hell.

Rob. Holcot in Librum Sapientia, Lectione 182.

Hulderichus, in old Times the Biſhop of Auguſta in Germanie, wrote ſharply hereof againſt Pope Nicholas in this wiſe: Decreta tua ſuper Clericorum continentia à diſcreti. one inueni aliena: multos conſilij tui aſſentatores hominibus, non Deo, ſub falſa ſpecie cõtinentiæ placere volentes, grauiora vides committere: I haue found thy Decrees, touching the ſingle Life of Prieſts, to be void of diſcretion. Thou ſeeſt that many followers of thy counſel, willing vnder a fained colour of Continent Life, rather to pleaſe man, then God, commit haynous Acts. In the end he concludeth thus: Qua noſti diſcretionis diſciplina, Pharaiſaicam ab Ouili Dei extirpa Doctrinam: By ſuch diſcipline of diſcretion as you know beſt, root this Phariſaicall Doctrine out of Gods Fold.

Hulderichus Epiſcopus Auguſtan.

But forasmuch as M. Harding hath no skil in this Epistle of Hulderichus, he may vnderstand that his owne Pope Pius, otherwise called Æneas Syluius, maketh euident mention of the same. Notwithstanding, I haue seene the same Epistle written in Parchment, in Old hand, of good record, vnder the name of Volusianus Carthaginensis. Further Mantuanus the Poet saith:

Wilphgangus Wissenburgius in Præfatione in Antologia Papæ.

Petrique domus polluta, fluenti
Marcescit luxu: Nulla hîc arcana reuelo.
Sanctus ager Scurris, venerabilis Ara Cynædis Seruit: Honorandæ Diuûm Ganymedibus Ædes.

The matter hereof is such as it is not worthy to be Englished.

The fruits of Single Life.

But what pleasure can it bee to stand so long in so vnsauorie a place? They themselues say thus: Fornicatio Simplex non est digna depositione: Simple Fornication (in a Priest) is no iust cause of deprivation. The cause thereof in another Gloss is alledged thus: Quia pauci sine illo vitio inueniuntur: Because there bee few Priests found without that fault.

2. Q. 7 Lator. in Glossa. Dist. 81. Maximianus in Glossa.

To be short, Polydorus Virgilius saith: Nullius delicti crimen maius Ordini dedecus, plus mali Religioni, plus doloris bonis attulit: No kind of crime euer brought either more shame to the Order of Priesthood, or more hinderance to Religion, or more grief to the godly, then the Life of Single Priests.

Polyd. Virgil. de Inuentorib. rer. Lib. 5 cap. 4.

These, these, M. Harding, were the causes that moued Pope Pius commonly to say, as it is before alledged: As Marriage vpon good and great considerations was taken from Priests, so now vpon better and greater considerations it were to bee restored to them againe. And therefore hee saith in his discourse of the Councell of Basil: Fortasse non esset peius, Sacerdotes complures vxorari. Quoniam multi saluarentur in Sacerdotio coniugato, qui nunc in sterili Presbyterio damnantur: Perhaps it were not worst that many Priests were Married. For many might bee saued in Married Priesthood, which now in barren Priesthood are condemned. If the former of these two sayings be so doubtfull, yet this latter is plaine, and cleare, and void of doubt. In like sense and sort he writeth, vpon good aduice and deliberation, to his friend: Quoniam huc ventum est, vt Legi Carnis resistere nequeas, melius est Nubere, quàm vri: Forasmuch as the matter is growen so farre, that yee cannot withstand the Law of the Flesh, better it is to Marry, then to burne.

Æneas Sylnius Epi. 321. ad Iohan. Fontem.

So saith Panormitane: Credo, pro bono, & salute animarum, quòd esset salubre statutum, vt non valentes continere, possint contrahere. Quia, experientia docente, contrarius prorsus effectus sequitur ex illa Lege Continentiæ: cùm hodiè non viuant spiritualiter, nec sint mundi: sed maculentur illicito coitu, cum ipsorum grauissimo peccato: vbi cum propria Vxore esset Castitas. Vnde deberet Ecclesia facere sicut bonus medicus: vt si medicina, experientia docente, potiùs officiat, quàm prosit, eam tollat. Et vtinam idem esset in omnibus Constitutionibus positiuis: I beleeue it were a good Law, and for the wealth, and safety of Soules, that such as cannot liue Chaste, may contract Matrimonie. For wee learne by experience that of the Law of Continent or Single Life, the contrary effect hath followed. Forasmuch as now adaies they liue not Spiritually, nor be cleane and chaste; but with their great Sinne are defiled with vnlawfull Copulation: whereas with their owne wiues they shoud liue Chastly. Therefore the Church ought to doe as the skilfull Physition vseth to doe: Who if he see by experience that his medicine hurteth rather then doth good, taketh it clean away. And would God the same way were taken with all Positiue Constitutions.

Exira. de Clericis cõiugatis, Cùm olim.

So saith Durandus: Vtile esset, vt in Concilio Matrimonium Sacerdotibus remittatur. Frustrà enim hactenus coacti sunt ad Castitatem: It were good that in a Councell, Priests Marriage were set at liberty. For hitherto it hath beene in vaine to force them to Chastity.

Durandus De modo celebrandi Concilium, Titul. 46.

So saith Martinus Peresius: Multis pijs visum est, vt Leges de Cœlibatu tollerentur propter scandala: Many godly men haue thought it good, that the Lawes of Single life should be abolished, for auoiding the offence of the people.

Martinus Peresius.

M. Harding will say, the Priest hath Vowed, and must keepe his Vow. But Pope Pius, as it is said before, gaue counsell of Marriage vnto a Priest that had made a Vow, his Vow and Priesthood notwithstanding.

It appeareth right well, both by that hath beene already alleged, and also by the common experience and practise of the world, that a Vow importeth not alwaies a chaste life. Optatus Milcuitanus saith: In Mitella signum est Voluntatis: non Castitatis auxilium: In the apparell there is a token of the Will: not a helpe towards Chastity. S. Hierom saith: Quid prodest Corporis pudicitia, animo constuprato? When the Minde or Heart is deflowred, what auaileth the Chastity of the Bodie? Hier. in Ieremi. lib. 2. ca. 7.

S. Ambrose saith: Non imperari potest Virginitas, sed optari. Nam quæ supra nos sunt, in Voto magis sunt, quàm in Magisterio: Wee may wish for Virginitie, but command it wee cannot. For the things that be aboue vs, and out of our power, are rather of Desire, then of Commandement. Ambro. de Virginib. Lib. 1.

Hereof Epiphanius maketh this conclusion: Vt ne confundantur apud homines, occultè scortantur: & sub Solitudinis, aut continentiæ specie libidinem exercent. Melius est itaque lapsum à cursu, palàm sibi Vxorem accipere secundùm Leges: Lest they should be shamed before men, they keep Harlots priuily: and vnder the colour of Solitary, or Continent Life, they practise their filthie pleasure. Better it is therefore for a man being fallen from his course, and breaking his Vow, openly to take vnto himselfe a Wife, according to the Law. So saith S. Hierome, as I haue before alleged: Huiusmodi Virginibus apertè dicendum est, vt aut nubant, si se non possunt continere: aut contineant, si nolunt nubere: To such Virgins wee must say plainly, that either they Marry, if they cannot Conteine: Or else that they Conteine, if they will not Marrie. Epiphan. lib. 2. Haref. 60. Hieronym. ad Demetriadem.

So saith S. Bernard vnto his Sister: Quod incautè Vouisti, ne impleas: Impia est promissio quæ scelere adimpletur: That thou hast vnaduisedly Vowed, see thou keepe it not. It is a wicked promise that is performed with wickednesse. Bernardus ad sororem, de modo bene viuendi, Sermo 62.

To be short, Iohannes Scotus saith: Si Votum Continentiæ est annexum Ordini Sacro solùm ex præcepto Ecclesiæ, sequitur, quòd non simpliciter illegitimat ad contrahendum: If the Vow or Promise of Chastity be annexed vnto Holy Orders onely by force of the Constitution or Commandement of the Church, then doth it not of necessitie and fine force vnable a man to contract Matrimonie. 4. Sen. dist. 36. Quæst. 1.

Howbeit, hereof we haue saide alreadie so much as to a reasonable man may seeme sufficient. Thus far concerning Marriage of Ministers.

The Apology, Chap. 9. Diuision 1.

VVE receiue and embrace all the Canonicall Scriptures, both of the Old, and New Testament, giuing thankes to our God, who hath raised vp vnto vs that Light which we might euer haue before our eies: lest either by the subtilty of man, or by the snares of the Diuell, wee should be carried away to errors and lies. Also we professe that these be the heauenly Voices, whereby God hath opened vnto vs his Will: And that onely in them mans heart can haue setled rest: That in them be abundantly & fully cõprehended all things, whatsoeuer be needful for our health, as Origen, Augustine, Chrysostome, and Cyrillus haue taught: That they be the very might and strength of God to attaine to Saluation: That they be the Foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, whereupon is built the Church of God: That they be the very sure and infallible Rule, whereby may be tried, whether the Church doe swarue, or erre, and whereunto all Ecclesiasticall Doctrine ought to be called to account: And that against these Scriptures neither Law, nor Ordinance, nor any Custome ought to be heard: no though Paul himselfe, or an Angell from Heauen should come and teach the contrarie. Roman. 1.

M. Harding.

But why doe ye not heere plainly declare which be the Bookes of the Scriptures that yee allow, and which be they (a) that ye reiect? In generall ye say that ye embrace all the Canonicall Scriptures. Yet if a man presse you with the place of the Machabees, for Praier to be made for the Dead, and with the words of S. Iames Epistle against your Iustification of Faith only, and likewise with certaine other places of the Scriptures, which be accounted in the Canon of the Church, against certaine other your false Doctrines: in this case (b) your wont is to denie those Scriptures to be Canonicall. Yet heere yee beare the world in hand ye allow all. Would God there were in you either more truth, or lesse craft. Well, yee giue thankes to God for the Scriptures, for that hauing them before your eies, ye are staied in Truth, assured that by the subtiltie of man, or snares of the Diuell, ye be not carried away into Errours and Lies. And is it so indeed? I pray you, Sirs, of what Sect be yee, or of which Sect is each one of you? For I dare boldly say, and so the world seeth, that ye agree not all in one. If ye say ye bee Lutheranes, then must I further demand of you, of which sort of Lutherans? For that puddle vnneth out by many sinks. Be ye Zuinglians, Arians, Osiandrines, Libertines, Adiaphorists, Anabaptists, Caluinists, or Sataniists? What Priuiledge haue ye before your fellowes? A match being made betweene you (I meane that new Clergie of England) and the other Sects of our time, &c. If yee haue this light of the Scriptures before your eies, how is it that ye agree not within your selues? Yea, how is it that each one of you often times

Math. 12. Iacob. 2.

(a) Vntruth. For wee reiect no part of all the Scriptures.

(b) Vntruth. For wee denie no more then S. Augustine, S. Hierome, and other holy Fathers haue denied.

(c) Childish and fond Vntruth: For the Cõmunion Booke was neuer but once changed. But see the often changes of the Masse.

(d) S. Cyprian saith: Non iungitur Ecclesiæ, qui ab Euãgelio separatur: De Lapsis Serm. 5.

(e) Vntruth. For Abel heard the Word of God: read the answer.

(f) A worthy doubt.

(g) Vntruth. For S. Augustine saith, Antonius Scripturas diuinas memoriter audiendo retinuit, &c.

(h) Yet now the very same necessary Traditions be quite forgotten and abolished, yea euen in the Church of Rome.

(i) Vntruth. Read the Answer.

(k) Vntruth. For heereby both S. Paul, and S. Hierome, and other good men are condemned of Heresie.

(l) Vntruth. For wee say not, All things are there expressed.

(m) Scale & fond questions.

(n) Vntruth. For it is not necessarie to Saluation.

(o) They were written by Heretikes in derogation of the truth.

disagreeth with himselfe? How is it that (c) so many times ye haue changed your Communion Booke, the order of your Seruice, your Doctrine of the blessed Sacrament, your Homilies, &c. Who knoweth not how in the matter of the Sacrament your chiefe Captaines haue shewed themselues inconstant, & mutable, and contrary to themselues, I meane Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, and that great Rabbin Peter Martyr himselfe? As for the rest, they be not worthy to be named.

But what say ye? Be these the Heauenly Voices, whereby God hath opened vnto vs his will? Then how dare ye to transgresse his will declared in these Voices, where ye read expressly, that he (d) which heareth not the Church is to be taken for no better then a Heathen, and a Publicane? As ye proceed, ye say, that only in the Scriptures mans heart can haue setled rest, and that in them be abundantly and fully comprehended all things, whatsoeuer be needfull for our Saluation, as Origen, Augustine, Chrysostome, and Cyrillus haue taught. Either ye su know not what you say, Sir Defender, nor the things of which you make affirmation, as S. Paul said of such as ye are, writing to Timothy, or you are soulely ouerseene. If 1. Tim. 1. the heart of man haue setled rest in the Scriptures onely, as you say, then in nothing els but in the Scriptures. By this you seeme to trouble and disquiet many hearts. For if this be true, (e) then had good Abel no better rest in his heart then wicked restlesse Cain. Mans heart hath not setled rest in Scripture onely. Philip. 4.

When the Holy Booke of Scriptures was lost, which God restored by Esdras, were there none in all that time whose hearts had setled rest? What foolish and absurd Doctrine is this? (f) What if it had pleased God there had neuer beene letter written of the Old or new Testament? Should not Gods friends haue found his peace that passeth all sense, as S. Paul saith? Had Paul, Antonie, Hilarion, Pambus and many other holy men liuing in Wildernesse (g) without letters, no rest, ne quiet at their hearts? Nay, who had the like? And whereas you say that all things needfull for our Saluation bee abundantly and fully cõprehended in the Scriptures, this is also as false as sundry other parts of your doctrine. For if al things necessary to saluation be conteined in the Scriptures, then whatsoeuer is not in them conteined, the same is not necessary: If not necessarie, why should we be laden with vnnecessarie burdens? Then awaie with all Traditions at a Clap, be they neuer so Apostolike, neuer so ancient, neuer so healthful, neuer so long time in the Church continued. Remember you not what the most renouned Fathers haue written of the necessitie of Traditions? Or if you remember them, what thought you when you wrote thus? Let learned and holie Basil be heard in stead of many, if not to reuoke you from your errour, yet to discredite you, and stay others in the truth. His words bee these: Of the Doctrines which bee preached in the Church, certaine we haue out of the Scripture written, ceraine wee haue receiued in secret Mystery by Tradition of the Apostles, (h) which both be of equall force to godlinesse. Neither concerning these any man gainsayeth, be hee of neuer so smal knowledge. For if we go about to reiect the customes that be not set forth in writing, as being of little regard, then shall we condemne those things also which we haue in the Gospell necessary to saluation. Yea rather we shal bring the preaching of the Faith but to a bare name. For so they were taken for Heretikes which regarded not the Solemne Fast of Lent (i) receiued at the Apostles, as we read in S. Augustine, De Hær. ad Quodvultdeum, cap. 53. and in the Councell of Gangra in an Epistle to the Bishops of Armenia. Euen so they which denied the (k) distinction of a Bishop and a Priest, were condemned of Heresie, as we finde in S. Augustine, in the Booke and Chapter aforesaid; and in Epiphanius Lib. 3. Cap. 75. In the Councell of Constance the same is to be found. Lib. de Sanct. Fast of Lent.

Againe, if all things necessary to saluation be (l) expressed in the Scriptures, to what purpose said S. Paul, concerning order and manner to be vsed at the celebration of the holy Sacrament, Cætera cum venero disponam? As for other things, I will take order for them when I come? What meaneth S. Iohn to say, Hauing other things to write to you of, I would not (write them) in Paper and Inke: for I trust to be with you, and speak to you, mouth to mouth? To conclude much that might be obiected in few words for breuities sake, what say you, Sir Defender, shal we find all things necessary to Saluation in the Scripture? (m) How thinke you of the Scripture it selfe? How know you this to be the Scripture? How know ye the Gospel of Matthew, Marke, Luke, and Iohn to be theirs whose names they beare? This can you not finde in all the Scripture, (n) and yet is the same necessary to be beleeued. what Scripture haue you to admit these, and to refuse the booke bearing the name of (o) Peter, the Gospell of Thomas, of Bartholomew, of Nicodeme? Why admit you not the Prophets that Basilides would to be allowed, but only the foure great, and the twelue lesser? What authority haue you to stay your selfe by, concerning these, but only that of the Church? For Scripture haue you none for proofe hereof. Then hath not Scripture all things in it necessary for a Christian man. Is it not necessary to beleeue the Sonne of God to be Homousion, that is to say, of the same Substance with the Father; Which if you denie, you restore the old condemned Heresie of the Arians. (p) the same can you not finde in the Scripture. Where in all the Bible finde you that God the Father is Ingenitus? Where finde you that the holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne? That the blessed Virgin Mary continued in her Virginity; That such as be Baptized ought to be Baptized againe? That Infants ought to be Baptized? That the foure Bookes of the Gospell were written by Matthew, Marke, Luke, and Iohn, by what Scripture can you proue it? To end, where finde you expresly in all the Scriptures three persons to be one God? 1. Cor. 11. Epist. 1. Homousion.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here to weigh downe the Authority of Gods holy Word, M. Harding hath brought in a heape of ordinarie stale quarrels, Of the difference betweene Priests and Bishops: of Lent: of the Communion Booke: of the Homilies: of the order of Seruice: and of the perpetuall Virginitie of our Ladie. His whole drift herein is to beare vs in hand, that there is verie little, or none Authority in the Scriptures: and that the whole credit and certaintie of our Faith resteth only in the Church of Rome. He seemeth to take it in scorne that the Word of God should be called Light. Yet notwithstanding the Prophet David saith: Thy Word, O Lord, is a Lanterne to my feet. And againe: The Commandement of the Lord is Lightsome, Theophylact. in giuing Light vnto the eies. And Theophylact saith: Verbum Dei est Lucerna, qua Fur deLucam, ca 16. prehenditur: The Word of God is the Candle, whereby the Theefe (or false Teacher) is espied. Psalm. 118. Psalm. 118.

Whereas

Machabees Canonicall.

Whereas M. Harding demandeth of vs so pleasantly, What Scriptures wee allow, and what we reiect, he troubleth himselfe with an idle and a needlesse question. For wee embrace and reuerence euery parcell and title of the Scriptures without exception, not refusing any part thereof, that hath beene allowed by the antient, learned, Catholike Fathers of the Church of God.

Neither doe wee so scornfully call Gods Holy Word, A Nose of Wax, a Shipmans Hose, or a Dead Letter, as sundrie of that side haue delighted to call it.

Albert. Pighius, lib. 3. cap. 3. Hierar. Iohan. Sleidan. Lib. 23. Hieron. in Præfatione in Proverb. Salomon.

Touching the Booke of the Machabees, we say nothing, but that wee finde written by S. Hierome, S. Augustine, and other Holy Fathers. S. Hierome saith: Machabæorum Libros legit quidem Ecclesia: Sed eos inter Canonicas Scripturas non recipit: Indeed the Church readeth the Bookes of the Machabees: but shee receiueth them not among the Canonicall allowed Scriptures.

M. Harding fol. 321. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. S. Hierome speaketh of such Canonicall Scriptures of the Olde Testament, as the very Iewes allowed for Canonicall. Such indeed the Bookes of the Machabees are not. But S. Augustines words condemne you. He saith, Machabæorum libros, non Iudæi, sed Ecclesia pro Canonicis habet. As for the Bookes of the Machabees, not the Iewes, but the Church accounteth them for Canonicall, &c. Now see, good reader, what loud Lies M. Iewell made when he said he would denie no more then S. Augustine, S. Hierome, and other Fathers haue denied. The Answer. Loud Lies, M. Harding? Your words are too smart. Much better were it for you to be sober. I say now againe, as I said before: The Bookes of the Machabees are not reckoned among the Canonicall Scriptures. And therein we denie no more then by S. Augustine, S. Hierome, and other holy Catholike Fathers hath beene denied. For triall whereof I pray you consider what S. Augustine saith. These be his words: In Machabæorum Libris etsi aliquid Mirabilium numero inserendum conueniens fuisse ordini inueniatur, de hoc tamen nulla cura fatigabimur: quia tantùm agere proposuimus, vt de Diuini Canonis Mirabilibus exiguam expositionem tangeremus: Although there may some thing be found in the Bookes of the Machabees, meet for this order of writing, and worthie to be ioined with the number of Miracles, yet heereof we will haue no care, for that wee haue intended onely to touch a short rehearsall of the Miracles conteined in the Bookes of the Holy Canon. Marke well M. Harding: Heere S. Augustine telleth you, That the Bookes of the Machabees are no part of the Canonicall Scriptures, and that therefore hee will make none account of the Miracles therein conteined. S. Hierome saith, as it is alleged before: The Church readeth the Storie of Iudith, the Booke of Tobie, and the Bookes of the Machabees: But the same Church receiueth not these Bookes as the Canonicall Scriptures. Marke once againe, M. Harding: S. Hierome telleth you, euen as S. Augustine tolde you before: That the Bookes of the Machabees are not Canonicall. And hee speaketh not of the Iewes Canon, as you imagine, but of the Canon of the Church. Forget not his words: Ecclesia eos Libros inter Canonicas Scripturas non recipit.

Aug. de Mirabilib. Sacræ Scripturæ, li. 2. cap. 34.

Hieron. in Præfation. in Salomonem.

Likewise S. Cyprian saith: Alij Libri sunt qui non Canonici, sed Ecclesiastici appellantur, &c. Huius ordinis est Libellus Tobiæ, & Iudith, & Machabæorum Libri: Other Bookes there be that are not called Canonicall, but onely Ecclesiasticall, for that they be allowed to be read in Churches. Of this sort are the Bookes of Tobie, of Iudith, and of the Machabees. Behold, M. Harding: These holy Fathers agree all together, in that they say, The Bookes of the Machabees are no part of the Canonicall Scriptures. Much more might bee said. But by these few the Reader may learne where to find the Loud Lie.

Cyprian. in Expositione Symboli.

Howbeit, by your report S. Augustine saith, The Church accounteth the Bookes of the Machabees as Canonicall Scriptures. What answer may heere be made? Shall wee set S. Augustine against S. Augustine? One S. Augustine saith, The Booke of the Machabees is not Canonicall. Another S. Augustine saith, The Booke of the Machabees is Canonicall. Is and Is not is a plaine contradiction. If the one bee true, the other is false. Whether of these two S. Augustines may wee beleeue? Why doe you thus trifle, M. Harding? Or why doe you so guilefully conceale S. Augustines meaning? I will seeke no further for other sentences. Euen in the selfe same place by you alleged S. Augustine saith, The Booke of the Machabees is not Canonicall. These bee S. Augustines words, M. Harding: Thus he saith: Hæc suppurtatio non in Scripturis Sanctis, quæ appellantur Canonicæ, sed in alijs inuenitur, in quibus sunt & Machabæorum Libri: This reckoning is not found in the Holy Scriptures that are called Canonicall, but in certaine other Bookes, among which are the Bookes of the Machabees. Heere it is euident, by the iudgement of S. Augustine, that the Bookes of the Machabees are not Canonicall. These words, M. Harding, yee would not haue dissembled if yee had meant to deale plainly. Therefore it may like you to consider, how you may better bestow this Loud Lie.

Aug. de Ciuit. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 36.

Notwithstanding, S. Augustine saith further: Hos Libros Ecclesia habet pro Canonicis:

Machabees Canonicall.

nicis: Theſe Bookes the Church alloweth as Canonicall. This is true: I denie it not. But heere you ſeeke to beguile your Reader by the miſunderſtanding of this worde Canonicall. For in the former place Canonicall Bookes, are ſuch, as may be alleged in proofe of Faith. In the ſecond, ſuch Bookes are called Canonicall, as although they beare no ſuch Authority, yet may they be allowed for certaine cauſes, onely to be read openly in the Church. If you had alleged S. Auguſtines wordes fully, and truly, as they lay, the whole matter had beene euident. For thus ſaith S. Auguſtine, Libros Machabæorum Eccleſia habet pro Canonicis, propter quorundam Martyrum Paſſiones vehementes, atque mirabiles: The Church accounteth the Bookes of the Machabees, *as Canonicall, (*not for the Authority and weight of truth, but ) for the great and marueilous Paſſions and Perſecutions of Martyrs, therein conteined.

Auguſt. contra Secundam epiſt Gaudentij, li. 2. cap. 23.

Thus, to be alleged in proofe of Faith, they are not Canonicall: but, to bee read vnto the people in the Church, for example of Life; in this ſenſe, ſaith S. Auguſtine they are Canonicall. To like purpoſe S. Auguſtine writeth to Gaudentius: Scriptura, quæ appellatur Machabæorum, recepta eſt ab Eccleſia non inutiliter, ſi ſobriè legatur, vel audiatur, maximè propter illos Machabæos, qui pro Dei Lege tam indigna perpeſsi ſunt: That Scripture, that ſo is called, and beareth the name of the Machabees, is receiued not vnprofitably of the Church, ſo that it be read, and heard with ſobriety: eſpecially becauſe of thoſe Machabees, that ſuffered ſo cruell torments for the Law of God. So ſaith S. Cyprian: Hæc omnia legi quidem in Eccleſijs voluerunt: non tamen proferri ad Authoritatem ex his Fidei confirmandum: All theſe writings our Fathers haue allowed to be read in the Church: yet not to be alleged for Authority to confirme the Doctrine of our Faith. Likewiſe ſaith S. Hierome touching the ſame Bookes of the Machabees: Hæc volumina legit Eccleſia, ad Edificationem plebis: non ad authoritatem Eccleſiaſticorum Dogmatum confirmandũ: Theſe Bookes the Church readeth for the edifying of the people, but not as matter of authority, whereby to proue Eccleſiaſticall Doctrine. Now I beſeech you, M. Harding, What Canonicall Scriptures are theſe, that may not be alleged in Confirmation of Doctrine, or in proofe of Faith? If yee had diſcreetly foreſeene theſe things, I thinke, yee would not ſo vainely haue charged vs with Loud Lying.

Cyprian. in Expoſitione Symbols.

Hieronym. in Præfatione in Salomonem.

Of Prayer for the Dead, we ſhall haue place more conuenient to ſpeake hereafter.

The place of S. Iames, touching the Iuſtification of Faith and Workes, is anſwered before. Neither doe wee diſcredit any part, either of the Authority, or of the Doctrine of that whole Epiſtle: notwithſtanding Euſebius ſaith, It was written by ſome other, and not by S. Iames. His wordes be theſe: Iſtius Iacobi, qui Iuſtus & Oblias vocabatur, dicitur eſſe Epiſtola, quæ prima ſcribitur inter Canonicas. Sciendum autem eſt, illam Epiſtolam eſſe Spuriam: The opinion is, that the Epiſtle, which is reckened the firſt among the Canonicals, is of this Iames, which was called Iuſtus and Oblias. But we muſt vnderſtand, that it is a Baſtard Epiſtle, and not written by S. Iames.

In the firſt part chap. 10. Diu. 1. Euſ. li. 2. ca. 23. ἐπὶ τῶν ὁμολογ.

Likewiſe S. Hierome ſaith: Epiſtola Iacobi ab alio quopiam ſub eius nomine edita aſſeritur: It is ſaid, that the Epiſtle of S. Iames was ſet forth by ſome other man vnder his name. This therefore is no new fantaſie: but the iudgement of the ancient learned Fathers. Neuertheleſſe we doe both receiue the ſame Epiſtle, and alſo read it in our Churches: and allow euerie Clauſe and Sentence, that therein is written, euen as the Word of God.

Hier. in Catalogo Eccleſiaſt. Scriptorum.

M. Harding ſaith, If ye haue this light of the Scriptures before your eies, how is it, that ye agree no better amongſt your ſelues? And here hee reckoneth vp by rote a many of names of his owne making, Lutherans, Zuinghians, Arians, Oſiandrians, Libertines, Adiaphoriſts, Anabaptiſts, Caluiniſts, and Athaniſts. In which his ſo pleaſant fancie, hee may haue leaue to ſport himſelfe, while he liſteth. God be thanked, wee agree thoroughly together in the whole ſubſtance of the Religion of Chriſt: and altogether with one Heart and one Spirit doe glorifie God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Certainly S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, Epiphanius and Theophilus, as it appeareth by their writings, agreed no better together in their time, then we doe now. Yet had they, and euery of them the Word of God: and the ſame Word of God was a Light vnto their feet.

It was not for any great ſtore of better matter, I trow, that M. Harding thus chargeth vs with ſo often changing the Communion Booke. For of more, then of One onely change, he cannot tell vs. And if there had beene leſſe then that, there had beene no change at all. And yet, for that one change, he himſelfe in the meane ſeaſon hath changed thrice. But the holy Communion Booke, and the Order of the holy miniſtration ſtandeth, and by Gods mercie ſhall ſtand ſtill, without any further change.

Platin. in Sixto 1. Polydor. Virgil. De Inuentorib. rer. lib. 5. cap. 10.

Howbeit, gentle Reader, if thou wilt know the often alterations and changes of the Maſſe, Read, I beſeech thee, Platina & Polydore Virgil, touching the ſame: there ſhalt thou finde, finde how, and by whom, and vpon what occaſion, and in what proceſſe of time, all the parts of the Maſſe were pieced and ſet together: and that in the ſpace of ſeuen hundred whole yeres, ſcarcely, and with much adoe it was made vp at laſt, and brought to ſome perfection. Word written.

Chriſts commandement of Hearing the Church is anſwered before. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Credimus Sanctam Eccleſiam: non Credimus In Sanctam Eccleſiam: We beleeue that there is a Holy Church: but we beleeue not In the Holy Church. For the Church is not God, nor is able of her ſelfe to make, or alter any one Article of the Faith. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, Ad Legem potiùs, & ad Teſtimonium. Si non reſponderint ſecundùm Verbum hoc, non erit illis lux Matutina: To the Law rather, and to the teſtimony of God. If they anſwer not according to this Word, they ſhall haue no Morning light. Auguſt. De Fide & Symb. Eſa. 8.

M. Harding ſaith further, If quietneſſe of Conſcience come of the Word of God onely, then had Abel no more quietneſſe of Conſcience then wicked reſtleſſe Cain. Then ſhould Paul the Eremite, and Antonie, and Hilarion, and Pambus, and other holy men, liuing in Wildernesſe without Letters haue had no reſt, ne quiet at their hearts. And why ſo? Becauſe they had no Word written.

Who would thinke, that M. Harding, bearing ſuch a countenance of Diuinity, would thus goe about to deceiue himſelfe with a point of Sophiſtrie? Chryſoſtome ſaith: Deus Conditor Humani Generis ab initio per ſeipſum hominibus loquebatur: God the Creator of Mankind from the beginning ſpake vnto men by himſelfe, in his own perſon. And S. Paul ſaith: Deus olim multifariam, multiſque modis Patribus loquutus eſt: In Old times God ſpake many waies, and in ſundry ſorts vnto the Fathers. And doth M. Harding thinke, when God himſelfe in his owne perſon, and preſently ſpake vnto Abel, that Abel heard not then the Word of God? We ſpeake not ſo preciſely, and nicely of Gods Word written in paper. For ſo it is a Creature corruptible, and ſhall conſume and perish, as other corruptible Creatures doe. But the word of God, which we ſpeake of, endureth for euer. Chryſoſt. in Gen. hom. 2. Hebr. 2.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. We alſo in Chriſts Church haue as well Gods Word in our Hearts, as in our Bookes: whence alſo, to wit, out of our Hearts, we may reſolue the doubts, which ariſe vpon our Bookes. The Anſwer. In your Hearts, M. Harding? And is your Heart the onely Oracle of all the World? Or muſt wee leaue Gods holy Word, that endureth for euer, and reſort to your Hearts to learne Gods will? The Prophet Zacharie ſaith: They haue beaten their Hearts as hard as the Adamant, leſt they ſhould heare the Law of God, and the words which the Lord of Sabbaoth hath ſent in his Spirit by the Miniſtery of his Prophets. S. Paul ſaith: Obſcuratum eſt inſipiens cor illorum: dicentes, ſe eſſe ſapientes, ſtulti facti ſunt: Their fooliſh heart was blinded with darkeneſſe: whereas they boaſted themſelues to bee wiſe men, they became fooles. They turned the Truth of God into Lies, and fell downe, and worſhipped a Creature, forſaking the Creatour, which is God bleſſed for euer. God grant, M. Harding, that the Day-ſtarre may riſe vp, and ſhine in our Hearts, that we may ſee your Light, and walke ſafely in your Waies. ☜ M. Harding fol. 328. b. Zachar. 7. Rom. 1. 2. Petri 1.

S Hierome ſaith: Quomodo Æternæ erunt Scripturæ Diuinæ, ſi Mundus certo fine eſt terminandus? Verum eſt quidem, quòd Librorum pelliculæ cum ipſis Literis abolendæ ſunt. Sed, quia ſubiungit Dominus, Verba verò mea non præteribunt, proculdubio, quod illis apicibus pollicetur, erit Æternum: How ſhall the holy Scriptures be Euerlaſting, ſeeing the World ſhall haue an end? True it is, that the parchment or leaues of the Bookes, with the Letters and all ſhall be abolished. But for aſmuch as our Lord addeth, My words ſhall neuer paſſe, doubtleſſe (though the Papers and Letters perish, yet) the thing that is promiſed by the ſame Letters ſhall laſt for euer. So Chryſoſtome ſaith: Paulus Prædicationem non Scripturam appellat Euangelium: Preaching not written, Paul calleth the Goſpell. Hieron. in Ieremiam, cap. 37. Chryſoſtom. 2. Cor. Hom. 18.

That M. Harding addeth of Antonius and Paulus, and Hilarion, and other Eremites, that they liued in Wildernesſe without Letters, & therefore preſumeth, they liued without the Word of God, it is verie vnaduiſedly ſpoken, and vtterly vntrue. For proofe whereof, to name onely one in ſtead of the reſt, S. Auguſtine ſaith, that Antonius the Eremite was notably learned, and perfect in the Scriptures. His words be theſe: Antonius ſine vlla ſcientia Literarum, Scripturas Diuinas & memoriter audiendo tenuiſſe, & prudenter cogitando intelexiſſe, prædicatur: It is reported, that Antonius, without knowledge of Letter, both learned the holy Scriptures, and bare them well in mind by hearing: and alſo by wiſdome and ſtudy vnderſtood them. S. Auguſtine ſaith not, as M. Harding ſaith, that Antonius liued without the Word of God, but the contrary, that he was ready and perfect in the Word of God. Auguſt. de Doctr. Chriſtiana, lib. 1. in Prolog.

And whereas M. Harding would ſeeme to make ſuch an account of Prayer and Holineſſe without knowledge, S. Auguſtine ſaith, Lectio ſine Meditatione arida eſt: Meditatio ſine Lectione erronea eſt: Oratio ſine Meditatione tepida eſt: Reading without Meditation is Auguſt. De Scalis Paradiſi, ſp. 11.

or ſtudy, is drie and barren: Meditation or ſtudy without Reading is erroneous: And Prayer without Cogitation or ſtudy is halfe cold and vnfruitfull. Thus we ſée by S. Auguſtines iudgement, that the force and ſubſtance both of Prayer, and of Meditation dependeth of Reading. And therefore Nicolaus Cuſanus ſaith: The Soule, that will flie into the Wildernesse of Contemplation, muſt haue two wings, the one of Deuotion, the other of Knowledge or Vnderſtanding.

Nicol. Cuſan. Excita. lib. 2.

Howbeit, what comfort and peace of Conſcience, we haue by hearing the Word of God, S. Paul can tell vs ſomewhat better, then M. Harding. Thus he ſaith: Quæcunque Scripta ſunt, &c. Whatſoeuer things are Written, they are written for our learning, that by Patience and Comfort of the Scriptures we may haue hope. Euen ſo ſaith Chriſt himſelfe: O Father, this is the Euerlaſting life, that they may know thee, the onely, and verie God, and Ieſus Chriſt, whom thou haſt ſent.

Rom. 15.

Iohan. 17.

But S. Paul ſaith: Keepe the Traditions, which yee haue receiued, either by Epiſtle or by Word. And S. Baſil reckoneth Traditions to bee One and Equall with the Word of God. Firſt, that S. Baſil wrote thoſe words rather of zeale then of iudgement, it may eaſily appeare, by that the ſelfe ſame Traditions, that he there ſpecially nameth, and ſo highly commendeth, are for the greateſt part already abolished, and quite forgotten, yea and that euen in the Church of Rome. Yet the Word of God indureth ſtill, and ſhall endure for euer. For example, by one of S. Baſils neceſſary Traditions, It is not Lawfull for any man, to Kneele in the Church vpon the Sunday: but euery man is bound by the ſame Tradition, at Sermon, at Prayer, and at the Communion to ſtand vpright. And this (he ſaith) was giuen vnto vs in Secret Charge by the Apoſtles of Chriſt. This ſo neceſſary, and ſo Apoſtolike Tradition is now diſſolued and broken, and vtterly forgotten, not only in Louain, but alſo in Rome.

2 Theſſ. 2. Baſil. de Spirit. Sanct. cap. 27.

ὁρθὸν τοίνυν τας ἐν χεὶ τὸ τῇ μιᾷ τῶν σαββάτων.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: By Tradition of the Apoſtles, betweene Easter and Whitſunday it was not lawful for any man to Faſt. Yet now we Faſt within the ſame daies ſo forbidden, and the ſame kinde of Faſt is thought lawfull, the Apoſtles Tradition to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Auguſtinus ad Caſulanum.

The reſt of S. Baſils Traditions ſtand in Hallowing of Water: in Bleſſing of Oile: in Praying towards the East: in vttering certaine words of Inuocation at the ſhewing forth of the Bread of Thankeſgiuing vnto the people: Theſe things, I beléeue M. Harding himſelfe neuer thought to be equiualent with the Word of God.

But if theſe, and other like Traditions be ſo waighty and ſo neceſſary, as he ſeemeth to make them, then let him tell vs in good ſooth, and without fable, what were theſe Myſtical Solemn words of Inuocation, that S. Baſil ſaith, were ſpoken by the Prieſt at the Opening or Shewing forth of the Sacrament? If they be ſo neceſſary to be vſed and continued in the Church of God, why hath hee, and his whole Roman Clergie quite forgotten them? If he and his Clergie haue forgotten them, and vſe them not, and care not for them, how can he ſay, or may we thinke, they are ſo neceſſary to Saluation?

This is the ſimplicity and plainnes of M. Hardings dealing. He telleth vs many tales of the Apoſtles Traditions, being himſelfe the manifeſt deſpiſer and breaker of the ſame Traditions. Touching the words of S. Paul, I marueil, that M. Harding could ſo eaſily be deceiued. For S. Paul himſelfe, euen in the ſame words, and in the ſelfe ſame line, would haue told him, that by the name of Traditions, he meant not Vnwritten Verities, & Liueleſſe Ceremonies, as he ſuppoſeth, but the ſelfe ſame Subſtance of Religion and Doctrine, that he had vttered vnto the Theſſalonians before, either by Epiſtle, or by Preaching.

2. Theſſ. 2.

Theſe be his words: Hold the Traditions which yee haue receiued, either by Epiſtle or by Word. He calleth them Traditions, although they were contained in his Epiſtles, and declared to them by Writing. For the Apoſtles preaching and writing, in ground and ſubſtance were all one. Nicephorus ſaith: Paulus, quæ præſens oratione ſua dilucidè docuerat, eadem abſens per compendium in memoriam, ſcripta Epiſtola reuocare voluit: Paul, what things, being preſent, he had plainely taught by Mouth, the ſame things afterward, being abſent, he ſhortly called to their remembrance, by writing an Epiſtle. The like he writeth alſo of S. Matthew: Matthæus diſcedens, (aliò prædicatum) abſentiam ſuam ſcripto præſenti compenſauit: S. Matthew departing (to preach in other places) recompenſed his abſence by preſent writing.

Niceph. lib. 2. cap. 45.

S. Paul vnto the Philippians ſaith thus: Eadem ſcribere mihi quidem non pigrum: vobis autem neceſſarium: To write vnto you the ſelfe ſame things, vnto me it is not paineſull: but in your behalfe, it is neceſſarie. Theſe words S. Hierome expoundeth thus: Eadem ſcribere, hoc eſt, eadem repetere, quæ præſens dixeram: To write the ſame things, that is to ſay, to make rehearſall of the ſame things, that I tolde you by Mouth, when I was preſent.

Philip. 3.

Hier. in epi. ad Philip. cap. 3.

So ſaith Theophylact ſpeaking in the perſon of S. Luke: Priùs te ſine Scripto inſtruxi:

Theophylact. in Lucam, cap. 1.

nunc scriptum tibi trado Euangelium: atque ita mentem tuam munio, ne obliuiscatur eorum, quæ priùs sine Scripturis tradita sunt: Before this time I haue instructed thee without writing. Now I deliuer vnto thee a written Gospell. And so I fortifie thy minde, that it forget not the things, that were deliuered thee before without writing. Traditiõs.

So saith Irenæus: Apostoli tunc Euangelium præconiauerunt. Postea verò per Dei voluntatem, illud in Scripturis nobis tradiderunt, Fundamentum & Columnam Fidei nostræ futurum: Then the Apostles preached the Gospell. And afterwards by Gods will they deliuered the same to vs in writing, to be a foundation and pillar vnto our Faith. Iren. li. 3. ca. 1.

And therefore Chrysostome saith: Paulus etiam non Scriptam Prædicationem vocat Euangelium: S. Paul calleth his Preaching not written, by the name of the Gospell. Chrysost. in 2. Cor. Hom. 18.

But me thinketh, M. Harding, so stoutly striuing for the bare name of Traditions, should better haue learned S. Hieromes lesson touching the same. Thus he writeth vpon these words of S. Paul: Hold the Traditions, which ye haue learned, either by our Epistle, or by our Word. Quando sua vult teneri, non vult extranea superaddi. Wherein S. Paul will haue his owne things to be kept, he will haue no strange things therevnto to be added. Hieron. in 2. Thess. 2.

And that S. Paul, by this word Traditions, meant not Ceremonies, or certaine letter vnknowen Verities, but the very substance of the Gospell of Christ, as it is plaine before: if M. Harding will not beleeue vs, yet let him beleeue S. Paul himselfe. Thus he writeth: Tradidi vobis in primis, quod etiam accepi, quòd Christus mortuus est pro peccatis nostris secundum Scripturas: First I haue deliuered to you (or giuen to you by Tradition) the same thing, that I receiued: that is, that Christ died for our Sinnes, according to the Scriptures. Here, by S. Pauls words, the death of Christ is called a Tradition. 1. Cor. 15.

So saith S. Basil: Hoc palam impugnat Salutaris Baptismatis Traditionem: Baptismus noster, iuxta ipsam Domini Traditionem, est in nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus Sancti: Per ipsam Baptismi Traditionem habemus confessionem Fidei: This thing is plainly against the Tradition of Healthfull Baptisme: Our Baptisme, according to the Tradition of our Lord, is in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost: By the very Tradition of Baptisme, we haue the Confession of Faith. Basilius de Spiritu Sancto. ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Κυρίου παραδόσεως μεμάθηκεν. cap. 10.

S. Cyprian saith: Vnde est ista Traditio? Vtrumne de Dominica & Euangelica Authoritate descendens, an de Apostolorum mandatis atque Epistolis veniens? &c. Scriptum aut in Euangelio præcipitur, aut in Apostolorum Epistolis, & Actis continetur, obseruetur etiam hæc Sancta Traditio: From whence haue we this Tradition? Whether commeth it from the authority of our Lord, and of the Gospell, or else from the Commandements and Epistles of the Apostles, &c. Therefore if it be either commanded in the Gospell, or contained in the Epistles, or Acts of the Apostles, let vs keepe the same Tradition. Cyprian ad Pompeium, contra Epistolam Stephani.

Likewise Eusebius saith: Polycarpus, cùm recepisset ea ab illis, qui ipsi viderant Vitam Verbi, nuntiauit eadem, omnia Scripturis consona: Polycarpus, when by Tradition hee had receiued these things of them, that had seene the Life of the Word, vttered and shewed the same, being all agreeable vnto the Scriptures. Euseb. li. 5. ca. 18. τὰ παρ' ἐκείνων, τοῖς γεγραμμένοις.

Of such Tradition, it is plaine, S. Paul speaketh. Now therefore iudge thou, gentle Reader, how truly and handsomly M. Harding alleageth these words of S. Paul against S. Pauls expresse words and vndoubted meaning, to serue his purpose.

As for Lenten Fast, the Superstition onely excepted, we condemne it not, but vse it still. But how can M. Harding say, either that Lent is so necessary as hee maketh it, or else, that it is the Tradition of the Apostles? Verely S. Augustine saith: Quibus diebus non oporteat ieiunare, & quibus oporteat, Præceptõ Domini, vel Apostolorum non inuenio definitum: Vpon what daies wee ought not to Fast, and vpon what daies we ought to Fast, I finde it not appointed or limitted by anie commandement, either of our Lord, or of the Apostles. Aug. epist. 86.

So saith Socrates: Euangelia non imposuerunt iugum Seruitutis: Sed homines ipsi, suis quisque locis, propter remissionem, & memoriam Passionis, Pascha, & alios Dies festos, sicut voluerunt, ex Consuetudine quadam celebrarunt. Non enim hoc vel Seruator, vel Apostoli Lege aliqua obseruandum esse mandauerunt: The Gospell hath laid vpon vs no yoke of Bondage: But men themselues in the Countries where they dwelt, for release of labour, and Remembrance of the Passion of Christ, of a certaine Custome, kept the Easter and other holy daies, each man as hee would. For neither our Sauiour, nor the Apostles by any Law commanded these things. Socr. li. 5. ca. 22

Likewise saith Cassiodorus: Alij Pisces solummodò comedunt: Alij vnà cum Piscibus vtuntur etiam Volatilibus: Alij vsque ad Nonam ieiunantes, sine discretione ciborum reficiuntur. Puto, Apostolos singulorum hoc reliquisse sententiæ, vt vnusquisque Operetur, non timore aut necessitate, quod bonum est; Some men (in the time of the Lenten Fast) eat only Fish; Others vse both Fish, and Fowle too; Some others, when they haue Fasted vntil three Cassiod. lib 5. cap. 38.

three of the Clocke in the afternoone, afterward they refresh their bodies without difference, or choice of Meats. I thinke, the Apostles left this matter to every mans discretion, that every man may doe good without feare, or superstition, or necessitie.

Lenten Fast.

Tertullian likewise saith: De cætero indifferenter ieiunandum, ex arbitrio, non ex imperio Nouæ Disciplinæ, pro temporibus, & causis vniuscuiusque. Sic & Apostolos obseruasse, nullum aliud impunentes iugum certorum, & in Commune omnibus obeundorum ieiuniorum: Henceforth he must fast without compulsion, of free will, not by commandemẽt of this new Discipline, accordingly as every man shall se time and cause. For so it appeareth, the Apostles kept it, laying on none other yoke of certaine appointed Fasts, to be obserued in common of all men altogether.

Tert. de ieiunio, contr. Physicos.

Therefore S. Augustine saith: Per Quadragesimam fere omnes abstinent, non solùm à Carnibus, verùm etiam à quibusdam Fructibus, quanto magis quisque, vel minùs seu voluerit, seu potuerit: At the Lent season all men for the most part abstaine, not only from Flesh, but also from certaine fruits, as every man either will, or is able to doe, more or lesse. All men he saith, do abstaine for the most part: but not all indeed.

August. contra Faust. l. 30. ca. 5

All these things being true and certaine, and out of question, how can M. Harding thus assure vs, that the Lenten Fast, is the undoubted Tradition, and Commandement of the Apostles?

Certainely, whereas they so often tell vs, We ought to Fast Forties Daies, for that Christ himselfe did the like, and gaue vs example so to doe, Chrysostome saith, Christus non iubet, vt ieiunium suum imitemur: Christ commanded vs not to follow his Fasting, Or, to Fast as he Fasted.

Chrys. in Matt. Homil. 47.

And touching the number of the Daies, Eusebius saith, Quidam putant ieiunare oportere vnum tantum Diem: alij duos: alij plures: alij quadraginta horas diurnas, nocturnasque: Some thinke they ought to Fast onely one day: others, two daies: others moe: some others, forty whole houres, both night and day together.

Euseb. l. 5. ca. 23.

Priests and Bishops.

But what meant M. Harding here to come in with the difference betweene Priests and Bishops? Thinketh he, that Priests and Bishops hold only by Tradition? Or is it so horrible an heresie, as hee maketh it, to say, that by the Scriptures of God, a Bishop and a Priest are all one? Or knoweth he how farre, and vnto whom, he reacheth the name of an Heretike?

Merely Chrysostome saith: Inter Episcopum & Presbyterum interest fermè nihil: Betweene a Bishop and a Priest in a manner there is no difference. S. Hierome saith, somewhat in rougher sort, Audio quendam in tantam erupisse vecordiam, vt Diaconos Presbyteris, id est, Episcopis anteferret: Cùm Apostolus perspicuè doceat, eosdem esse Presbyteros, quos Episcopos: I heare say, there is One become so peeuish, that hee setteth Deacons before Priests, that is to say, before Bishops: whereas the Apostle plainly teacheth vs, that Priests and Bishops be all one.

Chrys. in 1. Timoth. homil. 11. Hieron ad Euagrium.

S. Augustine saith: Quid est Episcopus, nisi Primus Presbyter, hoc est, Summus Sacerdos? What is a Bishop, but the First Priest, that is to say, the Highest Priest? So saith S. Ambrose: Episcopi & Presbyteri vna Ordinatio est: Vterque enim Sacerdos est. Sed Episcopus Primus est: There is but one Consecration of Priest and Bishop: for both of them are Priests. But the Bishop is the First.

Aug. in quæstionib. Noui, & Vet. Testament. Quæst. 101 Ambrosius in 1. Tim. cap. 3.

All these, and other mo holy Fathers, together with S. Paul the Apostle, for thus saying, by M. Hardings aduice, must be holden for Heretikes.

But S Paul saith to the Corinthians: Cætera, cum venero, disponam: For the rest, I will take order when I come. And S. Iohn saith: I will not write by Paper and Inke: but I trust to be with you my selfe, and to speake vnto you. Upon these few words, M. Harding is able to build vp his Dumi Communion, his Priuate Masse, and whatsoeuer he listeth besides.

1. Corinth. 7. Iohan. 2.

S Augustine saith: Omnes insipientissimi Hæretici, qui se Christianos vocari volunt, audacias figmentorum suorum, quas maximè exhortet sensus humanus, hac occasione Euangelicæ sententiæ colorare conantur, vbi Dominus ait, Adhuc multa vobis habeo dicere: sed ea non potestis portare modò: All the most peeuish Heretikes that faine would bee called Christians, goe about to colour the bold Vanities of their Inuentions, which the very sense, and reason of Man doth most abhorre, with the pretense of this saying in the Gospell, where as our Lord saith thus: I haue many things to say vnto you, but as now ye are not able to beare them.

Aug. in Ioh. Tract. 97.

Euen so saith Tertullian: Eadem dementia confitentur, Apostolos quidem nihil ignorasse, nec diuersa inter se prædicasse. Sed non omnia volunt illos omnibus reuelasse: sed quædam Palam, & Vniuersis: quædam Secretò, & Paucis demandasse: By a like kinde of Madnesse they confesse, that the Apostles indeed were ignorant of nothing: nor taught anie contrarie Doctrine among themselues. But they say, The Apostles reuealed not all things to Tertul. de Præscription contra Hæreticos.

all men: but shewed certaine things openly and to all: and other certaine things secretly and vnto a few.

Forged Scriptures

Athan. contrà Arian. Orat. 2.

By such right held sometime the great Heretike Arius. For euen so said hee then, as M. Harding saith now: Ex electis Dei secundum Fidem, Peritis Dei, Rectigradis, qui Sanctum Dei spiritum acceperunt, ego ita didici: These things haue I learned (not of the Scriptures, but) of the chosen of God, according to Faith: of the skilfull in Godly vnderstanding: of them, that walke vprightly, and had receiued the Spirit of God: that is to say, by Tradition.

Epiph. lib. 1. haref. 38.

So Epiphanius saith: The Heretikes called Caiani, auouched all their follies and Heresies, not by the Scriptures, but by Tradition, as they said, from S. Paul: and tooke vpon them, to know all those Secret words, that S. Paul had heard in the third Heauen.

If M. Harding may haue leaue, to handle the same weapons, I doubt not, but hee will some be able to proue, that both his Holy Bread, and his Holy Water, and whatsoeuer, shall please him else, came by Tradition directly from the Apostles of Christ, and from Christ himselfe.

1. Cor. 11.

But S. Paul when he said, I will come, and take Order, hee meant not to deuise any other Scripture, or new Verities, that they had not known before: but onely to appoint them, in what place, at what time, in what Order, and with what other Circumstances, the Holy Ministration, and other like Ecclesiasticall Offices should be vsed.

August. in Ioh. Tract. 96.

As for these fantasies, that M. Harding, and his fellowes haue imagined, S. Augustine saith: Ista, cùm Christus ipse tacuerit, quis nostrûm dicat, Ista, vel illa sunt? Aut si dicere audeat, vndè probat? Quis enim est tam vanus, aut tam temerarius, qui cùm dixerit etiam vera, quibus voluerit, quæ voluerit, sine vllo Testimonio Diuino, affirmat ea esse, quæ tunc Dominus dicere noluit? Forasmuch as Christ himselfe hath not reuealed these things, which of vs will say, they be these or these? Or if he so say, how can he proue it? For who is there, either so vain or so rash, who, notwithstanding he speake the truth, to whom he listeth, and what he listeth, will affirme without any Testimony of the Scriptures, that these be the things, that the Lord then would not open?

Hier. in Aggæum, cap. 1.

Such things they be, that, as S. Hierome saith, Are cut off with the sword (that is to say, with the Word) of God.

Epiphan. lib. 3. Haref. 73. ἐξ ὧν πάντα πάντα.

M. Harding saith: These expresse words, Persona, Ingenitus, Homousios, are not found in the Scriptures. So said the Arian Heretikes too, as well as he. But what forceth that? Epiphanius saith: Nomen substantiæ non ponitur nudè, nec in Veteri, nec in Nouo Testamento: Sensus autem eius Nominis vbique est: This very word, Substantia, is not plainly expressed, neither in the New, nor in the Old Testament: But the sense and meaning of that Word is euery where.

Athan. Tom. 2. Quòd Decreta Nicenæ Synodi commodis, & pijs verbis sint expositæ.

So saith Athanasius: Tametsi hæ voces in Scriptura non reperiuntur, tamen habent eam Sententiam, quam Scripturæ volunt: Notwithstanding these words be not found expressed in the Scripture, yet haue they the same sense and meaning, that the Scripture willeth.

Gennadius in Cathal. Illustr. Virorum.

Touching the Perpetuall Virginity of that blessed Virgin the Mother of Christ, which M. Harding saith, cannot be proued by any Scriptures, Gennadius writeth thus: Heluidij prauitatem arguens Hieronymus, Libellum Documentis Scripturarum sufficienter factum aduersus eum edidit: S. Hierome reproouing the wilfull leudnes of the Heretike Heluidius, (denying the Perpetuall Virginity of Christs Mother) set foorth a Booke against him, furnished with sufficient Testimonies of the Scriptures. Gennadius saith, the Perpetuall Virginity of our Lady is proued sufficiently by the Scriptures: M. Harding onely to maintaine his quarrell, saith: It cannot be prooued by any Scriptures: but standeth onely by Tradition.

M. Harding fol. 327. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. This is a loud lie. Trie it out who will. Gennadius saith not so, but onely, that S. Hieroms Book, which he wrote against Heluidius, affirming, that our Lady bare Children, after shee had borne Christ, was sufficiently furnished with Testimonies of the Scriptures. The Answer. O, M. Harding, why should there be so much folly in one man? Thus standeth the case: Heluidius the Heretike said, That our Lady had other children by Ioseph her Husband besides Christ, and so denied her Perpetuall Virginity. Against this Heresie S. Hierome wrote a booke, and, as Gennadius saith, Furnished the same sufficiently with many Testimonies of the Scriptures, to proue, that our Lady continued still a pure Virgin. For what thing else should hee proue? And what is this else, but the same, that I say, that the Perpetual Virginity of our Lady, by report of Gennadius, is prooued sufficiently by the Scriptures? The words of Gennadius are these: Libellum Testimonijs Scripturarum sufficienter factum. Therefore, M. Harding, for humanities sake, spare this vnmanly vpbraiding of Leud lies, and bestow them rather among your fellowes. ☜

S. Hierome

three of the Clocke in the afternoone, afterward they refresh their bodies without difference, or choice of Meats. I thinke, the Apostles left this matter to every mans discretion, that every man may doe good without feare, or superstition, or necessitie.

Tert. de ieiunio, contr. Physicos.

Tertullian likewise saith: De cætero indifferenter ieiunandum, ex arbitrio, non ex imperio Nouæ Disciplinæ, pro temporibus, & causis vniuscuiusque. Sic & Apostolos obseruasse, nullum aliud impunentes iugum certorum, & in Commune omnibus obeundorum ieiuniorum: Henceforth hee must fast without compulsion, of free will, not by commandemẽt of this new Discipline, accordingly as every man shall see time and cause. For so it appeareth, the Apostles kept it, laying on none other yoke of certaine appointed Fasts, to be obserued in common of all men altogether.

August. contra Faust. l. 30. ca. 5

Therefore S. Augustine saith: Per Quadragesimam fere omnes abstinent, non solùm à Carnibus, verùm etiam à quibusdam Fructibus, quanto magis quisque, vel minùs seu voluerit, seu potuerit: All the Lent season all men for the most part abstaine, not only from Flesh, but also from certaine fruits, as every man either will, or is able to doe, more or lesse. All men he saith, do abstaine for the most part: but not all indeed.

All these things being true and certaine, and out of question, how can M. Harding thus assure vs, that the Lenten Fast, is the vndoubted Tradition, and Commandement of the Apostles?

Chrys. in Matt. Homil. 47.

Certainely, whereas they so often tell vs, We ought to Fast Forty Daies, for that Christ himselfe did the like, and gaue vs example so to doe, Chrysostome saith, Christus non iubet, vt ieiunium suum imitemur: Christ commanded vs not to follow his Fasting, Or, to Fast as he Fasted.

Euseb. l. 5. ca. 23.

And touching the number of the Daies, Eusebius saith, Quidam putant ieiunare oportere vnum tantùm Diem: alij duos: alij plures: alij quadraginta horas diurnas, nocturnasque: Some thinke they ought to Fast onely one day: others, two daies: others moe: some others, forty whole houres, both night and day together.

Priests and Bishops.

But what meant M. Harding here to come in with the difference betweene Priests and Bishops? Thinketh he, that Priests and Bishops hold only by Tradition? Or is it so horrible an heresie, as hee maketh it, to say, that by the Scriptures of God, a Bishop and a Priest are all one? Or knoweth he how farre, and vnto whom, he reacheth the name of an Heretike?

Chrys. in 1. Timoth. homil. 11. Hieron ad Euagrium.

Verely Chrysostome saith: Inter Episcopum & Presbyterum interest fermè nihil: Betweene a Bishop and a Priest in a manner there is no difference. S. Hierome saith, somewhat in rougher sort, Audio quendam in tantam erupisse vecordiam, vt Diaconos Presbyteris, id est, Episcopis anteferret: Cùm Apostolus perspicuè doceat, eosdem esse Presbyteros, quos Episcopos: I heare say, there is One become so peeuish, that hee setteth Deacons before Priests, that is to say, before Bishops: whereas the Apostle plainly teacheth vs, that Priests and Bishops be all one.

Aug. in quæstionib. Noui, & Vet. Testament. Quæst. 101 Ambrosius in 1. Tim. cap. 3.

S. Augustine saith: Quid est Episcopus, nisi Primus Presbyter, hoc est, Summus Sacerdos? What is a Bishop, but the First Priest, that is to say, the Highest Priest? So saith S. Ambrose: Episcopi & Presbyteri vna Ordinatio est: Vterque enim Sacerdos est. Sed Episcopus Primus est: There is but one Consecration of Priest and Bishop: for both of them are Priests. But the Bishop is the First.

All these, and other mo holy Fathers, together with S. Paul the Apostle, for thus saying, by M. Hardings aduice, must be holden for Heretikes.

1. Corinth. 7. Iohan. 2.

But S Paul saith to the Corinthians: Cætera, cum venero, disponam: For the rest, I will take order when I come. And S. Iohn saith: I will not write by Paper and Inke: but I trust to be with you my selfe, and to speake vnto you. Vpon these few words, M. Harding is able to build vp his Dumi Commmunion, his Priuate Masse, and whatsoeuer he listeth besides.

Aug. in Ioh. Tract. 97.

Tertul de Præscription contra Hæreticos.

Euen so saith Tertullian: Eadem dementia confitentur, Apostolos quidem nihil ignorasse, nec diuersa inter se prædicasse. Sed non omnia volunt illos omnibus reuelasse: sed quædam Palam, & Vniuersis: quædam Secretò, & Paucis demandasse: By a like kinde of Madnesse they confesse, that the Apostles indeed were ignorant of nothing: nor taught any contrarie Doctrine among themselues. But they say, The Apostles reuealed not all things to all

all men: but shewed certaine things openly and to all: and other certaine things secretly and vnto a few.

Forged Scriptures

By such right held sometime the great Heretike Arius. For euen so said hee then, as M. Harding saith now: Ex electis Dei secundum Fidem, Peritis Dei, Rectigradis, qui Sanctum Dei Spiritum acceperunt, ego ita didici: These thinges haue I learned (not of the Scriptures, but) of the chosen of God, according to Faith: of the skilfull in Godly vnderstanding: of them, that walke vprightly, and had receiued the Spirit of God: that is to say, by Tradition. Athan. contra Arian. Orat. 2.

So Epiphanius saith: The Heretikes called Caiani, auouched all their follies and Heresies, not by the Scriptures, but by Tradition, as they said, from S. Paul: and tooke vpon them, to know all those Secret words, that S. Paul had heard in the third Heauen. Epiph. lib. 1. haref. 38.

If M. Harding may haue leaue, to handle the same weapons, I doubt not, but hee will some be able to proue, that both his Holy Bread, and his Holy Water, and whatsoeuer, shall please him else, came by Tradition directly from the Apostles of Christ, and from Christ himselfe.

But S. Paul when he said, I will come, and take Order, hee meant not to deuise any other Scripture, or new Verities, that they had not known before: but onely to appoint them, in what place, at what time, in what Order, and with what other Circumstances, the Holy Ministration, and other like Ecclesiasticall Offices should be vsed. 1. Cor. 11.

As for these fantasies, that M. Harding, and his fellowes haue imagined, S. Augustine saith: Ista, cùm Christus ipse tacuerit, quis nostrûm dicat, Ista, vel illa sunt? Aut si dicere audeat, vndè probat? Quis enim est tam vanus, aut tam temerarius, qui cùm dixerit etiam vera, quibus voluerit, quæ voluerit, sine vllo Testimonio Diuino, affirmat ea esse, quæ tunc Dominus dicere noluit? Forasmuch as Christ himselfe hath not reuealed these things, which of vs will say, they be these or these? Or if he so say, how can he proue it? For who is there, either so vaine or so rash, who, notwithstanding he Speake the truth, to whom he listeth, and what he listeth, will affirme without any Testimony of the Scriptures, that these be the things, that the Lord then would not open? August. in Ioh. Tract. 96.

Such things they be, that, as S. Hierome saith, Are cut off with the sword (that is to say, with the Word) of God. Hier. in Aggæum, cap. 1.

M. Harding saith: These expresse words, Persona, Ingenitum, Homousios, are not found in the Scriptures. So said the Arian Heretikes to, as well as he. But what forceth that? Epiphanius saith: Nomen substantiæ non ponitur nudè, nec in Veteri, nec in Nouo Testamento: Sensus autem eius Nominis vbique est: This very word, Substantia, is not plainly expressed, neither in the New, nor in the Old Testament: But the sense and meaning of that Word is euery where. Epiphan. lib. 3. Hæres. 73. ἐ ῆ τῶν γραφῶν.

So saith Athanasius: Tametsi hæ voces in Scriptura non reperiuntur, tamen habent eam Sententiam, quam Scripturæ volunt: Notwithstanding these words be not found expressed in the Scripture, yet haue they the same sense and meaning, that the Scripture willeth. Athan. Tom. 2. Quòd Decreta Nicenæ Synodi commodis, & pijs verbis sint expositæ.

Touching the Perpetuall Virginity of that blessed Virgin the Mother of Christ, which M. Harding saith, cannot be proued by any Scriptures, Gennadius writeth thus: Heluidij prauitatem arguens Hieronymus, Libellum Documentis Scripturarum sufficienter factum aduersus eum edidit: S. Hierome reproouing the wilfull leudnes of the Heretike Heluidius, (denying the Perpetuall Virginity of Christs Mother) set forth a Booke against him, furnished with sufficient Testimonies of the Scriptures. Gennadius saith, the Perpetuall Virginity of our Lady is proued sufficiently by the Scriptures: M. Harding onely to maintaine his quarrell, saith: It cannot be prooued by any Scriptures: but standeth onely by Tradition. Gennadius in Cathal. Illustr. Virorum.

Hieron. contra Heluidium.

S. Hierome himselfe in so vaine a contention, moued by an Heretike, thought it sufficient to answer thus: Mariam nupsisse post partum non credimus: quia non legimus: Wee beleeue not that Marie was Married againe after her Childbearing: because wee read it not.

Forged Scriptures

Here M. Harding thinketh to oppresse vs with the olde Heretikes ordinary question: How know you (saith he) that the Scriptures be the Scriptures? How know you, that the Gospell of Thomas, Bartholomew, and Nicodeme, are no Scriptures? Thus they labour to pull all credit from the Word of God, and send vs onely to their Traditions. Of God and his Word, they would euermore haue vs to stand in doubt: but of the Pope, and his Word, they say, in any wise we may not doubt. Hosius, a speciall Doctour of that side saith, Quod Ecclesia docet, id est expressum Verbum Dei. What soeuer the Church teacheth (he meaneth the Church of Rome) that is the very Expresse Word of God.

Hosius de Expresso Verbo Dei.

A man might well demand the like question of M. Harding: How know you, that the Sunne is the Sunne? Or, that the Moone is the Moone? Or, how know you, that the Church is the Church? Or, that the Congregation of the Wicked is not the Church?

August. contra Faust lib. 32. cap. 21.

Such idle questions the olde Heretikes the Manichees demanded of S. Augustine. But S. Augustine answered them, Si quæraris à nobis, vnde nos sciamus, Apostolorum esse istas literas, breuiter vobis respondemus: Inde nos scire, vnde & vos scitis, illas literas esse Manichæi: If you demand of vs, how we know that these be the Apostles writings, we make you this short answer: Euen so we know, that our writings are of the Apostles, as you know, that your writings are of the Heretike Manichee.

Eus. li. 3. ca. 22.

But for further answer, I reckon, M. Harding cannot be ignorant, that the Gospels of Thomas, Bartholomew, Nicodeme, and such others, were neuer written by them, whose names they beare: but were wickedly and falsly counterfeited vnder their names, by sundry Heretikes.

Ambr in Luc. in Proœmio.

S. Ambrose saith: Erant Pseudoprophetæ, &c. Erat autem populi gratia discernere Spiritus: vt cognosceret, quos referri deberet in numerum Prophetarum: quos autem, quasi bonus Nummularius, reprobare. Sic & nunc in Nouo Testamento, multi Euangelia scribere conati sunt: quæ boni Nummularij non probauerunt: There were false Prophets, &c. But the people had a grace giuen them, to discerne Spirits, and to iudge, whom they should receiue into the number of the Prophets: and whom, as skilfull exchangers, they should refuse. Euen so now in the time of the New Testament many haue taken in hand to write Gospels: But the skilful exchangers, and triers of Coines haue not allowed them.

August. contra Faust lib. 22. cap. 80.

So saith S. Augustine: Manichæi legunt Scripturas Apocryphas, nescio à quibus Sutoribus Fabularum, sub nomine Apostolorum Scriptas: The Manichees read Secret Hidden Scriptures, written, I know not by what Coblers of Fables, vnder the name of the Apostles.

Eus. li. 6. ca. 11.

So saith Eusebius of the Gospell counterfeited vnder the name of S. Peter: Nos Petrum & reliquos Apostolos, sicut Christum recipimus. Sed Pseudographia reijcimus: Veluti quari eorum sensus, & sententiæ: Scientes, quòd talia non recipimus tradita ab Apostolis: We receiue Peter, and the rest of the Apostles, as we would receiue Christ himselfe. But counterfet Writings (vnder their names) we refuse vtterly, as hauing vnderstanding of their sense and meaning: knowing well, that we haue receiued no such things deliuered by the Apostles.

Thus had the Church of God the spirit of Wisedome, whereby to discerne the True Scriptures from the False.

Dist 4. Inistis.

Yet may we not gather hereof, that the authority of the Church is ouer and aboue the Scriptures. S. Augustine saith: In istis temporalibus Legibus, quamuis de illis homines iudicent, cùm eas instituunt, tamen cùm fuerint institutæ, & firmatæ, non licebit iudici, de illis iudicare, sed secundùm eas: In these Temporall or Worldly Laws, although men be Iudges ouer them, while they be a making yet after the same Lawes be once made and established, it is no longer lawfull for the Iudge to Iudge of them: Onely it is lawfull, to Iudge by them.

August. Confes. lib. 13. cap. 23.

Likewise againe he saith: Spirituales, siue qui præsunt, siue qui obtemperant, Spiritualiter iudicant: non de cognitionibus Spiritualibus, quæ lucent in Firmamento (id est, de Scripturis:) Non enim oportet de tam sublimi Authoritate iudicare, &c. Homo enim, licet Spiritualis, factor tamen Legis esse debet, non Iudex. De illis dicitur Iudicare, in quibus potestatem habet corrigendi: Men Spirituall, whether they rule or be ruled, Iudge according to the Spirit. But they Iudge not of the Spirituall knowledge that shineth in the Firmament (that is to say, of the Scriptures:) For it is not lawfull for any man to be Iudge ouer so high authority. For be the man neuer so much Spirituall yet must he be a Doer, and not a Iudge of the Law. There a man is said to be a Iudge, where he hath power and Authority to correct.

The

The Apologie, Chap. 10. Diuision 1.

MOreouer, we allow the Sacraments of the Church, that is to say, certaine holy Signes and Ceremonies, which Christ would wee should vse, that by thē he might set before our eies the Mysteries of our Sauiation, & might more strongly confirme the Faith which we haue in his Bloud, and might seale his Grace in our hearts. And these Sacraments, together with Tertullian, Origen, Ambrose, Augustine, Hierome, Chrysostome, Basil, Dionysius, and other Catholike Fathers we do cal Figures, Signes, Markes, Badges, Prints, Copies, Formes, Seales, Signets, Similitudes, Paternes, Representations, Remembrances, & Memories. And we make no doubt, together with the same Doctours, to say, that these be certaine Visible Words, Seales of Righteousnesse, and Tokens of Grace.

M. Harding.

With what face say yee, that ye allow the Sacraments of the Church? (a) Haue ye not abandoned almost all the Sacraments of the Church? Reteine ye any moe, by name of the Sacraments, then two, Baptisme, and your Supper of the Lord? Of which the one, after that Doctrine as it is by you taught and ministred, auaileth nothing, but to your further condemnation.

(a) Vntruth. For the things that wee haue left were not the Sacraments of the Church.

The sound & true Doctrin of the Sacraments.

The sound and true Doctrine which the Catholike Church holdeth & beleeueth touching this point, is this: There be seuen Sacraments, in which, vnder couer of visible things the (b) Power of God worketh mans health. They be these: Baptisme, Confirmation, the Sacrament of the Altar, Penance, Extreme Vnction, Order, Wedlocke. And these so we call Sacraments, as neuertheless we acknowledge the name of Sacrament may be extended to many other things. That it be knowne what a Sacrament is, This word Sacrament signifieth sometime a holy thing, sometime the signe of a holy thing, instituted by God. As it is taken for a Signe onely, so is it found generally, not onely in the New Law, but also in the Old Law. But in the New Law these Signes after a peculiar and speciall maner bee called Sacraments, which do not onely signifie a holy thing, but also do sanctifie and make holy those to whom they be adhibited, being such as by institution of Christ conteine grace in thē, & power to sanctifie. Whereof a Sacrament is by the best learned Diuines defined to be a visible signe of inuisible Grace, so as it beare the image of it, (c) and be cause of the same. For the plaine vnderstanding of this Definition, how a Sacrament beareth the forme, signe, or image of inuisible Grace, it appeareth euidently in Baptisme, where washing of the Body sheweth the cleansing of the Soule. Also in the Sacrament of the Altar, (d) where the formes of Bread and Wine outwardly present the Spirituall nourishing of the Soule. The like appeareth in other Sacraments.

Seuen Sacraments.

(b) Vntruth. As shall appeare.

(c) Vntruth. For they are only certaine late Scholasticall Sophisters.

(d) Vntruth, vaine and childish. For no learned Father euer said so.

Neither is it a new and strange doctrine, to say, that the Sacraments of the Gospel conteine Grace in them: for the Fathers teach the same not seldome. Chrysostome expounding the Mystery of the Poole called Bethesda in Hebrew, that was in Ierusalem, saith, that sicke folke were healed at the mouing of the Water, to the intent men might be brought to vnderstand the vertue of Baptisme: for then was it comming to passe (saith hee) that Baptisme should be full of Power and Grace. S. Ambrose in his Book De Sacramentis, speaking of Baptisme, saith, it is not euery water that healeth, but that water healeth which hath the Grace of Christ. Cyrillus vpon the foresaid Chapter of S. Iohn, saith, that in Baptisme it is not Water simply that worketh, but when as it hath receiued the Grace of the Holy Ghost. S. Augustine in a Sermon saith, that Water in Baptisme is enriched with a more gift in manner then was the virgine Mary. For she (saith he) deserued Chastity to her selfe: this hath giuen to vs Sanctification. Shee deserued that she sinned not: this that it might purge sinnes. It is said vniuersally by S. Cyprian of all the Sacraments, that the fat of Gods anointing powreth fulnesse of Grace into the ministeriall Sanctification, whereby he meaneth the Sacraments. Yet we meane that they conteine grace, and power to Sanctifie, after such maner of speaking as we say of Potions and Drinks prepared for sicke persons, that they conteine health, to the working whereof they be effectuall.

Sermone Dominicæ intra Octauas Epiphaniæ.

In Sermone de Baptis. Christi.

Power giuen to Sacraments to work that they signifie by Gods ordinance.

And as it is said of the Sacraments, that they conteine Grace, so is it likewise said, that through their vertue, which they haue by Gods institution, they doe not onely signifie (as by these Defenders Doctrine that seemeth to be their speciall office) but also with signification (e) worke and cause, as an instrumentall cause, the effect of that which they signifie.

(e) Vntruth See the Answer.

After which maner, God hath giuen to the Sacraments of the New Testament, that they worke the thing signified, through vertue giuen them by Gods ordinance to speciall effects of Grace.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Of the number of the Sacraments we shall haue more conuenient time to speake hereafter. There, gentle Reader, I trust, thou shalt see M. Hardings great question easily answered, with what face we say we allow the Sacraments of the Church. In the mean season it may please thee to weigh these words of Cardinall Bessarion, the Bishop of Tusculum, one of M. Hardings especiall Catholike Doctors: Hęc Duo sola Sacramenta in Euangelijs manifestè tradita legimus: These onely Two Sacraments we read to be deliuered vs plainely in the Gospell. Here Bessarion nameth not Seuen Sacraments, as M. Harding doth, but Onely Two. Certainely we refuse no Sacrament, that euer was either ordained by Christ, or vsed and practised by the Apostles.

Bessarion de Sacrament. Eucharistiæ.

Your Lords Supper (ſaith M. Harding) auaile thy ou nothing, but to your further Condemnation. So muſt it needs be, becauſe M. Harding ſaith it ſhall ſo be. Theſe Tragicall terrours are fit onely to fray Children: In the Day of the Lord each mans worke ſhall appeare. The ſimpleſt of our people vnderſtandeth the Nature and Meaning of the Holy Myſtery of our Lords Supper: and therefore they receiue the ſame together to their great conſolation. But in your Ladie Maſſe, the ſimple people vnderſtandeth nothing, heareth nothing, and, ſauing a few vnſeemely Ceremonies, ſeeth nothing. And therefore they ſo ſeldome Communicate, and that onely of cuſtome, without any zeale, or comfort of Conſcience, as hauing no ſenſe or feeling in all theſe doings. Origen ſaith: Niſi Circumciſionis reddatur ratio, nutus eſt, & opus mutum. Paſcha, & aliæ Solemnitates nutus magis ſunt quàm veritas. Vſque hodie populus Iſrael ſurdus & mutus eſt: Vnleſſe the reaſons or cauſes of Circumciſion be opened, Circumciſion is but a geſture, and a dumbe kinde of worke. The Eaſter Feaſt, and other like Solemnities, are rather Ceremonies, then the Truth it ſelfe. Euen ſtill vntill this day the People of Iſrael is deafe and dumbe. S. Ambroſe ſaith: Indignus eſt Domino qui aliter Myſterium celebrat, quàm à Chriſto traditum eſt. Non enim poteſt deuotus eſſe, qui aliter præſumit, quàm datum eſt ab Authore: He is vnworthy of the Lord that Miniſtreth this Sacrament otherwiſe then Chriſt deliuered it. For he cannot be deuout, that preſumeth to vſe it otherwiſe then it was firſt deliuered from Chriſt the Authour.

Origen. in Lucam, Homil. 5.

Ambroſ. in 1. Cor. 11.

Theſe words ſeeme ſomewhat to touch M. Harding and his Companie. But héere he is contented to allow vs the very Sacrament, and true vſe of Baptiſme, and that vallable, and of force for the Remiſſion of Sinnes. Whereby vnaduiſedly and vnwares hée confeſſeth that we haue the very true Catholike Church of God. For S. Auguſtine ſaith truly: Baptiſmus Eccleſiæ poteſt eſſe extra Eccleſiam: munus autem beatæ vitæ non niſi intra Eccleſiam inuenitur: The Baptiſme of the Church may be without the Church: but the gifts of bleſſed life is not found, but within the Church. But why hée alloweth vs this Sacrament rather then the other, it were a hard matter to diſcuſſe. Neither may we iuſtly require reaſon of him that ſpeaketh ſo much without reaſon.

Baptiſme.

De Con. diſt. 4. Eccleſia.

Perhaps hée will ſay, Baptiſme is but a light Sacrament, and may bée Miniſtred by any Lay Perſon, euen by an old Woman, or by a Girle, ſo that ſhée ſpeake Latine, and vnderſtand not what ſhée ſay. For otherwiſe, I trow, her doing may not ſtand for good. Certainly, whereas M. Harding ſpeaketh of the due Forme of Words, according to Chriſts Inſtitution, his owne Doctours tell vs, and auouch it for great truth, that if the Prieſt ſay thus: Ego te Baptizo in nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus Sancti, & Diaboli: That is, I Baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and of the Diuell: Or if hée ſay thus, as one ignorant Prieſt ſometime ſaid: Ego te Baptizo in nomine Patria, & Filia, & Spirita Sancta; yet the forme of Baptiſme is very good.

De Conſ. Diſt. 4. Sinon. De Conſ. Diſt. 4. Retulerunt.

But one great fault M. Harding findeth in our doings, for that wee haue left out a great many Holy Rites, his Chriſme, his Oile, his Salt, his Spittle, and ſuch other like things: and for that we Miniſter this Sacrament plainly and ſimply, as Chriſt commanded. This obiection being of no greater weight, may eaſily diſcharge it ſelfe, and therefore may paſſe well without farther anſwer.

To Conteine Grace.

M. Harding ſaith: There be ſeuen Sacraments, which (as he ſaith) doe not only ſignifie a holy thing, but alſo do ſanctifie and make holy thoſe to whom they be adhibited, being ſuch as by inſtitution of Chriſt, conteine Grace in them, and power to ſanctifie. Héere, to leaue the reſt, it might be demanded, how can Matrimonie ſanctifie a man, and make him holy? Or by what Inſtitution of Chriſt conteineth it Grace in it ſelfe, and Power to Sanctifie? Or if it cannot Sanctifie, nor haue ſuch Grace, how then can it be called a Sacrament?

I grant, the Ancient Learned Fathers, entreating of the Sacraments, haue often vſed vehement and great words. It is written in the Councell of Nice: Vides Aquam? Conſidera Vim Diuinam quæ in Aquis latet. Puta Aquam eſſe plenam ignis Diuini: Seeſt thou the Water? Conſider the Diuine power that lieth hidde in the Water. Imagine that the Water is full of Heauenly Fire. So S. Ambroſe: Spiritus Sanctus deſcendit, & Aquam conſecrat. Adeſt Præſentia Trinitatis: The Holy Ghoſt commeth downe, and holloweth the Water. There is the Preſence of the Trinitie. So ſaith Tertullian: In Baptiſmo ringimur Paſſione Chriſti: In Baptiſme we are waſhed with the Paſſion of Chriſt. So ſaith Chryſoſtome, as M. Harding hath héere alleged him: Baptiſme is full of Power, and Grace. So ſaith S. Cyprian. So ſay others.

Concil. Nicen.

Ambr. de Sacram. li. 1. ca. 5. Tertull. de Baptiſmo.

All theſe, and other like vehement ſpéeches, M. Harding mitigateth and qualifieth in this wiſe: Wee meane (ſaith hée) that Sacraments conteine grace, after ſuch maner of ſpeaking as we ſay, potion and drinkes conteine health. That is to ſay, Sacraments verily and indeed conteine not the grace of God. For Drinkes and Potions verily and indeed conteine not the health of the Patient. In this manner of speech the Children of the Prophets said to Elizæus the Prophet : Mors in Olla, Vir Dei : O thou man of God, Death is in the Pot. So Salomon saith: Death and life are in the hands of the tongue. So Christ said vnto the Phariseis : Search the Scriptures : for in them you think to haue euerlasting Life. And yet indeed, neither was Death in the Prophets Pot : nor is Life and Death in the tongue: nor is Life Euerlasting in the Scriptures. Therefore one of M. Hardings Schoole Doctours saith: In Sacramentis Ecclesiæ specialis Virtus Passionis Christi continetur, sicut Virtus agentis in instrumento: The speciall grace of the passion of Christ is conteined in the Sacraments of the Church, as the power of the worker is conteined in the instrument wherewith he worketh.

To Conteine Grace.

But indeed it is the Soule of man, and not the creature of Bread or Water, that receiueth the Grace of God. We haue need of Gods Grace : These corruptible Elements need it not. Without Faith of our part, Sacraments be not only vnprofitable to vs, but also hurtfull. S. Chrysostome saith : Vbi est Virtus Euangelij ? In Figuris literarum, an intellectu sensuum? Where is the Power of the Gospell? In the Formes of the letters, or else in the vnderstanding of the meaning?

Chrys. in Mat. Operis Imperfect. Hom. 43.

Likewise Bonauentura saith : Nullo modo dicendum est, quòd Gratia continetur in ipsis Sacramentis essentialiter, tanquam Aqua in Vase, vel Medicina in Pyxide. Imò hoc intelligere, est erroneum. Sed dicuntur continere Gratiam, quia eam significant : Wee may not in any wise say, that the Grace of God is contained substantially and verily in the Sacraments, as Water is conteined in the Vessel, or a Medicine in the Box. For so to say, it were erroneous. But we say, the Sacraments conteine the Grace of God, because they signifie the Grace of God. Againe he saith: Gratia est in anima, non in Signis visibilibus: The Grace of God is not in the visible Signes, but in the Soule. And againe he saith: Ad illud quod objicitur, quòd Remissio Peccatorum latet in Baptismo, dicendum est, quòd hoc intelligitur de latentia signati in Signo: quod quidem habet vlteriorem rationem, quàm rationem significandi : Non tamen essentialiter continendi in se : sed quia ipsum quod signat continetur in anima: To the Obiection that is made, that the Remission of Sinnes is hid in Baptisme, we must answer thus, that it must be taken of the thing signified hid in the Signe. Which thing neuertheless hath a farther meaning then to Signifie : Yet not to conteine (the Remission of Sinnes) verily and Substantially in it selfe: but that the Grace that is signified thereby is conteined in the Soule.

Bonauentur. in 4. Sent. Dist. 1. Que. 3.

The mysticall signification that M. Harding hath imagined of his Shewes and Accidents, that is, that the Formes of Bread and Wine outwardly represent the Spirituall nourishing of the Soule, is vaine and fantastical, without the witnesse of any Ancient Doctour, or Father, confirmed only by the Authority of himselfe. For what manner of Feeding is there in these Accidents and Holy Formes? Or how can that thing that feedeth not the Body, represent vnto vs the Spirituall feeding of the Soule?

Formes & Accidents.

The matter is plaine enough of it selfe, and needeth no cauill. The Signification and substance of the Sacrament is to shew vs how wee are feede with the Bodie of Christ: that is, that like as Materiall Bread feedeth our Bodie; so the Bodie of Christ nailed on the Crosse, embraced and eaten by Faith, feedeth the Soule. The like Representation is also made in the Sacrament of Baptisme: That as our Bodie is washed cleane with Water, so our Soule is washed cleane with Christs Bloud. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Nisi Sacramenta similitudinem quandam earum rerum, quarum Sacramenta sunt, haberent, omnino Sacramenta non essent: If Sacraments had not a certain likenes and representation of the things whereof they be Sacraments, then indeed they were no Sacraments.

Aug. Epist. 23.

This Representation Rabanus Maurus expoundeth thus : Quia Panis Corporis cor confirmat, ideo ille congruenter Corpus Christi nuncupatur : Et quia Vinum Sanguinem operatur in Carne, ideo refertur ad Sanguinem : Because (not the Accidents or Formes of Bread, but) Bread it selfe confirmeth the heart of the Body, therefore it is conueniently called the Body of Christ: And because Wine worketh blood in the flesh, therfore it hath relation vnto the Blood.

Rabanus lib. 1. cap. 31.

So likewise saith Druthmarus : Vinum lætificat, & Sanguinem auget, & ideo non inconuenienter Sanguis Christi per hoc figuratur : (not the Accidents or Formes of Wine, but) Wine it selfe reioiceth the heart, and increaseth blood : And therefore the Blood of Christ conueniently is thereby signified.

Druthmar. in Matt. cap. 26.

M. Harding, for that hee cannot vtterly denie it, the matter being so plaine, is therefore contented to grant that the Sacrament is the Figure of Christs Bodie. But to helpe out, and to shift the matter, he hath deuised such a strange kinde of Figure, as seldome hath bene heard before. Notwithstanding the holy learned Fathers speake plainly, and simply, and vse no kind of such Glosies. S Hierome saith: Ad Tropicam intelligentiam

Hieron aduersus Ruffinum. serm. referatur. Quando dico, Tropicam, docco verum non esse quod dicitur, sed allegoriæ nubilo figuratum: Let that saying bee expounded by a Figure. When I say, a Figure, I say, the thing that is spoken is not true indeed, but figured vnder the Cloud of an Allegorie.

Chryso. in Genesin. Hom. 35. Likewise Chrysostome saith: Audisti fuisse Figuram. Ne ergo mirare, neque omnia require in typo. Neque enim typus esset, si omnia, quæ veritati accidunt, haberentur: Ye haue heard that it was a Figure. Therefore maruell not: and being a Figure, require not all things to agree. For otherwise it were no Figure.

August. de Doctrina Christiana, li 3. ca. 5. So likewise S. Augustine saith: In principio cauendum est, ne Figuratam locutionem ad literam accipias. Ad hoc enim pertinet quod ait Apostolus, Litera occidit. Cùm enim Figuratè dictum sic accipitur, tanquam propriè dictum sit, carnaliter sapitur: neque vlla mors animæ congruentiùs appellatur: First of all, thou must take heede that thou take not a Figuratiue speech according to the Letter, or sound of the words. For that is it, whereof S. Paul saith, The Letter killeth. For when the thing that is spoken vnder a Figure is so taken, as if it were plainely spoken, there is a fleshly vnderstanding. Neither is there any thing that may better be called the death of the Soule. All this, and much more to like purpose thou maist finde in my former Reply to M. Harding.

Formes & Accidents.

Artic. 12.

S Hierome saith: When I say, it is a Figure, then I say, It is not the truth. Chrysostome saith: If it were the Truth it selfe, it were no Figure S. Augustine saith: Beware thou expound not a Figuratiue speech according to the sound of the Letter, as if it were the Truth indeed. For that is the death of the Soule. Thus the holy Fathers haue taught vs to finde a difference betweene a Figure, and the Truth it selfe.

Sacramẽts Old, New.

1 Cor 10.

Hilar. in Psal. 67.

Leo de Natiuitate Domini, Serm. 3.

Aug in Ioan. Tractat. 26.

An other fantasie M. Harding hath found, That the Sacraments of the New Law werke the thing it selfe that they signifie through vertue (as he saith) giuen vnto them by Gods ordinance to speciall effects of Grace. This, as I said, is but a fantasie. For the Sacraments of the Old Law, and of the New, in Truth and Substance, are all one. S. Paul saith: Omnes eundem cibum comederunt: The Fathers in the Old Law did all eat the same meat, that is to say, the same Christ, that we eat. S. Hilarie saith: Sub nube fuerint, & Christo, aquam Petra præbente, potati sunt: They were vnder the Cloud, and were drenched with Christ, the Rocke giuing them water. Likewise saith Leo: Mysteria pro temporum ratione variata sunt: quum Fides, qua viuimus, nulla fuerit ætate diuersa: The Sacraments are altered according to the diuersitie of the times. But the Faith, whereby wee liue, in all ages was euer one: Likewise S. Augustine: Sacramenta illa fuerunt, in Signis diuersa: in rebus quæ significabantur, paria: These things were Sacraments, in the outward tokens, diuers: but in the things tokened, all one with ours.

August. in Psal 73.

M. Harding will reply: S Augustine saith, Sacramenta Noui Testamenti dant Salutem: The Sacraments of the New Testament giue Saluation. But who can better expound S. Augustines meaning, then S. Augustine himselfe? He addeth immediately: Cùm ergo iam teneas promissa, quid quæris promittentia Saluatorem? Hoc dico, teneas promissa: non quòd iam acceperimus vitam æternam, sed quòd iam Christus venerit, qui per Prophetas prænuntiabatur: Wherefore seeing thou hast the Promises (of the comming of Christ) already performed, what seekest thou the things that promised the Sauiour? I say, Thou hast the Promises already performed: not for that we haue already receiued euerlasting life, but for that Christ is already come, that was Promised by the Prophets. Therefore when S. Augustin saith, Our Sacraments giue Saluation, his meaning is this: Our Sacraments teach vs that Saluation is already come into the World.

M Harding fol. 330. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. So then Dare, is to teach: and, Salus, is Saluation come into the World. Heere is gay geare for wantons to Dallie with words in matter of our Saluation. Addition. ☜

The Answer. Oh, what proper sport ye make your selfe with this gay geare, M. Harding! Dare (you say) is not Latine to teach. I answer you, Neither is Dare Latine to containe. But thus I say: Sacraments giue grace so farre foorth as Sacraments bee able to giue Grace. Your owne Bonauentura saith: Non est aliquo modo dicendum, &c. We may not in anywise say, that the Grace of God is really contained in the Sacraments, as water is conteined in a vessell, or a Medicine in a box. For so to take it, it were an errour. But we say, Sacraments containe the Grace of God, because they represent or signifie the Grace of God.

Bonauentur. in 4 Sent. dist 1. Quæst. 2. c. Dicendum continere Gratiam qui ipsam significant.

Thus farre forth, M. Harding, Sacraments are able to giue Grace. And therefore your Schoole Doctours thus commonly define a Sacrament: Sacramentum est inuisibilis Gratiæ visibile Signũ: A Sacrament is a visible Signe of Grace inuisible. As for the meaning of S. Augustine, I made it plaine by other his words immediately following, which you guilefully haue dissembled. For thus hee saith: Thou hast the promises already performed, formed: not for that wee haue already receiued euerlasting life, but for that Christ is already come, that was promised by the Prophets. And although the death of Christ be already passed, yet is it laid liuely and freshly before our eies in the celebration of the Sacraments. S. Ambrose saith: In Baptismo crucifigimus in nobis Filium Dei: In Baptisme we crucifie in our selues the Sonne of God. S. Chrysostome saith: In Mysterijs mors Christi perficitur: The death of Christ is wrought in the Mysteries. Thus the Grace of God is giuen vnto vs in the Sacraments, because it is represented and laid before vs in the Sacraments. Thus saith S. Augustine, thus saith S. Chrysostome, S. Ambrose, and other holy Fathers. They were no Wantons: neither did they, nor doe we Dallie, as you say, with these things. We vse them humbly with obedience and reuerence, as the instruments of the Grace of God.

Ambr. de Paenitē. li. 2. c. 2. Chrys. in Acta Homil. 21.

Thus S. Augustine saith in an other place: Illa fuerunt promissiones rerum complendarum: hæc sunt indicia completarum: The Sacraments of the Old Law were promises of such things as should afterward be accomplished: Our Sacraments of the New Law are tokens that the same Promises be already accomplished. Thus the holy Fathers say: The Sacraments of the new Law worke Saluation: because they teach vs that our Saluation is already wrought. So Bonauentura saith of the Sacraments of the Old Testament: Mundare dicebantur, id est, mundatum ostendebant: They were said to make a man cleane, because they shewed or signified that a man was made cleane.

Augustē. contra Faust. lib. 19. cap. 14.

Bonauentur. in 4. Sent. dist. 1. In Prooemio.

Addition. Addition. M. Harding. What then? Will it follow, that because our Sacraments doe shew that Christ is already come, therefore our Sacraments giue no grace? &c. He that eateth Christs Flesh sheweth his Death, saith S. Paul: And he that eateth my Flesh, saith Christ, hath life euerlasting. Marke how our hauing of life goeth together with our shewing of Christs death: you diuide these matters, and make Christs Sacraments only to be shewes. The Answer. You haue misalleged S. Paul, M. Harding: These are not his words: Looke better on your Bookes, and see your error. If I had some part of your Eloquence, I could cry out, as you doe: Falsifiers and Corrupters of Gods Word. S. Paul saith not, He that eateth Christs Flesh, sheweth his Death. You deale vntruly. Thus he saith: As often as you shall eate this Bread, and drinke this Cuppe, you shall shew forth the Lords Death. The Bread of the Sacrament is one thing, M. Harding: and the Flesh of Christ is another. The Bread entreth onely into the bodily mouth: Christs Flesh entreth onely into the Soule. Without eating of that Bread of the Sacrament we may be saued: Without eating of Christs Flesh we can neuer be saued. S. Augustine saith precisely: Qui non sumit Carnem Christi, non habet vitam: & qui eam sumit, habet vitam, & eam vtique æternam: He that receiueth not the Flesh of Christ, hath not life: And he that receiueth the same hath life, and that for euer.

M. Harding. Ad. Harding. fol. 330. b.

1. Cor. 11.

Aug. in Iohan. Tractat. 26.

Againe he saith: The Sacrament is receiued of some vnto Life, of some vnto Destruction: But the thing it selfe (that is, the Flesh of Christ) whereof the Sacrament is a Sacrament, is receiued of all men vnto Life, and of no man to Destruction, whosoeuer shall be partaker of it.

In eod. Tractu.

Thus you see, M. Harding, there is great difference betweene the Bread of the Sacrament, and the Flesh of Christ. You were to blame therefore so to falsifie S. Paul, and to place the one in stead of the other. Wee diuide these things, because God himselfe had so diuided them. But you vndiscretly mingle and confound these things together, whereas indeed they should bee diuided: and so yee wilfully deceiue your simple Reader.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision 1.

AND we doe expresly pronounce, that in the Lords Supper there is Truely giuen vnto the Beleeuing the Body and Blood of our Lord, the Flesh of the Sonne of God, which quickeneth our Soules, the Meat that commeth from aboue, the Foode of Immortality, of Grace, Truth and Life: and that the same Supper is the Communion of the Body and Bloud of Christ: by the partaking whereof we be reuiued, strengthned, and fedde vnto Immortality: and whereby wee are Ioined, United, and Incorporate vnto Christ, that we may abide in him, and he in vs.

M. Harding.

What ye pronounce of this high Sacrament, the wise and carefull tenderers of their Soules will be right wary thereof. Of you and such as ye be, because your doctrine is (a) but of a corner of the world in respect of the Vniuersall Church; Christ hath giuen vs a watch word, Nolite credere: Beleeue them not. In your the Lords Supper, celebrated by the Ministers of your owne creation, (b) there is not giuen the Body and Blood of our Lord, neither to the beleeuing, nor to the vnbeleeuing. For at the celebration

(a) In respect of this Corner, the church of Rome were a simple Corner.

(b) Vntruth.

(b) Vntruths ioined with Heathenish blasphemies.

Celebration of your schismaticall Supper, no (b) consecration being done, (b) nor Faith of the Church, (b) nor right intention had, (b) nor Christs institution obserued, what diuer ye to your Communicates, but (b) a peece of Bread, and a sippe of Wine? Neither is it (b) your will it be more or better. At the Supper of our Lord Ministred in the Catholike Church by Priests rightly consecrated, and as it hath beene accustomed in Christs Church, there is the true and whole Body of our Lord and Sauiour giuen and receiued, be the Receiuers beleeuing, or (b) not beleeuing. For when Christ gaue this Sacrament to his Disciples at his last Supper, after that he had consecrated the same, Take ye, eat ye, this is my Body: Iudas the traitour, as the (c) Fathers teach, receiued his true Body no lesse then Peter, Andrew, Iohn, or Iames did: though they to their saluation, he to his damnation.

The Sacramentaries Lords Supper.

(c) Vntruth: read the Answer.

Iudas receiued the true Bodie of Christ no lesse then the Apostles. Matth. 26. Chryſ. Hom. de proditione Iudæ. Aug. in Ioh. 10. De Trin. li. 6. cap. 6. Hæreſi. 69. De gratia Chriſti, contra Pelagianos & Cœleſt. Lib. 1. cap. 3. Matth. 13.

Now it is to be noted how this Defender in this long sentence affecteth a certaine holy (as it were) and solemne eloquence, and vseth a religious amplification of words to set foorth the Sacrament, as though he had a reuerent and a godly opinion of it: whereas indeed he taketh it (d) but for a poore signe or token, as their Doctour Zuinglius doth. But such is their craft, to purchase them credit among the people. Thus offer they to the vnlearned their faire cups full of venome, anointing the brims with hony of sweet and holy words, the rather to poison them. Such complaint maketh the graue Father S. Hilarie against the Arians of his time: Ingerunt nobis primùm nomina Veritatis, vt verus falsitatis introeat. Bonum in ore est, vt de corde malum subeat: First (saith he) they thrust me foorth words of Truth, that the venome of falshood may enter in. Good is in their mouth, that out from the heart may euill proceed. And among all these words (hee meaneth the Arians confession of their Faith) I heare no where by them said, Deum Dei Filium: God the Sonne of God. Right so among all these faire words concerning the Sacrament, (e) we heare neuer a whit said of the reall presence of Christs Body. Epiphanius noteth the like craft in Arius, and so doth S. Augustine in the Pelagians. Nestorius likewise speak honourably in many places of Christ and his Mother. But no where would he call her, Θεοτόκον, that is, the Mother of God. The Iewes also, as wee finde in the Gospell, called our Sauiour Iesus, the Carpenters sonne, confessed Marie to bee his Mother, Iames, Ioseph, Simon, and Iude his brothers, and that his sisters were among them, (by whom his Kinsfolke are to be vnderstanded) but the Sonne of God they would not acknowledge him, nor in that degree honour him. Better then to those Iewes can I not compare these Defenders, who speake honourably of our Lords Body and Bloud in their Supper, (f) but that his Body is really, that is, verily in the Sacrament of the Altar, that will not the Diuell, who reigneth in their hearts, suffer their mouths to vtter.

(d) Vntruth. For we cal the Signe the Signe, & the Truth the Truth

(e) O marueilous horrible heresie: what Doctour or Father euer named your Reall Presence?

(f) Neither did any Doctour or Father euer say that Christs Body is really and verily in the Sacrament.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Consecration.

M. Harding telleth vs, Wee deliuer vnto the Faithfull nothing else but a peece of Bread, and a sippe of Wine: that we haue neither Intention, nor Consecration: that our faire Cups be full of Venome: That our Supper is Schismaticall, and our Eloquence is Hypocriticall: That our Doctrine is Heretical!: That we are like to the Pelagians, to the Nestorians, to the Arians, and to the Iewes: And that the Diuell reigneth in our hearts. If the Truth of God were euermore ioined with plaine speech, then might M. Harding be able easily to winne the price. He saith, Our Doctrine is but in a Corner of the world, and that therfore Christ hath giuen this watch word of vs, Beleeue them not. Howbeit, if he would aduisedly consider the matter, and loke well about him, he should finde that so many Kingdomes, and Countreies, and Common Weales as this day profesſe the Gospell of Christ, would make a good large Corner in the Church of God. Certainely in respect thereof, Rome it selfe were a very poore Corner.

2. Thessal. 2. Chryſ. in Opere Imperfecto, Homil. 49.

Vnto whom Christ specially pointed when he said these words, Beleeue them not, because it is a Prophesie, it is hard to iudge. But it is very likely he meant Antichrist, that Man of Sinne, the Childe of Destruction, that aduanceth himselfe aboue all that is called God. Verily Chrysostome thereof saith thus: Non dico, si dixerint vobis, Ecce in Hæreticis Ecclesijs illis, vel in illis apparuit Christus: sed etiam si in ipsis veris Ecclesijs, quæ Dei sunt, id est, Domus vestræ, dixerint vobis Christum apparuisse, nolite eis credere dicentibus ista de me: quia non est digna Diuinitatis meæ notitia hæc: Ostendens per hæc, quomodo ex ipsis Ecclesijs veris frequenter exeunt Seductores. Propterea nec ipsis omninò credendum est, nisi ea dicant, vel faciant, quæ conuenientia sint Scripturis: I say not, If they tell you, Behold Christ hath appeared in these, or in these Churches of Heretikes: But if they shall say vnto you, that Christ hath appeared in the very true Churches, that are of God, that is to say, that are your houses, Beleeue them not if they say thus of me: for this is no worthy knowledge of my Diuinity: By these he sheweth, how that out of the very true Churches oftentimes come foorth deceiuers. Therefore we may not beleeue, no not them, vnlesse they speak, or do those things that are agreeable to the Scriptures.

Verily howsoeuer M. Harding will shift this matter, the plaine words seeme rather to touch him and his company, then either Luther, or Zuinglius, or any other. For they can point with their fingers, and say, Heere is Christ, and, There is Christ. Behold in this Pyx are three Christs: in that fiue: in that seuen: in that moe. Therefore it is likely that Christ giueth vs this speciall watch-word of them and such others: Beleeue them not.

Heere M. Harding maketh much adoe about Consecration, and yet are not his Fellowes well agreed, what to make of their owne Consecration. Gabriel saith, Christus potuit tuit ſine verbo tanquam verus Deus, Subſtantiam Panis & Vini Conſecrare: vel potuit verba quædam ſecretò proferre, & per illa Conſecrare: Vel, per hæc verba, hoc eſt Corpus meum, Conſecrare potuit: Vel, potuit prius Conſecrare, & poſtea diſtribuere: Vel primùm diſtribuere, & poſtea Conſecrare. Quid autem horum fecerit, ex Sacris Scripturis non conſtat: Chriſt, as being very God, might Conſecrate the Subſtance of Bread and Wine without word: Or elſe he might ſpeake certaine words in ſecret, and by them Conſecrate: Or elſe he might Conſecrate by theſe words, This is my body: Or elſe, he might firſt Conſecrate, and after deliuer: Or elſe, firſt deliuer, and after Conſecrate. But which of all theſe hee did indeed, by the holy Scriptures it appeareth not. Cardinall Beſſarion ſaith, that in the Latine Church Conſecration is wrought by the Words of Chriſt: in the Greeke Church by other Prayers that follow afterward. Catharinus intreating purpoſely hereof, ſaith: Chriſt Conſecrated not with the ſame words, That are now vſed in the Maſſe, This is my Body. Durandus ſaith, Chriſt Conſecrated by his Diuine power, and after Conſecration ſaid, This is my Body. Petrus Alliacenſis yeeldeth this reaſon hereof, Quia, niſi antè fuiſſet Corpus Chriſti, Chriſtus non verè dixiſſet, Hoc eſt Corpus meum: If it had not beene Chriſts Body before, Chriſt could not haue ſaid truely, This is my Body. It is conteined in a Booke called Antididagma, lately ſet forth by the Chapter of Colaine, that the bare Words of Chriſts Inſtitution, without the words of the Canon of the Maſſe, are not ſufficient to worke Conſecration. Bonauentura ſaith, To haue the true Forme of Conſecration, wee muſt ſeeke, not to the Goſpell of Chriſt, but to the Canon.

Consecration. Intention.

Latine to Make present, M. Harding? What Grammarian euer taught you so to say? Or, what Making finde you in this word? As you tender your credit, tell vs, who euer spake such Latine, or out of such Latine, made such English? If you can shew vs no better author, wee must needs thinke, it is your own. I grant, the Old Ciuilians haue sometimes vsed this word Repræsentare, in some such meaning: as when they say, Repræsentare legatum, Repræsentare pretium, Repræsentare pecuniam. But in this new sense that you haue imagined, I trow, M. Harding, they neuer vsed it. Howbeit, wee speake not now of Ciuilians, we speake of Diuines. Columella saith: Repræsentare faciem veri Maris: To represent the sight of the very Sea. Curtius saith: Vrbis diruræ species Repræsentabatur animis: The Image of the defaced City was represented to their mindes. Will you hereof conclude, that the very Sea, or the very defaced Citie was made present and stood Really and Verily before their eies? The strangeness of your dealing, M. Harding, forceth me to vse moe words, then might seeme needefull.

Columel. lib. 8. cap. 17.

Hier. in Mat. cap. 26.

The place of S. Hierome is plaine against you: Thus he saith: Vt quomodo in præfiguratione eius Melchisedech Summi Dei Sacerdos Panem, & Vinum offerens, fecerat, ipse quoque veritatem sui Corporis & Sanguinis Repræsentaret: That, as Melchisedech, the Priest of the Highest God had done, offering Bread and Wine in Figure of him, euen so he himselfe should Represent the Truth of his Body and Blood. As Melchisedech by Bread, and Wine represented the truth of Christs Body and Blood; so did Christ also Represent the same. And if Christ, as you say, made it present, then did Melchisedech also, by S. Hieromes iudgement make it present. But, when we speake of Sacraments, Representing is nothing else, but Shewing or Signifying. So Tertullian saith: Christus non reprobauit Panē, quo ipsum Corpus suum Repræsentauit: Christ refused not Bread, by which he Represented his very Body. Which words afterward in plainer sort he expounded thus: Christus accepit panem, & Corpus suum illum fecit, dicendo: Hoc est Corpus meum: hoc est, Figura Corporis mei: Christ tooke the Bread, and made it his Body, saying, This is my Body, that is to say, This is a Figure of my Body.

Tertull. contra. Marcion. lib. 4.

But that Repræsentare should signifie, either to make Christs Body, or to make it present, no man, I trow, euer durst say it, but M. Harding.

In these words, Doe this, you say, is conteined, Make this. Doth Christ bid you, to Make this indeede, M. Harding? And what, This, I pray you, would you Make? Ye wil say, Christs Body. But Christs Body, as we beleeue, is Made already, and needeth no new making at your hands. But you wil say, Ye make Christ in remembrance of Christ. All this is meere folly. For euery way ye tel vs, Ye make Christ. Presume not M. Harding, to Make him, that made you. It is enough for your Stella Clericorum to say, Qui Creauit me, dedit mihi potestatem Creandi se: Sacerdos est Creator Creatoris sui: Hee that made me, hath giuen me power to make him: A Priest is his Makers Maker. But God hath made Hell fire to the destruction of all them, that yeeld their mouthes to speake such blasphemy. Christ neuer bad you, to make his Body, as you imagine. His words be plain: you haue vntruely reported them: Doe this in my Remembrance: Doe this, saith Christ: he saith not, Make this. And what is meant by this Doing, who can better teach vs, then S. Paul? Thus he saith: As often, as you shall eat this Bread, or Drinke this Cup, you shall publish the Lords Death, vntill he come. This is the Doing, that Christ commanded, and this is it, that you haue to doe.

An other quarrell, that M. Harding picketh to vs, is this, That wee haue no Intention or minde to Consecrate. But how long hath M. Harding beene a Wisard? Or, who made him so priuie to our Intentions? S. Paul saith, No Man can tell, what is in Man, but the Spirit of Man, that is within him. These follies are answered at large in my Former Reply to M. Harding. Verily by the late Doctors of that side, the Priest may haue Intention, to Consecrate the one halfe of the Host, and not the other: or, hauing thirteene Hostes, he may haue Intention, to Consecate but twelue. And thereof groweth a great question, when he commeth to the reckoning, and seeth his error, which of all that whole Company of Hostes shall goe vnconsecrate. Yea Abbat Panormitane saith: Etiamsi Sacerdos celebret, vt Deus perdat aliquem, tamen bene Consecrat; Notwithstanding the Priest say Masse with Intention, that God would destroy some man, yet doth he consecrate neuertheless. Into such toies these men throw themselues, with their fond Intentions.

Articulo 1. Diuision 12. Summa Angel. Eucharist. 26. Gerson in Floretum, lib. 4. Panormitan. de Celebratione Miss. Quidam.

Our Intention is, to doe, that Christ hath taught vs to doe, that is, to minister the holy Sacrament in Remembrance of him; and as S. Paul saith, To shew forth, and to publish the Lords Death, vntill he come. And to this purpose one of M. Hardings owne Doctors saith: Non sufficit Intentio consecrandi absolutè; Sed Oportet vt sit conformis Intentioni Sacramentum Instituentis; Absolutely the Intention to Consecrate, is not sufficient: but it must be answerable vnto the Intention of Christ that ordained the Sacrament.

At

At the Supper of our Lord (saith M. Harding) ministred in the Catholike Church by Priests rightly consecrate, there is the true & whole Body of our Lord and Sauiour giuen & receiued be the receiuers beleeuing or not beleeuing. This is no great maruell in M. Hardings Doctrine. For they of his side say, Si dicatur quod Mus sumat Corpus Christi, non est magnum inconueniens: If it be said, that a Mouse receiueth the body of Christ, it is no great inconuenience. And Alexander of Hales, a notable Schole Doctour saith, though in more vnseemely and grosser wise: Si Canis, vel Porcus deglutiret Hostiam Consecratam integram, non video, quare Corpus Domini non simul trajiceretur in ventrem Canis, vel Porci: If a Dog, or a Sow should happen to swallow downe the whole Host being Consecrat, I see no reason, but the Body of our Lord may passe withall into the belly of the Dog, or of the Sow.

De Consecrat. Dist. 2. Qui bene in Glossa.

Alexan. Hales. Par. 4. qua. 45. memb. 1.

But S. Augustine saith farre otherwise: Hoc est manducare illam escam, & illum potum bibere, in Christo manere, & Christum manentem in se habere: This is the Eating of that Meat, and the Drinking of that Drinke, that a man dwell in Christ, and haue Christ dwelling in him.

August. In Ioh. Tract. 26.

Likewise Origen saith: Est verus cibus, quem nemo malus potest edere. Etenim si malus posset edere Corpus Domini, non scriberetur, Qui edit hunc Panem, viuet in æternum: The Body of Christ is the true Food, which no euill man can eat. For if the euill man could Eat the Body of our Lord, it should not be written, He that eateth this Bread shall liue for euer. But hereof we haue spoken more at large in the Former Reply to M. Harding.

Orig. in Mat. cap 15.

Addition. ☞ Addition. M. Harding. You haue fowle corrupted this place, M. Iewel. Origen speaketh not of the Sacrament in those words, nor of the Sacramental Eating, &c. M. Iewel hath so mangled these words, that the sense is clean altered For in stead of Verbum Caro factum, he hath placed the Body of Christ, referring it to the Sacrament, &c. Hee hath changed Edere verbum factum Carnem, into Edere Corpus domini. And so, where as Origen meant, that euill men cannot Eat Spiritually and effectually the Diuinity of Christ, M. Iewell hath taught him to say, that an euill man cannot in the Sacrament Eat Christs body.

Articulo 23. M. Harding fol. 227. b.

The wicked Receiueth.

And so M. Harding awakt out of his dreame.

The Answer. Will you lead your whole life in wrangling, M. Harding? and will you neuer learn to deale plainly? Origen (you say) speaketh nothing in this place of the Sacrament. I grant you. Neither do I in this place speake one word of the Sacrament. I speake onely of Christs body, that is represented by the Sacrament. That body (I say) cannot bee eaten by the wicked. So saith Origen: so say others the learned Fathers.

As for that you speake of mangling the words, and altering the meaning, it is so childish to be answered. You say, Origen meant, that the wicked man cannot Eat the Diuinity of Christ spiritually. Be it so. Will you then say, that the wicked man may eat the Diuinity of the Godhead of Christ Corporally, with his bodily mouth; and with his teeth? Is this the Diuinity you haue learned at Louaine? Season it better, M. Harding: it is vnsauory. Origen in this place first speaketh of the Sacrament of Christs body. Afterward hee speaketh of Christs Body it selfe, and saith; That no euill man can receiue it. And to that purpose hee alledgeth the words of Christ in S. Iohn, Whoso eateth of this bread shall liue for euer. Leaue this lightnesse, M. Harding. Here is neither mangling of words, nor altering of sentence. ☞

The Heretical Doctrine that M. Harding talketh of, with all the whole furniture of hypocriticall Eloquence, we may safely send home, from whence it came. And I doubt nothing but he can well tell how to vse it.

As for Pelagius, Arius and Nestorius, we defie them vtterly and detest them, as we doe also all other sorts and sects of heresies.

Of the Sacraments of Christ, wee doe both speake, and thinke reuerently and as it becommeth vs and according to the holy Scriptures. We say, that a Creature, is a Creature: that a Sacrament is a Sacrament, and not God. We say with S. Augustine, The Sacrament is not our Lord, but the bread of our Lord. Againe S. Augustine saith: In Sacramentis videndum est, non quid sint, sed quid Significent: In Sacraments we must consider, not what they be in deed, but what they Signifie.

August. in Ioh. Tract. 59. Contra Maximin. lib. 3. cap. 22.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision 2.

Besides this, we acknowledge, there be two Sacraments, which, we iudge, properly ought to be called by this name: that is to say, Baptisme, and the Sacrament of thanksgiuing. For thus many we see were deliuered and sanctified by Christ, and well allowed of the Old Fathers, Ambrose, and Augustine, and such others.

M.

M. Harding.

Why ſpeake ye not plainly? Be there no moe but two Sacraments? Though ye ſay not ſo expreſly, yet we iudge, that ſo ye meane. For ſo your ſchoolefellow of Geneua Theodore Beza pronounceth in plain termes in the Confeſſion of your Geneuian Faith. And ſo your ſelues, Defenders, do affirm in the Articles, which yee agreed vpon in your Conuocation holden at London, in the yeare of our Lord, 1562. Which Articles you haue put forth in Print by the Queens authority, as ye pretend. Now whereas yee acknowledge there be but two Sacraments, why ſhould any man beleeue you, rather thē the Germans your firſt Schoolemaſters, who (a) in their Confeſſiō exhibited to Charls the fifth then Emperor at Auguſpurg in the name of al the Proteſtants, Anno 1530. appoint three Sacraments, Baptiſm, the Euchariſt, and Penance? The next yeere after (b) Philip Melanctnon in his Apologie auouched thoſe three Sacraments: but afterward in the yeere 1552. he found out another, and made vp the number of foure, by adding the Sacrament of Order to the foreſaid three. In Lipſia they receiue three: In Wittenberg, which City is not thence farre off, they haue foure. At Magdeburg thereby alſo Flacius Illyricus, and ſo many as follow him, will haue but two: and the Zwenkfeldians that ſprang out of the ſame ſtocke, care for none at all.

The Defenders acknowledg but two Sacraments.

Diuerſity of iudgement in the Goſpellers about the number of the Sacraments.

Forasmuch as ye alledge the names of the Old Fathers for you, ſpecially S. Ambroſe, & S. Auguſtine, that there be but two Sacraments, let vs ſee how much they make for maintenance of your Doctrine, & whether they teach vs not, that there be moe. S. Auguſtine in his 2. Booke, Contra literas Petiliani, ſpeaking of the place of the Pſalm, Sicut vnguentum in Capite, which the Heretike had alledged, ſaith thus: In hoc vnguento, &c. In this Ointment his will is to interpret the Sacrament of Chriſm (he meaneth the Sacrament of Confirmation) which in the kinde of viſible ſignes is Holy, as Baptiſme is. Lo, S. Auguſtine calleth Confirmation a Sacrament. S. Euſebius Pope nameth it a Sacrament in his third Epiſtle written to all the Biſhops of Tuſcia and Campania: Manus impoſitionis Sacramentum, &c. The Sacrament of impoſition of Hands (ſaith he) is to be kept with great reuerence, which cannot be performed but by the high Prieſts (he vnderſtandeth Biſhops.) Melchiades next to Syluester before the Nicene Councel ſpeaking much of Confirmation, among other things ſaith thus: Duo hæc Sacramenta, Baptiſmi, & Confirmationis, ſeparari non ſunt: Theſe two Sacraments of Baptiſm & Confirmatiō may not be ſundred. Though theſe two Biſhops were Popes, yet they deſerue credit, for aſmuch as they liued before that corruption crept into the Church, after your account, and died holy Martyrs.

That there be moe Sacraments then two, by the Doctrine of the Fathers, ex. The Sacrament of Confirmation.

This forged Melchiades addeth his Oile aboue the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

That Penance is a Sacrament, and ſo accounted among the Fathers, it is ſo euident, that who doubteth of it, may ſeem not to haue peruſed their writings. S. Auguſtin in Enchiridio ad Laurentium, ſpeaking of Baptiſme and Penance, calleth both Saluteria Sacramenta, Healthful Sacraments. S. Ambroſe ſignifieth himſelfe to be of the ſame mind, in his firſt Booke De pœnitentia, cap. 6. & 7. And in the ſecond Booke cap. 2. though without putting the expreſſe name of Sacrament. But in the third Chapter of that Booke he putteth the name of Sacrament expreſly.

The Sacrament of Penance. (ep. 66. Ruf. 20. in pſal. 118. Heb.

Touching Order, that is a Sacrament alſo by verdit of S. Auguſtine, whom ye alledge for you. Let vs heare what he ſaith. In his ſecond Book Contra Epiſt. Parmeniani, cap. 13. theſe be his words, where he ſpeaketh of Baptiſme, and of the Power to Baptize, which is giuen in the Sacrament of Order: Vtrunque enim Sacramentum eſt, & quadam Conſecratione vtrique homini datur, illud cum Baptizatur, iſtud cum ordinatur. Ideo in Catholica non licet vtrunque iterari: Either of them is a Sacrament, and with a certaine Conſecration either is giuen to man the one when he is Baptized, the other when he taketh Orders. Therefore in the Catholike Church it is not lawfull either of them to be taken twiſe.

The Sacrament of Order. dect.

For the Sacrament of wedlocke, beſides other good and ſufficient proofes, that it is a Sacrament, we haue ſundry teſtimonies out of S. Auguſtine, and other Doctors in the Church (ſaith S. Auguſtine) not onely the band of Marriage, but alſo the Sacrament, is ſo commended, that it is not lawfull for the Huſband to deliuer his Wife to another. He calleth wedlocke a Sacrament in many places of his works. De Bono Coniugali, cap. 7. 18. and in the 24. Chapter of that Booke, he ſaith Hæc omnia bona ſunt, propter quia nuptiæ bonæ ſunt, Proles, Fides, Sacramentum: All theſe things be good, for which marriage is good, Iſſue, Faith, the Sacrament.

The Sacrament of wedlocke. Lib. de Fide & Operibus, cap. 7.

Of extream Vnction, who doubteth whether it be a Sacrament, let him read the Epiſtle of Innocentius the First, ad Decentium Eugubinum Epiſcopum, cap. 8. where moſt plainely treating of it, he nameth it a Sacrament. Chryſoſtom interpreteth the place of S. Iames Epiſtle for this Sacrament. And ſo doth Bede alleging the place of S Iames, the ſixth of Marke, the authority of Innocentius, and the cuſtome of the Church. Seeing then we haue found the (c) Seuen Sacraments expreſly mentioned in the Fathers according to the teaching of the Catholike Church, whereas ye teach men to beleeue there be but two, and pretend that the Fathers ſpeak of no moe: (d) I truſt from hence forth they will take better aduiſe, how they beleeue your Bare word without all proofe, and with certaine Danger of their ſoules, forſake the Doctrine of the Church, which is the ſure pillar and ground of truth, as S. Paul ſaith. In this great point, Beza and yee of that ſide be manifeſtly found liars.

(d) As this is true, ſo we deſire further credit.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

To ſpend words without cauſe, is affliction of the Spirit, and loſſe of time. M. Harding heere beſtoweth much labour, and alledgeth many Doctours, to win that thing, that he might eaſily haue obtained without any ſuch adoe. For, gentle Reader, leſt that thou be deceiued, and thinke there is ſome weight in this heape of Feathers, wee will grant without force, and freely, that the holy Catholike Fathers haue made mention, not onely of Seuen, as M. Harding heere accounteth them, but alſo of Seuenteene ſundry Sacraments. [a] Tertullian calleth the Helue, wherewith Eliz æus recouered the Ark out of the water, Sacramentum Ligni, the Sacrament of Wood: And the whole ſtate of the Chriſtian Faith, hee calleth [b] Religionis Chriſtianæ Sacramentum: The Sacrament of Chriſtian Religion. [c]. [d] S. Auguſtine in many places hath Sacramentum Crucis, The Sacrament of the Crosse. Thus he saith: In hac Crucis Figura continetur Sacramentum: In this Figure or forme of the Crosse, there is contained a Sacrament. So saith Leo: [c] Crux Christi, quæ saluandis est impensa Fidelibus, & Sacramentum est, & Exemplum: The Crosse of Christ, which was giuen to saue the Faithfull, is both a Sacrament, and also a Samplar. S. Hierome saith: [f] E latere Christi Baptismi, atque Martyrij pariter Sacramenta fundun-tur: Out of Christs side the Sacraments of Baptisme and Martyrdome, are powred foorth both together. * Leo calleth the promise of Virginity, Sacramentum: Quid eos manebit, qui corruperint fœdera Diuini Sacramenti? What shall become of them that haue broken the Co-uenant of the Heauenly Sacrament? [g] The bread that was giuen vnto the Nouices, or Beginners in the Faith, called Catechumeni, before they were Baptised, of S. Augustine is called a Sacrament. [h] S Hilary in sundry places, saith: Sacramentum Orationis: Sacramentum Esuritionis: Sacramentum Scripturarum: Sacramentum Fletus: Sacramentum Sitis: The Sacrament of Praier: The Sacrament of Fasting: The Sacrament of the Scriptures: The Sacrament of Weeping: The Sacrament of Thirst. [i] S. Bernard calleth the washing of the Apostles feet, a Sacrament: Ablutio Pedum Sacramentum est quotidianorum peccatorum: The Washing of Feet is the Sacrament of Daily sinnes.

Sacrament

[i] Bernard. in Serm. de Cœna Domini.

Thus many, and many moe Sacraments, it had bene easie for M. Harding to haue found in the Catholike learned Fathers. Yet, I trow, he will not say, that either the Helue of an Ax, or the whole Religion of Christ, or a Crosse printed in the forehead, or Martyrdome, or the Scriptures, or a Vow of Virginity, or the Bread giuen to the Catechumeni, or Praier, or Fasting, or Weeping, or Thirst, or Washing of Feet, are the necessary Seuen Sacraments of the Church.

Number of Sacraments.

Howbeit wee will not greatly striue for the name. It appeareth heereby that many things that in deed, and by speciall property be no Sacraments, may neuertheless passe vnder the generall name of a Sacrament. But thus we say, It cannot be prooued, neither by the Scriptures, nor by the Ancient learned Fathers, that this Number of Sacraments, is so specially appointed, and Consecrate to this purpose, or, that there bee neither moe nor lesse Sacraments in the Church, but onely Seuen.

As for the Reasons that they of M. Hardings side haue brought vs for proofe hereof, they are to childish to be remembred. For thus they say:

The Booke in the Apocalyps hath Seuen Seales:	Apocalyp. 5.
The Seuen Angels there haue Seuen trumpets:	Apocalyp. 8.
Christ hath in his right hand Seuen Starres:	Apcalyp. 7.
Christ walketh in the mids of Seuen golden Candlestickes:	Apocalyp. 1.
Zachary saw Seuen eies vpon a Stone:	Zachar. 3.
There were Seuen Candlestickes in the Tabernacle:	Exod. 37.

Ergo, say they, there must néeds be iust Seuen Sacraments in the Church of God. In Compendio Theologiæ.

But to leaue these Vanities, and to come to the purpose: vnto euery necessary Sacrament of the Church, two things specially are required: that is, a Sensible outward Element, and the Word of Institution. Without either of these there is no Sacrament. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Accedat Verbum ad Elementum, & fit Sacramentum: Ioine the Word of Christs Institution vnto the sensible Creature or outward Element, and thereof is made a Sacrament. The Element or Creature in Baptisme is Water: The Elements or Creatures in our Lords Supper, are Bread and Wine: The words of Institution are common and knowne. Augst. in Iob. Tract. 80.

The other fiue Sacraments want either the Word or the Element, or both together: As for example, Matrimony, Order and Penance, haue the Word of God, but they haue no outward Creature or Element: Extreme Vnction and Confirmation, haue neither Word nor Element. Therefore these fiue latter, in proper vse of speech, are not taken for necessary Sacraments of the Church.

For thus Alexander of Hales saith: Sacramentum Confirmationis, vt est Sacramentum, neque Dominus instituit, neque Apostoli: Sed postea institutum est in Concilio Meldensi: The Sacrament of Confirmation, as it is a Sacrament, was not ordained, either by Christ, or by the Apostles: but afterward in the Councell of Melda. Alexand. Hales, part. 4. qua. 24. mem. 1. Durandus.

So likewise Durandus saith: Matrimonium strictè, & propriè loquendo, non est Sacramentum: Matrimony in due and proper kind of speech, is no Sacrament. Thus one of M. Hardings owne Doctors saith: Confirmation is no Sacrament: Another saith likewise: Matrimony is no Sacrament. Irenæus. Iustin. Apol. 2. Tert. 1. & 4. con. Marcion.

Now to that, we make account only of Two Sacraments, as instituted by Christ, wherwith M. Harding findeth himself so much offended, it may please him to vnderstand, that the ancient learned Fathers, Irenæus, Iustinus Martyr, Tertullian. S. Ambrose, Cyrillus, Ambr. de Sacr. Cyril. in Mystagogicis, Alexandrinus, Alexandrinus and others, hauing occasion to intreat of purpose & specially hereof, speake onely of Two Sacraments, I mean of Baptisme and of Our Lords Supper, and name none other. S. Cyprian saith: Tunc demùm planè sanctificari, & esse Filij Dei possunt, si vtroque Sacramento nascantur: Then may they be thoroughly sanctified, and become the children of God, if they be new borne by both the Sacraments. By both the Sacraments, hee saith, meaning only of two. S. Augustine saith: Quædam pauca pro multis, eademque factu facillima, & intellectu augustissima, & obseruatione castissima, ipse Dominus & Apostolica tradidit disciplina: sicuti est Baptismi Sacramentum, & celebratio Corporis & Sanguinis Domini: Our Lord and his Apostles, haue deliuered vnto vs a few Sacraments in stead of many, & the same in doing most easie, in signification most excellent, in obseruation most reuerend: as is the Sacrament of Baptisme, and the celebration of the Body and Blood of our Lord. Againe, speaking of Baptisme, and of the Supper, he saith thus: Hæc sunt Ecclesiæ Gemina Sacramenta: These be the Two Sacraments of the Church. The two Sacraments, he saith, plainly expressing the number of two. Paschasius saith: Suæ Sacramenta Christi in Ecclesia Catholica, Baptismus, & Corpus & Sanguis Domini: These bee the Sacraments of Christ in the Catholike Church: Baptism, and the Body and Blood of our Lord. To be short, Cardinall Bessarion saith: Hæc duo Sola Sacramenta in Euangelijs manifestè tradita legimus: We read, that these Onely two Sacraments, were deliuered vs plainely in the Gospell.

Here hath M. Harding in expresse words, Both the Sacraments, and the two Sacraments, and the Onely two Sacraments of the Church. Iudge thou now therefore, good Christian Reader, what truth thou maist reckon to be in him, that saith, Beza, and they of his side, are manifestly found liars.

Two Sacraments.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Bessarion nameth other Sacraments. Wherefore there is an impudent lie included in your words, where you say, that I haue in expresse words, the onely two Sacraments of the Church. The Answere. What colour haue you in your face, M. Harding, when ye thus modestly call others Impudent? I know not how Bessarion could in plainer wise haue expressed his minde. These be his words: Hæc duo Sola Sacramenta in Euangelijs manifestè tradita Legimus: We read, that these Onely two Sacraments are deliuered to vs plainely in the Gospels. If Onely two, be Onely two, then iudge thou, good Reader, who is Impudent. ☞

Addition. ☞

All these things notwithstanding, the late pretended Councell of Trident, with most horrible threats and great curses, concludeth the contrary: Si quis dixerit, Sacramenta Nouæ Legis, non fuisse omnia a Iesu Christo Domino nostro institura, aut esse plura, vel pauciora, quàm Septem, aut etiam aliquod horum non esse verè & propriè Sacramentũ, Anathema sit: If any man shall say, that the Sacraments of the New Law were not all ordained of Our Lord Iesus Christ: or, that there be fewer, or more then Seuen, or, that any one of the same, verily, and in proper vse of speech, is not a Sacrament, accursed be he.

Cone. Trident. Session. 7.

But, ye say, Luther and the Germans, admit three Sacraments. Baptisme, the Lords Supper, and Penance: and Philip Melancthon afterward found out the Fourth. M. Harding, what is it, that thus enflameth your tongue to speake vntruth? If it had pleased you to haue seene it, Luther and Melancthon plainely expressed their owne meaning, and vtterly remoued all maner occasion of such cauils. Luther writeth thus: Propriè ea visum est vocare Sacramenta, quæ annexis Signis promissa sunt: Cætera, quia Signis alligata non sunt, nuda promissa sunt. Quò fit, vt si rigidè loqui velimus, tantùm duo sint in Ecclesia Dei Sacramenta, Baptismus, & Panis: cùm in his solis, & institutum diuinitùs Signum, & promissionem Remissionis Peccatorum videamus: In Proper speech those wee call Sacraments which are promised with Signes annexed. The rest, that haue no Signes, are bare promises. Wherefore speaking hereof precisely, and strictly, there are Onely two Sacraments, in the Church of God, Baptisme and the Bread: forasmuch as in these Only wee finde both the Signe ordained by God, and also the Promise of Remission of Sinnes.

In captiuitate Babylonica.

Likewise, Melancthon saith: He can well call Order a Sacrament so that it bee knowne from Baptisme, and the Supper, which in proper speech, and verily be called Sacraments.

In Apologia Confessionis Augustanæ.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision 3.

We say, that Baptisme is a Sacrament of the Remission of Sins, and of that washing which we haue in the Blood of Christ; and that no person, which will professe Christs name, ought to bee restrained or kept backe therefrom: no not the very Babes of Christians: forsomuch as they be borne in sinne, and doe pertaine vnto the people of God.

M.

M. Harding.

Baptisme very slenderly spoken of by the Defenders.

As ye acknowledge few Sacraments, so ye speake of them very slenderly. Baptisme (ye say) is a Sacrament of the Remission of Sinnes, and of that washing which we haue in the Blood of Christ. Now whereas ye meane, as within few lines yee declare, by the name of a Sacrament, (a) no more but a Token or Signe, specially sith ye teach in your Articles, that Baptisme at the best is but a Signe and Seale of our new birth: ye seem not to attribute to Baptisme so much as the Scripture doth. Neither is Baptisme only a Signe or Token that Sinnes be remitted, but we beleeue, as the Catholike Church, according to the Scriptures, teacheth, that in and by Baptisme Sinnes be fully and truly remitted and put away: and that not through the Faith (b) only of the giuer or receiuer, or of any other, though he eerunto it be necessarie in those that be come to age of discretion; but through the power and vertue of the Sacrament, and Gods Promise. And therefore to whom it is giuen, of them it is rightly said, that they be Baptised for remission of their Sinnes. The Scriptures be plaine. First, Ezechiel speaking of this holy Sacrament, saith in the person of God, I wished vpon you cleane water, and ye shal be made cleane from al your defilings, and from your Idols will I cleanse you. Next, S. Paul saith, That God hath saued vs by the washing of Regeneration, and of the renewing of the Holy Ghost, whom he hath powred vpon vs abundantly by Iesus Christ our Sauiour. That I may adde to these manifest Scriptures the Authoritie of a learned Father, not whereby to strengthen the truth of them, but to witnesse our right vnderstanding of them: S. Augustine, Lib. 3. contra duas epist. Pelagian. cap. 3 shewing the slander of the Pelagians against the Catholikes, saith thus in their person: Againe, they (that is, after their meaning, the Catholikes) auouch, that Baptisme maketh not indeed new men againe, that is to wit, that it giueth not full remission of sins, &c. Thereto eftsoones answering, S. Augustine saith: (c) Mentiuntur: infidiantur: tergiuersantur: They lie: They studie how to deceiue: they seeke shifts: we say not this. And after certaine sentences returning to Baptisme, he concludeth thus: Wherefore Baptisme washeth away all Sinnes, vtterly all, of deeds, words, thoughts, be they originall, or actuall: be they done ignorantly or wittingly. But it taketh not away the infirmity, which the regenerate resisteth, &c. Which place doth not onely set foorth the vertue of Baptisme, but also (d) destroieth the Doctrine of our new Gospellers, that affirme Concupiscence, which remaineth after Baptisme, to be verely sinne. (e) Wherein they erre manifestly against the Scripture, and sense of the Fathers.

Pelagians belied the Catholikes, as the Sacramentaries doe also now.

(a) Vntruth. For we say not so.

(b) This tale is needlesse, and out of season.

(c) These words may well pertein to M. Harding himselfe. For we say not thus.

(d) Vntruth ioined with grosse ignorance. M. Harding foulely mistaketh S. Augustines minde.

(e) Vntruth, fond and vaine. Read the Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Ill will is euer plentifull of ill words. M. Harding here maketh himselfe much matter without cause. Hee teacheth our New Clergie, That Baptisme is not only a Signe or a Token of remission of sinnes: He telleth vs of the Faith of the Giuer: of the Faith of the Receiuer: of the power of the Sacrament: of Concupiscence, that it is no sinne. And more, I trow, he would haue said, if more had presently come to minde. Verily the poore New Clergie speaketh not one word in all this whole place, neither of Signe nor of Token, nor of the Receiuer, nor of the Giuer, nor of the Power of the Sacrament, nor of Concupiscence, whether it bee Sinne, or not Sinne, nor of any other like thing. Yet in the end hee taketh S. Augustines words, without his meaning, and crieth out against vs, They lie, They studie to deceiue, They seeke shifts. And why so? Certainely because we say, Baptisme is a Sacrament of Remission of Sinnes. And, That the Children of the Faithfull, for that they bee borne in Sinne, and pertaine to the people of God, ought therefore to be Baptized. Other causes then these in ani Our words he can finde none.

True it is, that the Sacrament dependeth not, neither of the Minister, nor of the Receiuer, nor of any other. For though they be all the Children of Sinne, yet is Baptisme the Sacrament of Remission of Sinne. S. Augustine saith: Securum me fecit Magister meus, de quo Spiritus eius dicit, Hic est qui Baptizat: Christ my Master hath assured me, of whom his owne Spirit saith, This is he that Baptizeth.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 5.

Neuertheless, concerning the Faith of the Parents, and others, the Holy Doctours haue sometime written otherwise. S. Augustine saith: Satis piè rectèque creditur, prodesse paruulo eorum Fidem à quibus Consecrandus offertur: It is good and godly to beleeue that the childe is holpen by the Faith of them, by whom he is offered, or brought vnto Baptisme. Againe he saith: Accommodat illis Mater Ecclesia aliorum pedes, vt veniant: aliorum cor, vt credant: Our Mother the Church lendeth them other mens feet, that they may come: and other mens hearts, that they may beleeue. The like sayings might be alleged out of Iustinus Martyr, S. Cyprian, S. Hierome, and others. For thus they write. How truly I will not say. But their words be plaine. The Prophet Abacuc saith: Iustus ex Fide sua viuet: The iust man shall liue (not by the Faith of his Parents, but) by his owne Faith.

Augustine saith: Verus Baptismus constat non tam ablutione corporis, quàm Fide cordis, sicut Apostolica Doctrina tradidit, dicens, Fide mundans corda eorum: Et alibi, Saluos facit Baptisma, non carnis depositio sordium, sed conscientiæ bonæ interrogatio in Deum, per Resurrectionem Iesu Christi: True Baptisme standeth not so much in washing of the Bodie, as in the Faith of the heart: As the Doctrine of the Apostles hath taught vs, saying, By Faith purifying their hearts: And in another place, Baptisme maketh vs safe: not the putting away of the filth of the Flesh, but the examining of a good conscience before God, by the Resurrection of Iesus Christ. Likewise againe he saith: Vnde ista tanta Virtus aquæ, vt corpus tangat, & cor abluat, nisi faciente Verbo? Not for that it is spoken* (by the Minister) but for that it is beleeued (of the Faithfull.)

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 80.

Some man will say: Children or Infants beleeue nothing, but are vtterly void of Faith. S. Augustine answereth: Qui non crediderit, condemnabitur. Sicut eos renasci per Ministerium Baptizantium, ita etiam eos credere per corda & ora confitentium confitemur: He that beleeueth not, shall be damned. We confesse, that as they be borne againe by the Ministery of Baptizers, so they beleeue by the hearts and mouthes of the Confessors. Againe he saith: Habent Fidem propter Fidei Sacramentum: They haue Faith, because they haue (Baptisme, which is the Sacrament of Faith.) For he saith: Quemadmodum Sacramentum Corporis Christi secundùm quendam modum Sorpus Christi est, ita Sacramentum Fidei Fides est: As the Sacrament of Christs Bodie (not verily and indeed, but) after a certaine manner of speech, is Christs Body: so Baptisme is Faith, because it is the Sacrament of Faith. Therefore Cardinall Caietane is worthily blamed by Catharinus, in that he saith, An Infant, for that he wanteth Instruction in Faith, therefore hath not perfect Baptisme.

The Power of Baptisme.

Touching the Vertue or Power of this Sacrament, if M. Harding meane thereby the outward Element of the Water, he knoweth, or may easily know, it is a common resolution amongst all his owne Schoole Doctours, Gratia Dei non est alligata Sacramentis: The Grace of God is not tied to any Sacraments. The meaning thereof is this: That God is able to worke Saluation both with them, and without them. S. Augustine saith, as it is before alleged: Iam vos mundi estis propter sermonem quem loquutus sum vobis. Quare non ait, Mundi estis propter Baptismum quo loti estis: nisi quia etiam in Aqua Verbum mundat? Detrahe Verbum, & quid est Aqua, nisi Aqua? Now are ye cleane, because of the Word that I haue spoken to you. But why saith he not, Now ye are cleane because of the Baptisme wherewith ye are washed: saying that, because in the Water it is the Word that maketh cleane? Take away the Word, and what is the Water more then Water? Therefore he saith: Aqua exhibet forinsecùs Sacramentum Gratiæ: The Water giueth vs outwardly the Sacrament of Grace. And this is the Power and Vertus of the Sacraments.

Notwithstanding, we must consider, that the learned Fathers in their treaties of the Sacraments, sometime vse the outward Signe in stead of the thing it selfe, that is signified: sometime they vse the thing signified in stead of the Signe. As for example, sometimes they name Christs Blood in stead of the Water: Sometime they name the Water in stead of Christs Blood. This Figure is called Metonymia, that is to say, an exchange of names: and is much vsed among the learned, specially speaking of the Sacraments.

Cypria de Baptismo Christi.

Notwithstanding, indeed, and in precise manner of speech, Saluation must be sought in Christ alone, and not in any outward Signes. Christ is that Lambe of God that taketh away the Sinnes of the World. The Blood of Christ maketh vs cleane from all our Sinnes. S. Cyprian saith: Remissio Peccatorum siue per Baptismum, siue per alia Sacramenta donetur, propriè Spiritus Sancti est: & ipsi soli huius efficientiæ Priuilegium manet. Verborum solemnitas, & Sacri inuocatio nominis, & Signa Apostolicis Institutionibus attributa, Visibile celebrant Sacramentum. Rem verò ipsam Spiritus Sanctus format & efficit: The Remission of Sinne, whether it be giuen by Baptisme, or by any other Sacrament, is indeed of the Holy Ghost: and to the same Holy Ghost onely the Priuiledge of this worke doth appertaine. The solemnitie of the Words, and the inuocation of Gods holy Name, and the outward Signes appointed to the Ministerie of the Priests by the institution of the Apostles, worke the Visible outward Sacrament: but touching the Substance thereof, (which is the Remission of Sinnes) it is the Holy Ghost that worketh it.

Hieronym in Esaiam, Cap 4. Hier. ad Galat. Cap. 3.

Likewise saith S. Hierome: Homo Aquam tantùm tribuit: Deus autem dat Spiritum Sanctum, quo sordes abluuntur: The Minister, being a man, giueth onely the Water: But God giueth the Holy Ghost, wherby the Sinnes be washed away. And againe: Si quis corporeum, & quod oculis Carnis aspicitur, Aquæ tantùm accipit lauacrum, non est indutus Dominum

Iesum

Iesum Christum: If any man haue receiued onely the bodily washing of Water, that is outwardly seene with the eie, he hath not put on our Lord Iesus Christ.

Concupiscence is Sinne.

Concerning Concupiscence remaining in the faithful after Baptism, whether it be Sin, or no Sinne, there was no great cause why M. Harding should in this place moue question: sauing that, as he hath hitherto denied that Falshood is Falshood, so he would now denie that Sinne is Sinne. Undoubtedly S. Paul feeling the same Concupiscence in himselfe, is forced to mourne, and to cry out: I see another Law in my members, fighting against the Law of my mind, and leading me Prisoner to the Law of Sinne. And againe: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this Body of Death? Roman. 7.

Therefore S. Ambrose saith: Non inuenitur in vllo hominum tanta concordia, vt Legi Mentis Lex quæ membris est infita, non repugnet. Propter quod ex omnium Sanctorum Persona accipitur, quod Iohannes Apostolus ait, Si dixerimus quòd peccatum non habemus, nos ipsos seducimus, & Veritas in nobis non est: There is not found in any man such concord (betweene the flesh and the spirit) but that the Law (of Concupiscence) which is planted in the Members, fighteth against the Law of the minde. And for that cause those words of S. Iohn the Apostle are taken as spoken in the person of all Saints, If we say, we haue no Sinne, we deceiue our selues, and there is no Truth in vs. And, to leaue all others, S. Augustine saith in most plaine wise: Concupiscentia Carnis, aduersus quam bonus concupiscit Spiritus, & Peccatum est, & pœna Peccati, & causa Peccati: The Concupiscence of the Flesh, against which the good spirit lusteth, is both sinne, and the paine of sinne, and the cause of sinne. And againe he saith: Quandiu viuis, necesse est Peccatum esse in membris tuis: As long as thou liuest, there must needs be Sinne in thy members. Ambros. li. 10. Epist. 84. 1. Iohan. 1. August. contra Iuli. li. 3. ca. 3. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 41.

If M. Harding say, We wrest and racke S. Augustine, and take his words otherwise then he meant, Albertus Pighius his owne principall Doctor will controle him. Thus he writeth: Augustinus tradit, hanc ipsam Concupiscentiam corpori nostro insitam atque innatam, in nondum renatis Verè & Propriè Peccatum esse: quæ ignoscatur quidem, sed non tollatur in Baptismo: S. Augustine teacheth vs, that this same Concupiscence, planted in our Body in them that be not regenerate by Baptisme, Verily and in plaine maner of speech is Sinne: and that the same Concupiscence is forgiuen in Baptisme, but is not vtterly taken away. Albertus Pighius in controuer. de peccato Originis.

Yet the late blessed Chapter of Trident, in spight of S. Augustine, hath published the contrarie. For this is the determination of the Fathers there: Hanc concupiscentiam quam Apostolus aliquando appellat Peccatum, Sancta Synodus declarat Ecclesiam Catholicam nunquam intellexisse, quòd verè & propriè in renatis Peccatum sit: sed quia ex Peccato est, & ad Peccatum inclinat. Si quis autem contrarium senserit, Anathema sit: The Concupiscence which the Apostle S. Paul sometime calleth Sinne, this holy Councell declareth that the Catholike Church neuer vnderstood it to be called Sinne, for that it is so indeed, and in proper maner of speech, in them that be baptized: but because it is of Sinne, and inclineth vs vnto Sinne. And if any man thinke the contrary, accursed be he. Thus we see, that by the Decree of this worthy Couent, S Ambrose and S. Augustine, and other holy Fathers that haue written the same, are all accursed. Conc. Trident. Session. 5.

As for that M. Harding here toucheth as an errour defended by certaine, I know not by whom, that Baptisme giueth not full Remission of Sinnes, he may command it home againe to Louaine amongst his fellowes, and ioine it with other of his and their Vanities. For it is no part nor portion of our Doctrine. We confesse, and haue euermore taught, that in the Sacrament of Baptisme, by the Death and Blood of Christ is giuen Remission of all maner Sinnes: and that not in halfe, or in part, or by way of Imagination, or by fansie; but full, whole, and perfect of all together: so that now, as S. Paul saith, There is no damnation vnto them that be in Christ Iesus. Roman. 8.

Now iudge thou indifferently, gentle Reader, what Spirit forced M. Harding thus terribly to cry out; They lie: They study to deceiue: They seeke shifts, &c.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuision 1.

VVE say, that Eucharistia, that is to say, the Supper of the Lord, is a Sacrament, that is, an euident Representation of the body and blud of Christ, wherin is set, as it were, before our eies, the death of Christ, and his Resurrection, & whatsoeuer he did, whilest he was in his Mortall Body: to the end we may giue him thanks for his Death, and for our deliuerance. And that, by the often receiuing of this Sacrament, we may daily renue the remembrance therof, to the intet we being fed with the Body and blood of Christ, may be brought into the hope of the Resurrection, and of Euerlasting Life, & may most assuredly beleeue, that as our Bodies be fed with Bread and Wine, so our Soules be fed with the Body and Blood of Christ.

M. Harding.

Among all these gay words (a) we heare not so much as one syllable vttered, whereby we may vnderstand that ye beleeue the very body of Christ to be indeed present in the blessed Sacramẽt of the Altar. Ye confesse the Eucharistia, which commonly ye call, the Supper of the Lord, to be a Sacrament, and all that to be none other then an euident token of the Body & blood of Christ. As for that ye adde to make the matter seen somwhat of the Death of Christ, & his Resurrection, and his acts done in flesh: what reason or Scripture haue ye, that a peece of Bread and a Cuppe of Wine (for (b) in your beleefe more make ye not of this Sacrament) can set them, as it were, before our eies? Doth not rather a faire painted Table set foorth the acts of our Sauiour before our eies more liuely, and more expresly? And bee we not moued therewith to giue God thanks for his great benefits, as well, as if we haue Bread & Wine on a Table? But I pray you sirrence all is (c) but Bread and Wine after your teaching, how shall wee by eating and drinking thereof, be fed with the Body and blood of Christ? Againe, can we by (d) Bread and Wine be brought into hope of the Resurrection, & Euerlasting Life, as ye say? And how shall wee by eating of Bread and drinking of Wine, be assured that Christs body and blood doth in like manner feed our Soules, as Bread and Wine feedeth our Bodies? Though your imagination bee neuer so strong, yet by eating of that which is Bread only, & drinking of that which is Wine only, we see not how your soules can be fed with the true Body and blood of Christ, no more then ye be at your common meales.

(a) We vtter as many Syllables of Real Presence as Christ euer vttered.

(b) Vntruth, ioined with slãder.

(c) Vntruth slanderous, as the former.

(d) Euen as well as by the Water in Baptisme.

The Lords Supper with the desfenders is an euident token of the body & blud of Christ.

Verily, when all your tale is told, ye seeme to say nothing else touching the eating of our Lords Body, but that the Body of Christ remaineth in Heauen, and that we must send vp our Soules thither, to eat it there by a certaine imagination which ye call Faith. For this is your Master Caluins Doctrine. By this Doctrine all standeth vpon your Faith: your faith doth all alone. And he that beleeueth in Christ, so as ye teach, eateth his Body, and drinketh his blood. For by your Gospell, to eat the Body is nothing else, but to beleeue in Christ. If this be true, then is your Supper superfluous.

Faith doth all. The Catholike Doctrine touching the Sacrament of the Altar.

For declaration of the truth herein, it is to be considered, that when we speak of this blessed Sacrament, we mean specially the thing receiued to be the very Reall body of Christ, not onely a Signe or token of his Body: yet we think it necessary, (e) the Doctrine of the Fathers be clearely taught: which is, that heere is a Sacrament, and the thing of the Sacrament. The (f) forme of Bread and Wine, which is seene, is the Sacrament, that is to say, a Signe of the holy thing. For a Sacrament, besides the outward shape which it representeth to the senses, causeth another thing to come into knowledge. The thing of this Sacrament is of two sorts, the one (g) in the same conteined and signified, the other signified, but not conteined. The first is the Body of Christ, borne of the Virgin Mary, and his Blood shed for our Redemption: The second is the Vnity of the Church, in those that be predestinate, called, iustified, and glorified. Which Church is Christs Body mystically. So that heer are three distinct things vnderstanded: The one is a Sacrament onely: the other a Sacrament and the thing: the third the thing and not a Sacrament. The first is the visible shape or forme of Bread and wine: the second is the proper and very Flesh and Blood of Christ, the third his Mysticall Body.

(e) Vntruth, contrary to the anciẽt fathers: read the Answer.

(f) Vntruth, without sense or sauour. No Catholike Father euer taught this peeuish Doctrine.

(g) Vntruth, and one of M. Hard. mystical dreams.

A threefold distinctiõ to be considered in the Doctrine of this Sacrament.

And as there bee two things of this Sacrament, so be there also two meanes or waies of eating: The one Sacramentall, after which both good and (h) euill eat the true body of Christ: they to saluation, these to damnation. The other Spirituall, after which the good onely doe eat. These Defenders, as all other the Sacramentaries speaking of these distinct things indistinctly, cause confusion, and deceiue the vnlearned Reader. In such a sense and meaning the place commonly alledged out of S. Augustine, as also many other the like, may well be vnderstanded, without preiudice of the Truth of Christs body in the Sacrament: Vt quid paras dentem & ventrem? Crede, & manducasti: To what purpose makest thou ready teeth and belly? Beleeue, and thou hast eaten. Now these Defenders harring onely vpon this one string of Spirituall eating, and shunning the Faith of the Catholike Church touching the True Presence of the Body, and violently wresting the Holy Scripture and Ancient Fathers to a contrary sense, admitting Figures for truth, Tropes for the Letter, Shadows for Things, play vs many a false lesson, and teach horrible lies, to the vtter subuersion of those that be lead by them.

(h) Vntruth, horrible and heathenish.

Indistinct speaking of distinct things.

All this is onely M. Hardings descant. We admit Figures for Figures, and Truth for Truth.

Mysterium Corporis eius continetur: The very Body of Christ is not in the Holy Vessels, but the Sacrament of that Body is therein conteined. Heere haue we Chrysostome against Chrysostome: The one saith, Christs Body is in the Vessels: The other saith, Christs Body is not in the Vessels. And as touching the mouth, S. Augustine saith, The Body of Christ requireth the hunger of the inward man: By inward drinking I am blessed: This Bread entereth not into the belly: To beleeue in Christ, that is to eat the Bread of Life. Thus wee see, that Christs body is in the Vessels, and yet not in the Vessels: In the Mouth, and yet not in the mouth. These Contradictions may easily be reconciled, if a man be acquainted with the phrases of the Ancient Writers. For further resolution whereof, and for shortnesse of time, I will referre thee, gentle Reader, to that I haue otherwhere written touching the same. There shalt thou finde, that as Chrysostome saith heere, Christs Body is in the Vessels, euen so Athanasius saith, Our Lord is in the words of the Scriptures: S. Augustine saith: Holy men receiue Christ in their hands, and in their forehead: S. Chrysostome saith: The Priest beareth the Holy Ghost: S. Augustine saith: The people is laid vpon the Communion Table: The people is in the Cuppe: S. Gregory saith: Abel by signification bare Christ in his hands. These and other like phrases are there alleged. Thus is Christs body present, not Really, nor in Substance, but onely in Mystery. Thus Chrysostome saith: Christs Body is in the Communion Vessels: Thus Leo saith: The same Body is in the mouth of the Faithfull. Now if M. Harding will gather of Chrysostome, that Christs Body is Really present in the vessels, or of Leo, that the same Body is Really present in the mouth: then must he likewise gather of these other Fathers, That God is really present in the words of the Scripture: That Christ is Really present in our foreheads: That the Holy Ghost is Really present in the Bason: That the people is Really laid vpon the Holy Table, or Really present in the Cup: And that Abel bare Christ Really in his hands. Such and other like absurdities, M. Harding, must néeds follow of your Doctrine. But Gregorius Nyssenus saith: Abusiuè aliquid in aliquo loco esse dicimus, propter operationem eius quæ ibi est. Cùm enim dicere deberemus, Ibi operatur, dicimus, ibi est: We say, that a thing is in some place, by an abuse of speech, in respect of the effect of some thing, that there is wrought. For, whereas we should say, There it worketh, we say, There it is. Thus we say, The Moone is in the Head, or, in the Leg: And our words are true: and yet indeed Substantially, and Really the Moone is neither in the one part, nor in the other. And this is it that Chrysostome saith: The very Body of Christ is not in the Communion Vessels: but the Sacrament thereof, is there contained.

Gregor. Nyssenus, de Anima, Cap. 11.

But S. Ambrose saith: In receiuing the Sacrament, wee are made partakers of the Diuine Substance. This (say you) could not be, if there remained Bread in the Sacrament. And why so, M. Harding? Are not we partakers of the same Diuine Substance in the Sacrament of Baptisme. S. Augustine saith: By Baptisme we are incorporate into Christ, and are made One Body with his Body. Leo saith: Corpus Regenerati, sit Caro Crucifixi: The Body of him, that is new borne in Baptisme, is made the Flesh of Christ Crucified, that is to say, Flesh of his Flesh, and Bone of his Bone. And, what greater participation of the Diuine Substance can you desire? Yet neuertheless, the very Substance of Water remaineth still. Euen so notwithstanding we be made partakers of the Diuine Substance of Christ, in the receiuing of the Holy Mysteries, yet the Substance of Bread, therein remaineth still. And for asmuch as yée would proue by these words of S. Ambrose, that Christ is present in the Sacrament; the same S. Ambrose also saith, that Christ is likewise present in the water of Baptisme. Thus he saith: Crede Diuinitatis illic esse Præsentiam. Operationem credis? Non credis Præsentiam? Vide sequeretur Operatio, nisi præcederet antè Præsentia? &c. Crede adesse Dominum Iesum inuocatum precibus Sacerdotum. Ait, vbi fuerint duo, vel tres, ibi & ego sum. Quantò magis vbi est Ecclesia, vbi Mysteria sua sunt, ibi dignatur suam impartire Præsentiam? Beleeue thou, that there (in the Sacrament of Baptisme) is the Presence of the Godhead. Beleeuest thou the working? and beleeuest thou not the Presence? How could the working follow, vnlesse the Presence went before? Beleeue thou, that our Lord Iesus is present (at the Baptisme) being called vpon by the Praiers of the Priests. Christ saith, Whereas be two or three, there am I. How much more will hee vouchsafe to offer his Presence, whereas his Church is, and whereas are the Mysteries (of his Baptisme?) Now M. Harding, as Christ is Present, in the one Sacrament, euen so, and none otherwise, is hee Present in the other.

But Leo saith: The same thing is receiued by the mouth, that is beleeued by our Faith. These words, as Leo meant them, are very true: but as you would handle them by your Constructions they are most vntrue. Leo in that place disputeth against the Heretike Eutyches, whose errour was this: That Christs Body after his Ascension was wholly changed into his Godhead, and that therefore now he hath no body at all. Against him

Reall Preſence.

Leo reaſoneth thus: The very Sacrament of Chriſts Body, which thou receiueſt with thy mouth, is ſufficient to reproue thee. For if Chriſt, being now in Heauen, haue no Body at all, how can this be a Sacrament of his Body? In like ſort Chryſoſtome diſputeth againſt certaine other Heretikes, that ſaid, Chriſt died not vpon the Croſſe. Nam quando dicunt, &c. When they ſay, How may it appeare that Chriſt was crucified? beſides many other Argu-

Chryſ. in Mat. Homil. 83. ments, we bring foorth the Myſteries, and ſtop their mouthes. For if Chriſt died not, whoſe Figure, whoſe Signe or remembrance is this Sacrifice? Cuius Symbolum ac Signum eſt hoc Sacrificium? As if he would reaſon thus: The Sacrament is a remembrance of Chriſts death, Therefore it is euident that Chriſt hath died.

Likewiſe Tertullian reaſoneth againſt the Heretike Marcion, that ſaid, Chriſt had neuer any Body at all, but only a vaine ſhew, or a likelineſſe of a Body: Chriſt (ſaith he)

Tertull. contra Marcion. li. 4. ſaid thus: This is my Body, that is to ſay, This is a Figure of my Body. It could not be a Figure, vnleſſe Chriſt indeed had a Body. For a vaine ſhew, or a likelineſſe, can beare no Figure. Thus reaſoneth Tertullian: Chriſtus, acceptum panem, & diſtributum Diſcipulis, corpus ſuum illum fecit, Hoc eſt corpus meum, dicendo, id eſt, Figura corporis mei: Figura autem non fuiſſet, niſi veritatis eſſet corpus. Cæterùm vacua quod eſt Phantaſma Figuram capere non poſſet.

Euen ſo ſaith Leo vnto Eutyches: Thou ſaiſt that Chriſt hath no Body: But the very Sacrament that thou receiueſt reprooueth thee. For the thing that thy mouth receiueth is the ſame that thou beleeueſt by thy Faith: That is to ſay, It is a Sacrament of that thing that thou beleeueſt by thy Faith. We beleeue, that Chriſt was Borne in the very Subſtance of our Body: that he Died: that he was Buried: that he Roſe againe: that he aſcended into Heauen in the ſame Body: and that he ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father. The Gelaſius contra Eutychen. Sacrament of that Body is it that we receiue with our mouthes. So ſaith Gelaſius: Hoc nobis in ipſo Domino ſentiendum eſt, quod in eius imagine profitemur: Wee muſt thinke the ſame of Chriſt our Lord that we profeſſe in (the Sacrament, which is) his image. Wee muſt thinke the ſame, he ſaith: and yet if we goe preciſely to the matter, we may in no

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 80. wiſe thinke the ſame. So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Aqua corpus tangit, & cor abluit: The water (of Baptiſme) toucheth the Body, and waſheth the heart. Yet is it not the Water indeed that waſheth the heart. The Water is a Sacrament of Gods grace: and that is it that waſheth the heart. So ſaith Leo in another place, ſpeaking likewiſe of the Sacrament: Tranſimus in quod ſumimus: Wee are changed into the ſame thing that wee receiue. Yet, I trow, M. Harding, you will not ſay, We are changed into the Sacrament: But we are changed into Chriſts Body, that is repreſented by the Sacrament.

This anſwer is plaine, and agreeable to the Articles of our Faith, and to the generall Doctrine of the Catholike Fathers. And theſe are the Teſtimonies which M. Harding ſaith, Can neuer be auoided by any anſwer while the World ſtandeth.

M. Harding. fol. 341. b. Farther he ſaith: What reaſon, or Scripture haue yee, that a peece of Bread, and a Cuppe of Wine can ſet the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt, as it were, before your eies? Verily, when all your tale is told, yee ſeeme to ſay nothing elſe, but that the Bodie of Chriſt remaineth in Heauen, and that we muſt ſend vp our Soules thither, to eat it there by a certaine Imagination, which ye call Faith.

Here ye doe great wrong, M. Harding, to call the Faith of Chriſt, an Imagination, or, as I trow ye meane, a Fanſie. S Paul ſaith: Fides eſt ſubſtantia rerum ſperandarum: Faith is (not an Imagination, but) the ſubſtance and ground of the things that wee hope for. If ye trauel once againe to Rome, being thus farre inſtructed already, ye will eaſily learne the leſſon that one of your late Popes there, as it is reported, taught his Cardinals: O quantùm nobis profuit illa Fabula de Chriſto!

That we ought to ſend vp our Faith into Heauen, and there to embrace the Bodie of Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 50. Chriſt, it is S. Auguſtines Doctrine: it is not ours. Theſe be his words: Dices, Quomodo tenebo Chriſtum abſentem? Quomodo in Cœlum manum mittam, vt ibi ſedentem teneam? Fidem mitte, & tenuiſti. Parentes tui tenuerunt carne: tu tene corde: Thou wilt ſay, How ſhall I hold Chriſt being abſent? How ſhall I reach my hand into Heauen, that I may hold him ſitting there? Send vp thy faith, and thou holdeſt him. Thy Fathers (the Iewes) held him in the fleſh: Hold him thou in thy heart.

But foraſmuch as M. Harding thought it ſufficient, ſo pleaſantly to paſſe ouer this matter with his Imaginations and Fanſies, I thinke it therefore ſo much the more needfull to ſhew the iudgement of the Ancient Learned Fathers in this behalfe.

Aug. de Trinit. lib. 13. cap. 1. First therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Rerum abſentium, præſens eſt Fides: & rerum quæ foris ſunt, intus eſt Fides: & rerum quæ non videntur, videtur Fides: Of things that bee Abſent, Faith is preſent: of things that be without, Faith is within: and of things that be not

Aug. in Pſ. 75. ſeene, Faith is ſeene. Againe he ſaith: Cùm non obliuiſcimur munus Saluatoris, nonne nobis quotidiè Chriſtus immolatur? Ex ipſis reliquijs cogitationis noſtræ, id eſt, ex ipſa memoria memoria, Christus quotidiè nobis sic immolatur, quasi quotidiè nos innouet: When we forget not the gift of our Saniour, is not Christ offered vnto vs euery day? Of the very remnants of our thoughts, that is to say, of our very memory, Christ is so daily offered vnto vs, as though he renewed vs euery day.

Faith Eateth.

And the more liuely to expresse this matter, S. Hierome saith: Tibi Conuiuium Christus est: Cogitatio Christus est: Gaudium Christus est: Desiderum Christus est: Lectio Christus est: Quies Christus est: Christ is thy Banket: Christ is thy thought: Christ is thy Ioy: Christ is thy Desire: Christ is thy Reading: Christ is thy Rest. Likewise S. Ambrose: In animis vestris quotidiè pro Redemptione Corporis Christus offertur: In your mindes Christ is daily offered for the Redemption of the body.

Hieron. de 7. Ordinib. Eccl. De gradu. 7. Ambr. de Virginib. lib. 2.

And to passe ouer others, for that it pleaseth M. Harding to make himselfe such mirth with Imaginations: Euthymius a Greeke Author, writing purposely of this matter, saith thus: Non oportet simpliciter ea intueri, sed aliud quiddam imaginari, & interioribus oculis ea perspicere, tanquam Mysteria: We may not looke barely vpon these things, (that is, vpon the Bread and Wine) but must therof imagine some other matter, and behold the same with our inward Spirituall eies, as it is meete to beholde Mysteries. This spirituall Imagination, this Hauing, this Holding, this Enioying of Christ, it liketh well M. Harding in his pleasance, to scorne as a fantasie. But S. Augustine saith: Magis sunt illa, quæ intelligimus, quam ista quæ cernimus: the things that we vnderstand (or imagine by Faith) are more certaine then the things that we see with our eies.

Euthym. in Iohan. cap. 9.

Aug. epist. 117.

Neither may you thinke, M. Harding, that, these things being granted, the Ministration of the holy Supper would be superfluous. For these two kinds of Eating must euermore necessarily be ioined together. And whosoeuer commeth to the holy Table, and aduanceth not his mind vnto Heauen, there to feede vpon Christs Body at the Right hand of God, he knoweth not the meaning of these Mysteries, but is void of vnderstanding, as the Horse or the Mule, and receiueth onely the bare Sacraments to his condemnation. Therefore the Mysticall Supper of Christ, notwithstanding this Doctrine, is not superfluous: but your Transubstantiation, your Reall Presence, and a great part of this your idle talke is most vaine, and most superfluous.

But ye say, How can Bread and Wine bring vs to the hope of Resurrection or of Euerlasting Life? And why may not a man in like maner demand of you, how can a few drops of cold Water bring vs to the hope of Resurrection? If Water may doe it, why may not Bread and Wine likewise doe it?

Touching the Water, S. Basil saith, Baptismus est Potentia dei ad Resurrectionem: Baptisme is the Power of God to Resurrection. Againe he saith: Resurrectionis Gratiam in Die Resurrectionis recipiamus: Vpon the Day of Resurrection, let vs receiue (Baptisme, which is) the Grace of Resurrection. S. Hierome saith: Non solùm propter Remissionem Peccatorum Baptizamur, Sed etiam propter Resurrectionem Carnis nostræ: We are Baptized not onely for Remission of Sinnes, but also for the Resurrection of our Flesh. And therefore the Greekes call Baptisme, ἀφθαρσίας ἔνδυμα, that is, the Weede of immortality.

Basil. de Sancto Baptismo. Hieronym. in 1. Cor. 15. Dionys. cap. 2.

Here, M. Harding, it were some point of skill to shew vs, how so great power may be in so little Water. Howbeit it is not the Water indeed, that worketh the force of Resurrection, but the Blood of Christ, that is signified by the Water. And therefore S. Ambrose saith: Baptismus Resurrectionis Pignus, & imago est: Baptisme is the Pledge and Image of Resurrection. Likewise Ignatius: Credentes in Mortem eius, per Baptisma participes Resurrectionis eius efficimur; Beleeuing in the Death of Christ, by Baptisme, wee are made partakers of his resurrection. The like we say of the holy Supper. Neither is M. Harding able to shew vs any sufficient cause to the contrary, but Wine or Bread may haue this power, as well as Water. Of this whole matter wee shall speake hereafter more at large.

Ambr. in epist. ad Rom. cap. 6. Ignatius ad Trallianos.

But if Bread and Wine, as M. Harding saith, haue no power to worke Resurrection, what power then can his Accidents and empty Formes haue to worke the same? For, as touching the Body of Christ it selfe, his owne Doctors could haue told him, that it entreth not into our Bodies. For thus it is noted, and published for sound and certaine Doctrine vpon the Decrees: Certum est, quòd quàm citò Species terentur dentibus, tam citò in Cœlum rapitur Corpus Christi: It is certaine, and out of doubt, that as soone as the Accidents or Formes are touched with the teeth, straightway the Body of Christ is taken vp into Heauen.

De Cons. Dist. 2. Tribus gradib. in Glossa.

Hereof we may reason thus: Christs Body is suddenly taken vp into Heauen, and is not receiued into our Bodies: and that, as it is noted here, is true and certaine. The Bread and Wine, by M. Hardings Doctrine, are vtterly consumed, no part of the Substance thereof remaining: there is nothing left there, but Formes and Accidents. Hereof

it must nœds follow, by this Doctrine, that the same bare Formes and Accidents, being receiued into our Bodies, haue power to worke our Resurrection. But it is well knowne and confessed in all Schooles, that the Substance is better and worthier, then is the Accident. Therefore we may conclude thus: The Accident of Bread may doe it: Ergo, the Substance of Bread may much more doe it.

For the rest, M. Harding saith, The Substance of the Bread is quite remoued; The roundnes and whitenesse are the Sacrament; The thing thereof is of two sorts; The one contained and signified, the other signified and not contained. These Mysticall fancies may lie still, vntill M. Harding by some authority, other then his owne, haue proued them better. True it is, that M. Harding saith, Betwæne the Sacrament, and the thing it selfe, that is to say, betwæne the Sacrament, and the Body of Christ represented by the Sacrament, there is great difference. For indeed and verily, and in precise maner of speech, nether is Christs Body the Sacrament: nor is the Sacrament Christs Body.

Aug. epist. 23. ad Bonifacium. S. Augustine saith, as it is alledged before: Nisi Sacramenta similitudinem quandam earum rerum, quarum Sacramenta sunt, haberent, omninò Sacramenta non essent. Ex hac autem similitudine plærunque rerum ipsarum nomina accipiunt. Itaque secundùm quendam modum Sacramentum Corporis Christi, Corpus Christi est: Vnlesse Sacraments, had a certaine likenesse of the things wherof they be Sacraments, without question they were no Sacraments. And in consideration of this likenesse, oftentimes they beare the names of the things themselues. Therefore after a certaine maner of speech (and not otherwise) the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, is Christs Body.

Articulo, 21. De Cons. Dist. 2. Non iste. Hereof I haue written more at large, as occasion was offered, in my Former Reply to M. Harding. S. Ambrose noting this difference, saith thus: Non iste Panis, qui vadit in ventrem: sed Panis Vitæ Æternæ, qui animæ nostræ Substantiam fulcit: Not this Bread (of the Sacrament) that passeth into the belly: but (the Body of Christ it selfe, which is) the Bread of Euerlasting life: which relieueth the Substance of our Soule, and is signified by the Sacrament.

Rabanus lib. 1. cap. 31. Rabanus Maurus saith: Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud vis Sacramenti. Sacramentum in Corporis alimentum redigitur: Virtute Sacramenti Æternæ vitæ dignitas adipiscitur: The Sacrament is one thing: The Power of the Sacrament, is an other thing. The Sacrament is changed into the foode or nourishment of the Body: by the Vertue of the Sacrament, is gotten the dignity of Euerlasting Life.

Chrys. in Mat. Homil. 1. Likewise S. Chrysostome: In sacris Vasis, non ipsum Corpus Christi, sed Mysterium Corporis eius continetur: In the holy Vessels is conteined, not the very body of Christ it selfe, but a Mystery, or Sacrament of his body.

Difference betweene &c.

So great difference there is betweene the Sacrament and the Body of Christ. The Sacrament passeth into the Belly: Christs Body passeth into the Soule. The Sacrament is vpon Earth: Christs Body is in Heauen. The Sacrament is corruptible: Christs Body is glorious. The Sacrament is the Signe: Christs body is the thing Signified. For want of this distinction M. Harding wandreth blindly in the darke, hee woteth not whither. Therefore S. Augustine saith, speaking purposely hereof: Ea demum est miserabilis animæ seruitus, signa pro rebus accipere: This a miserable bondage of the Soule, to take the Signes in stead of the things that be signified.

August. de Doctrina Christian. lib 3. cap. 5.

Whether, and in what sense the wicked may be said, to eat the Body of Christ, it shall be discussed hereafter more at large.

As for M. Hardings ordinary Conclusion, Of wresting the Scriptures, and Hoy Fathers: Of Playing false Lessons: Of teaching (as he saith) horrible Lies: and of subuerting the people, with all other the like furniture, we will leaue it freely and wholly vnto the Author.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuision 2.

To this Banket we thinke the People of God ought to be earnestly bidden, that they may all Communicate among themselues, and openlie declare and testifie both the godly society, which is among them, and also the hope, which they haue in Christ Iesus. For this cause, if there had been any, which would be but a looker on, and abstain from the Holy Communion, him did the Old Fathers and Bishops of Rome in the Primitiue Church, before Priuate Masse came vp, excommunicate, as a wicked person, and as a Pagan. Neither was there any Christian at that time, which did Communicate alone, whiles other looked on. For so did Calixtus in times past decree, that after the Cõsecration was finished, al should Communicate, except they had rather stand without the Church dores. For thus (saith he) did the Apostles appoint, and the same the holy Church of Rome keepeth still.

The best Dish.

M. Harding.

Let this Banket be dight as it ought to be; let the best dish be made ready in due sort, which is the very Body of our Sauior Christ; let the guests be told what is set before them at that holy Table; let them be taught to beleeue rightly, to proue & prepare themselues as behooueth; then we think it most conuenient the people of God to be bidden thereto; not thereby to communicate amongst themselues only, but also, and rather to Communicate with God, to be incorporate in Christ, and to be made Partakers of all the benefits of God procured to man by the death of his Son, suffered in that Body, which at this high feast they eat. This Banket being thus set forth, if some deuout persons think themselues for good causes vnworthy to assay thereof, and to receiue that heauenly food Sacramentally, finding themselues not so wel prepared, as S. Paul requireth in that behalfe, yet for loue of it desire to be present, & behold that Table, and spiritually to tast of that healthfull Dish by Faith, Charity, Prayer, and feruent Deuotion, wherin they do not wholy abstaine from the holy Communion; such (a) are not to be condemned as idle lookers on, for so ye make them, nor to be driuen out of the Church. Neither did euer the Old Fathers and Bishops of Rome in the Primitiue Church (say what ye wil Defenders) excommunicate them, much lesse did they repute them for (b) wicked persons and Pagans. And (c) not seldome the Priest at the Masse (which for this respect with vnreasonable Nouelty ye terme Priuate) where none other were disposed to receiue with him Sacramentally, but Spiritually onely, hath receiued alone the holy things, which he hath offered.

Deuout lookers on do spiritually Communicate.

Calixtus alleged for Anacletus.

Neither the decree of Anacletus, which ye, being deceiued by Gratian, (d) vntruly father vpon Calixtus requireth that (d) all the people present should Communicate with the Priest at the Masse. Which thing ye should not haue obiected to the Church, seing that it is not obserued by your own New Order in your Congregations. Read the Epistle of Anacletus, frō whence this Decree is taken, & your selues will confesse the same. That holy Father & Martyr prescribeth the Order, which he would to be kept, when Bishops or Priests say Masse: Which was, that it be done in places consecrated to God, that a Bishop at his Masse haue witnesses with him moe then another Priest. In the (d) solemn feasts he requireth Seuen, Fiue, or Three Deacons, likewise Subdeacons, and other Ministers, al clothed in hallowed Vestiments to attend vpon him, to stand of euery side of him with a contrite hart, and humble spirit looking downward, keeping him from malitious mē, giuing consent to his Sacrifice. Thus much being declared in that Epistle, it followeth immediately, Peracta autem Consecratione, &c. And when the Consecration is ended, let them all Communicate, that will not be kept without the Church doores. For so the Apostles haue ordained, and the holy Church of Rome obserueth. Who seeth not this request of receiuing the Communion to be referred (e) to the Priests, Deacons, Subdeacons and other Ministers, in solemne feasts, seruing the Bishop at Masse? For in that place Anacletus speaketh neuer a word expresly of the Lay people. Therefore ye deceiue the vnlearned Reader with a lie.

The Defenders require more of the Catholikes then thy performe themselues.

The place of Anacletus discussed.

This Commandement of receiuing the Communion giuē by Anacletus pertaineth only to the Ministers of the Church in solemne Feasts.

See the 9. Canon of the Apostles.

For the better vnderstanding of the Decree, specially whereas Anacletus allegeth the Apostles ordinance for the same, the ninth Canon of the Apostle is to be considered. In which they require (f) euery Ecclesiasticall person to be partaker of the Sacrifice that is offered, or to be excluded from the Communion, vnlesse he shew iust cause for the contrary. The reason wherof in that Canon expressed is this: Least the Clerks abstaining from the Communion, should be occasion of offence to the people, and ther by raise an euill suspition against him that Sacrificed, as though hee had not made the Oblation as it ought to be.

(a) Vntruth. For the Catholike Fathers condēned them.

(c) Vntruth, coluly auouched. Read the Answer.

(d) Vntruths three together, as shall appeare.

(e) Vntruth, plain, and manifest. Read the Answer.

(f) Vntruth. For in the Apostles Canon it is written thus: Quicunq; Fideles ingrediuntur in Ecclesiam, &c. Canone 10.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Let this banquet be dight (saith M. Harding) as it ought to be: Let the Dish be made ready. God Christian Reader, the best, the holesomest, the most pleasant, and most comfortable dish at this Table, is the Death of Christ, that Lambe of God, that hath taken away the sinnes of the world. Thus Christ himself, the Maister of this Feast, hath willed vs to diesse this Dinner: Doe this (saith he) in remembrance of me. Likewise S. Paul: As often as ye shall eat of this Bread, and drinke of this Cuppe, yee shall shew foorth and publish the Lords Death vntill hee come.

1. Cor. 11.

This Banket therefore is not the outward or bare Sacrament, but Christs very body and Blood, which are represented vnto vs by the Sacrament: And, as it is before alleged out of S. Ambrose, It is not the Bread (of the Sacrament) that passeth into the bellie, but the Bread of Euerlasting life, which relieueth the Substance of the Soule. Therefore S. Hierome saith: Iudaicas fabulas repellamus, & ascendamus cum Domino in Cœnaculum magnū stratum atque mundatum, & accipiamus ab eo sursum Calicem Noui Testamenti: Let vs abandon from vs Iewish Fables, and let vs Ascend vp with our Lord into Heauen, into that great Parlar dreſt and made cleane: and there aboue let vs receiue of him the Cuppe of the New Testament. In this sense S. Cyprian saith: Vident hæc Sacramenta Pauperes Spiritu, & hoc Vno contenti Ferculo, omnes huius mundi delicias aspernantur & possidentes Christum, aliquam huius mundi possidere supellectilem dedignantur: The poore in Spirit see these Sacraments, and being contented with this Only Dish, they despise all other the deinty faires of the world: and hauing possession of Christ, they disdaine to possesse any worldly substance. In like sort, speaking of the Birth of Christ, he saith thus: Ea quæ licita sunt & concessa, tangamus: & circà incunabula Saluatoris Prima Infantiæ eius Ferculà degustemus: Let vs vs touch those things that be lawfull for vs to touch: and standing about the Cradle of our Sauiour, let vs tast of the First Dish of his Childhood. Likewise saith S. Augustin: Cæcus interius Panem Christum non videt. Et beatus est? Hoc non dicit, nisi pariter cæcus: He that is blind in his heart within, seeth not Christ that is our Bread. And is he blessed? No man will say so, vnlesse it be one as blinde as he.

Aug. in Psalmum, 57.

The best Dish.

But what maner of Feast is it that M. Harding prepareth for the people? How is it seasoned? How is it drest? First, by very vncourteous and vnciuill dealing, he withdraweth the one halfe, that is, the Cup of the New Testament, and reserueth it seuerally to himself: and yet would make the people beleeue, they haue the whole. And thus doth he, when he hath greatest company to sup with him, and when his feast is best furnished. Otherwise he suffereth his guests to stand alowe, and he consumeth all his prouision himselfe alone. Neither indeed hath he any thing to set before them, sauing onely a cold surcharge of dead Shewes, and dumbe Ceremonies: The poore people heareth nothing, vnderstandeth nothing, eateth nothing, drinketh nothing, tasteth nothing. They publish not the Lords Death: they know not the Lords Supper.

Suidas.

To such a Banquet Paleres the Juggler vsed sometimes to call his friends. There was great shew of variety, and plenty of all manner of Meats and Drinkes, the Table full: But when any of the guests, would haue touched any thing, it vanished suddenly away, and was turned to nothing. And so, when their eies were full, they put vp their knives, & rose a hungred. Euen thus M. Harding feedeth and feasteth the people of God, with Shewes and Ceremonies, and suffereth them in the meane while to sterue for hunger. Euen as the Prophet saith: It shall be like the dreame of an hungry man. Behold he eateth and maketh merry: But when he is awake, his Soule is empty.

Esai. 29.

Good men (saith M. Harding) withdraw themselues, and are contented to be present onely, and to stand by, but receiue not the Sacrament. But Chrysostome saith to such a good deuout man, If thou stand by, and doe not Communicate, thou art wicked, thou art shameleſſe, thou art impudent. Thou wilt say, I am vnworthy to be partaker of the holy Mysteries. Then art thou vnworthy so be partaker of the Praiers. Thou must no more stand heere, then one of the Nouices called Catechument, that neuer was Christned.

Chrys. ad Ephes. Homil. 3 Impudens, Improbus. M. Harding 342. b.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. A wise man, as M. Iewell taketh himselfe to bee, would vnderstand, that, how earnestly soeuer Chrysostome speaketh, to prouoke, that were present, to Communicate, his words import a Counsell rather then a Precept. The Answer. I neede not to tell you, M. Harding, what you take your selfe to be. S. Chrysostome saith: Whosoeuer standeth by, refusing to Communicate, is wicked and shameleſſe, and vnworthy to bee partaker of the Praiers after the Communion is ended, thou maiſt lawfully come and see: but while the Mysteries are present, depart thee hence. Thou maiſt no more be heer, than a Catechumenus, or a Nouice, that neuer was Baptized. Do all these words import only a Counsel, M. Harding, and no Commandement? Anacletus saith: Let them all Communicate, vnlesse they will be thrust out of the Church. The Apostles in their Canons say thus: Whosoeuer entreth into the Church, and heareth the Scriptures, and receiueth not the Communion, let him be Excommunicate, as a disturber of the Church, and a Breaker of Order. Thomas of Aquine saith: Statutum fuit, vt Fideles quotidiè Communicarent: It was a Decree, that the Faithfull should Communicate euery day. It was a Decree, saith Thomas, It was an Ordinance, It was a Law, It was a Statute. Yet must we say for your pleasure, that matters of Excommunication, and Disturbance of the Church, Decrees, Laws, Ordinances and Statutes are onely Counsels, and no Commandements: Happy are you that haue such power to change the Nature of things, and so easily of Counsels to make Commandements, and of Commandements to make Counsels when you list. ☜

De Consecra. Dist. 2. Peracti. Canon. 10.

Heere, gentle Reader, maist thou see a marueilous change in the Church of God. The thing, that in old times was accounted Heathenish, Impudency, and Wickednesse, is now, by M. Hardings new Diuinity, become Godlinesse, and great Deuotion.

Not seldome

But, God wote, heere followeth a very cold asseueration. Not seldome (yee say) the Priest at the Masse, when none other were disposed, receiued alone. O M. Harding, the World well seeth, your Word is no Gospell. It appeareth by your so many Untruths, yee care not greatly, what you say. Thus ye tell vs: Not seldome the Priest receiued alone. Not seldome? What is that? why speake ye so nicely? what meaneth this cold and doubtfull eloquence, specially in him that otherwise hath acquainted his voice to speake so big? why say you not, The Priest vsed Daily, and Commonly so to doe? Or, if ye could not awouch so great Untruth for very shame, why said you not, The Priest oftentimes, or at some certaine times receiued alone: at the least, at foure, or three, or two sundrie times, within the space of fiue hundred yeares? At the worst, if ye had said but Once, it had beene bæne somewhat. As for, Not seldome, it is too base: it is too simple: it disgraceth the whole course of your pleading, and in plaine speech soundeth, as much, as Neuer. It had rather bæne your part, taking vpon you this countenance of credit and grauity, to haue told vs substantially and plainly, what manner of man this Priest was: where he dwelt: what was his name: when and where, and in what Company hæ said this Masse: who saw it: who heard it: who bare witnesse to it: by what Record or Authority it may bæ proued. The matter being so great, and of such Antiquity, is there no man left behind to witnesse the same, but M. Harding? In your former Answer ye bring vs in Boies, Girles, Sicke folke, Lay people, and Women: and vpon such grounds ye sticke not to found your Priuate Masse. And doubtlesse these examples might haue seemed to stand you in some prætie stead, if in those daies Boies and Women had beene Priests. For Priest or Bishop, that euer receiued the Sacrament alone in the Church, before the people, ye are not yet able to shew vs one. As for your Leontius, and Amphilochius, and S. Basils Masse at Midnight, and other like follies and fables, it seemeth by the silence ye vse in your late Reioinder, ye are contented wisely and quietly to giue them ouer.

Anacletus, Calixtus.

Ye say, We are deceiued by Gratian, and haue placed Calixtus in stead of Anacletus. Heere first of all, ye confesse, that Gratian your great Rabbin, the Father and Fountaine of your Decrees, might be deceiued. And verily such plainnesse in dealing, if ye would vouchsafe to vse it oftner, were worthy of some commendation. For indeed your Gratian, as he was a man of great reading and small iudgement, so he allegeth often times, he knoweth not what: Hierome for Origen: Cyprian, for Augustine: Beda, for Ambrose: Iuuencus, for Vincentius: Græke for Latine: New for Olde. As for this Authority, wherein you say, we are deceiued, he allegeth it in two sundrie places: first vnder the name of Anacletus: next vnder the name of Calixtus: meaning, I trow, if there were errour in the one, at least to redresse it by the other. Therefore M. Harding, if ye had loked better vpon your Booke, whatsoeuer opinion ye haue of Gratian your Doctour, ye should haue found, that we, for our part, were nothing deceiued. Howbeit, your Gratian, in stead of one errour hath made two. For indeed, as it is true, that these words were neuer written by Calixtus: so, of the other side, it is likewise true, they were neuer written by Anacletus: but were manifestly forged and falsified by others that followed afterward: as in my former Replie I haue declared more at large.

Art. 4. Diui. 3.

But it is a world to see, what wiles and shifts these men can finde to beare out error. First (ye say) These words were spoken of the Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons seruing the Priest at Masse vpon solemne Feasts. Pardon mæ, M. Harding, to say the truth. For verily, notwithstanding this solemne tale, it seemeth, you know not what you say. For it may please you to remember, that your Anacletus, whose forged authority ye haue alleged, was Bishop in Rome in the time of S. Peter, shortly vpon the death of Christ, when the Church was euery where vnder persecution, and full of blood. Now, I pray you, who euer told you, either of any office, that your Subdeacons had in the holy Ministerie, or of any great high Holy daies, of Duplex, or magis Duplex, or principall Solemne Feast in the Church of God, in all that time? May we thinke, that the Blessed Virgins, and the Apostles daies were kept high and holy, while the same blessed Virgin and Apostles were yet aliue? Though ye had none other regard, either to God, or to your selfe, yet shame should force you to forese more aduisedly what you say.

But your greatest follie appeareth in the shifting and glosing of these words. For you say, This Calixtus or Anacletus speaketh only of the Priests, the Deacons and the Subdeacons: and neuer a word expresly of the Lay people: and therefore, ye say, we deceiue the vnlearned Reader with a lie. Touching your vncourteous speech, I weigh it none otherwise, but as it is. The truth will be able euermore to beare it selfe. But, that these words of Anacletus, or Calixtus touch not the Lay people, but only the Priests and the Ministers, the verie Glosser himselfe was neuer, either so vnskilfull, or so impudent so to say. For whereas the words be these, Let them all Communicate, vnlesse they will be remoued out of the Church, he setteth thereto this exposition, Hoc antiquum est: Nam hoc hodie relictum videtur arbitrio cuiuslibet: This was the olde maner: For now adaies it is free for euery man to doe therein, what he will.

De Con. Dist. 2. Peralta In Glossa.

The like Decree is found vnder the name of the Apostles Canons: Quicunque fideles ingrediuntur in Ecclesiam, & Scripturas audiunt, non autem perseuerant in Oratione, nec Sanctam Communionem percipiunt, velut qui ordinis perturbationem commouent, ab Ecclesiæ Communione arceri conuenit: As many (not only of the Priests and Ministers, but) of the Faithfull people, as come into the Church, and heare the Scriptures, but continew not out the Praiers, nor receiue the holy Communion, let them be put from the Communion of the Church, as men that worke the breach of Order. Likewise it is noted in the Margin vpon the same

Canon. Apost. Canon. 10.

Canon. Apost. Can. 9. in Margine. same Canons: Omnes olim, qui intererant, Communicabant: In old times all that were present, did Communicate. In the Councell of Antioch it was Decreed thus: Omnes, qui ingrediuntur in Ecclesiam Dei, & Sacras Scripturas audiunt, auersantur autem perceptionem Dominici Sacramenti, &c. Ab Ecclesia abicij oportet, &c. All, that come into the Church of God, and heare the Holy Scriptures, and refuse the receiuing of the Lords Sacrament, let them be put from the Church. These Decrees reach not onely to the Ministers of the Church, but also to the whole people.

Concil. Antiochen. Can 2.

Concil. Aquisgran cap. 70.

Clemens. epi. 2. Clemens, that was Bishop in Rome, as it is thought, next after this Anacletus, saith thus: Tanta in Altario Holocaustla offerantur, quanta populo sufficere debeant: Let so many Loaues be offered at the Altar, as may suffice to serue (not onely the Ministers, but also) the people.

Ambros. in 1. Cor. 11. S. Ambrose saith: Munus oblatum totius populi fit: quia in vno Pane omnes significantur. Per idem enim, quod vnum sumus, de vno Pane omnes sumere oportet: The Oblation offered is made the whole peoples: for that in one Bread all are signified. For in that wee are all one, we must all receiue of one Bread.

Chrysost in 2. Thess. Hom. 4. S. Chrysostome saith vnto the people: Neque nos abundantiùs, vos autem minùs, de Sacra mensa participamus: Sed pariter, & ex æquo illam vtrique degustamus: Neither doe we receiue more, and you lesse of the holy Table: but wee taste thereof equally both together. The like might be alleged out of S. Hierome, S. Augustine, Dionysius, and others.

Anacletus Calixtus.

But forasmuch as ye so bitterly tell vs, that wee misconstrue these words of Anacletus, and deceiue the vnlearned Reader with a Lie, may it therefore please you further to heare, what your owne late Scholasticall Doctors haue written and iudged in this behalfe.

Durandus in Rational. li. 4. cap. 55. Thomas of Aquine saith: In Primitiua Ecclesia, quando magna vigebat deuotio Fidei Christianæ, statutum fuit, vt Fideles quotidiè communicarent: In the Primitiue Church, when great deuotion of the Christian Faith was in strength, it was ordained, that the Faithfull should receiue the Communion euery day. Durandus saith: In Primitiua Ecclesia omnes Fideles quotid. è Communicabant: In the Primitiue Church all the Faithfull daily receiued the Communion.

Hugo Cardin. in Luc. cap. 24. Hugo Cardinalis saith: In Primitiua Ecclesia omnes, quotquot intererant Canoni Missæ, singulis diebus Communicabant. Et, si nollent Communicare, egrediebantur post Offertorium: In the Primitiue Church, as many as were present at the Canon of the Masse, did daily Communicate: and, if they would not, they departed foorth after the Offertorie.

If ye thinke these authorities are not sufficient, Iohannes Cochlæus saith: Omnes olim, tum Sacerdotes, tum Laici, cum Sacrificante Communicabant, sicut ex Canonibus Apostolorum, & ex Libris antiquissimorum Ecclesiæ Doctorum perspicuè cognoscitur. Hic vnicum hac de re Canonem recitabo, qui Calixto adscribitur Peracta, &c. In olde times both all the Priests and all the Lay people, receiued the Communion with the Minister, that had made the Oblation: as it is plainely perceiued by the Canons of the Apostles, and by the Bookes of the ancient Doctours of the Church. One Canon heereof I will allege, written by Calixtus, &c.

Iohan. Cochlæ. contra Musenl. De Sacrificio.

Iudocus Clichthoueus in Canon. Missæ. Likewise saith Iudocus Clichthoueus: In Primitiua Ecclesia Fideles quotidie sumebant Communionem, secundùm illam Calixti Sanctionem, Peracta, &c. In the Primitiue Church the Faithfull receiued the Communion euery daie, according to this Decree of Calixtus, &c.

Here you may see, not onely, that these words are alleged by your owne Doctors, vnder the name of Calixtus, wherein you haue noted so great an error, but also that the same words, by the iudgement of the same Doctors, are thought to pertaine no lesse to the Lay people, then to the Priest.

Now M. Harding, these things considered, I referre the indifferent iudgement hereof to your owne knowledge and conscience, whether of vs two hath deceiued the Reader with a Lie.

The Apology, Chap. 12. Diuision 3.

Moreouer, when the people commeth to the holy Communion, the Sacrament ought to be giuen them in Both kindes: for so both Christ hath commanded, and the Apostles in euery place haue ordained, and all the ancient Fathers and Catholike Bishops haue followed the same. And whoso doth contrarie to this, he (as Gelasius saith) committeth Sacriledge. And therefore wee say that our Aduersaries at this day, who hauing violently thrust out, and quite forbidden the Holy Communion, doe without the word of God, without the Authoritie of anie Ancient Councell, without anie Catholike Father, without anie Example of the Primimitiue Church, yea and without reason also, defend and maintaine their Priuate Masses, and the mangling of the Sacraments, and doe this not only against the plaine expresse Commandement of Christ, but also against al Antiquity, do wickedly therein, and are very Church-robbers.

M. Harding.

Soft and faire, Masters. Yee shew more heat then wit, more stomacke then learning, more anger then reason. Ye say much, and proue little. But say ye, and say againe what ye will: we tell you boldly, that (a) neither Christ euer commanded, (a) nor the Apostles ordeined, (a) nor al the ancient Fathers obserued, that the Sacrament be giuen to the people none otherwise, but vnder both Kindes onely. If Christ had expresly commanded it, the Church (of Rome) had not so long time receiued and kept the vse of one Kinde. The Apostles, and sundry holy Fathers Ministred both Kindes, wee confesse. That the one Kinde was not also by them Ministred, and that it is vtterly vnlawfull, we deme, (b) and the same shall yee neuer be able to proue. Touching this whole point, and how little that ye allege out of Gelasius maketh for you, and concerning Masse not to be omitted for lacke of companie, to Communicate Sacramentally with the Priest: (c) I haue said enough in my answer to your fellow M. Iewell his challenge. Bring ye other stuffe, and better then this, or else all the world will see your halting, and the feeblenesse of your side. That we haue violently thrust out, and quite forbidden the Holy Communion, vnlesse yee meane your owne Schismaticall, mutable, and polluted Communion, if there were any sparke of shame, or hatred of lying in you, ye would neuer impute it vnto vs. God doth know, and the world is not vnwitting, (d) how much, how often, and how earnestly the Catholike Church exhorteth her Children to prepare themselues to receiue their (e) Maker. And though the people of England of late yeers reuorted not commonly thereto, yet the deuotion of Christian folke in this Country of Base Almaign, in France, in Italie, in Spaine, and in sundry other Christian Prouinces is so feruent in frequenting the Holy Communion, as if ye saw it, yee would bee ashamed of your slanderous report. Let wise men and good men iudge whether we be Church-robbers, or ye vnshamefast Liers.

Communion vnder both Kindes not commanded expresly by Christ, nor ordained by the Apostles.

An vnshamefast and slanderous lie.

(a) Vntruths, three together, boldly presumed

(b) To proue a Negatiue, it is a folly. But you shal neuer proue the affirmatiue.

(c) Certainly enough. For in the same two Articles ye haue vttered three-score and foure great Vntruths.

(d) Vntruth, so sensible and so grosse that a man may feele it with his fingers.

(e) Vntruth. No learned Father euer called the Sacrament his God or Maker.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Where nothing is answered, it were not amisse to replie nothing. If M. Harding can only vouchsafe to call vs slanderous Reporters, and Vnshamefast Liers: and the Lords Supper a Schismaticall, mutable, polluted Communion, it is sufficient: the case needeth no farther proofe. To this whole matter M. Harding saith, he hath sufficiently answered M. Iewell. He hath answered, I grant: but how sufficiently, the matter it selfe will declare. Howbeit, he may not in any wise forget, that in the same two short Treaties to M. Iewell, conteining only two and forty little leaues of paper, he hath sent vs ouer and published threescore and foure notable and great Vntruths: whereof I thinke he hath no great cause so much to glorie.

Institution in Both Kindes.

He saith: That the Sacrament should bee deliuered to the people in Both Kindes, neither Christ commanded it, nor the Apostles euer ordeined it. Thus M. Harding saith only because it liketh him thus to say. Yet his owne Catholike Doctours, and the Chiefe Champians of that side say far otherwise. Gerardus Lorichius saith: Ipsius Sacramenti Institutio vult vt omnes vnà manducemus & bibamus: The very Institution of the Sacrament it selfe willeth, that we eat and drinke all together. De Miss publica prouoganda.

And Ruardus Tapper the Deane of Louaine saith thus: Habito respectu ad Sacramentum, eiusque perfectionem, magis conueniret, sub Vtraque specie fieri Communionem, quàm sub Altera tantùm Hoc enim magis consonum est eius Institutioni, & integritati, & refectioni corporali: imò, & exemplo Christi, & Patrum Primitiuæ Ecclesiæ: Consideration had vnto the Sacrament, and to the perfection of the same, it were more conuenient that the Communion were Ministred vnder Both Kindes, then vnder One alone. For thus were more agreable to the Institution, and fulnesse thereof, and to the outward refection of the Body: Yea and to the example both of Christ, and also of the Fathers of the Primitiue Church. Cassander De Viraq; Specie, Pag. 29.

Certainly these words of Christ, Drinke ye all of this: Doe this in my remembrance, are very plaine words of commandement, and Institution. Therefore Chrysostome saith: Et in Pane, & in Calice Christus dixit, Hoc facite in meam Commemorationem: Christ both in the Bread, and also in the Cuppe said, Doe this in remembrance of mee. Chrysost. in 1. Cor. Hom. 27.

Likewise Theophylactus: Tremendus Calix pari cunctis conditione traditus est: The Reuerend Cuppe is in equall maner deliuered to all. And whereas Christ saith, Drinke ye all of this, Paschasius to make the matter the plainer putteth thereto these words: Tam Ministri, quàm reliqui Credentes: As well the Ministers, as the rest of the Faithfull. In like maner S. Augustine saith: Simul hoc sumimus: simul bibimus: quia simul viuimus: We receiue together: we drinke together: because we liue together. Theophylactus 1. Cor. 11. Paschasius. De Con. dist. 2. Quia passim.

Addition. ☞

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. The literall sense of those words, Drinke ye all of this, was none other, then that the Cuppe should be diuided between all the twelue, in such sort, that two M. Harding fol. 34. b.

or three of them ſhould not drinke it vp, as thinking to haue it filled againe for the reſt. But that Peter ſhould ſo drinke, as to leaue ſome for Iohn: And Iohn ſo, as to leaue ſome for Andrew: And ſo euerie man to leaue ſome deale, till the very laſt man had drunke of that Cuppe, &c. The Anſwer. This is a manerly kinde of Diuinitie, and meet to bee noted by M. Harding for maners ſake.

M. Harding 344. b.

M. Harding. Paſchaſius in that place diſputeth of ſpirituall eating or drinking, and ſaith, that as well the Faithfull people as the Miniſters muſt drinke Spiritually of this Cuppe. The Anſwer. O good Reader, how long will M. Harding abuſe thy ſimplicity? Verily Paſchaſius in that place wrote only of the Sacrament, as M. Harding well knoweth. But hee ſaith: Solus Chriſtus eſt qui frangit hunc Panem: It is Chriſt only that breaketh this Bread. Will you therefore ſay, M. Harding, he ſpake not of the Sacrament? The next words following are theſe: Per manus Miniſtrorum diſtribuit credentibus: Chriſt diuided the Cuppe vnto the Faithfull by the hands of the Miniſters. I beſeech you, is this the Miniſtration of the Sacrament? Or what will you call it? Muſt Paſchaſius be forced to make Spirituall Miniſters, Spirituall Hands, Spirituall Cups, Spirituall Receiuers, Spirituall Beleeuers, and all Spirituall for your pleaſure? But Paſchaſius ſaith: Chriſt breaketh this Bread.

Aug. contra literas Petil. lib. 3. cap. 49. Chryſ. in Mat. Homil. 51.

So S. Auguſtine ſaith of the Sacrament of Baptiſme: It is Chriſt that Baptizeth. And Chryſoſtome ſaith: It is not the Prieſt that Baptizeth thee. It is God himſelfe, that holdeth thy head. Shall we therefore ſay, that theſe words belong nothing to the Sacrament of outward Baptiſme, but only to the inward and Spirituall waſhing of the Soule? Verely Paſchaſius is as cleere as the Sunne Beames. Conſider the whole circumſtance of the place. Hee ſpeaketh onely of the Sacrament. His words be euident: Take, and Drinke yee all of this, as well the Miniſters, as the reſt of the Faithfull. Leaue this Vanitie, M. Harding: It is meet for Children. Manlineſſe is more ſeemelie for a Man.

Notwithſtanding any Promiſe of Conſtancie made to the contrarie, yet, I truſt, M. Harding of his courteſie will beleeue either S. Chryſoſtome, or S. Auguſtine, or Theophylact, or Paſchaſius, or Lorichius, or Tapper, or his New Doctours, or the Old, or his owne, or others. Otherwiſe, if he be fully determined to beleeue no man, it is reaſon that no man beleeue him.

Heere haue we Chriſts Word, Chriſts Example, Chriſts Ordinance: The Tradition, Perfection, and Inſtitution of the Sacrament. Now let M. Harding ſhew vs the Authority of any one Ancient Father, either Greeke, or Latine, by whom it may appeare that Chriſt commanded the Sacrament to bee deliuered to the people in One kinde only; and not in Both: Or, that Chriſt appointed One Order of Receiuing the Sacrament for the Prieſt, and another for the people: and it ſhall be ſufficient: we will ſtriue no further.

Perhaps hee will ſay, notwithſtanding Chriſts words bee plaine, yet they are not of force ſufficient to binde vs for euer. For ſo writeth Cardinall Cuſanus touching the ſelfe ſame matter: Scripturæ ad tempus adaptantur, & variè intelliguntur, ita vt vno tempore ſecundum currentem Eccleſiæ ritum exponantur: mutato verò ritu, iterum ſententia mutetur: The Scriptures are applied to the ſtates of diuers times, and ſo are taken in diuers ſenſes: So that at one time they are expounded according to the current order of the Church: but the order of the Church being changed, the ſenſe of the Scripture is likewiſe changed. So S. Auguſtine ſaith of the Heretikes the Manicheis: Expendunt iſta, non in ſtatera æqua Diuinarum Scripturarum, ſed in ſtatera doloſa Conſuetudinum ſuarum: They weigh theſe matters, not in the equall Balance of the Diuine Scriptures, but in the deceitfull Balance of their owne Cuſtomes.

Nicola. Cuſan. Epiſt. 2. ad Bohæmos.

Auguſt. contra Epiſt. Parmenian. li. 3. ca. 2.

Hilar. de Trinitate, lib. 9.

Of the like ſort of Heretikes S. Hilarie ſaith: Qui ea quæ ſcripta ſunt negas, quid reſtat, niſi vt ea quæ non ſcripta ſunt, credas? Seeing thou denieſt the things that be written in the Scriptures, what remaineth there, but that thou muſt beleeue ſuch things as be not written in the Scriptures?

M. Harding Pag. 48. b. Leo Sermon 4. De Quadrageſima.

But where haue theſe men the Inſtitution of their Halfe Communion? Who ordeined it? Who commanded it? What Apoſtle, what ancient Doctour, what holy Father euer vſed it? M. Harding himſelfe was forced to confeſſe, by the report of Leo, that the firſt knowen Deuiſers and Authors of it were the Old Heretikes called the Manicheis. Such is the Inſtitution and Antiquity of their Doctrine. It ſprang firſt of Hereſie, and was founded by Heretikes.

De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Comperimus.

Touching Gelaſius, I haue alreadie in my Former Replie ſaid ſo much as then vnto me ſeemed ſufficient. The words be plaine enough of themſelues, and need no Commentarie: Aut integra Sacramenta percipiant, aut ab integris arceantur: Quia diuiſio uiſio vnius eiuſdemque Myſterij ſine grandi Sacrilegio non poteſt peruenire : Either let them receiue the whole Sacraments (in Both Kinds) or elſe let them bee driuen from the whole. By which wordes of Gelaſius it may appeare that whereſoeuer the Sacrament is Miniſtred in one kind onely, there is onely a peeced, or a Halfe Communion, and not the whole.

Institution in Both Kindes.

Farther M. Harding ſaith: God doth know how much, how often, and how earneſtly the Catholike Church exhorteth her children to prepare themſelues to receiue their maker. D. M. Harding, why ſhould you ſo fondly mocke the World with ſo manifeſt follies? By what words, by what examples erhort you theme When euer ſaid you as Chryſoſtome ſaith to the people: Depart ye hence: ye haue no more right to ſtand heere, then Heathens and Infidels: ye are Wicked. ye are Shameleſſe: ye are Impudent, that ſtand by, and will not Communicate? And if the Catholike Church do ſo often, and ſo earneſtly exhort her children, how is it then that the Pope and his Cardinals do ſo ſeldom Communicate, ſcarcely once thorow the yeere? May we thinke that the Pope and his Cardinals be not the children of the Church?

Chryſo. ad Popul. Antioch. Homil. 61. In Epiſt. ad Epheſ. Homil. 3.

Laſt of al ye ſay, Ye exhort the people to receiue their Maker. I beſeech you, M. Harding, what Scripture, what Father, what Doctour euer taught you thus to ſay? The Sacrament is a Sacrament: it is not God. It is the Bread of our Lord, as S. Auguſtine ſaith: it is not our Lord. It is a creature corruptible: it is not the Maker of Heauen and Earth. Accurſed is hee that giueth the name and glory of God vnto a creature that is no God. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Nolimus quæſo Creatorem cum Creatura confundere : ne illud audiamus, Seruierunt Creaturæ potiùs quàm Creatori : Let vs not confound the Creature and the Creator both together : leſt it be ſaid of vs, They haue honoured a Creature more then their Maker.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 59.

Chry. in Iohan. Homil. 3.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Good words, M. Iewell. Chriſt ſaith, He that eateth mee, ſhall liue for me. Was not he the Maker of Heauen and Earth? If he were, accurſed be he that denieth him ſo to be. The Anſwer. Heereunto, M. Harding, we ſay, Amen. We know that Chriſt is very God of very God But deceiue not your ſelfe. We ſpeake now of the Sacrament of Chriſt, and not of Chriſt. The Sacrament is one thing, and Chriſt is another. We eat Chriſt onely by Faith: we eat the Sacrament only with the mouth of our Body. When Chriſt ſpake theſe wordes: He that eateth me, ſhall liue by me, he ſpake only of himſelfe to bee eaten ſpiritually by Faith: but he ſpake not one word there of the Sacrament. He that knoweth not this, knoweth nothing.

M. Harding 345. b.

But S. Auguſtine, ſaith: The Sacrament is called Life. What then? Yet he ſaith not, The Sacrament is called our Maker. S. Paul ſaith : Petra erat Chriſtus: The Rocke was Chriſt. Yet you may not ſo vnaduiſedly conclude heereof, that the ſame Rocke was the Maker of the World. Howbeit, S. Auguſtine ſaith: The Sacrament of Chriſts *Body was called Life: So he ſaith euen in the ſame place: The Sacrament of Baptiſme was called, Salus, Saluation: And S. VVE affirm, that the Bread and Wine are the Holy & Heauenly Myſteries of the Body & Bloud of Chriſt, and that by them Chriſt himſelfe, being the true Bread of Eternall Life, is ſo preſently giuen vnto vs, as that by Faith we verily receiue his Body and Blood. Yet ſay we not this ſo as though we thought that the Nature and Subſtance of the Bread and Wine is cleerly changed, and goeth to nothing: as many haue dreamed in theſe latter times, and yet could neuer agree among themſelues vpon their owne Dreames. For that was not Chriſts meaning, that the Wheaten Bread ſhould lay apart his owne Nature, and receiue a certaine new Diuinity: but that he might rather Change vs, and (to vſe Theophylactes words) might Transforme vs into his Body. For what can be said more plainly, then that which Ambrose saith: Bread and Wine remaine still the same they were before: and yet are changed into another thing: Or, that which Gelasius saith: The Substance of the Bread, or the Nature of the Wine, ceaseth not to bee: Or, that which Theodoretus saith: After the Consecration the Mysticall Signes do not cast off their owne proper Nature: for they remaine stil in their former Substance, Form and Kind: Or, that which Augustine saith: That which ye see is the Bread and Cup, and so our eies do tell vs: but that which your Faith requireth to bee taught, is this: The Bread is the Body of Christ, and the Cuppe is his Blood: Or that which Origen saith: The bread which is sanctified by the word of God, as touching the materiall Substance thereof, goeth into the Belly, and is cast out into the priuy: Or that which Christ himselfe said, not onely after the blessing of the Cuppe, but also after hee had Ministred the Communion: I will drinke no more of this fruit of the Vine? It is well knowne that the fruit of the Vine is Wine, and not Blood.

M. Harding.

In this Sacrament, after Consecration, the Substance of Bread and Wine being turned into the Substance of the Body, and Blood of Christ, the * outward Formes of Bread and Wine, which remaine, are the Sacraments of holy things, the Body and Blood of Christ.

What is the wee call hee & heauenly Mysteries

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

*Vntruth. No Doctour or Father euer taught such vain follies

Substance, Accidents.

In euery naturall thing, two things are specially to be considered: the Substance, and the Accident, or, as M. Harding calleth it, the outward Forme. For example. In Bread the Materiall thing that feedeth vs, and is changed into the Blood, and nourishment of our Bodies, is called the Substance of the Bread: The Whitenesse, the Roundnesse, the Thicknesse, the Swetnesse, and other the like, that are perceiued outwardly by our senses, are called Accidents. Now, saith M. Harding, forasmuch as the Substance of the Bread and Wine is remoued by Consecration, and for that cause cannot bee the Sacrament: therefore the Accidents and Formes, which remaine, must needs bee thought to bee the Sacraments. And so vpon a false Position, as shall appeare, hee layeth the foundation of all his Doctrine, by the old Rule, I trow that he learned sometimes in his Sophistrie: Ex Impossibili, sequitur quodlibet: Of an Impossibility, ye may conclude what ye list. Euen as aptly and as truly as some haue said: If Christ were not Christ, then Saint Patricke should be Christ.

If M. Harding had alleged either Scripture, or Doctour, or Father, or Councell, or any other Authority, beside his owne, he might happily haue bene beleeued.

Math. 26. Luc. 22. 1. Cor. 10. 1. Cor. 11.

To this whole fansie, gentle Reader, in my Former Reply I haue made a seuerall answer. Verily Christ saith: Non bibam ex hoc fructu Vitis: I will no more drinke (not of these Accidents, but) of this generation, and fruit (and Substance) of the Vine.

S. Paul saith: Panis quem frangimus: (not the Formes, or Accidents, but) the Bread that we breake: And againe: Quoties manducabitis Panem hunc: As often as yee shall eat (not these Accidents, but) this Bread.

Cyprian.

S. Cyprian saith of the same: Panis ex multorum granorum adunatione congestus: Bread moulded and made of many cornes. I doubt not, but M. Harding will confesse, that cornes yeeld Flower and Substance: and not onely Formes and Accidents. S. Augustine calleth the Holy Mysterie, Sacramentum Panis & Vini: The Sacrament (not of Formes and Accidents, as M. Harding saith, but) of Bread and Wine. Cyrillus saith: Credentibus Discipulis fragmenta Panis dedit: Christ gaue vnto his Disciples, beleeuing in him, peeces of Bread, (not peeces of Accidents.)

Aug. de Fide, ad Petr. ca 19. Cyril in Iohan. lib. 4. cap. 24.

But M. Harding hauing in his fantasie remoued the whole Substance of the Bread, in stead thereof hath brought vs in Holy Formes, Holy Shewes, and Holy Accidents: His Accidents be the Mysteries of heauenly things: His Accidents bee the Instruments of Gods Grace: His Accidents be the causes of Remission of Sinne. We breake Accidents: We eat Accidents: We drinke Accidents: We are fed with Accidents: The Substance of our Bodies is increased with Accidents. And, to be short, he worketh all his Miracles by the Power of his Accidents.

M. Harding.

Why be ye ſo loth to ſpeak as the Church ſpeaketh, that in this bleſſed Sacrament we receiue the Body of Chriſt? Why had ye rather ſay after a * ſtrange maner, that by Bread and Wine Chriſt himſelfe is ſo preſently giuen vnto vs, as that by Faith we verily receiue his Body and his Blood?

Substance, Accidents In, & By.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

I neuer thought it had bene ſo great an Hereſie to ſpeake as the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and the Learned Doctors of the Church haue ſpoken before vs. S. Paul ſaith: Conſepulti ſumus cum Chriſto Per Batiſmum in mortem: Wee are buried together with Chriſt By Baptiſme vnto Death. S. Hierome ſaith: Per Aquam Baptiſmi, vel Per Ignem Spiritus ſancti, Æterni illius Panis Corpus efficitur: By the Water of Baptiſme, or By the Fire of the Holy Ghoſt, he is made the Body of the Euerlaſting Bread. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Habes Chriſtum in præſenti, Per Fidem: In preſenti, Per Baptiſmatis Sacramentum: In Preſenti, Per Altaris Cibum & Potum: Thou haſt Chriſt in Preſence, By Faith: In Preſence, By the Sacrament of Baptiſme: In Preſence, By the Meat and Drinke of the Altar. S. Cyril ſaith: Corporaliter Filius Per Benedictionem Myſticam nobis vnitur, vt Homo: The Sonne of God By the Myſticall Bleſſing is vnited vnto vs as Man. S Hylary ſaith: Chriſtus eſt in nobis Per Sacramentorum Myſterium: Chriſt is in vs By the Myſtery of the Sacraments.

* Vntruth. For this phraſe is vſed commonly of the Ancient Fathers, as ſhall appeare. Roman. 6. Coloſſ. 2. Hieronym. De Corp. & Sanguine Chriſti. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 50. Cyril. in Iohan. Lib. 11. ca. 27. Hilarius de Trinit. lib 8. Aug. de Baptiſmo contra Donatiſt li. 3. Cap. 10.

And, leſt M. Harding ſhould thinke to take any great aduantage by theſe words thus vttered, as he, and others of his ſide haue often done, S. Auguſtine in moſt plaine wiſe expoundeth the ſame: Si ad ipſas res viſibiles, quibus Sacramenta tractantur animum conferamus, quis neſciat eas eſſe corruptibiles? Si autem ad id quod Per illas res agitur, quis non videat, non poſſe corrumpi? If we behold the Viſible Creatures, (as the Bread, the Wine, the Water) wherein the Sacraments are Miniſtred, who ſeeth not that they be corruptible? But if we conſider the things that are wrought thereby, who ſeeth not, that they cannot be corrupted?

Now iudge thou, (good Chriſtian Reader) how Childiſhly theſe quarrels be ſought againſt vs without cauſe; and what Myſticall Catholike eares M. Harding hath, that cannot abide the phraſes and ſpæches of the Ancient Fathers.

M. Harding.

What preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament do the Defenders acknowledge.

If a man ſhould preſſe you with your own words, and demand what maner of Preſence ye teach, affirming Chriſt himſelfe preſently to be giuen: I weene, yee would bee found halting. For how ſay yee, if Chriſt be preſently giuen vnto vs by Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, then is Chriſt preſent. If he be preſent, which ye muſt needs grant, tell vs further, how is he preſent: According to the Subſtance of his Body, or by Grace, or according to the Maieſty of his Godhead? The firſt, what ſhifts ſoeuer ye ſee, yee will not grant. And therefore is your owne Apoſtle Martin Luther at foule defiance with your Maſters, Zwinglius, Oecolampadius, Caluin, and you, and ſo be his Diſciples, Ioachimus Weſtphalus, Epinus, Pomeran, Heſhuſius, Brentius, Illyricus, and many others, as ye know. If ye will ſay he is preſent by his Grace, ſo is he Preſent with all good men: and that not only when the Sacrament is miniſtred, but alſo at all other times. Againe, how can ye make good, that by Faith we receiue his Body & Bloud? By Faith we receiue Grace, and the Merits of his Death ſuffered in his Body with ſhedding of his Bloud. But the Body and Bloud it ſelfe, that is, the very (a) Subſtance of his Body & Bloud: tel vs how by Faith, (a) properly and truly to ſpeake, as who ſhould ſay, by Faith made preſent, we receiue it? Furthermore, (b) what haue ye to anſwer to this queſtion? If we receiue the Body and Blood of Chriſt verily by Faith, (for ſo ye ſay) we demand whether we receiue the ſame by Faith only without the Body, or with the office of our Body? If the Office of our Body be required to the receiuing of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, as Chriſt himſelfe (c) certainly meant (for elſe how obeied the Diſciples his commandement, to whom he ſaid at his Supper, Take and eat, this is my Body: Likewiſe of the Cuppe, Take and drinke, which cannot be done, but by the Seruice of the Body?) hereof then it followeth, that his Body is verily preſent. Now, that it is not receiued by Faith onlie, thus we proue it by your own Doctrine: (d) It is ſo receiued, as it is preſent: but it is Preſent by Bread and Wine (as ye ſay) Ergo, it is receiued by Bread and Wine. To conclude, if by Bread and Wine, then not by Faith onely. Will ye giue me leaue to ſay what I thinke of you? Verily it ſeemeth by your vaine iangling, that, as S. Paul ſaith of ſuch other like you, ye vnderſtand not what ye ſpeake, nor whereof ye affirme.

The Body of Chriſt not receiued by Faith onely.

In what ſenſe we may truly ſay, Chriſt is either Preſent with vs, or abſent from vs, the matter is not doubtfull, or dangerous to be anſwered, vnleſſe M. Harding haue forgotten the Articles of his Creed. For thus we are taught to beleeue: Chriſt is Aſcended into Heauen, and ſitteth at the Right hand of God. Which Article S. Auguſtine expoundeth thus: Noli dubitare, ibi nunc eſſe hominem Chriſtum Ieſum, vnde venturus eſt: memoriterque recole, & fideliter tene Chriſtianam Confeſſionem, Quoniam Reſurrexit à mortuis: Aſcendit ad Cœlum: Sedet ad Dextram Patris: nec aliunde quàm inde venturus

So ſaith the holy Father and Martyr Vigilius: Dei Filius, ſecundùm humanitatem ſuam, receſſit a nobis: ſecundùm diuinitatem ait, Ecce, ego vobiſcum ſum vſque ad conſummationem Sæculi: The Sonne of God, according to his manhood, is gone from vs: But according to his Godhead he ſaith, Behold, I am with you vntill the end of the World. And againe: Et nobiſcum eſt, & non eſt nobiſcum: quia quos reliquit Humanitate, non deſeruit Diuinitate: Chriſt is with vs, and yet he is not with vs: For whom he left touching his Humane Nature, or his Body, touching his Godhead hee left them not. And againe: Verbum vbique eſt: Caro autem eius vbique non eſt: The Word (or Godhead of Chriſt) is euery where: but his Fleſh, or Body, is not euery where. So ſaith S. Cyril: Etſi corpore abſuero, præſens tamen ero vt Deus: Although I be abſent as touching my Body, yet as God I will be preſent.

Cyril. in Iohan. Lib. 10. ca. 7.

And, to leaue an infinite number of other learned and Catholike Fathers that haue written the like, Origen ſaith thus: Secundùm Diuinitatis Naturam non peregrinatur à nobis: peregrinatur ſecundùm diſpenſationem Corporis quod ſuſcepit: Chriſt according to his Godhead, is not a ſtranger to vs: but he is a ſtranger according to the diſpenſation of the Body that he receiued.

Thus is Chriſt both Abſent, and Preſent: Preſent in Maieſty, Abſent in Body. And in this ſenſe Chryſoſtome ſaith: Semper nobiſcum eſt Chriſtus: neque enim, niſi nobiſcum eſſet Chriſtus, ſupereſſet Eccleſia: Chriſt is euermore Preſent with vs: For vnleſſe hee were Preſent, the Church of God could not continue.

Faith Eateth.

But M. Harding ſaith: How can ye make good, that by Faith we receiue his Body and Blood? By Faith we receiue Grace, &c. This queſtion ſhould rather haue beene demanded of S. Auguſtine, and of other learned Doctors, and ancient Fathers of the Church. How could S. Auguſtine ſay, Quid paras dentem & ventrem? Crede, & manducaſti: What prepareſt thou thy tooth and thy belly? Beleeue and thou haſt eaten. How could Tertullian ſay, Chriſtus auditu deuorandus eſt: intellectu ruminandus eſt: & Fide digerendus eſt? Chriſt muſt bee deuoured by hearing: chewed by vnderſtanding: digeſted by Faith? How could Origen ſay, Sanguis Teſtamenti infuſus eſt in corda noſtra? The Blood of the Teſtament is powred into our hearts? How could S. Cyprian ſay, Eſus huius Carnis eſt quædam auiditas, & quoddam deſiderium manendi in Chriſto: Quod eſt eſca Carni, hoc eſt Animæ Fides: Non dentes ad mordendum acuimus, ſed Fide ſincera Panem Sanctum frangimus? The eating of this Fleſh is a certaine greedineſſe, and a certaine deſire to tarry in Chriſt: That meat is vnto our Fleſh, the ſame is Faith vnto our Soules: We ſharpen not our teeth to bite with hall: but with pure Faith we breake this Holy Bread? To bee ſhort, how could S. Auguſtine ſay, Credere in Chriſtum, hoc eſt manducare Panem Viuum? To beleeue in Chriſt, that is the eating of the Bread of life? And againe: Nolite parare fauces, ſed cor: Prepare not your mouthes (to eat of this Bread) but prepare your hearts. To theſe and other like ancient Catholike Fathers M. Harding ſhould haue ſaid, How can ye make good, that by Faith we receiue Chriſts Body and Blood? Thus they witneſſe: Thus they write: Thus they ſay: and therefore, vnleſſe M. Harding can finde vntruth in their words, they make it good.

Tertul. de Reſurrectione.

Cypr. de Cœna Domini.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 26.

But to force onward his matter he ſaith: Properly and truely to ſpeake, how can wee eat Chriſts Body by Faith? Were it might haue pleaſed M. Harding to remember that theſe phraſes, To Eat Chriſt: To Drinke Chriſt: To Digeſt Chriſt, To be fed with Chriſt: To dwell in Chriſt: To be cladde with Chriſt: To be graft in Chriſt: and other the like, are not plaine, ordinary, vſuall, and common ſpeeches: but Myſtically and couertly vttered vnder a Figure: thereby to giue vs to vnderſtand, that Chriſt is our ſpirituall Meat: our ſpirituall Drinke: our ſpirituall Suſtenance: our ſpirituall Houſe: our ſpirituall Robe: and our ſpirituall Stocke. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Niſi manducaueritis ducaueritis Carnem Filij Hominis, & Sanguinem biberitis, non habebitis Vitam in vobis. Facinus, vel Flagitium videtur iubere. Figura ergo est, Præcipiens Passionis Domini esse communicandum, & suauiter atque vtiliter recondendum in memoria, quod pro nobis Caro eius Crucifixa, & vulnerata sit: Vnlesse ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drinke his Blood, ye shall haue no Life in you. He seemeth by these words, to command vs to do an horrible wickednesse. (For it is an horrible matter to eat Mans Flesh, or to drinke Mans Blood.) Therefore this is a Figure (or maner of speech) commanding vs to be partakers of Christs passion, and comfortably to lay vp in our mind, that his flesh was crucified and wounded for our sakes. So saith Gratian, touching the same: Quidam non improbabiliter exponũt, Carnis & Sanguinis veritatem, ipsam earundem rerum efficientiam, id est, Remissionem Peccatorum: Touching these words, The Truth of Christs Flesh and blood, some man not vnaptly vnderstand thereby, the effect and force of Christs Flesh and Blood, that is to say, The Remission of our Sinnes. And so S. Augustine saith: Lauerunt Stolas suas in Sanguine Agni, hoc est, in Gratia Dei per Christum: They washe their coates in the Blood of the Lambe, that is to say, in the Grace of God through Christ. This Grace flowing from Christs Body vpon the Crosse, and giuen to the Faithfull in the Ministration of the holy Mysteries, oftentimes beareth the name of Christs Body, and is the ground and substance of the Sacrament: And whosoeuer is partaker of this Grace, is also partaker of Christs Body. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Cùm essent Omnibus Communia Sacramenta, non Communis erat omnibus Gratia, quæ est Virtus Sacramentorum: Whereas the Sacraments were common to all, yet the Grace thereof was not common to all. And that is the power and strength of the Sacraments.

Ambroſ. de Sacram. l. 6. 1. c. 1.

Here M. Harding once againe moueth a very needlesse question. We demand (saith he) whether we receiue the same Body of Christ by Faith onely, without our Body, or with the Office of our Body. Any child might soone be able to assoile this riddle. Rabanus Maurus saith, as it is alleged before, Sacramentum ore percipitur: Virtute verò Sacramenti interior homo satiatur: The Sacrament is receiued with the bodily mouth: but with the vertue of the Sacrament (which is the Body of Christ) the Inner man (that is, not the Body, but the Soule) is filled. So saith Augustine: Cùm videbitis Filium Hominis ascendentem, vbi erat prius, certè vel tunc videbitis, quia non eo modo, quo putatis, erogat Corpus suum: certè vel tunc intelligetis, quia gratia eius non consumitur morsibus: When yee shall see the Sonne of Man ascending thither, where he was before, then at the least, yee shal see that he giueth not his Body in such sort, as you imagine: Then shall you vnderstand that his Grace is not consumed with the bit of mouth. Againe he saith: Qui manducat intus, non foris: qui manducat in Corde, non qui premit dente: Hee that eateth Christs Body inwardly, not that eateth (the Sacrament) outwardly: He that eateth the Body of Christ it selfe in his heart, not that presseth (the Sacrament) with his tooth.

Rabanus Maurus, Lib. 1. Cap. 31.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 27.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 26.

M. Harding argueth further, Christs Body is so receiued, as it is present: But it is present by Bread and Wine (ye say): Ergo, it is receiued by Bread and Wine: To conclude, if by Bred and Wine, then not by Faith only. If M. Harding had better considered the Rules of his Old Sophistry, he might soone haue seene the wants and deformities of this reason. Amongst children it is called Ignoratio Elenchi: which is the simplest Fallax of all the rest.

It is trew, that of our part, it is not either our hand, or our mouth, but Faith onely, that receiueth the Body of Christ: but the same Body of Christ is offered and represented vnto our Faith by meane of the Sacraments. We speake of such instruments of receiuing, as are of our selfe, and be within vs: M. Harding answereth of the Sacraments, that be externall Instruments, and are wholly without vs. So in Baptisme, notwithstanding we haue Christ present of our part Onely by Faith, yet S. Augustine saith, as it is said before, Habemus Christum in Præsenti per Baptismatis Sacramentum: We haue Christ present by the Sacrament of Baptisme. Thus is Christ present vnto vs: Of his part, Onely by his grace: Of our part, Onely by our Faith: By the Sacraments, Onely as by meane of outward Instruments, to moone our senses. This light and childish errour, I haue said before, is called Ignoratio Elenchi, and therefore seemeth to proceed of ignorance. M. Harding should haue better examined the force of his arguments, before hee thus suddenly sent them abroad.

Touching the matter it selfe, it is not the Bodily mouth, but Faith alone, that receiueth and embraceth Christs Body. S. Augustine saith: Panis iste Interioris Hominis quærit esuriem. Qui credit in eum, manducat: This Bread requireth the hunger of the Inner man. He that beleeueth in him, eateth his Body.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 26.

This

Certaintie of Doctrine.

This is no iangling, as you ſay, M. Harding: It is the ancient Catholike Doctrine of the Church of God. Wee be well aſſured of it, and know certainely what we ſay. But touching the certainety of your Doctrine in this point, I haue briefely touched it in my Former Reply, ſo much, as I then thought might ſeeme ſufficient. Some of you hold, That Chriſts Body paſſeth downe into the ſtomake: Some ſay, That it entereth onely into the Mouth, and goeth no further: Some other ſay, Quàm citò Species teruntur dentibus, tam citò in Cœlum rapitur Corpus Chriſti: As ſoone as the Formes of the Bread be grated with the teeth, ſtraightway the Body of Chriſt is caught vp into Heauen. Another of you ſaith: A Mouſe eateth the body of Chriſt. Another ſaith: Nay, a Mouſe cannot eat it. Peter Lombard, the grand Maſter of all your Schoole, is pitiouſly confounded in the caſe, and cannot imagine, poore man, what thing it ſhould be, that the Mouſe eateth. For after he had himſelfe moued the queſtion, Quid igitur ſumit Mus, vel quid Manducat? What is it then that the Mouſe receiueth, or what eateth it? He anſwereth, Deus Nouit: Now, God knoweth: (As for my part I cannot tell.)

Such be your Doctors, M. Harding, ſuch is your Doctrine. Therefore to conclude with your owne words, It appeareth by your agreement and your anſwers, ye vnderſtand not the things ye ſpeake of, but both affirme and denie, ye know not what.

M. Harding.

As ye proceed forth, ye giue warning to your Readers, not to take you ſo, as though you held with Tranſubſtantiation. And there ye ſpeake thereof as beſt becommeth your ſcoffing ſpirit, calling it a dreame of men of latter times, wherof they could neuer yet agree within themſelues. By which words your eloquence hath ſet forth your ſpight & lying at once. For albeit the terme of Tranſubſtantiation be (a) of no greater antiquity, then the Councel of Lateran vnder Innocentius the third, where it was by the holy Ghoſt and the Fathers there deuiſed, as very fit for opening of the Truth impugned by the Berengarians: yet is the Doctrine therof no leſſe ancient, then the Goſpel it ſelfe. For maugre the malice of the Diuel, and of all the Sacramentaries, the Old truth ſhal preuaile, by which we are taught, that which was Bread, by the Myſtical bleſſing to be (b) made Chriſts Body: and that which was Wine, to be made his Blood, as I haue other wheres ſufficiently declared. And the Church hath (c) alwaies hereupon perfectly accorded, touching the Subſtance; though certaine Schoolemen in the Scholaſticall Diſputations, where oftentimes victory is ſought, and Faith not impugned, about diſcuſsion of ſome ſchoole point, haue without preiudice of our beleefe diſagreed.

Tranſubſtantiation.

(a) Marke this Antiquity. This Councell was holden twelue hundred and fifteene yeeres after Chriſt.

(b) As in a Myſterie, or Sacrament; but not in Subſtance. Otherwiſe it is a great vntruth.

(c) Vntruth manifeſt; as ſhall appeare.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

As for the ſcoffes, and ſpights, and lies, yée ſpeake of, M. Harding, let him haue them, that hath beſt deſerued them. Then verily, without great wrong, you cannot loſe them.

Touching your new Fantaſie of Tranſubſtantiation, Whether it be a dreame, or no, and whether the dreamers of it themſelues were euer yet able rightly to expound their owne dreame: it appeareth partly by your own Confeſſion. Ye grant, The name and terme thereof was neuer knowne or heard of in all the World, vntill your late Councell of Laterane, holden in Rome vnder Pope Innocentius the Third, in the yéere of Lord 1215. in the time of King Iohn, the King of England, and neuer before. Then did your ſtrange Doctrine and new Diuinity, touching this Article, firſt begin. So long the Church of God was able well to ſtand without your Tranſubſtantiation.

Tranſubſtantiation New, and doubtfull.

And albeit ye tell vs, Notwithſtanding the newneſſe of the name, yet neuertheleſſe the Doctrine thereof hath ſtill continued in the Church, and hath beene euermore receiued and confeſſed of all the Faithfull; and that maugre the malice of the Diuel, and all the Sacramentaries, it is as ancient as the Goſpel, or as Chriſt himſelfe: Yet of the other ſide ye confeſſe plainely, that for the ſpace of twelue hundred yéeres and more, no man wiſt, by what name to call it.

But forasmuch as you thinke it lawfull for you to auouch and affirme, what you liſt, true or falſe, without controlement: whereas ye ſay, This late Faith of yours is as ancient as the Goſpell, know you, that ſome of the beſt learned of your owne ſide haue ſaid, It is a new point in Religion: and therefore not ſo ancient as you ſéeme to make it: Some others ſay: It is a Doubtfull concluſion: and therefore no Faith at all. D. Tonſtall thereof ſaith thus, De modo, quo id fieret, fortaſſe ſarius erat, Curioſum quenque ſuę relinquere Coniecturę: ſicut liberum fuit ante Concilium Lateranum: Of the maner and meane, how this might bee (whether by Tranſubſtantiation, or otherwiſe) perhaps it had beene better to leaue euery man that would be curious, to his owne coniecture: as before the Councel of Laterane it was left at liberty. You ſay, It is as ancient as the Goſpell. D. Tonſtal ſaith, It is but new, and came in twelue hundred yeeres and more, after the Goſpell. You ſay, It is the Catholike Faith. D. Tonſtal ſaith, It is a Coniecture or a Gheſſe (which differeth not much from a dreame) and that before the ſaid late Councel of Laterane, no man was bound to beleeue it. And heere it may pleaſe you to conſider indifferently with your ſelfe: If it were left at liberty, as D. Tonſtall ſaith, for for any man, either to receiue it, or to refuse it, as he thought good, how could it then bee the Catholike faith? If it were the Catholike faith, as you say, And that maugre the malice of the Diuell, how then could it so many hundred yeres be left at Liberty?

Transubstantiatiõ New and doubtfull.

Heereof ye say, ye haue written sufficiently otherwheres. All this I grant: your Bookes are knowen. Howbeit, if you would haue written no more but Truth, ye might haue saued much time, and spared some paper. But if it shall not mislike you once againe more aduisedly to view the same, ye shall find in the very first Diuision therof three great vntruths together, all within the space of fourteene lines.

Now, whether your fantasie of Transubstantiation be a Dreame or no, by the Constancy and Certainty thereof, and by the agreement of your Doctours, that founded it first, it may appeare. Petrus Lombardus, the onely Generall of all this Campe, heereof vseth these speeches: Quibusdam ita videtur: Quidam dicunt: Quidam tradunt: Quidam concedunt: Alij putauerunt, Substantiam ibi Panis & Vini remanere: Some men iudge thus; Some say thus: Some haue written thus: Some grant this: Some others haue thought thus: that the very Substance of the Bread and Wine remaineth still. Heere is a strange agreement of learned men, specially in a case of the Catholike Faith. But hereto what saith Peter Lombard himselfe, that taketh vpon him, as a Iudge, to determine these doubts? How is hee resolued? Or, how agreeth hee in iudgement with himselfe? His answer is this: Sed hæc quæritur qualis sit illa Conuersio, An Formalis, An Substantialis, An alterius generis, definire non sufficio: If a question were mooned, what manner of Conuersion or change this is: Whether it be in Forme or in Substance, or of some other sort, I am not able to discusse it. Here we may see, the blind leadeth the blind. He that setteth himselfe before al the rest, and would be taken for a guide, knoweth not where to set his own foot. Gabriel Biel saith: Quomodo sit ibi Corpus Christi, vtrum per conuersionem alicuius in ipsum, an sine conuersione incipiat esse Corpus Christi cum Pane, manentibus Substantia, & Accidentibus Panis, non inuenitur expressum in Canone Bibliæ: How the Body of Christ is there, whether it be by changing of something into it, Or Christs Body begin to be there together with the Bread, both the Substance, and the Accidents of the Bread remaining still without changing, it is not found expresst in the Canon of the Bible. I leaue Innocentius, Scotus, and sundry others of your Scholasticall Doctours, with their doubtfull Dreames and ghesses to like purpose.

Sent. 4. dist. 11. Sic autem &c.

Gabriel in Can. non. lect. 40.

Whether these be Dreames or no, I leaue to you, M. Harding, to consider. Verily Innocentius 3. saith: Fuerunt, qui dicerent, quòd, licut post Consecrationem vera Panis remanent Accidentia, ita Panis remanet vera Substantia: There were some that said, that, as after Consecration there remaine the very Accidents or Formes of Bread, so likewise the very Substance of the same Bread remaineth still. And Cardinal Cusanus saith: Quidam veteres Theologi intellexisse reperiuntur, Panem non Transubstantiari, sed superuestiri nobiliori Substantia: Certaine of the ancient Diuines are found of this minde, that the Bread in the Sacrament is not Transubstantiate or changed in Nature, but remaineth still, and is clothed with another Substance, more noble then it self. This was the iudgement of sundry the Fathers, best learned in Diuinity: and this same iudgement Durandus, although he himselfe hold it not, yet he will not haue it in any wise to bee condemned.

Nicol. Cusanus Excitationum lib. 6.

Now, M. Harding, if you dissemble not, but beleeue constantly, as you say, then cannot these things stand, without preiudice of your beleefe. For Faith built vpon vncertainty, is no faith at all.

M. Harding.

Theophylact contrary to these defenders.

But Lord what meant ye to alledge Theophylact and S. Ambrose, whose Doctrine is so contrary to yours, as light is to darknesse? Theophylact expounding these words of Christ in S. Iohn, As the liuing Father hath sent me, euen so liue I by the Father, and he that eateth me, shall liue by me, saith thus; Doest thou not hear a dreadful saying? We eat not pure God, for he is vntouchable and vnbodily. Neither can he be comprehended with eies nor teeth. Neither eat we the flesh of a pure man; for that can profit nothing at al. But now that God hath vnited vnto himselfe Flesh after an vnspeakable cõtemperament, the flesh is also become life-making. Not for that it passed away into the Nature of God, beware of that; but after the likenes of fiery iron, which abideth iron, and sheweth the operation of fire, euen so (quoth he) the flesh of our Lord abiding flesh, is lifemaking as being the flesh of God the word. Then as (saith he) I liue by the Father, who is life, so he that eateth me, shall liue by me, being tempered with me, as also being transelemented into me, who haue power to viuificate or giue life. Which last words your own Doctor Oecolampadius hath thus turned, Nam quodammodo miscetur, & transelementatur in me, qui viuificare potest, corrupting the second Doctrine of the writer with his forged * Quodammodo, which hee found not in the Greeke there placed, and breaking the congruity of the Latine speech, by putting that in the third person, that ought to be in the first. If faith wrought all this matter, then after your meaning, might we eat God, which Theophylact denieth. Hee saith, hee that eateth Christs flesh, is tempered together with him, and transelemented into him, so as hee is made one Body with him, as Cyrillus expoundeth the place of S. Paul to the Ephesians, where he saith, that we be Concorporalis, that is to say, of one Body with Christ. And an other where, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones.

This similitude of firy iron quite ouerthroweth the whole fantasie of Transubstantiation.

* Vntruth, presumed onely of ignorance. For Quodammodo is in the text. Ἀναμεμίχθαι καὶ μεταστοιχειοῦσθαι.

Theophylact. To eat God.

Of Theophylacts authority, wee neuer made any great account. Hee is but a very late Writer, in compariſon of the ancient Fathers. For the moſt part of that hee writeth, he is but an abridger of Chryſoſtome. He writeth againſt the Church of Rome, ſtoutly maintaining a knowen hereſie, concerning the Proceeding of the holie Ghoſt. Notwithſtanding in this place we alleged his words to good purpoſe. For, as hee ſaith We are tranſelemented or Tranſnatured and changed into Chriſt, euen ſo, and none otherwiſe, we ſay, The Bread is Tranſelemented or changed into Chriſts Body. But notwithſtanding this change we remain ſtil in Subſtance as we were before: Therefore we ſay, Notwithſtanding the like change, The Subſtance of the bread in like manner remaineth ſtill.

But what fanſie came in your head, M. Harding, thus to allege, and ſo vehemently to force this place of Theophylact? What one Word ſpeaketh he, either of your Tranſubſtantiation, or of your Reall preſence, or of your Corporal and Fleſhly eating? Verily, as by any his expreſſe words, he nothing aideth you, ſo by his example of Firie iron, hee ſeemeth quite to ouerthrow you. For, if ye compare the Sacrament with a peece of Burning yron, (which neuertheleſſe was not Theophylacts meaning: and therefore ye are therein much deceiued) then, as the iron, although it be firie, yet notwithſtanding in Nature and Subſtance is iron ſtill: Euen ſo the Bread, although it be made the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, and ſo the Inſtrument of the grace of God, yet that notwithſtanding in Nature and Subſtance is Bread ſtill.

Heere, leſt you giuing ouer your Tranſubſtantiation, as knowing it to bee onely a late found fantaſie, ſhould hope neuertheleſſe by this example of firie iron to eſtabliſh your Reall Preſence, and to ſay, that as the fire is Really and indeed in the iron, ſo the Bodie of Chriſt is indeed, and Really in the Sacrament: It may pleaſe you to call to minde, that in the holy learned Fathers, the ſame example, and like forme of ſpeech, is vſed alſo of the Sacrament of Baptiſme. In the Councell of Nice it is written thus: Vides Aquam: Cogita de virtute Dei, quæ latet in Aqua. Cogita, Aquam eſſe plenam ignis Diuini: Thou ſeeſt the Water: Thinke thou of the power of God, that lieth in the Water: Thinke thou that the Water is full of Heauenly Fire. Yet, I trow, ye will not haue vs beleeue, as an Article of our Faith, that this fire, whereby is meant the Blood of Chriſt, is indeede and Really in the Water.

Concil. Nicen. πλήρη τὸ θεῖον πυρὸς ἐστὶν τὸ ὕδατος.

These, and ſuch other the like, may not alwaies bee taken, as phraſes of preciſe truth: but rather, as Amplifications, or heats of ſpeech, the better to ſtirre vp, and to enflame the minds of the Hearers. And in this ſort and ſenſe, to leaue other authorities, Hoſius, your owne Doctour, ſaith: Opera noſtra reſperſa ſunt ſanguine Chriſti: Our works be ſprinkled with the Blood of Chriſt. So ſaith Pope Innocentius 3. Virtutes noſtræ Crucis Chriſti Sanguine Purpurantur: Our Vertues are died as redde as Purple, in the Blood of the Croſſe of Chriſt.

Hoſius in Conf. Petricouien. cap. 48.

Innocen. De Myſteriis Miſſ. li. 2.

Thus onely, M. Harding, and none otherwiſe the holy Fathers ſay, The Bread of the holy Myſteries, and the Water of Baptiſme are full of fire.

Further, Theophylact ſaith: The Body of Chriſt is Eaten: But the Godhead is not Eaten: becauſe it is vntouchable, and vncomprehenſible vnto our ſenſes. Heereof you would ſeeme to reaſon thus: If Faith wrought all this matter, then might we Eat God. For by Faith wee beleeue in God.

Pſalm. 33. 1 Pet. 2.

Aug. De Verb. Domin. ſecund. Luc. Serm. 29.

Aug. Conf. li. 1. Art. 8. Dini. 16

First, touching the Eating of God, God himſelfe ſaith: Guſtate & videte, quòd ſuauis eſt Dominus: Taſte and ſee, that the Lord is delectable. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Panis eſt, & Panis eſt, & Panis eſt: Deus Pater, Deus Filius, & Deus Spiritus Sanctus: It is Bread, It is Bread, & It is Bread: God the Father, God the Sonne, and God the Holy Ghoſt. Againe he ſaith: Deus Panis intus eſt animæ meæ: God is the Inward Bread of my ſoule. Therefore it is not ſo thorowly and vndoubtedly true, that you ſay, The nature of God cannot be eaten.

Notwithſtanding, for ſparing of words and time heerein, I will refer you to my Former Replie. There ſhall you find this whole Obiection fully anſwered.

You ſay, Theophylacts reaſon ſtandeth thus: God cannot be Eaten, becauſe he cannot be comprehended, either with eies, or with teeth. But Chriſts body may bee eaten. Therefore it muſt follow in the Concluſion, that with our eies we may ſee it, and with our teeth wee may receiue it. Heere would I faine learne of you, M. Harding, When ye ſaw Chriſts Body viſible in the Sacrament with your eies, or when ye preſſed it with your teeth. If your teeth can receiue it, why ſaith S. Auguſtine: Quid paras Dentem & Ventrem? Why prepareſt thou thy Tooth and thy Belly? If your Bodily eie can ſee it, why ſay you, It is Inuiſible? If it be Inuiſible, how is it ſeene? If it be ſeene, how is it Inuiſible? It appeareth, that either either Theophylact the Maister, or you the Scholar are deceiued, or one of you vnderstandeth not the others meaning. Certainly, as Christs Body is seene in the Sacrament, so is it Eaten in the Sacrament. But it is not Really or Fleshly seene: Therefore it is not Really or Fleshly Eaten.

To eat God.

To auoid errour herein, it behoueth vs to vnderstand, that To eat God, is to haue the fruition of the Diuine Nature, and to be incorporate into God. But the Maiestie of God so far surmounteth the capacity of man, that as he is in himselfe in Nature and Godhead, no mortall creature is able to conceiue him, but only in the face and sight of Iesus Christ the Sonne of God. Therefore S. Paul saith: Christus est Splendor Gloriæ, & Character Substantiæ Dei: Christ is the brightnesse of the Glory, and the expresse Image of the Substance of God. Hebr. 1.

S Augustine saith: Tu quomodò contingis Deum? Quia Verbum Caro factum est, & habitauit in nobis: How doest thou touch God? (He answereth) Because the Word became Flesh and dwelt in vs. Againe he saith: Si Christus sic veniret, vt Deus, non agnosceretur: If Christ came so, as he is God, no man could know him. S. Gregory saith: Dominus murus nobis non esset, si forinsecùs non fuisset. Intus nos non protegeret, si exteriùs non appareret: Our Lord were no wal vnto vs, if he had not been in the Forme of Man: He could not inwardly defend vs, if he had not outwardly appeared. So saith Dionysius: Si cupimus Communionem habere cum Deo, oportet nos in Diuinissimam illius vitam, quam egit in Carne, intueri: If we desire to haue Communion with God, wee must behold that Heauenly life, that he lead in the Flesh. Thus, as God is God in Maiestie, and in himselfe, wee vnderstand him not, wee conceiue him not, wee know him not: that is to say, we haue no fruition of him, we eat him not. Therefore S Augustine saith: Iesum Christum Secundùm id, quod erat Verbum apud Deum, Paruuli non capiunt. Quomodò ergo capiunt, qui lac capiunt? Iesum Christum, inquit, & hunc Crucifixum, Suge, quod pro te factus est: & trescs ad id, quod est: Little ones vnderstand not Iesus Christ, according to that hee was the Word with the Father. How then doe they receiue him, that receiue milke? S. Paul saith, they receiue Iesus Christ Crucified. Sucke that thing, that he was made for thee: and thou shalt grow to that he is.

Aug. in Psal. 119.

Thus in the holy Mysteries there is presented vnto vs, not the Diuine Nature of Christ, whereby he is Equall to the Father: But his Death and Humility, whereby he abased himselfe, and was made equall vnto vs. This is the Spirituall Meat and Drinke and the only feeding of the Soule. Thereof S Paul saith: As often as yee shall eat of this Bread, and drinke of this Cup, ye shall publish (not the diuine Nature or Godhead, but) the Lords Death vntill he come So saith Hesychius: Comedimus hunc Cibum, sumentes eius memoriam Passionis: We eat this Food, receiuing the memory (not of his glory, but) of his Passion. So saith S. Ambrose: Quia Morte Domini liberati sumus, huius rei memores, in Edendo & Potando, Carnem & Sanguinem, quæ pro nobis oblata sunt, significamus: Because we are deliuered by our Lords Death, being mindfull thereof, in Eating and Drinking, we Signifie or Represent the Flesh and Blood, that were offered vp for vs. Thus in the holy Mysteries we Eat and Drinke the Sacrament of Christ crucified in the humility of his flesh. But his diuine Nature in Godhead, and Maiesty cannot be represented or expressed by any Sacraments.

1. Cor. 11.

Hesych. in Leuit. lib. 1. cap. 2.

Ambros. in 1. Cor. 11.

It was all vaine and lost labour for you, M. Harding, so earnestly to proue, that Christs Body quickeneth and giueth life. Wee know it: Wee confesse it: Wee feele it: Christ himselfe saith it: I am the Bread of Life: Hee, that eateth of this Bread, shall liue for euer.

Iohan. 6.

This talke impeacheth no man but your selfe. For you tell vs, and would haue it holden as an Article of your Faith: not only, That the wicked man without Faith, but also that the dumb creature void of Reason, may receiue the very Body of Christ, and that Substantially, Verily and in deed. Thus you diuide and sunder Christs Body from his Spirit: and, contrarie to Theophylact, and to all the ancient Fathers, and to Christ himselfe, ye say, It may bee Really receiued without Life.

But we say with S. Ambrose: Qui accipit hunc Panem, non moritur morte Peccatoris: Quia hic Panis est Remissio Peccatorum: Whoso eateth this Bread, (not the Sacrament of Christs Body, but Christs Body it selfe) dieth not the death of a Sinner: For this Bread is the Remission of Sinnes. We say with S. Augustine: Qui Carnem Domini non sumit, non habet vitam: & qui eam sumit, habet vitam, & hanc vtique æternam: He that receiueth not the Flesh of our Lord hath no Life; and, he that receiueth it, hath Life, and the same Euerlasting. Againe we say with S. Augustine: Huius rei Sacramentum de Mensa Dominica sumitur, quibusdam ad Vitam, quibusdam ad Mortem; Res verò ipsa, cuius Sacramentum est, Omni homini ad vitam, Nulli ad exitium; quicunque eius Particeps fuerit: The Sacrament (of Christs Body) is receiued from the Lords Table, to some vnto Life, to some vnto Death: But the thing it selfe, (that is, the Body of Christ, whereof this is a Sacrament) is to all men vnto Life, and to no man vnto Death: Whosoeuer shall be partaker of it.

Christs Body giueth Life.

For ſome further declaration hereof, it appeareth by the witneſſe of the ancient learned Doctours and Fathers, that we are Really and Corporally ioined and united vnto Chriſt, not only by the Myſteries of the holy Supper, but alſo by Faith, by Baptiſme, by the Spirit of God, by Loue, and other waies. Of Faith S Auguſtine ſaith thus: Per Fidem Adcorporamur in Ieſu Chriſti Domino noſtro: By Faith we are Incorporare in Chriſt Ieſu our Lord. And againe: Qui venit ad me, Incorporatur mihi: He that commeth vnto mee, is Incorporate into me. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Quid nobis eſſe non vult, omnibus modis nos ſibi conglutinans, & coniungens? What wil not Chriſt be vnto vs? For by all maner meanes he cleaueth and faſteneth himſelfe vnto vs. Againe in plainer ſort he ſaith: Dominum ipſum amplecteris, & Commiſceris, & ſubuectus coniungeris Corpori illi, quod ſurſum ſedet in Cœlis: Thou embraceſt the Lord himſelfe, and art mingled with him, and being heere beneath art ioined to that Body, that ſitteth in Heauen aboue.

In like maner he writeth of the Sacrament of Baptiſme: Quomodo ex Carne eius ſumus, & ex Oſſibus eius? Quemadmodum ille ſine Virili Congreſſu natus eſt ex Spiritu Sancto, ita nos illud efficimur in Lauacro: How are wee of his Fleſh and of his Bones? He anſwereth: As Chriſt was borne by the Holy Ghoſt without the knowledge of Man, euen ſo in the Font (of Baptiſme) we are made the ſame (that is, his Fleſh, and his Bones.)

Leo, de Natiuitate Domini, Sermo. 3.

So ſaith Leo: Sicut Dominus Factus eſt Caro noſtra naſcendo, ita nos facti ſumus ipſius (Caro) Renaſcendo: As our Lord was made our Fleſh, by that he was borne: ſo are wee made his Fleſh, by that we are new borne.

Hieronym. De Viro Perfecto.

So ſaith S. Hierome: De Carne eius ſumus, & de Oſſibus eius: ipſe enim eſt Caput Corporis Eccleſiæ: We are of his Fleſh, and of his Bones: For that he is the Head of his Body, which is the Church.

Thus, M. Harding, we are ioined together, and tempered with Chriſt, not onely by the Holy Myſteries, but alſo by the Sacrament of Baptiſme and by Faith. And Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ne ſimpliciter teneamus Chriſtum, ſed etiam illi conglutinemur. Nam, ſi quicquam ſeceſſerimus ab eo, Perimus: Let vs not only hold Chriſt, but alſo let vs bee faſt glued vnto him. For, if we fall any thing from him, we are vtterly loſt. Muſt we therefore conclude, M. Harding, that the Water of Baptiſme is Tranſubſtantiate, no part of the Subſtance therof remaining ſtill: or, that Chriſts Body is Really, and groſly preſent in that Sacrament, as you haue imagined of the other?

Chryſoſtom. in 1. Cor. hom. 8.

Quodammodò.

Ye finde great fault with Oecolampadius, for corrupting, as ye ſay, the ſound Doctrine of Theophylact with his forged Quodammodò, and for breaking the congruity of the Latine ſpeech, by putting the third Perſon in place of the firſt. Of the Latine congruity, I will ſay nothing. The learned thinke, that Oecolampadius was as ſkilfull both in the Latine tongue, and in the Greeke, as M. Harding. But for the forging of Quodammodò, why doe you not as well finde fault with Theophylact himſelfe? For, if it be a forgery, he himſelfe hath likewiſe forged the ſame Quodammodò: and if that may be called Corruption, he hath alſo corrupted his owne Doctrine. Theſe be his words: Qui manducat me, hic viuet propter me, dum Quodammodo miſcetur mihi, & tranſclementatur in me: He that eateth me, ſhall liue by me: for aſmuch as, after a ſort, he is mingled with me, and tranſclemented or changed into me. If yee doubt, whether ὡσαυτῶς in Greeke, may be expounded by Quodammodò, then is not your ſkill heerein ſo great, as yee haue thought. Heere you ſee, that not only Oecolampadius, but alſo Theophylactus himſelfe ſaith Quodammodò.

Why finde ye not fault with S. Auguſtine, for ſaying the like? Omnes in illo, & Chriſti, & Chriſtus ſumus: quia Quodammodò totus Chriſtus, & Caput, & Corpus eſt: In him we are all Chriſts, and Chriſt himſelfe: For after a ſort whole Chriſt is both the Head (of the Church) and alſo the Bodie. And againe: Qui in Chriſtum credit, credendo in Chriſtum veniet, & in eum Chriſtus, & quæ quo modo vnitur in eum, & Membrum in Corpore eius efficitur: He that beleeueth in Chriſt, by beleeuing commeth into Chriſt, and Chriſt into him, and after a ſort is vnited into him, and is made a Member in his Body. And againe: Paulum Chriſtus voce mactauit, & in ſuum Corpus traijciens, Quodammodò manducauit: Chriſt killed Paul with his voice, and after a ſort, did eat him, ſwallowing him downe into his Body. Why finde ye not the ſame fault with Cyrillus writing thus? Decebat ergo eum Quodammodò Vniti Corporibus noſtris: It was meet that after a ſort Chriſt ſhould be Vnited vnto our Bodies. Or with S Chryſoſtome, writing the like? Chriſtus nos ſecum in vnam, vt ita dicam, Maſſam reducit: Chriſt mouideth vs, if I may ſo ſay, into one lumpe with himſelfe

Chryſ. in Matth. homil. 83.

Why ſay ye not, theſe and other like holy Fathers were Sacramentaries, and Heretikes? Why ſay ye not, that S. Auguſtine, S. Cyril, S. Chryſoſtome, with their Forged Quodammodò, corrupted the ſound and Catholike Doctrine of the Church?

Would

Would ye rather, for the better facing and colouring of your Doctrin, we should strike out this Forged Quodammodo, and amend it thus: Qui manducat me, Reipsa miscetur mihi, & transelementatur in me? Would ye haue vs to beleeue, that wee are wholly and thorowly changed into Christs Body, and that we are made very Christ, God and Man, the same that was borne of the Virgin, and nailed to the Crosse: and that not Quodāmodò, after a sort, or by some peculiar phrase of speech: but Substantially, Really, Verily, and in deed? I reckon your Doctrine is not fully so fond. Quodammodò.

S. Paul saith: Sumus alter alterius Membra: We are members one of another. Cyrillus saith: Nos inter nos vnimur Corporaliter: Wee are Corporally vnited together among our selues. S. Chrysostome saith: Si quis exuat impudicarum mulierum animas, videbit malum Dæmonem illis admixtum: If any man wil open the Soules of vnchast or filthy Women, he shall see the Diuell tempered together, and mingled with them. And thinke you, M. Harding, that these, and other like speeches of the Holy Fathers cannot stand without your Transubstantiation, & Reall Presence? Or, that the godly bee Substantially and in deed in their Bodies ioined together? Or, that the vngodly be verily vnited and mingled with the Diuell, without any Quodammodo? Roman. 12. Cyril in Iohan. lib. 11 cap. 26. Chrysost in 1. Cor. Hom. 18.

You might rather haue remembred, that touching this vnspeakable Unity betweene Christ and the Faithfull, that is to say, betweene the head and the Body, S. Cyprian writeth thus: Nostra & Christi Coniunctio nec miscet Personas, nec vnit Substantias: sed affectus consociat, & confœderat voluntates: The Coniunction that is betweene vs, and Christ, neither mingleth Persons, nor vniteth Substances: but ioineth affections, and knitteth wils. Likewise saith S. Cyril: Initium & fundamentum in sanctificatione Christus est, Per Fidem scilicet, & non aliter: Hoc enim modo in nobis habitat: The Beginning and Foundation of our Holinesse is Christ: By Faith I meane, and none otherwise. For in this sort Christ dwelleth in vs. Likewise Lyra one of your owne late Doctours: In quantum per Sacramentum Eucharistiæ vnimur Deo, viuimus Spiritualiter: Nostra autem vnio apud ipsum est per Fidem & Dilectionem: So farre foorth as wee are vnited vnto God by the Sacrament of Thanksgiuing, we liue Spiritually: But the Vnion that is betweene him and vs, is by Faith and loue. And expounding these words of S. Paul: Qui adhæret Deo, vnus Spiritus est: He that cleaueth vnto God, is one Spirit with God: he saith, Vnus, non secundùm rem, sed secundùm affectionem: He is one Spirit with God, not One indeed, or according to the Truth: but one in affection, or according to Loue. Cyprian. de Cœna Domini. Cyril in Iohan. lib. 4. cap. 29. Nicol. Lyra in Iohan. Cap. 6. Nicol. Lyra, 1. Cor. 6.

And yet somewhat farther to remoue you from your fantasie of your Reall Presence, S. Chrysostome saith, as he is alleged before: Dominum ipsum amplecteris: cum illo commiseris: & subuectus coniungeris Corpori illi, quod sursum sedet in Cœlis: Thou embracest the Lord himselfe: thou art tempered with him; and being carried vp (by Faith and affection) thou art ioined with that Body that sitteth in Heauen. In like sense saith Leo: Christus ineffabili modo cœpit esse Diuinitate præsentior, qui factus est Humanitate longinquior: Christ by vnspeakable meanes beganne to be the neerer to vs by his Diuinity, the further he is made from vs by his Humanity. Chrysost. in Epist. ad Coloss. Homil. 6. Leo de Ascensione Domini, Sermon. 3.

I doubt not, M. Harding, but ye may easily see, that hitherto your Reall Presence is but weakely proued.

M. Harding.

Not a Figure but the Flesh it selfe of our Lord. Transubstãtiation.

Againe, wee maruel with what face ye dare allege Theophylact for you, who in most euident words ouerthroweth your Figuratiue, Tropicall, & Energicall Doctrine touching this blessed Sacrament. For he saith vpon this sixth Chapter of S. John: Marke well that the Bread which is eaten of vs in the Mysteries* is not only a certain Figure of our Lords Flesh, but the Flesh it selfe of our Lord. For he said not, The Bread that I shall giue is the Figure of Flesh, but, It is my Flesh. For the Bread is with secret words, through the Mystical blessing & comming vpō of the Holy Ghost, changed into the Flesh of our Lord.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Theophylact saith: The Bread is not only a certain Figure of our Lords Flesh, but the Flesh it selfe of our Lord. This Obiection in my Former Reply is many wheres answered. We grant, The Bread is not a bare or naked Figure: but by way of Sacrament, or Mysterie, it is the Body of Christ it selfe. So the Water of Baptisme is not an empty Figure of the Blood of Christ: but it is Christs Blood it selfe, because it is the Sacrament of Christs Blood: And therefore S. Bernard saith: Lauemur in Sanguine eius: Let vs bee washed, (not in Water, but) in the Blood of Christ. S. Augustine giueth this generall Rule, as I haue often reported: In Sacramentis videndum est, non quid sint, sed quid significent: In Sacraments we must consider, not what they bee (in substance and Nature) but what they signifie. Tertullian saith: Christus acceptum Panem, & Discipulis suis distributum, Corpus suum illum fecit, dicendo, Hoc est Corpus meum, hoc est, Figura gura Corporis mei: Christ hauing taken the Bread, and hauing deliuered the same to his Disciples, Made it his Body, saying, This is my Body, that is to say, This is a Figure of my Body. And to appoint a corruptible Creature to this vse, and to make it an effectuall instrument of such high and hidden Mysteries, it is not the Worke of any mortall man, but the onely Power and working of the Holy Ghost: as it shall farther appeare in the next Clause, in mine Answer to the words of S. Ambrose. Beda saith thus: Panis & Vini Creatura in Sacramentum Carnis & Sanguinis Christi ineffabili Spiritus sanctificatione transfertur: The Creature of Bread and Wine, by the vnspeakable Sanctification of the Holy Ghost, is changed (not into the very Reall Body and Blood, but) into the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ.

Beda in Octauis Epiphaniæ.

M. Harding.

Neither maketh S. Ambrose, which also ye bring in, any better for you. Would God yee would admit him for Vmpeere in this point. Verily in the Booke and Chapter that ye refer vs vnto, he disputeth as it were of purpose against you, as though he foresaw the time, when the Church should be troubled with the heresie of Sacramentaries, Tu forte dicis, &c. Perhaps thou saist, My Bread is commō: but this Bread is Bread before the words of the Sacraments: So soon as consecratiō commeth, of Bread is made the Flesh of Christ. Let vs then auouch this, how that which is Bread may bee the Body of Christ? By Consecration. Then with what words and speech is Consecration made? Euen with those of our Lord Iesus. For whatsoeuer else is said, (he meaneth at the Masse) it is praisegiuing to God, and praying for the people, for Kings, for the rest. When the Priest commeth to the Consecration of the honourable Sacrament, there he vseth not his own words, but the words of Christ: Therefore it is the word of Christ that maketh the Sacrament. (a) What word of Christ? Soothly that same word whereby all things be made. Our Lord Commanded, & Heauen was made. Our Lord Commanded, and Earth was made. Our Lord Commanded, and the Seas were made. Our Lord Commanded, euery Creature was engendered. Seest thou then how workfull is the word of Christ? Well then, if there be so great Power in the word of our Lord Iesus, that things beganne to be, which were not: how much more is it workfull, (b) Vt sint quæ erant, & in aliud commutentur? That things be, which were, and bee changed into another thing? Heere Sir Defender, Construe me these words, and what sense can you draw forth of them, but this: If by the working Power of our Lords word things haue a being, which before were nothing, and had no being at all, as Heauen, Earth, and Seas; how much more Power hath it to work, that things which were before, and had a being, now also be, or haue a being, but be changed into another thing, in Aliud, (c) into a thing of another Substance? For by this phrase is signified a Substantiall changing, which aptly is called Transubstantiation. And I pray you, good Sir, who saith, that the Elements, I meane Bread and Wine, passe quite away, and goe to nothing? Though you so belie vs, wee say not so: God forbidde. Wee say that after Consecration they be: But what? (d) Not the selfe same they were, wher by the former Substance is excluded, but the Body and Blood of our Lord. Againe, in that we say with S. Ambrose, In aliud commutantur, They be changed into an other thing: followeth it not thereof by good Logike, Ergo they bee? Will not this argument hold in Schoole, the Verbe Passiue being resolued, (e) Sunt commutata, Ergo sunt? For that which ceaseth to bee, or goeth to nothing, yee cannot properly say of it, that it is changed: but rather that it is ended, or perished. Now Sir, I report me to euery man that hath any sense, whether I may not lawfully giue you the Menti, as for manners sake I may vse the Italian term, & challenge you in plain terms of a Lie, for vttering this Vntruth vpon that Holy Doctor S. Ambrose, specially speaking as you doe in your English Translation, by your selfe allowed thus: For what can be said more plainely, then that which Ambrose saith: Bread and Wine remaine still the same they were before, and yet are changed into another thing? Zeale moueth me to say, beyond the modesty of my naturall disposition, What is iugling, what is lying, what is falshood, what is falsifying, what is wickednesse of falsaries, if this be not?

Neither is the saying wherewith this Defender belieth S. Ambrose, all only false, and contrary to the Catholike Faith, but also absurd, vnreasonable, and foolish. For if Bread and Wine remaine still after Consecration the same they were before, how then are they changed into another thing?

(a) God may well be Omnipotent without either Transubstantiation, or Reall presence.

(b) S. Ambrose saith, The Bread & Wine are the same things they were before Consecration: notwithstanding they bee now made a Sacrament.

(c) Vntrue exposition. That were contrary to S. Ambrose. For then were they not the same things they were before.

(d) O fond folly! What being haue things whē their Substance is gone?

(e) A Vaine Vntruth. See the Answer.

M. Hardings modestie.

Operatrix. These be the words alleged by the Defender.

The Elemēts after Consecration be, or haue a being.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Heere, M. Harding, vnlesse ye had made S. Ambrose a Prophet, ye thought hee could not so handsomely haue serued your turne. But what, and of whom hee prophesied, and how farre he saw before, wee shall see heereafter. Verily, if that bee the Heresie that you imagine, then hee needed not greatly any Spirit of Prophesie in that behalfe. For hee foretold vs of no new Heresie that was to come: but rather told vs of his owne Heresie, that then was present. Doubtlesse the words that wee report are not ours: they are his owne.

Omnipotēt Power.

But S. Ambrose saith: The Omnipotent Power of the Word, wherewith God made Heauen and Earth: the same Omnipotent Power of the same Word he vseth now in the Consecration of the Sacrament. Therefore (saith M. Harding) it must needs be gathered, he meant Transubstantiation, and Reall Presence; as if without these new fantasies God could not be Omnipotent. I may well answer these men, as S. Ambrose vpon the like occasion sometime answered the wilfull blindnesse of the Iewes: Atramentum vident: Spiritum Dei non vident: They see the Inke (of the Letter written) but the Spirit of God they see not. Euen so M. Harding, and others of that side, weigh the words of S. Ambrose: but his sense and meaning they weigh not.

Ambr. de Noe & Arca.

Certainly

Omnipotēt Power.

Certainely God sheweth his Omnipotent Power, as well in the Sacrament of Baptisme, as in the Sacrament of Thanksgiuing. Hereof I haue said somewhat as occasion was offered in my Former Reply to M. Harding. Leo saith thus: Christus originem quam sumpsit in Vtero Virginis, posuit in Fonte Baptismatis. Dedit Aquæ, quod dedit Matri: Christ laid in the Font of Baptisme the same beginning that he tooke in the Virgins Wombe. He gaue the same preeminence to the Water, that he gaue to his Mother. Euen so Chrysostom: Angeli qui adfuerunt (in Baptismo) tam inenarrabilis operis modum minimè possunt enarrare. Adfuerunt tantùm, & viderunt: nihil tamen operati sunt: Sed Pater tantùm & Filius, & Spiritus Sanctus: The Angels that were present at the Baptism are not able to vtter the maner of that vnspeakable Worke. They were present only, and saw, but they did nothing: but onely the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost. Likewise he saith: Ex Spiritu, & sensibili Aqua, omnia hæc admirabilia, & humanam excedentia cogitationem, exorsuntur All these wonderfull Works (wrought in Baptisme) so farre exceeding the thought of man, spring of the Spirit, and of Sensible Water.

Articulo 5. Diuision. 4. Leo in Natiuitate Domini, Sermon. 5. Chrysost. in Ioban. Homil. 24. Chrysost. in Ioban. Homil. 24.

Thus the Holy Fathers vsed oftentimes to aduance and to magnifie the holy Mysteries, the better to bring their Hearers to the deepe and inward consideration of the same: and therefore, as S. Augustin saith, Sacramenta tantæ rei non nisi eiusdem rei vocabulo nuncuparunt: They expressed the Sacraments of so great a thing none otherwise then by the name of the same thing. So S. Paul saith: The Rocke was Christ. So another saith, as I haue otherwheres alledged: The Oile is Christ. And another: Manna erat Christus, qui descendit de Cœlo: The Manna (that rained in the Wildernesse) was Christ, that came downe from Heauen. Thus are we taught, that Manna was Christ, that the Oile was Christ, and, that the Rocke was Christ. And these sayings are true. And yet in deed and verily, in Nature and Substance, neither the Manna, nor the Oile, nor the Rocke was Christ.

August ad Bonifac. Epist. 23. 1. Corint. 10. Paschymer. in 4 Cap. Hierarch. S. German. De Corpor. & Sanguine Christi.

So saith S. Chrysostome, reporting the Story of Dauid: Accipiens Aquam allatam, bibere noluit: sed semetipsum reprehendit, & Domino eam libauit. Non enim Aqua erat, sed Sanguis: Dauid receiuing of the Water (that his men had gotten with great danger ſtō the midst of their enemies) would not drinke of it: but found fault with himselfe, and powred it out vnto the Lord. For it was not Water, but Blood.

Chrys. in Psal. 50. Homil. 1.

I beseech thee, good Christian Reader, marke well these words. The Story is cleare. It was indeed onely a Cuppe of Water, and nothing else. Yet Chrysostome saith: It was Blood: It was no Water.

2. Reg. 23.

In those daies it was no danger thus to say. The people was instructed, and well acquainted with this phrase, or maner of speech, and knew the meaning. They were taught that the Rocke, the Oile, and the Manna in the Wildernesse, were onely Sacraments of Christ: and that, notwithstanding they were called by the name of Christ, yet in deed and in Substance they were not Christ.

Therefore I may answer M. Harding heerein, as S. Augustine sometime answered the Pelagian Heretikes: Vobis Pelagianis nondum litigantibus, securiùs loquebantur Patres de his Articulis: Before that you the Pelagians beganne to quarrell, the Fathers and Doctours spake without feare and freely of these Articles. Athanasius saith of the Arian Heretiks: Incorporalia corporaliter excipientes, quæ probè dicta erant, interpretationibus deprauauerunt: Taking Spirituall things in a Corporall, or Fleshly meaning, (as doth M. Harding, and others his fellowes) by their interpretations they haue depraued the things that were rightly spoken.

August. contra Iulianum. li. 1. cap. 2. Athanas. cōtra Arian. Serm. 4.

S. Ambrose saith of the Bread and the Wine, Sunt quæ erant, & in aliud mutantur: They remaine the same that they were, and are changed into another thing. Now is the field wonne: M. Harding bloweth a Maine Triumph. Heere (saith he) Sir Defender, Construe mee these words. Soothly, good Reader, I distrust not greatly, but this poore Defender might easily Construe these words, were hee neuer so simple a Clerke. The Naturall Creatures of the Bread and Wine in the Supper of our Lord (saith S. Ambrose) remaine still in Substance as they were before: yet are they changed into another thing: that is to say, they are made the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ: which before they were not.

Notwithstanding this short Construction being cleare and plain may seeme sufficient, yet for that M. Harding so deepely apposeth vs, and willeth vs to Construe him these Words, we will both Construe, and Pars them too for his pleasure.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 80.

Therefore to warrant our former Construction, S. Augustine saith thus: Accedat Verbum ad Elementum, & fit Sacramentum: Let the Word be added to the Element, or outward Creature, and it is made a Sacrament, that is to say, another thing. Againe hee saith: Sacramenta sunt Signa rerum, Aliud existentia, Aliud Significantia; Sacraments are Signes or Tokens of things, being by Substance One thing, and Signifying another thing. So saith Chrysostome of the Water of Baptisme: Cùm hoc Elementum acceperit Spiritum Sanctum, fit Sacramentum: Et iam non erit Aqua Potationis, sed Sanctificationis: Non erit Aqua communis, sed Refectionis: When this Creature of Water hath receiued the Holy Ghost, it is made a Sacrament: And now is not Water to drinke, but Water to Sanctifie: Not common Water, but Water to refresh.

Chrysostom. in Psal. 22.

It is Christ

Thus the Element, or outward Creature, both remaineth, and is changed: It remaineth in proper and plaine kinde of speech: It is changed vnproperly, that is to say, by the way of a Sacrament, or a Mysterie. So M. Hardings owne Glosse saith vpon the Decree: Cœleste Sacramentum dicitur Corpus Christi, sed Improprie. Vnde dicitur, Suo modo: Non rei veritate, sed Significante Mysterio: vt sit sensus, Vocatur Corpus Christi, id est, Significat Corpus Christi: The Heauenly Sacrament is called the Body of Christ, but vnproperly, (that is to say, not in plaine and simple manner of speech.) Therefore S. Augustine saith, It is so called after a sort: that is, not in truth of matter, but by a Mysterie signifying: that the sense may be this, It is called the Body of Christ, that is to say, It signifieth the Body of Christ. So saith S. Augustine: De Signis differens, hoc dico, Ne quis in eis attendat quòd sunt, sed potiùs, quòd Signa sunt, id est, quòd Significant: In treating of Signes (or Sacraments) thus I say: let no man consider in them that they bee in Substance, but rather that they bee Signes, that is to say, that they signifie (some other thing.) In this sense and meaning S. Augustine saith againe: Dominus ait, Ipse (Iohannes) est Elias: Iohannes autem ipse ait, Ego non sum Elias: Rectè ergo Iohannes proprie respondit: Nam Dominus Figurate: Our Lord said of Iohn the Baptist, This is Elias: But Iohn himselfe saith, I am not Elias. Therefore Iohn answered well in plaine maner of words: For our Lord spake in a Figure. Thus in sundry sorts of speech Iohn is Elias, and the same Iohn is not Elias: and both are true.

De Cons. Dist. 2 Hoc est. In Glossa.

Aug. de Doctrina. Christian. Lib. 2. Cap. 1.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 4.

But what better Expositour of S. Ambrose can wee find then S. Ambrose himselfe? I trust M. Harding will not say, that so holy a Father was a Falsifier and a Lier, specially in declaring his owne minde. Thus therefore he saith: Ante Benedictionem Verborum cœlestium alia species nominatur: post Consecrationem Corpus Christi significatur. In comedendo & potando, Carnem & Sanguinem, quæ pro nobis oblata sunt, Significamus. In Similitudinem accipis Sacramentum. Est Figura Corporis & Sanguinis Domini. Similitudinem pretiosi Sanguinis bibis: Before the blessing of the Heauenly words, it is called another Kinde: After the words of Consecration, the Body of Christ is Signified. In eating and drinking we Signifie the Body & Blood that were offered for vs. Thou receiuest the Sacrament for a Similitude, or for a likenesse. It is a Figure of the Body and Blood of our Lord. Thou drinkest the likenesse of the pretious Blood.

Ambros. de iis qui initiantur, Cap. 9.

Ambros. 1. Cor. 11.

Ambros de Sacrament. lib. 4. cap. 4. & 5.

The like forme of words the same S. Ambrose vseth of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Vidisti Aquam? Sed non omnis Aqua sanat: Sed Aqua sanat, quæ habet Gratiam Dei. Aliud est Elementum: Aliud Consecratio: Hast thou seene the Water? But all Water healeth not. But that Water healeth, that hath the Grace of God. The Element (or Creature of Water) is one thing: and the Consecration is another thing.

Ambros. de Sacrament. lib. 1. cap. 5.

Thus the Bread remaineth: and thus it is changed. It remaineth in Substance: It is changed in Mysterie.

But M. Harding heauily presseth these words, Mutantur in aliud: That is (saith hee) into a thing of another Substance. For by this phrase is signified a Substantiall changing, which aptly is called Transubstantiation. I will not heere vse your courteous eloquence, M. Harding: nor say vnto you as you say to others, I pray you, good Sir: but thus I say: I pray you, M. Harding, who gaue you this rule? Who taught you this Lesson? De Cœlo est, an ex Hominibus? Came it from Heauen, or is it of men? Haue the holy Fathers thus taught you, or is it onely your owne fantasie? What Grammar, what Logike, what Philosophy, what Diuinity euer told you, that Aliud euermore signifieth a thing of another Substance? If ye haue an Authour, why come you without him? If it bee onely of your selfe, why should we beleeue you?

Changed into another thing.

If Aliud signifie onely a Substance, and nothing else, why doth S. Augustine say, as it is before alleged, Sacramenta sunt Signa rerum, aliud existentia, aliud Significantia? Why saith S. Augustine againe, Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud Virtus Sacramenti? Why saith S. Ambrose, Aliud est Elementum, aliud Consecratio? For by your Diuinity the Sacrament, the Form, the Consecration, be Accidents only, and may not be taken for the Substance. Verily, for ought that I can learne, Aliud, is nothing else, but Res alia, another thing, whether it be the Substance, or the Accident. For I thinke ye haue not forgotten the Old Rule: Vnumquodque in suo genere est quid.

Harding, would be so vaine, or so wilfull? Haue you forgotten that Gelasius saith, Non desinit esse Substantia vel Natura Panis & Vini? It ceaseth not to be the Substance or Nature of Bread and Wine? Haue you forgotten that S. Chrysostome saith, Natura Panis remanet in Sacramento? The Nature or Substance of Bread remaineth still in the Sacrament? Or, that Theodoretus saith, Christus Naturam Panis non mutat? Christ changeth not the Nature of the Bread? Who would thinke you would refuse to expound one Father by another?

M. Harding. Iwill construe these words for him, and will shew his extreame blindnesse. Ergo, the Si tanta vis est, If so great strength be, In Sermone Domini Iesu, In ỹ speech of our Lord Iesus, Vt that, &c. M. Iewel supplieth Bread and Wine to be the Nominatiue case to the Verbe, Sint, Be, or rather, to the Verbe, Sunt. He beginneth the construction with the verbe Sint, whereas, Quæ erant, should goe before. Againe, between, Quæ, and Erant, M. Iewel conueieth in a Pronoune Demonstratiue, which hath no place there, saying, which they were, &c. Is (Sunt) to be Englished, They remaine the same? Sunt, is no more, but, They be, &c. All S. Ambrose reason proceedeth to proue that Gods Word is of force to change Creatures: and he meaneth of change in Substance. For all his Comparison consisteth about the words Non esse, and Esse: and Esse, and Aliud esse, &c. And who would not wonder to see S. Ambrose labour so vehemently to proue that Gods Word is able to change a Creature in qualitie, as though a man were not able to change a thing in quality? &c When Consecration is come vnto it, De Pane, from of Bread, it is made Christs Flesh. The Answer. Good Reader, the words that I haue already written may suffice thee for Answer in this behalfe. But whereas M. Harding seeketh to preuaile by his pretty Constructions, and thus nicely teacheth thee to expound S. Ambrose, Ergo, Then: Si, If: Vt, That: Sunt, Be: that is to say, haue a being, Quæ erant, should goe before: Sint, should follow after, his dealing herein is light and childish, as thou maist see, and not worthy of Answer. The Bread and the Wine, saith S. Ambrose, are still that they were, and yet are changed into an other thing. Here M. Harding crieth out: These words, Bread and wine, are not in S. Ambrose. These words M. Iewel hath supplied to be the Nominatiue case to the Verbe, Sint. To answer your Grammaticall Diuinitie, M. Harding, if S. Ambrose meant not Bread and Wine, I pray you tell vs, what things meant he? If ye say he meant nothing, the children will laugh at you: If ye say, hee meant any other things then Bread and Wine, it must needes follow that some other things besides Bread and Wine are changed into Christs Body: which would be the ouerthrow of all your Doctrine. S. Ambrose saith, by your owne Translation, as cleare as midnight: The things that were, bee, or haue a being, and they are changed into another thing. What things were they? What things haue a being? What things are changed? Once againe I say vnto you, If S. Ambrose meant not Bread and Wine, I pray you tell vs, what things meant he? If Bread and Wine be not changed, where is then your Transubstantiation of Bread and Wine? If the Bread and wine remaine not, how say you that the Bread and Wine haue a being? Will you say, They haue a being, and yet be nothing? Leaue these deuices M. Harding: They become you not. Why should you so vainely encombre the world with such follies? S. Ambrose saith: They are changed into another thing. So may they be, though the former Substance and Nature of Bread and Wine remaine still. But you say: All S. Ambroses reason proceedeth to proue that Gods Word is of force to change Creatures, meaning as you say, of change in Substance. How know you that, M. Harding? Verily S. Ambrose himselfe seemeth not to know it. Behold his words: Thus he saith: Moses lifted vp his rod, and the water was diuided, and stood as a Wall: The water of Iordan turned his course, and contrary to Nature flowed backward to his Head. Is it not cleare that Nature was changed? &c. Now tell vs M. Harding, call you this a change in Substance? Was not the water both of the Red Sea, and of Iordan in Nature and Substance as it was before? By these, and such other like examples, it appeareth that notwithstanding S. Ambrose say, The Nature is changed, yet hee meant a change in quality onely, and not in Substance. But he saith: Of Bread is made Christs Body. So Chrysostome saith: The Baptisme of Christ is Christs Blood. But S. Ambrose saith not, The Bread is no longer Bread: Or, The Bread is really changed into Christs Body. His words agree thoroughly with the words of Tertullian that liued before him. For as S. Ambrose saith, Of the Bread is made Christs Body: Euen so saith Tertullian: Christus accepit Panem, & Corpus suum illum fecit, dicendo, Hoc est Corpus meum, hoc est. Figura Corporis mei: Christ tooke Bread, and made it his Body, saying, This is my Body, that is to say, This is a Figure of my Body. The Bread, saith hee, is made the Body of Christ. What thing can there be more plainely spoken? But he thought it good further to open his owne meaning, lest any man should be deceiued. He made it his Body (saith he)

Changed into another thing.

That is to ſay, He made it a Figure, or a Sacrament of his body. Euen ſo meant S. Ambroſe and the ſame meaning he hath many waies plainely vttered, as I haue ſaid before. Theſe be his wordes: The Body of Chriſt is ſignified: We ſignifie the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt: Thou receiueſt the Sacrament for a likeneſſe: Thou drinkeſt the Similitude of the Precious Blood: It is a Figure of the Body and Blood of our Lord. In this ſenſe S. Ambroſe ſaith, The Bread is made Chriſts Body. You muſt giue him leaue of courteſie, M. Harding, to expound his owne meaning, vnleſſe you know it better then he himſelfe.

M. Harding fol. 349. b.

You ſay: Who would not wonder to ſee S. Ambroſe labour ſo vehemently to proue that Gods Word is able to change a Creature in quality, as though a man were not able to change a thing in quality? And marueil you ſo much hereat, M. Harding? It appeareth ye haue not ſo aduiſedly conſidered the Holy Fathers. S. Cyprian ſpeaking onely of the Holy Oile, ſaith thus: Sanctificatis Elementis, iam non propria Natura præbet effectum: Sed virtus diuina potentiùs operatur: Adeſt Veritas Signo, & Spiritus Sacramento: When the Elements (of the Oile) be Sanctified, it is not the Nature there of that giueth effect: But the power of God worketh more mightily: The Truth is preſent with the Signe: And the Holy Ghoſt is preſent with the Sacrament. It is not Nature, he ſaith: It is the Power of God. So earneſtly he laboureth to proue a change: And yet is it a change, not in Subſtance, as you know, but onely in quality. Such extraordinary ſpeaches be very common in the Ancient Writers. Bertramus that liued about eight hundred yeeres paſt, ſaith thus: Chriſt of the Manna that fell from Heauen in the Wilderneſſe, inuiſibly made his owne Body: And of the Water that flowed from the Rocke, inuiſibly he wrought his owne Blood. Theſe wordes be vehement, as none may be more. Yet was this change in Quality only, and not in Subſtance. So ſaith Beda: Panis & Vini Creatura in Sacramentum Carnis & Sanguinis Chriſti, myſtica Spiritus Sanctificatione transfertur: The Creature of Bread and Wine, by the vnſpeakeable Sanctification of the Holy Ghoſt, is turned into the Sacrament of Chriſts fleſh and Blood. He ſaith not, It is changed in Subſtance, or, it is really turned into Chriſts Fleſh and Blood: but only, It is turned into the Sacrament of Chriſts Fleſh and Blood. And therefore S. Ambroſe, after all other his vehement wordes, ſaith thus: Vera vtique Caro Chriſti, quæ crucifixa eſt, quæ ſepulta eſt: Verè ergo Carnis illius Sacramentum eſt. Ipſe clamat Dominus Ieſus, hoc eſt Corpus meum. Ante Benedictionem verborum Cœleſtium alia ſpecies nominatur: Poſt Conſecrationem Corpus Chriſti Significatur: That was the very true Fleſh of Chriſt, that was Crucified, and that was Buried: Therefore this is verily a Sacrament of that Fleſh. The Lord Ieſus himſelfe ſaith, This is my Body. Before the Benediction of the Heauenlie words it is named another kinde: After the Conſecration, the Bodie of Chriſt is Signified.

Ambroſ. de illis qui initiant. Cap 9.

And leſt any man ſhould wonder at theſe ſtrange kinds of ſpeaches, like as S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh of the Changing of the Bread in our Lords Supper, euen ſo he ſpeaketh of the Changing of the Water in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Theſe be his wordes: First of all the Apoſtle teacheth thee not to behold (in Baptiſme) the things that are ſeen, but the things that are not ſeene, &c. Beleeue therefore the Preſence of the Godhead. Beleeneſt thou the worke, and beleeneſt thou not the Preſence, &c.? Beleeue not only the eies of the Body. That thing is better ſeene, that is not ſeene, &c. This is that Myſtery that eie neuer ſaw, that eare neuer heard, that neuer entered into the heart of man, &c. To them of the Iewes an Angel came downe vnto thee commeth downe the Holy Ghoſt. Vnto them the Creature of the Water was ſtirred: vnto thee Chriſt himſelfe worketh, that is the Lord of the Creature &c. Beleeue therefore that our Lord Ieſus is preſent in Baptiſme at the Praier of the Prieſt, &c. Say not, How are we Regenerate? I know not heere the vſe of Nature. The order of Nature is not there, whereas is the excellency of Gods Grace. Theſe and ſuch other like wordes S. Ambroſe vttereth onely touching The Sacrament of Baptiſme. Beleeue not (ſaith he) thy Bodily eies: Gods word is workefull. Here is no order of Nature: Grace excelleth: Nature yeeldeth: Chriſt is the Lord of the Creature: God is preſent: Chriſt is preſent. So earneſtly he laboureth, to proue this change. And yet is it a change not in Subſtance, but onely in Quality. Such change is there in the Water. Such change is there in the Bread and Wine.

Laſt of all, whereas I haue thus Engliſhed theſe wordes, Sunt quæ erant, They remaine the ſame that they were, ye charge me with falſe Tranſlation: Is Sunt (ſay you) to be Engliſhed, they remaine the ſame? Sunt, is no more, but, they be. If S. Ambroſe would haue ſaid as you vnruly tranſlate him, his words had been theſe: Manent eadem. Your obiection is prety, M. Harding. We will not heere diſpute of the propriety of wordes. Be it that, eſt, may not commonly be Engliſhed, to remaine: yet ſometimes perhaps, and in ſome ſentence it may wel beare this Engliſh. Ieremy ſaith: Rachel plorat Filios ſuos, quia non ſunt. Dauid ſaith: Laudabo Dominum quamdiu ſum: What if a man would thus Engliſh theſe wordes: Rachel bewaileth her Children, becauſe they remains not: I will praiſe the Lord while I remaine aliue? Would you therefore condemne him of Herefie? Or, would you say, Sum, may not bee Englished, To remaine? As for the place of S. Ambrose, it seemeth, it may well be so Englished: Sunt, quæ erant: They remaine, that they were before. If this mislike you, wee will follow your owne English, and say thus: They are, that they were before. Now, I pray you, what aduantage haue you gotten by this exchange? But you say, If S. Ambrose, had thus meant, hee would haue said, Manent eadem That may well bee doubted. For S. Ambrose is not alwaies most curious in choise of words. Howbeit, although hee say it not, yet others haue said it. For as it is alleged before, S. Chrysostome saith: Natura Panis remanet in Sacramento: The Nature of Bread remaineth in the Sacrament. And Gelasius saith: It ceaseth not to bee the Substance or Nature of Bread and Wine. If it cease not to bee, then must you confesse, It remaineth still. And thus haue you found that very same word, that so hath offended you.

Chrys. ad Cæsarium.

Gelasius contra Eutychetem.

We say, The Nature and Substance of the Bread and Wine, is not clearely changed, or consumed into nothing, as many haue dreamed in these latter daies. Heere M. Harding commeth roughly in, as his maner is, and saith, ye belie vs: we say not so: God forbid. Thus he cryeth out before he be stricken. Salomon saith: Impius fugit, nemine persequente: The guilty flieth before he be chased. For notwithstanding there be multitudes of follies in his Doctrine, yet with this folly we charge him not. But whether any of his Fellowes haue so said, or no, I report me to his Master, Peter Lombard. His words bee these: Quid ergo fit de Substantia Panis & Vini? Illi dicunt, vel in præiacentem materiam resolui, vel in nihilum redigi: What then becommeth of the Substance of the Bread and Wine? They say, either that it is resolued into the matter that was before, or else that it is consumed into nothing.

Prouerb. 28.

What? Into nothing? Marry God forbid, saith M. Harding. So coy, and so carefull he is for his holy Forms, and his kingdome of Accidents. He saith, The whole Substance of the Bread is cleane abolished, not one part thereof remaining: yet may it not be turned into nothing. And as if the matter were well worth somewhat, he assureth the same sadly with a great detestation, God forbid: God shield the Bread. Verily something might be said, if it were any thing worth the hearing. But, good Reader, thou shalt lose nothing by the silence: For I assure thee, verily it is worth nothing.

Yet M. Harding first giueth vs his courteous Mercy: and afterward, in his familiar maner chargeth vs by plaine termes with a Lie: and suddenly crieth out, as he saith: beyond the modesty of his naturall disposition, what is Iuggling; what is Lying; what is falshood; what is falsifying; what is wickednesse of Falsaries, if this be not? I might say, O Sirs, hold the man. Good Christian Reader, in all these Whats, thou wilt happily thinke, there should bee somewhat. Howbeit, indeed it is but a pangue of M. Hardings Rhetoricke. He speaketh not thus of his owne Naturall disposition, as hee himselfe saith, but of Art and study: lest thou shouldest thinke, that hauing spent so many waste words, in the end he had said nothing.

But what is the matter, M. Harding? What moueth you to make this pitteous outcry? Forsooth because we say, The Bread and Wine remaine the same they were before. But these be S. Ambroses owne words, they be not ours: we make them not: we change them not, but report them simplie, as we finde them. As they were written in Latine by the Author, these they are: (Panis, & Vinum) sunt, quę erant, & in aliud mutantur: The Bread and Wine are the same, that they were: and are changed into another thing. Therefore it appeareth, al these exclamations, of, what is Iuggling? what is Lying, &c. pertaine vnto S. Ambrose the Author hereof, and not vnto vs.

Now forasmuch as it hath pleased M. Harding so earnestly to call vs forth to construe him these words, I beseech thee, good Reader, marke well, what constructions he, and his Fellowes haue imagined and fansied vpon the same. First of all Lanfrancus, the chiefest Champian of that side, thought it the wisest way, vtterly to denie these words, and to say, They were neuer written by S. Ambrose. For thus he stormeth against Berengarius: O mentem amentem! O hominem impudenter mentientem! O puniendam temeritatem! Ambrosium accire testem præsumis quòd Panis & Vinum Altaris per Consecrationẽ non desinant esse, quod erant, sed commutentur in aliud, quod non erant? & quidem si de Sacramentis, seu de cæteris, de quibus Ambrosius scripsit, omnes reuoluat Libros, quos Ecclesia in vsu nunc habet, tale quid ab Ambrosio dictum, taliterque expositum, nusquam reperire valebit: O madde minde! O impudent liar! O rashnesse worthy of punishment! Darest thou to allege S. Ambrose for a witnesse, that the Bread and Wine of the Altar, leaue not by Consecratiõ to be that they were before: but are changed into an other thing, that they were not? Now truly if he peruse all the Bookes, that S. Ambrose hath written, either of the Sacraments, or of o- ther matters, I meane ſuch bookes, as the Church hath now in vſe, he ſhall neuer finde any thing ſo written by S Ambroſe, and ſo expounded.

Lanfrancum de Eucharist.

Changed into another thing.

But M. Harding thought, he might not well thus doe without impeachment of his modeſty. For the very ſame words are to be found extant, and apparant in euery Booke. Therefore allowing the words, he thought it beſt to follow his Maſter Peter a Soto, and to delay, and qualifie the ſame with ſome Conſtruction.

Thus therefore he ſaith: Sunt, quæ erant, & in aliud mutantur: Doth it not follow by good Logike, Mutata ſunt, ergo ſunt; They bee changed, Ergo, they bee? In Louaine, perhaps: In other Vniuerſities, I doubt, whether it haue hitherto beene allowed, or no. For by this Logike, whereas S. Hierome ſaith, Superbia mutata eſt in Humilitatem, M. Harding may conclude as he doth now: Superbia mutata eſt; Ergo eſt; Pride is changed into Humility: Ergo, Pride is, or remaineth ſtill. And whereas S. Paul ſaith: Commutauerunt Veritatem Dei in mendacium; By this Logike M. Harding may ſay: Mutata eſt, Ergo eſt: The Truth of God is changed into a Lie: Ergo, It is Gods Truth ſtill notwithſtanding.

Rom. 1.

And to take further view of M. Hardings Conſtruction, thus he ſaith: Panis & Vinum ſunt, quæ erant, id eſt, qualia erant: The Bread and Wine be in Subſtance the ſame, that they were: That is to ſay, They be in qualities or Accidents, as they were. They are changed, in aliud, into an other thing: that is, into another Subſtance. They are Changed: that is, they are Tranſubſtantiate. They be: that is, They be not: That they were: that is, that they were not. Thus Subſtance is Accidens; Accidens is Subſtance; Being is not Being; not Being is Being; Remaining is not Remaining; Changing is not Changing; and the ſame thing is not the ſame.

With ſuch pyety Conſtructions, M. Harding can teach vs to expound the ancient Fathers. Theſe be their Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen. Heerewith there is nothing ſo cloſe ſhut, but they can open it: There is nothing ſo open, but they can ſhut it. Here might I conclude with M. Hardings owne words, and rightly ſay, as he ſaith: what is Iuggling? what is Lying? &c. But it ſhall be beſt to leaue his owne eloquence and modeſty to himſelfe.

M. Harding.

The places of Gelaſius & Theodoret in appearance ſeeme to make much for you, and more then any other Doctors. And though theſe two Doctors were altogether of this opinion, that after Conſecration the Subſtance of Bread & Wine remaineth, what reaſon is it, they only in ſo great a matter ſhould preiudicate al others holy and learned Fathers, and which is more, the general Councels, and (a) the whole Church of Chriſt? The Catholike Faith we finde in them both within few lines after the words of this Defenders obiection, firſt by Gelaſius thus expreſſed: Sacramenta Corporis & Sanguinis Domini in diuinã transeunt, Spiritu Sancto perficiente, Subſtantiam: permanent tamen in ſua proprietate Naturæ: The Sacraments (ſaith he) of the Body and Blood of our Lord paſſe ouer into a Diuine Subſtance by the working of the holy Ghoſt. Yet remaine they ſtil in the propriety of their owne Nature. By Diuine Subſtance he meaneth the Fleſh of our Lord aſſumpted of the Word. Now ſaith Theodoritus, the Myſticall tokens, bee vnderſtanded to be the things which they be made and are beleeued and adored, as being the things which they are beleeued to be. But euery man knoweth they are beleeued to bee made the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and therefore be duly adored and worſhipped: ſo after the minde of Theodorite, they be the Body and Bloud indeed, not Bread and Wine, as before Conſecration.

The truth confeſſed by Theodoritus Dialog. 2.

(a) Vntruth. For this fantaſie was neuer allowed thorow the whole Church of Chriſt; as it ſhall appeare.

The Subſtance or Nature of Bread and Wine ceaſeth not to be, ſaith Gelaſius: (Whereas your Interpreter addeth of his owne head this word, So) (b) Wee tell you and him, in Theodorite it is not ſo. Ergo, it remaineth, ſay ye. We grant the Subſtance or Nature of Bread and Wine remaineth after Conſecration, ſo as Gelaſius vnderſtandeth by the name of Subſtance, (c) which is nothing elſe but the very Nature (as commonly we ſpeake of Nature) that is to ſay, the natural properties of Bread and Wine; for ſo he expoundeth himſelfe afterward, ſaying; Yet they remaine in the Property of their owne Nature. They remaine (likewiſe ſaith Theodorite) in their former Subſtance, Figure and Forme, and be ſeene and felt as before.

Nature in Gelaſius, and Subſtance in Theodorite is taken for naturall property. Dialog. 2. Logica 40.

(b) Vntruth: Without queſtion it is ſo. For the words bee. Non deſinit eſſe Subſtantia Panis.

(c) A peeuiſh vntruth. It had beene too great a folly.

And thereto may Damaſcens definition of Subſtance pertaine, who ſaith, that ſubſtance is euery that, whatſoeuer by it ſelfe is being, and hath not being in an other. And therefore (d) ſith the Accidents haue their being by themſelues in this Sacrament, and be not ſtaied on any other thing, in this conſideration, Subſtance of them may ſo be reported, as if themſelues were Subſtance. Which (e) Subſtantial conſiſting of the Accidents lacking a proper name, becauſe it is the mighty & extraordinary hand of God, is alſo extraordinarily called of Gelaſius, & Theodoritus by the name which the thing had before, to wit, the Subſtance of Bread and Wine. And no maruell if they ſpake not in (f) moſt exact wiſe of this ſecret point of Doctrin (of Formes and Accidents) at what time it was not as yet by the Church ſo clearely and fully diſcuſſed; (as it was neuer yet vntill this day.) But ſithence the Schoolemen (ignorant and phantaſticall Sophiſters) it hath been more diſtinctly named the exiſtence of Accidents without their Subiect, that is, without another thing whereupon they might ſtay.

(d) Vntruth manifeſt; Read the Anſwer.

(e) Subſtantiall conſiſting of Accidents; O folly!

(f) O exact folly! A heape of Vntruthes without ſenſe.

Againe, whereas Bread and Wine by their nature doe nouriſh, (g) this vertue alſo remaineth in the Accidents giuen to them by the Almighty Word of God, who changeth Creatures to their bettering, not to their Impairing. This was the meaning of Gelaſius and Theodoritus, where they ſay, the Bread and Wine to remaine in the Former Subſtance or Nature. Otherwiſe ſhould they be contrary to themſelues, as they, which alſo doe acknowledge the Nature of Bread and Wine to bee changed into a more excellent Subſtance, by the workefull Word of Chriſt.

(g) Vntruth. M. Hareing by one dreame expoundeth another.

The

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

As for these two Fathers, Gelasius and Theodoretus, notwithstanding M. Harding would seeme to make small account of them, for that they be, as hee saith, but only two, yet he rather catcheth hold in some darke or doubtfull word, by them vttered, then hee would seeme vtterly to giue them ouer. Gelasius saith: The Sacraments passe ouer into a Diuine Substance. If he had said, They passe ouer into a Diuine Accident, it would somewhat better haue shadowed these mens purpose. But other Diuine Substance M. Harding can imagine none, sauing onely Christs Body Substantially and really contained vnder the Formes of Bread and wine. And this fantasie, notwithstanding Gelasius neuer knew it, must needs be allowed against all, that Gelasius himselfe can say to the contrary.

But if M. Harding had better remembred the placing and meaning of this word Substantia, and that aswell Gelasius as other learned Fathers vse the same as Diuines, and not as Naturall Philosophers, he should easily haue found his owne error. Substance.

It may please thee therefore, good Christian Reader, to vnderstand, That the promise of Mercy, The grace of God, Our Faith in Christ, Gods Word, and the Holy Sacraments, that are the aids and helpes of our Faith, are of the holy ancient Writers called a Substance. So S. Cyprian saith: Substantiam Salutis amittunt: They lose the Substance of Saluation. So saith Irenæus: Quamuis sint in Operibus materialibus, tamen putant se non amittere Spiritualem Substantiam: Although they liue in worldly or filthy workes, yet they thinke they lose not the Spirituall Substance. Likewise againe he saith of the follies & vanities of the Valentinian Heretiks: Insubstantiatiuum ostendit figmentum ipsorum: He shewed, that their inuentions and deuices were void of Substance. So S. Chrysostome: Fides dat Substantiam rebus: Imò potiùs non dat Substantiam, sed ipsa est Substantia earum: Faith giueth things their Substance: Or rather, it giueth not Substance vnto things, but it selfe is their Substance. In like manner saith Tertullian: Deus Idololatriæ Substantiam cohibuit: God forbad the Substance of Idolatry. So saith Abbat Panormitane: Continentia non est de Substantia Ordinis: Single or sole life is not of the Substance of holy Orders. And another saith: Enim, non est de Substantia Consecrationis. This word Enim, is not of the Substance of Consecration. By these and other like examples, it may appeare, that in cases of Religion, Substance is not euermore taken for Christs Body couered with Accidents.

If all these examples will not yet suffice, to grow nere to our purpose, S. Ambrose saith: Quid est Ieiunium, nisi substantia & Imago Cœlestis? What is Fasting, but a Substance, and an Heauenly Image?

Likewise Tertullian calleth Baptisme, Diuinam Substantiam: A diuine Substance. His words be these: Quid festinat innocens ætas, ad Remissionem Peccatorum? Cautiùs agitur in sæcularibus: vt cui Substantia terrena non creditur, Diuina credatur: *Why hasteth this innocent age (hee meaneth Children) to the Remission of their Sinnes? We are much more wary in worldly things. It is meete wee should commit the Sacrament of Baptisme, which is a* Diuine Substance, vnto them, vnto whom wee would not commit the Substance of the Earth.

Tertull. De baptismo.
This is one of Tertullians errours.

By these we may see, in what sense Gelasius calleth the Sacrament of Thanksgiuing, a Diuine Substance. Verily none otherwaies, but euen as S. Ambrose calleth Fasting, A Heauenly Substance. And as Tertullian calleth the Sacrament of Baptisme, by the same words, A diuine Substance. And what can this auaile M. Harding, to proone either his Transubstantiation, or his Reall presence?

But why dealeth hee so doubly? Wherefore dissembleth he the words of Gelasius, that immediately in the same sentence went before? For Gelasius himselfe so cleerely and plainly expoundeth his owne minde, as no Louanian Doctour can doe it better. Thus hee saith: Non desinit esse Substantia Panis, vel natura Vini. Et certè Imago, & similitudo Corporis & Sanguinis Christi in Actione Mysteriorum celebratur: There leaueth not to be the Substance of Bread, or the nature of Wine. And indeed the Image or Representation & likenesse of the body and blood of Christ is published in the Ministration of the Mysteries. And againe in the words next immediately following: Sacramenta transeunt in Diuinam, Spiritu Sancto perficiente, Substantiam: permanent tamen in suæ proprietate Naturæ: The Sacraments, by the working of the holy Ghost, passe into a Diuine Substance: yet notwithstanding they remaine still in the property of their owne nature.

Gelasius contra Eutychetem.

This Image, or Representation, or Likenesse, or Memorie of the Body and Blood of Christ is it, that Gelasius calleth the Diuine Substance.

De Con. dist. 1. Hoc est, quod dicimus.

And in like sense S. Augustine calleth the same, Cœlestem Panem: The Heauenly Bread: Thus he writeth, as he is alleged by Gratian: Cœlestis Panis, qui Caro Christi est, eſt, ſuo modo vocatur Corpus Chriſti: cùm reuera ſit Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti: The Heauenly Bread (of the Sacrament) which is the fleſh of Chriſt, after this ſort is called the Body of Chriſt, whereas indeed it is the Sacrament of Chriſts Body. Likewiſe ſaith S. Cyprian: Diuerſa Nomina, vel Species ad Vnam reducuntur Eſſentiam: & Significantia, & ſignificata eiſdem vocabulis cenſentur: Diuers names or kindes (of things) are brought vnto one Subſtance: that is to ſay, The things that doe Signifie, and the things that bee Signified, are reckoned both by one name: that is, as the Body of Chriſt is called Bread, ſo is the Bread called Chriſts Body.

But after that, by the meane of the Prieſt, the Heauenly Grace hath hallowed it, it is diſcharged from the name of Bread, and is vouchſafed to be called by the name of our Lords Body:* notwithſtanding the nature of the Bread remaine ſtill.

So ſaith Theodoret himſelfe: Seruator noſter commutauit nomina: & Corpori quidem Symboli nomen dedit, Symbolo verò nomen Corporis: Our Sauiour hath made exchange of the names: And vnto his Body hath giuen the name of (Bread, which is) the Sacrament: and vnto the Sacrament hath giuen the name of his Body.

Neuertheleſſe, notwithſtanding theſe words both of Theodoretus, and of Gelaſius, (The Subſtance of Bread and Wine, after the words of Conſecration, remaineth ſtill) be ſo plaine, that no man without bluſhing may deny them: Yet hath M. And ſo by this Conſtruction, Subſtance ſometimes is no Subſtance. This is M. Hardings owne peculiar Diuinity, without the witneſſe of any of all the learned Fathers, Greeke or Latine, one or other. For, good Reader, thou maiſt not thinke, that any man, either well aduiſed or learned, would ſay the like.

The Fathers (ſaith hee) ſpake not heereof in moſt exact wiſe. Perhaps they had not learned their Logike Rules, or vnderſtood not the Principles of Naturall reaſon, no not ſo much, as a childe may eaſily vnderſtand: but vſed Subſtance for Accidents, Accidents for Subſtance: and one thing for another, as men that knew not what they ſaid. We adde further, Damaſcene ſaith, Subſtance is euery that, whatſoeuer by it ſelfe is being, and hath no being in another. What needed you heere to allege Damaſcene? Children know that Ariſtotle and others long before him wrote the like. Therefore by their iudgement, They haue not their being, (as you ſay) by themſelues. You may alſo remember, that your Maſter himſelfe, neuer durſt preciſely to determine this matter: but onely palleth it ouer darkely and doubtfully, as being not well reſolued, what to ſay: His words be theſe: Mihi videtur fatendum, Accidentia illa exiſtere ſine Subiecto: It ſeemeth vnto mee, or, as I can gheſſe, theſe Accidents haue their being without a Subiect. Such is the aſſurance and certainty of your Doctrine.

Harding, doe you take your Authors at all aduentures, as they come to hand: or doe you conſider what they ſay? Tell vs, I beſeech you, in your fantaſie, what are thoſe things, that Euthymius ſaith, are ſet before vs? Whether are they the Body and Blood of Chriſt, or elſe your Accidents? If it be Chriſts very Body and Blood Subſtantially, Really, and in deed, Why ſhould we not conſider the Nature of them? What haue they offended you? Or what imperfection finde you in them? Cyrillus ſaith: Caro Chriſti Natura viuifica eſt: The fleſh of Chriſt, by Nature hath power to giue life. And Chriſt himſelfe ſaith: My fleſh is Verily Meat: and my Blood is Verily Drinke. Therefore the Nature hereof is well worthy to bee conſidered. But if there bee nothing elſe there ſet forth but only your bare & naked Accidents, what Power, what Vertue is there in them? What Doctour or Father euer taught vs, that we ſhould haue Remiſſion of Sinne, and be ſaued by your Accidents?

Vertue.

Cyrill. in Ioha. lib. 4. cap. 12.

But, as I ſaid, Euthymius writeth well, following herein the Doctrine of the ancient learned Fathers. S. Baſil ſaith: Si qua Gratia eſt in Aqua, ea non eſt ex Natura Aquæ, ſed ex præſentia Spiritus: If there be any Grace in the Water (of Baptiſme) it is not of the Nature of the Water, but of the preſence of the Spirit. Cyprian, ſpeaking of the Oile, ſaith thus: Sanctificatis Elementis iam non propria Natura præbet effectum: ſed Virtus Diuina potentiùs operatur: It is not Nature, that giueth effect or force vnto the Elements, being Sanctified: but the Diuine Power worketh more mightily. So ſaith S. Chryſoſtome: Petra erat Chriſtus: Non enim ipſius Petræ Natura Aqua ſcaturiebat: Sed alia quædam Spiritualis Petra omnia operata eſt, hoc eſt, Chriſtus: The rocke was Chriſt. For it was not by the Nature of the Rocke that the water guſhed out: but a certaine other Spirituall Rocke wrought all theſe things, that is to ſay, Chriſt. In like maner the ancient Father Origen, ſpeaking of the Power and Vertue of Our Lords Supper, ſaith thus: Illud, quod Sanctificatur per Verbum Dei, & per Obſecrationem, non ſuapte Natura ſanctificat vtentem: The thing that is Sanctified by the Word of God, and by Prayer, ſanctifieth not him that vſeth it, by the Nature of it ſelfe. By theſe, and other like aduertiſments, theſe Godly Fathers meant to withdraw our minds from the outward corruptible Creatures to the Spiritual and Inward vnderſtanding of the Sacraments. Therefore Euthymius in the ſame place ſaith: Panis habet ſimilitudinem quandam ad Corpus, & Vinum ad Sanguinem: The Bread hath a certaine Likeneſſe vnto the Body, and the Wine a certaine Likeneſſe vnto the Blood.

The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation. Lib. 83. que.

When it pleaſed our Sauiour Chriſt at his laſt Supper to inſtitute this Bleſſed Sacrament, at which he took Bread and Wine, and turned thē into his Body and Blood, he would in ſuch wiſe aduance theſe Creatures to a much excellenter condition, as they ſhould loſe no whit of their former Vertues. *For the Son of man came not to deſtroy, but to ſaue, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, is not cauſe that any thing tend vnto not being.

* Vntruth, fond and childiſh. As though Chriſt had died to ſaue Accidents.

Luke 9.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

At the laſt, M. Harding hath found ſome Scripture: and that, God wot, full aptly he applieth to ſerue his purpoſe. The Sonne of Man, (ſaith he) came not to deſtroy, but to ſaue: Ergo, The Bread and Wine loſe no whit of their Former Vertues.

Yeare, I beſeech you, M. Harding: what came the Sonne of Man to ſaue? Muſt wee beleeue, he came from Heauen to ſaue your Accidents? Was this the cauſe of Chriſts comming? Is this the Religion, ye haue learned in Louaine? S. Paul ſaith: Nunquid de bus bus cura eſt Deo? Hath God any ſpeciall care for Oxen? Might not one much better ſay to you, Hath God any care for your Formes, for your Shewes, for your empty Accidents?

Change in Accidents

Perhaps ye will ſay, I preſſe you ouer heauily. Yee meant, that Chriſt came to ſaue Bread and Wine, and not onely Accidents. Howbeit, ſo yee cannot ſay: For by your owne Doctrine, the Nature and Subſtance of the Bread and the Wine, by the comming and preſence of Chriſt, is quite aboliſhed, nothing remaining, but only the Accidents. But be it, that Chriſt came to ſaue theſe Creatures, then is your Religion much like vnto the Diuinity of the Old Heretiks called the Manichees. Of them S. Auguſtine writeth thus: Herbas, atque arbores ſic putant viuere, vt ea & ſentire credant, & dolere, cùm lædantur: nec aliquid inde ſine cruciatu eorum quenquam poſſe vellere: They thinke that Herbes & Trees haue Life ſo farre foorth, that they beleeue they haue ſenſe and feeling, and ſuffer griefe and paine, when they be hurt: and that no man can pull, or plucke ought from them without their ſmart. And againe he ſaith: Nec Oua ſumunt, quaſi & ipſa, cùm franguntur, expirent: They eat no Egges, imagining, that when they bee broken, their Life or Soule paſſeth from them. Such a carefull conſideration, it appeareth, ye haue for your poore Accidents.

Auguſt. ad Quoduult-Deum.

Ibidem hæreſis 46.

These be meere follies, M. Harding. Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, Yee came to ſaue, not your Accidents, but Sinners: not Bread and Wine, but the thing that was loſt. And will ye tell vs, that your Accidents were loſt? Or, that Bread and Wine were ſuch ſinfull Creatures as could not otherwiſe be ſaued, then by the Blood of Chriſt?

O M. Harding, haue more reuerence to Gods Word. It is holy: It is it whereby you ſhall be iudged. Haue better regard hencefoorth, to that ye write. Chriſt himſelfe ſaith: Filius Hominis non venit, vt perdat Animas Hominum, ſed vt ſeruet: The Sonne of Man came, not to deſtroy the Soules of Men, but to ſaue them. Yeer in fauour of your caſe ye haue left out the Soules of Men, which was the knot of the whole, and haue thruſt in Accidents. And ſo there muſt needs appeare in you, either groſſe ignorance, wherewith you charge others, or wilfull corruption.

Luke. 9.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth, euident & ſenſible. Read the Answer (b) Vntruth, trifling and Sophiſticall. For Subſtance is perceiued by the ſenſes, although by meane of the Accidents.

Seeing the there is a change by al conſent (a) & certaine it is, that the change is not in the Accidents, becauſe we ſee them remaine as they were before, and God deceiueth not our ſenſes in their true and proper obiect, which is color, taſt, ſmell &c. It muſt needs be, that the change be in ſubſtance (b) which is to ſenſe incomprehenſible.

Change in Subſtance.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

There is a change in the Bread (ſaith M. Harding) but not in the Accidents thereof: Ergo, in the Subſtance. In the like order of reaſon he might haue ſaid, It is not a Fearnbuſh, Ergo, it is a For. Ye may not looke, M. Harding to ſteale thus away with ſo ſimple Sophiſms. This poore ſhift among Children is called Petitio Principij.

Your Minor, wherein ſtandeth the whole doubt, and which, by ſome authority or ſhew of reaſon, one way or other, ye ſhould haue prooued true: ye haue paſt ſtily ouer without any manner of proofe at all, and preſume it onely to bee true. And ſo the whole weight heereof ſtandeth not by Truth or Reaſon, but hangeth onely by preſumption.

For what Doctour or Father euer told you, or made you ſo certaine, that in the Bread there is no change touching the Accidents? Ye ſay, Your ſenſes tell you, that the Accidents remaine ſtill, as they were before. And the ſame ſenſes may alſo tell you, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, that the Subſtance of the Bread remaineth ſtill, as it was before. But will you ſo ſuddenly forſake your old Leſſon? Will you now put this matter in Compromiſe to your ſenſes? How often and how ſadly haue you told vs, That theſe bee caſes of Onely Faith, and that in the iudgement heereof, both ſenſe and reaſon muſt be abandoned? And haue you forgotten that Chryſoſtome ſaith: Nihil ſenſibile traditum nobis eſt à Chriſto. Quæcunq; Chriſtus tradidit, inſenſibilia ſunt: There is no ſenſible thing deliuered vnto vs by Chriſt (in theſe Myſteries?) And againe, Whatſoeuer things Chriſt hath giuen vs, they are vnſenſible? If they be things vtterly vnſenſible, how then can they be iudged by your ſenſes? Why come ye not forth with the learned Doctours and Catholike Fathers, of whom, yee ſay, ye haue ſuch plenty? If it be true as you ſay, That there is no change in Accident, why is it not proued? If it be falſe, why is it auouched? Tell vs, how long ſhal we be bound to your bare word?

Chryſ. in Matth. homil. 83.

Verily, S. Auguſtine would haue told you, that this change is in Accident, and not in Subſtance. For thus hee ſaith, as it hath beene often remembred: Niſi Sacramenta ſimilitudinem quandam haberent earum rerum, quarũ Sacramenta ſunt, omninò Sacramenta non eſſent. Ex hac autem ſimilitudine plærunque rerum ipſarum nomina accipiunt: Vnleſſe Sacraments had a certaine likenes of the things, of which they bee Sacraments, then indeed they were no Sacraments. And of this likenes oftentimes they bear the names of the things themſelues that are repreſented by the Sacraments. Againe he ſaith: Secundùm quendam modum Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti Corpus Chriſti eſt: The Sacrament of Chriſts Body after a certaine maner is Chriſts Body. And againe: Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, cùm daret Signum Corporis ſui: Our Lord doubted not to ſay, This is my Body, when he gaue a token of his Body. Likewiſe ſaith Tertullian, expounding and opening the meaning of Chriſts words: Hoc eſt corpus meum, hoc eſt, Figura Corporis mei: This is my Body, that is to ſay, This is a Figure of my Body. You know, M. Harding, that Modus, Simile, Diſſimile, Signum, and Figura, be in the Predicament of Quality: and therefore pertaine to Accident, and not to Subſtance.

Change in Accidents.

In ead Epiſt. Aug. contra Adimantũ, c. 12. Tertull. contra Marcion lib. 4.

So Chryſoſtome, whereas he amplifieth the Change of the Bread in the Sacrament of Thankeſgiuing, he addeth immediatly withall: Sic etiam in Baptiſmo: Euen ſo is it (that is to ſay) The like Change there is in the Water of Baptiſme. In theſe Mutations the Subſtance, as well of the Bread and Wine, as of the Water, remaineth ſtill: But the Reſpect, or Quality, or Accident, is changed. And this is it that S. Ambroſe ſaid before: Sunt quæ erant, & in aliud mutantur: (In Subſtance) they are the ſame they were before: But (in Accident, or Quality) they are turned into another thing.

Chryſ. in Matth. Homil. 83. Ambroſ. De Sacrament. lib. 4. cap. 4.

M. Harding.

And here we put you in mind of your falſifying of Theodorites words, in that ye make him to ſay in your Engliſh, The Myſticall Signes doe remaine in their former Subſtance, Forme, and Kinde, where he ſaith, * not ſo, but in their former Subſtance, Figure, and Shape. Ye know pardy, there is great difference betweene the Kinde of a thing, and his Shape. The oftner ye vſe that falſehood, as ye vſe it very often, the more ſhall ye be eſpied to be falſe Teachers, and grow out of credit where truth is loued.

Theodorite falſied by the Defender.

* Vntruth. Euen ſo he ſaith. Otherwiſe M. Harding hath a Subſtance without Kinde.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

If there be any falſhood or fault herein, by your owne Confeſſion it is the Interpreters, and not the Authors. You know well, Our Contention is not of the Shape of Bread, but of the Subſtance. Theodoretus ſaith: The Bread departeth not from his own Nature, but remaineth ſtill in the former Subſtance, Figure, and Forme. Say you as Theodoretus ſaith: Confeſſe plainely as he doth, that the ſubſtance of the Bread remaineth ſtill, and with good leaue take the Shape vnto your ſelfe.

And yet I ſee no great cauſe why ye ſhould ſo mightily cry out, False Teachers, Falſehood, Falſifying, for that the Interpreter hath expounded this Latine word, Forma, by this Engliſh word, Kinde. For as it is proued before by ſundry examples more at large, in the Ancient Fathers theſe two words, Forma, and Natura, are often vſed for one thing. Athanaſius ſaith: Natura, Eſſentia, Genus, Forma vnum ſunt: Nature, Subſtance, Kinde, and Forme bee all one. Certainely, if the very Subſtance of the Bread ſhould remaine, as Theodoretus ſaith, and yet the Kinde of the Bread ſhould not remaine, it were a wonder. For as there is no Kinde without Subſtance, ſo is there no Subſtance without Kinde.

Anſwer to the place alleged out of S. Auguſtine.

The words which ye recite out of Saint Auguſtines Sermon, Ad Infantes, we finde in Bede vpon the tenth Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. The whole place is this: This thing which yee ſee in the Altar of God, ye haue ſeene it alſo in the night paſt. But what it was, what it meaneth, the Sacrament of how great a thing it conteineth, as yet ye haue not heard. That then which ye ſaw is Bread & Chalice, which euen your eies tell you. But that which your Faith requireth to be inſtructed of, Bread is the Body of Chriſt, the Chalice his Bloud. If the Subſtance of Bread remained, as before conſecration, what need had they to learne what it were? For of themſelues they might know the things propouned to be Bread and Wine. But S. Auguſtine, ye ſay, calleth that they ſaw, Bread and Wine. Yea Sir, ſo it was ſo farre as their eies told. But what their Faith ought to tell them, he inſtructeth them, ſaying: Bread, to wit, is the Holy Body of Chriſt. To this Conſtruction muſt we ſtand, by S. Auguſtine himſelfe ſo ſet forth.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

S Auguſtines words are plaine enough, howſoeuer it like you to ſhadow them with your Gloſſes. Thus he ſaith: Quod vidiſtis, Panis eſt, & Calix: quod vobis etiam oculi veſtri renuntiant: The thing that you ſaw is the Bread, and the Cup: which thing your eies doe report vnto you. Where alſo may be noted, as by the way, that S. Auguſtine, contrarie to your Doctrine, M. Harding, referreth the iudgement hereof to the report and triall of the ſenſes. And againe he ſaith of himſelfe in the like caſe: Vereor ne ipſis Senſibus noſtris facere videamur iniuriam, quando id loquendo ſuademus, vbi omnes vires, officiumque Sermonis facilimè ſuperat euidentia Veritatis: I feare me we ſhould doe wrong vnto our Senſes, if we would goe about to proone that thing by ſpeaking, wherein the euidence of the Truth it ſelfe paſſeth all dutie, and power of Speech.

Aug. ad Dardan. Epiſt. 57.

Howbeit, S. Auguſtine ſaith further: Quod autem Fides veſtra poſtulat inſtruenda, Panis eſt Corpus Chriſti, Calix Sanguis. This obiection may be anſwered by that is ſaid before. Theſe two ſayings are both true. Heſychyus ſaith: Myſterium noſtrum ſimul & Panis & Caro eſt: Our Myſtery is both Bread, and Fleſh It is Bread in Subſtance, and in deed: It is alſo the Body of Chriſt, not in Subſtance, but in a Myſtery. Your own Gloſſe ſaith, as it is before alleged: Dicitur Corpus Chriſti, ſed impropriè: vt ſit ſenſus, Vocatur Corpus Chriſti, id eſt, Significat Corpus Chriſti: It is called the Body of Chriſt, but vnproperly, or not in due and vſuall forme of ſpeech: The meaning there of may be this: It is called Chriſts Body, that is to ſay, It ſignifieth Chriſts Body.

Heſych in Leuit. lib. 2. ca. 8.

De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Hoc eſt quod. In Gloſſa.

In a Sacrament we muſt behold, not only the outward Element, but alſo the thing it ſelfe, whereof it is a Sacrament. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Si ad ipſas res viſibiles quibus Sacramenta tractantur, animum conferamus, quis neſciat eas eſſe corruptibiles? Si autem ad id quod per illas res agitur, quis non videat, Non poſſe corrumpi? If wee conſider the Viſible Creatures, wherein the Sacraments are miniſtred, who knoweth not, they be things corruptible? But if we conſider the thing that is wrought thereby, who ſeeth not, It cannot be corrupted?

Aug. de Baptiſ. contra Donatiſt li. 3. cap. 10.

And in the ſame place before alleged, S. Auguſtine fully expoundeth his owne meaning, in what ſenſe the Bread may be called the Body of Chriſt. Theſe be his words: Chriſtus ſeipſum portauit Corpus ſuum in Cælum, vnde venturus eſt, vt iudicet viuos & mortuos. Ibi eſt modò ſedens ad Dextram Patris. Quomodò eſt Panis Corpus eius? Et Calix, vel quod habet Calix, quomodò eſt Sanguis eius? Iſta, Fratres, ideò dicuntur Sacramenta, quia in eis aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur: Chriſt hath lifted vp his Body into Heauen, from whence he ſhall come to iudge the quick and the dead. There is he now ſitting at the right hand of the Father. How then is the Bread his Body? And the Cuppe, or that is in the Cup, how is it his Bloud? His anſwer is this: O my Brethren, theſe be called Sacraments, for that in them One thing is ſeene, and another thing is vnderſtanded.

Aug. in Serm. ad Infantes.

Thus therefore the thing that we ſée with our bodily eies is the very Nature and Subſtance of Bread: but the thing that we ſée with our Faith, is the very Naturall Body of Chriſt ſitting in Heauen, and repreſented vnto vs in the Myſteries.

Now I beſéech thee good Chriſtian Reader, marke what deſcant M. Harding plaieth vpon theſe words. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Beleeue the iudgement of your eies: M. Harding ſaith: Senſes be deceitfull, Beleeue not the iudgement of your eies. S. Auguſtine ſaith: The thing that you ſee is Bread: M. Harding ſaith: It is not ſo; it is no Bread. So handſomely this Gloſſe groweth to the Text.

The Apologie.

Or, that which Origen ſaith: The Bread wich is Sanctified by the Word of God, as touching the Materiall Subſtance thereof, goeth into the Belly, and is caſt out into the Priuie.

M. Harding.

In alleging Origen, Sir Defender, ye play your accuſtomed falſe play, (a) corrupting his ſentence, and falſifying his words. For they be not as you recite them, but thus: Iſte cibus qui ſanctificatur per Verbum Dei, perque obſecrationem, iuxta id quod habet materiale, in ventrem abit, & in ſeceſſum ejicitur: That meat which is conſecrated by the Word of God, and by Praier, according to that Materiall which it hath, entred. It goeth into the Belly, and is voided forth into the Priuie. Here neither nameth he (b) Bread, as you doe (to cauſe the People to thinke it is but very Bread) but Meat. And that you haue in your Latine, Quod quidem ad materiam attinet: which is by your Interpreter, As touching the materiall Subſtance thereof, (c) it is not Origens, but your owne forged ſtuffe, to deceiue the ignorant withall, to the end they might be moued by your falſe handling of that Doctour, to beleeue the matter and Subſtance of very Bread to remaine. He ſpeaketh not of the (d) matter of Bread, but of that which is Materiall in this Sacrament, meaning the Accidents or Qualities remaining after Conſecration, which be materiall, but not the matter it ſelf of Bread, as Matter is taken for the one part of a perfect Subſtance) (e) and the ſame Accidents be voided forth, as Origen had good cauſe by occaſion of Chriſts word, to declare. you had none to record the ſame. But it liketh your filthy Spirit with vile words to bring that Holy Myſtery, and bleſſed Sacrament into contempt. Wherein yee do the Diuell, Author of Hereſies, the greateſt ſeruice that may be deuiſed.

Origen ſaith.

(a) Vntruth. For we haue corrupted neither word, nor Sentence.

To that Materiall: A proper tranſlation.

(b) Vntruth. For he nameth it Bread ſeuen times in that one place.

(c) Vntruth, vnleſſe you will rather call it the Materiall Accident.

(d) Vntruth. For in the ſame place he ſaith, Nec materia Panis.

(e) Vntruth vain & void of ſenſe. For what Accidents be voided forth?

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Hereſies, Falſe play, Falſhood, Falſifying, Vile words, Filthy Spirits, are now become M. Hardings Ordinarie and Vſuall Eloquence. Were haue we corrupted, (as he ſaith) and belied Origen, for that we place this word (Panis) in ſtead of Cibus: and for that we ſay, Panis quod ad Materiam attinet, in ſtead of theſe words, Cibus iuxta id quod habet Materiale. This (ſaith M. Harding) is forged ſtuffe: This is Horrible and ſhamefull corruption tion to deceiue the ignorant. He that knew not M. Hardings modestie, and maner of writing, would thinke these Tragical termes should beare some weight. For sober men seldome vse thus to cry without some cause. Touching these words, Cibus, Panis, Materiale, Materia, if there be any thing that may mislike him, it shall bee lawfull for him to reforme the same, and to vse either the one word, or the other at his pleasure. We stand onely vpon the Substance of Matter, and seeke no such wanton aduantages by shift of words.

Neuertheleſſe, Origen himſelfe, as it appeareth, was not ſo dangerous in the caſe. For whereas M. Harding ſo sharply ouerlooketh vs for once vſing this word, Panis, in ſtead of Cibus, Origen himſelfe vſeth the ſame word, Panis, ſeuen times together in the ſelfe ſame place without reproofe: Like as S. Paul alſo fiue times in one place calleth it, Panis: And S. Cyril calleth the portions thereof, Fragmenta Panis: Peeces of Bread: And yet were none of theſe euer condemned therefore, as Corrupters and Falſifiers. 1. Corint. 11. Cyrd. in Iohan. lib. 4. cap. 14.

But I beſeech you M. Harding, if this word, Cibus, Meat, which Origen vſeth, and you ſeeme to allow, were not Bread, what kinde of Meat then will you call it? Fleſh, Fiſh or Fruit, I trow it was not. You ſay, Origen meant thereby your Formes, and Accidents, and Shewes of Bread. Now verily this was but a quaſie Meat: And I maruell that euer any wiſe man would call it Meat. Irenæus ſaith: Of the ſame Meat is increaſed, and conſiſteth the Subſtance of our fleſh. And Rabanus ſaith: Sacramentum in alimentum Corporis redigitur: The Sacrament (which is the Bread) is turned into our Bodily nouriſhment. Shewes and Accidents are but a ſimple food to increaſe the Subſtance of our Bodies. Iren. li 5. ca. 4. Augetur, & conſiſtit Carnis noſtræ ſubſtãtia. Raban. Maurus, li. 1. ca. 31.

Touching the other foule fault, M. Harding ſaith, his Accidents & Qualities be things Materiall: but the matter it ſelfe (he ſaith) they be not. But where learned hee this ſtrange Doctrine? What Diuine, what Philoſopher, what Logician, what Sophiſter, what Wiſe man euer taught him thus to ſay? Who euer ſaid that Accidents are things Materiall? It is well knowen, that Materia euer more is Subſtantia, and neuer otherwiſe. Therefore M. Harding might as eaſily haue ſaid, Accidents be things Subſtantiall. Certainly Accidents & Qualities be Accidentales Formæ, and in the Schools are called things Formall: which are as farre from things Materiall, as Fire from Water. Notwithſtanding, theſe men haue power to make of Accidents, Subſtance: of Formes, Matters: of things Formall, things Materiall: and of one contrary, to make another: and al this only of themſelues, without any maner other Authority.

M. Harding ſaith, that the Meat whereof Origen ſpeaketh is a Materiall, (for this is the light and cleereneſſe of his Eloquence) but not Materia: and by this pretty diſtinction he thinketh the whole matter is fully diſcharged, and among the ignorant that cannot iudge, perhaps he may ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat. But Origen himſelfe, that beſt vnderſtood his owne meaning, calleth the ſame Meat, in the ſame place, by expreſſe and plaine words, not only a thing Materiall, or, A Materiall, as M. Harding rather delighteth to call it, but alſo the very Matter of Bread it ſelfe. His words be theſe: Nec Materia Panis, ſed ſuper illum dictus ſermo eſt, qui prodeſt non indignè Domino comedenti: It is not the Matter of the Bread, but the word ſpoken ouer it, that profiteth him that eateth not vnworthily for the Lord. Now iudge thou indifferently, gentle Reader, how iuſt cauſes M. Harding had to moue theſe Tragedies. Origẽ. in Mat. Cap. 15.

Further he ſaith: It liked our filthy Spirit with vile words to bring the Holy Myſteries into contempt, and therein we doe the Diuell great ſeruice. M. H. Harding, ſome other ſpeech would better become a man of your grauity. Such liquor ſeldome floweth from the Spirit of God. Wee neither increaſe, nor diminiſh, nor any way alter the words of Origen, but lay them forth plainly and ſimply as we find them. For thus he writeth: Ille Cibus qui ſanctificatur per Verbum Dei, & per Obſecrationem, iuxta id quod habet Materiale, in ventrem abit, & in ſeceſſum eijcitur. Cæterùm iuxta precationem quæ illi acceſſit, pro portione Fidei fit vtilis: The Meat that is Sanctified by the Word of God, and by Prayer, according to that Materiall part that is in it, paſſeth into the Belly, and ſo foorth into the Priuy, &c. If there be any filthineſſe or Villany herein, it is this ancient Fathers, whom ye ought not ſo vncourteouſly to reuile for Vncleaneſſe of Spirit: it is not ours. Vile ſpeech.

Howbeit, this is not Origens only iudgement, but the general and agreeable Doctrine of all others the Catholike Fathers. And to allege one in ſtead of many, S. Auguſtine ſaith, as he is before alleged: Si ad res ipſas quibus Sacramenta tractantur animum conferamus, quis neſciat eas eſſe corruptibiles? Si ad id quod per illas res agitur, quis non videat non poſſe corrumpi? If we conſider the things themſelues wherein the Sacraments be miniſtred, who knoweth not that they be things corruptible? But if we conſider the thing that is wrought thereby: who ſeeth not that it cannot be corrupted? The holy Fathers ſpeake not Aug. de Baptiſm. cõtra Donatiſt. li. 3. cap. 10.

thus of Christs Body, but of the Bread, which is the Sacrament of Christs Body. So De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Non iſte. saith S. Ambroſe: Non iſte Panis qui vadit in Corpus: ſed Panis Vitæ Æternæ, qui animæ noſtræ Subſtantiam ſuſcit: (The Bread that I meane is) not this Bread (of the Sacrament) that passeth into the Body: but the Bread of Euerlaſting Life, that maintaineth the Subſtance of the Soule.

Vile Speech.

Now if there were such Filthineſſe as you haue imagined in the Holy Learned Biſhops and Doctours of the Church, for vttering theſe and other like words of the corruptible Creatures of Bread and Wine, what cleane ſpirit then is there in them that ſpeake ſo filthily of Christs body it ſelfe, being now Uncorruptible and Glorious, at the Right Hand of the Father? Hereof I had occaſion to ſpeake ſomewhat in my Former Againe he ſaith: Si Canis vel Porcus deglutiret Hoſtiam Conſecratam integram, non video quare Corpus Domini non ſimul naſceretur in ventrem Canis, vel Porci: If a Dogge or Hogge ſhould ſwallow downe the Hoſt Conſecrate being whole, I ſee no cauſe to the contrary, but the Body of Chriſt may paſſe wholl into the belly of the Dogge, or of the Hogge.

Clem. Epiſt. 2. De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Si quis. In Gloſſa. Likewiſe your owne Clemens, whom ye ſo often call the Apoſtles Fellow, writeth thus: Ne murium ſtercora inter fragmenta Dominicæ Portionis appareant: Let not Miſe dung be found among the fragments or peeces of the Lords portion By which Portion he meaneth the Sacrament. Your own Catholike allowed Gloſſe ſaith: Corpus Chriſti poteſt euomi: The Body of Christ may be vomited vp againe.

It abhorreth my heart to vtter theſe words: they bee ſo horrible, and full of Filth. Yet this, M. Harding, is your owne Doctrine: This is your Spirit: This is it that yee haue ſo long maintained with fire and ſword. By ſuch vncleane, and vnciuill ſpeech, yee bring Chriſts Body it ſelfe into contempt, and loathſomeneſſe in the hearts of the people.

But that you may the better ſee the conſent and certainty of your owne Doctrine, whereas you are well content to expound theſe words of Origen, as vndoubtedly ſpoken of the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, your Inſtructer and Maſter Doctour Gardiner telleth you, that the ſame words pertaine nothing at all vnto the Sacrament: And yet vnto what thing elſe they ſhould pertaine, it ſeemeth by the doubtfulneſſe of his Anſwer, hee was neuer well reſolued. His words be theſe: Non de Euchariſtia loquitur Origenes, ſed Auguſtine ſpeaketh. If this tale be true, then is yours vntrue, M. Harding; and all your long Commentary of Formes and Accidents is but in vaine. It were good ye toke a day, that yee may bee better agreed vpon that ye tell vs.

And whereas, to ſhift the matter, ye put your poore Spirituall Formes, and Holy Accidents to all the paines, to paſſe into the bellie, and ſo forth into the draught, and auouch the ſame in ſuch ſober wiſe, as if ye partly vnderſtood what ye ſaid, it may pleaſe you to

For thus they determine the matter quite againſt you: Species illæ aliis cibis non permiſcentur: Non enim in ſtomachum deſcendunt: quare per ſeceſſum non emittuntur: Theſe Formes or Accidents are not mingled with other meats. For they goe not downe into the ſtomacke: and therefore they paſſe not into the Priuie. Now M. Harding, if the Bread be vtterly conſumed, and haue no being at all, and if the Accidents paſſe not into the Priuy, what other thing elſe remaineth there to paſſe that way? It is a ſtrange kinde of paſſage, whereas is nothing to paſſe.

Hereby it may appeare that either the Gloſſe, or M. Harding is in errour. But the Gloſſe is allowed and counted Catholike: therefore the errour muſt bee M. Hardings. Howbeit, to ſay the truth, M. Harding and his Gloſſe two are both in errour.

The Apology.

Or that which Chriſt himſelf ſaid, not only after the bleſſing of the Cup, but alſo after hee had Miniſtred the Communion: I will drink no more of this Fruit of the Vine. It is well knowne that the Fruit of the Vine is Wine, and not Bloud.

of

M. Harding.

Christ (say they) himselfe said, not only after the Blessing of the Cup, but after he had Ministred the Communion, I will drinke no more of this Fruit of the Vine. Hereunto they adde of their own heads, (a) It is well known that the fruit of the Vine is Wine, and not Blood. But this they would signifie, that in the Chalice we haue not Christs Blood, as himselfe said, but meere Wine, as against Christ they labour to perswade.

Cap. 22. But we say, that those words (I will not drinke from henceforth of this generation of the Vine) either were spoken (b) only before the Communion, (c) or only after, (d) or in both times. If they were spoken before the Communion, (which opinion is the more probable) it is very clearely proued by them, that Wine remaineth not as it shall hereafter be deduced.

For these causes it may wel be said, that we should rather follow the order of S. Luke, who witnesseth that Christ spake these words before his maundie, (e) then Mathew, and Marke, who tell it as spoken after. Secondly, the Order of Luke is confirmed by the circumstance of the things that hee describeth, more then the other Euangelists. Now because in the Chalice of the Old Law, there was certainely not Blood, but Wine, (whereas Christ teacheth, that in his Chalice his owne Blood is (f) contained) let the discreet Reader iudge, whether we must not rather thinke that these words of Christ, I will not from henceforth drinke of this generation of the Vine, doe not rather pertaine to the Cup of the Old Law, (as Luke placeth them) then to the Chalice of Christ after the Consecration, whereof Mathew and Marke rehearse them.

Fourthly and lastly, when Mathew and Marke rehearse that Christ said, hee would not from henceforth drinke of that generation of the Vine, they bothe, in much like sort of speaking, adde thereunto these words (which in the Apology are guilefully left out) Vntill that day, when I wil drinke it new with you in the Kingdome of God my Father. If Christ spake of a New drinking, which is to come, by likelihood the drinke past is Old. What exclamation would be sufficient to expresse, that in this (g) weighty point of Saluation our English Clergy are content (h) to blind the people, the right Worshipfull, yea the Honourable of our Country, in so vile a sort, that after many Fathers words misreported & wrongfully wrested, they doubt not to attempt the same in Christs owne sayings, and in those sayings of his which euidently proue the contrary?

Matth. 26. Mark. 14. New drinking.

The Kingdome of God taken two waies. Matth. 3.

But now let vs grant of our free liberality, contrary to many good and strong reasons, that Christ said after Consecration, I will not from henceforth drinke of this generation of the Vine, vntill the Kingdome of God come, then it must be further vnderstanded, that the Kingdome of God is taken in Scripture sometime for the present state of the Church after Christs resurrection of this world, according to that is said oftentimes in Scripture, The Kingdome of God draweth nigh: sometimes also for the ioy of Heauen, as when Christ saith, I dispose for you a Kingdom, as my Father hath disposed for me, that ye may eat and drinke at my Table, &c. Now if we take these words of Christ spoken before Consecration, it is not vnconuenient to vnderstand them of either of both Kingdomes: that is to say, of the Kingdome of Resurrection, or of Glory, as Chrysostome and other do witnesse, because both were to come at that time. But if we take them spoken after Consecration, as we rather vpon confidence of the truth, then for necessity, at this time do grant, then these words (Vntill the kingdome of God come) are to be meant only of the Kingdome of glory. For these holy Mysteries belong to the Kingdom of Christs Resurrection and Ascention. Neither were they practised by the Apostles in the Church of Christ, vntil the holy Ghost came downe vpon them.

Luke 22.

And so the newnesse of it there, is fruition of it, not vnder the formes of Bread and Wine, (i) as wee haue it now, but face to face without al Figure & forme. Then is it to be noted that Christ said not, I wil drinke no more of the Fruit of the Vine, but, I will not from henceforth drinke of this generation of the Vine: Of this I say, whereof now I haue drunken, (k) which is (vnder the Forme of Wine) my Blood, which am the true Vine. For wheras this Apology saith, (it is well knowne that the Fruit of the Vine is Wine, and not Blood) it seemeth to declare that the Authors thereof are ignorant in the holy Scriptures, where (l) they might haue found the Fruit of some Vine to be called Blood. For Iacob said to his sonne Iudas, bearing the Figure of Christ, He shall wash his robe in Wine, and his Cloake in the blood of a Grape. Lo, a Grape hath his Blood: a Grape is the Fruit of the Vine: and therefore it is not well knowne that the Fruit of the Vine is not Blood. The Holy Ghost did in these words of Iacob Prophecie, that Christ the true vine should giue the Grape of his Body to be pressed vpon the Crosse, from whence the Wine was shed (m) which is in our Chalice, as Chrysostome also noteth. And now it is no wonder if we expound the word (Vine) mystically

Genes. 49.

1. Cor. 10.

O what strength truth hath! How plainely she dareth to shew her face, not nipping the Scriptures, nor misse-englishing them, nor dissembling any iot that may seeme to make against her!

(a) Vntruth. For these be S. Chrysostomes words, and not ours. This is M. Hard. vndoubted Certainety.

(e) M. Harding refuseth S. Matthewes, and S. Markes Order.

(f) As by way of a Sacrament. Otherwise it is vntrue.

(g) A weightie point of Saluation; yet M. Hard. himselfe by his cõfession vnderstandeth it not.

(h) Vntruth, vaine and arrogant.

(i) Vntruth, grounded vpon a meere folly.

(k) Vntruth, threapt vpon Christ himselfe.

(l) A fond caual. For we speake only of a Naturall Vine.

(m) As in a Mysterie. Otherwise it is vntrue.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Marke, Gentle Reader, how mightilie M. Harding wrestleth, and what paines hee taketh to draw this place to his purpose. First hee assureth vs for certaine, That Christ spake these Words Before the consecration: and that therefore they pertaine nothing to the Sacrament. 1

Neuertheless, afterward hee granteth, as hee saith, of his free liberality, That Christ spake the same words After the Consecration: and that they pertaine specially to the Sacrament. 2

And yet againe, vpon further affiance and boldnesse of the cause, he seemeth to say, It may be that Christ spake the same words at both times: that is, as well After the Consecration as Before. 3

Againe he saith: S. Lukes rehearsal is more likely then S. Matthews, for that S. Luke writeth each thing in Order: and S. Mathew out of Order. 4

5 Againe: One Cuppe is first the Wine of the Old Testament: And immediatly after: The same Cuppe is the Wine of the New Testament.

6 The Fruit of the Vine

Againe: The Kingdome of God sometime is the state of the Church, sometime it is the state of Glory. Againe: The fruit of the Grape sometime is very Naturall Wine, sometime it is the very blood of Christ. Notwithstanding, Steuen Gardiner saith, that neither the Naturall Wine, nor Christs very Blood, but the Accidents and Formes are the Fruits of the Vine. Yet againe he saith: Christ dranke his owne very Blood at the Supper: and euen now himselfe drinketh the same his owne Blood in the Kindome of Heauen.

7 Anton. Constãtinus ad obiectum 27.

In the end M. Harding, after he hath well wandred, and walked himselfe, both Before, and After: In Order, and out of Order: This way, and that Way: with the Old Cuppe, and with the new: and hath well stated himselfe by coniectures and likelihoods: at the last he bloweth vp the Triumph with a lolly courage, and crieth out with an end of an Old Song: O what strength Truth hath, and how plainely she dareth to shew her face!

8 Before. After.

Here by the way a man might demand of M. Harding, notwithstanding the great Confidence he pretendeth to haue in his cause: If Christ spake these words Before the Consecration of the very Naturall Wine of the Grape, and of the Ceremoniall Cuppe of the Old Law, how dranke he then afterward of the same Naturall Wine of the Grape, after a New Sort? Or how was the same Naturall Wine fulfilled in the Kingdome of God? If Christ spake the same words After the consecration, the Substance of Wine by these mens fantasie being vtterly abolished, and nothing there remaining, but onely the Accidents, how was it then the Fruit, or generation of the Vine? Thus howsoeuer he take it, either Before, or After, he shall hardly be able to shift his hands.

But to leaue these vnfruitfull ghesses vntill M. Harding hath better agreed with himselfe vpon some certainety, we say that the Cuppe of Blessing, which Christ calleth the Cup of the New Testament, notwithstanding it were made in a Mystery the Sacrament of Christs Blood, yet in Nature and Substance was very Wine still, and, as Christ himselfe calleth it, The very fruit and generation of the Grape, as it was before.

Matth. 26. The words of the Euangelist S Mathew are very plaine: He tooke the Cuppe: and when he had giuen thankes, he gaue it them, saying, Drinke yee all of it: for this is my blood of the New Testament, that is shed for many for the Remission of Sinnes. I say vnto you, that I will not drinke henceforth of this Fruit of the Vine, vntill that day when I shall drinke it New with you in the Kingdome of my Father. To auoid the manifest truth of this rehersall, M. Harding saith: S. Mathew vttered one thing for another: the Latter for the Former: the Cuppe Consecrate for the Cup Vnconsecrate: and placed his matters out of order. And by this poore shift he thinketh the plaine Story of the Gospell is fully answered.

But let vs see what the Learned Fathers haue iudged, and written in this behalfe. So shall the weight of these coniecturall ghesses, and the Face of M. Hardings Truth, which he so much magnifieth without cause, the better appeare. Clemens Alexandrinus heereof writeth thus: Quòd Vinum esset, quód benedictum est, Christus ostendit, dicens Discipulis, Non bibam ex Fructu Vitis huius, donec bibero ipsum vobiscum in Regno Patris mei: That it was Wine that was blessed (at the Supper) Christ himselfe shewed his Disciples, saying, I will no more drinke of the Fruit of this Vine, vntil I shall Drinke it with you in the Kingdome of my Father. Clemens in Padagogo, lib. 2. cap. 2.

S. Basil saith: Fructus terræ genituras & genimina, non Natos appellamus: Non enim bibam, inquit, de genimine Vitis huius: We call the Fruits of the Earth, the Generations, or Springs of the Earth: But the Children of the Earth we do not call them. For so saith Christ: I will no more drinke of the generation of this Vine. Here the Wine that Christ hath blessed is called by S Basil, after the time of Consecration, not onely the Generation of the Vine, but also the Fruit of the Earth. Whatsoeuer it shall please M. Harding to thinke of the sense hereof, he must néeds confesse the words are very plaine. Likewise saith S. Cyprian: Dominus Sanguinem suum Vinum appellauit, de botris & acinis plurimis expressum, atque in Vinum coactum: The Wine pressed out of clusters and many Grapes, and so made Wine, our Lord called his Blood. S. Augustine saith: Et Vinum fuit in Redemptionis nostræ Mysterio, cùm Dominus diceret, Non bibam amodò de hoc genimine Vitis: There was Wine in the Mystery, or Sacrament of Our Redemption, when Our Lord said, I will no more Drinke henceforth of this Fruit of the Vine. Basil. contra Eunom. lib. 2. Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist 6. August. de Eccleiast. Dogmatib. cap. 75.

Here note thou, good Reader, how handsomely S. Augustine and M. Harding agrée together. S Augustine saith plainely, It was the Sacrament: M. Harding saith plainely, It was not the Sacrament. S. Augustine saith, These words were spoken after the Consecration: M. Harding findeth fault with S. Matthewes Order, and saith, They were spoken before the Consecration. S. Augustine following the plaine words of Christ, saith, It was Wine:

Wine: M. Harding, following his owne words, against both S. Augustine and Christ too, saith vndoubtedly: It was no Wine.

Againe S. Augustine saith: Dominus per Vini Sacramentum, commendat Sanguinem suum. Quid enim aliud, Nouum vinum, nisi immortalitatem renouandorum Corporum intelligere debemus? Our Lord by the Sacrament, (not of Formes or Accidents, but) of Wine, commendeth vnto vs his Blood. For what other thing may we vnderstand the New Wine to be, but the Immortality of our Bodies that shall bee renewed? S. Chrysostome saith: Cùm Dominus hoc Mysteriũ traderet, Vinum tradidit. Et iam post Resurrectionem sine Mysterijs in simplici mensa vino vsus est. Ex genimine, ait, Vitis: quæ certè Vinum, non Aquam producit: Our Lord when he deliuered this Mystery, deliuered (not Accidents, but) Wine. And after his Resurrection, being at a plaine table without the Mysteries, he vsed Wine. For so he saith: Of the Fruit of the Vine: which Vine surely beareth, not Water, but Wine.

August. Quæ. Euangeliear. lib. 1. cap 43.

Chrys. in Mat. homil. 83.

The Fruit of the Vine

M. Harding saith: Whosoeuer expoundeth these words as spoken of the Mysteries, belieth both the holy Fathers and Christ himselfe. S. Chrysostome expoundeth the same words, as spoken of the Mysteries, and to that purpose applieth the words of Christ. Therefore by M. Hardings conclusion, He belieth both the Holy Fathers, and Christ himselfe.

In like maner S. Hierome saith: Christus in Typo Sanguinis sui non obtulit Aquam, sed Vinum: Christ in the Signification of his Blood, offered not Water, but Wine. By these few, I trust, it may easily appeare to the indifferent Reader, how iust cause M. Harding had thus to proclaime, and publish the Face, as hee saith, of his Truth: and with such courage and countenance to cry out, that wee haue willfully corrupted the words of Christ.

Hier. aduersus Iouinian. lib. 2. pag. 74. tom. 2.

M. Harding saith further: These Defenders adde of their owne heads, It is well knowne, that the fruit of the Vine is Wine, and not Blood. I thought M. Harding would not haue picked so simple a quarrel to these words, of whose head soeuer they had bẽ added. For, I trow, he hath but seldome heard or seene, that a Naturall Vine hath borne Naturall Blood. Howbeit, these words proceeded not altogether of our own heads. S. Chrysostome also of his head vttereth the same. For thus he writeth: Ex genimine Vitis: quæ certè Vinum producit, non Aquam: Of the Fruit of the Vine: which Vine verily bringeth foorth not Water, but Wine. S. Cyprian saith: Inuenimus Vinum fuisse, quod Dominus Sanguinem suum dixit: We finde it was Wine, that our Lord called his Blood. And Dionysius, Lyra, and other like Doctors of M. Hardings owne side, say, De hoc genimine Vitis: id est, de Vino, quod generatur in Vinea: Of this Fruit of the Vine: that is to say, Of the Wine that groweth of the Vine.

Chrys. in Mat. homil. 83.

Cyprian. lib. 2. Epist. 3.

Dionysius & Lyra. in Mat. cap. 26.

Againe, M. Harding saith: It is to be noted, that Christ said not, I will drinke no more of the Fruit of the Vine; But I will not from henceforth drinke of this generation of the Vine; as if there were some maruellous great difference betweene these two words, Fruit and Generation. And this thing (he saith) is well worthy to be noted. Verily, the difference betweene these two words, is as great, as is the difference betweene Ensis and Gladius: or, Liber and Codex; betweene which words, sound only excepted, it is hard to discerne, whether is other. M. Harding saith, It is to be noted, that Christ said not, I will drinke no more of the Fruit of the Vine. Yet S. Hilary saith: Bibentes ex Vitis istius fructu: Drinking of the Fruit of this Vine. If these words as being doubtfully spoken, may bee shifted into some other sense: Yet Clemens Alexandrinus, as he is before alledged, and as he is translated by Gentianus Herueetus, saith plainely: Non bibam sed de hoc Fructu Vitis; I will no more Drinke of this Fruit of the Vine. And S. Cyprian somewhat in plainer wise saith: Non bibam ex ista Creatura Vitis; I will no more Drinke of this Creature of the Vine. Therefore I thinke M. Harding himselfe will say, This note was not greatly worth the noting.

Hilarii in Mat. Canon. 30.

Clemens in Pædagog lib. 2 c. 2

Cyprian. lib. 2. epist. 3.

Yet further he saith: These defenders seeme to be ignorant of the holy Scriptures: where they might haue found the Fruit of some vine to be called Blood. For Iacob said of Christ, He shal wash his Robe in Wine, and his Cloake in the Blood of a Grape. It is a hard shift, M. Harding, so suddenly to conuey the matter from ordinary vse of speech, vnto an Allegorie. We speake of a Naturall growing Vine, which we say, beareth not Blood, but only Wine. But, as touching, that ye say, Christ is sometimes called a Vine in the Holy Scriptures, it is onely an Allegorie, or a Figure of speech. And in that sort, he is called also sometimes a Lambe, and sometimes a Rocke. For although Christ for certaine properties, may be resembled vnto a Vine, yet is he not therefore verily, and indeed a Naturall growing Vine; no more then he is a Naturall Lambe, yeaned of a Ewe, or a Naturall growing Rocke. Therefore it was great violence, thus to force the words of the Scriptures to this purpose. Otherwise, by the like phrase of speech one saith: Lachryma est quidam animæ Sanguis; A teare is a certaine Blood of the Soule. And S. Augustine saith: Vident Sanguinem Corporum; Animarum

Animarum Sanguinem non vident: They see the Blond of the Bodies, but the Blood of the Androcides. Soules they see not. Another called Wine, Terræ Sanguinem: The Blood of the Earth.
Yet may not M. Harding therefore say, that either the Soul of Man, or the Mould of the Earth, indeed hath Naturall and Reall and Very Blood. These be only certaine Figures and Formes of speech. But Christ, when he said, I will no more Drinke of this Fruit of the Vine, spake plainely and simply, and without Figure. And therefore Chrysostome saith, as it is alledged before: Ex genimine Vitis: quæ certè Vinum producit, non Aquam: Of Chrys. in Mat. hæ. homil. 83. the Fruit of the Vine: Which Vine verily bringeth forth, not Water but Wine. But Chry-sostome saith: The Wine that was shed from Christs Body, that is to say, the Blood of Christ Chrys. 1. Cor. 10. homil. 24. is in the Cup. This is true as in a Mystery, or by a Figure of speech: because Christs Blood is represented in the Cup. Otherwise, if we speake simply and plainely, and without Figure, Chrysostome saith: In Vasis Sanctificatis non est ipsum Corpus Christi: sed Myste-Chrys. in Opere imper. hom. 11. rium Corporis eius continetur: In the Sanctified Vessels, there is not the very Body of Christ indeed: but a Mysterie of that Body is therein contained.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Division 1.

And in speaking thus, we meane not to abase the Lords Supper, or to teach, that it is but a cold Ceremony onely, and nothing to bee wrought therein: (as many falsly slander vs, we teach.) For we affirme, that Christ doth truly and presently giue himselfe wholly in his Sacraments: In Baptisme, that we may put him on: and in his Supper, that we may Eat him by Faith and Spirit, and may haue euerlasting Life by his Crosse and Blood. And we say not, this is done sleightly or coldly, but effectually & truly. For although we do not touch the Body of Christ with teeth and mouth, yet we hold him fast, and eat him by Faith, by Understanding, and by Spirit. And it is no vaine Faith, that comprehendeth Christ: neither is it receiued with cold deuotion, that is receiued with Understanding, Faith, and Spirit. For Christ himselfe altogether is so offered, and giuen vs in these Mysteries, that we may certainly know we be Flesh of his Flesh, and Bone of his Bones: and that Christ continueth in vs, and we in him.

(a) Vntruth: two together. For we neuer called it either Bakers bread or onely Figure.
(b) Vntruth. For Christs death is as present as his Body.
(c) Whatsoeuer corruptible creature is honored as God, it is an Idoll.
(d) Vntruh standing in wrong exposition. For Chrysostome saith, Ascende ad cœli portas: imò non cœli, sed cœli cœlorum.
(e) Vntruth grounded vpon a dreame. No learned Doctor euer said thus.
(f) The Bread is for vs, not wee for the Bread.
(g) Christ made: Christ wrought: A strange Diuinitie.
(h) Vntruth. For M. Harding well knoweth that this fond folly was neuer Catholike.

M. Harding.

It is easie to be perceiued who abaseth more our Lords Supper, whether ye, that reach it to be very (a) Bakers Bread and Wine with the (a) onely Figure of Christs Body and Blood, or we who beleeue it to be his true Body and Blood, with the only Formes of Bread and Wine. (Of which Formes neither Christ, nor his Apostles euer told vs one word) Whether ye, that will haue it a Figure of Christs whole Body absent, or we, who will haue Christs Body present indeed, with a Figure of his Death, which (h) Death is absent only. Whether ye, that call it an (c) Idol when it is worshipped, or we that doe according to our dutie adore it, because that Reiall Body (as Chrysostome saith) which is set before vs (d) to bee seene now in Earth, is worthy of the most high Honour. But whether of those two is the colder Ceremony and more simple Supper, to haue Bread and Wine with a signe only of Flesh and Blood, or to haue Reall Flesh and Blood, with such forme of Bread and Wine, as (e) by the power of God do no lesse bodily nourish vs, then the Substance it selfe would haue done: we doubt not of wise mens iudgement. Ye haue your Carnall Bankets fat, and full enough of the best flesh, and it is with you superstitious to eat dry and Lenten Meats. But ye will haue your spiritual Bankets so leane and Carrien, as a man may well discerne whether ye haue more fantasie to your Flesh or to your Spirit.

By whom is our Lords Supper not abased, by the Deuoters, or by the Catholikes.

Ye write, that many falsly slander you, saying that ye teach nothing to be wrought in the Lords Supper whereas ye affirme, that Christ doth truly and presently giue his own selfe in his Supper, that we may eat him by Faith and Spirit. And other work in the Lords Supper ye shew none. And this which ye shew a man may doubt, whether it be a thing wrought in the Lords Supper, or no. Wel may ye say, that it is a thing wrought in them which come to the Supper; but that it is wrought in the Supper it self ye shew it not: the Supper being that which is called Cœna, to wit, the meat receiued, not Cœnatio, which is the act of Supping. For sith that Supper is nothing else but meat and drinke set vpon the Table to be receiued by such as come vnto it, that which is wrought in the Lords Supper, must be wrought (f) in the meat & drink which our Lord hath at his Table. And as the matter wherof our Lords Supper is made, is Bread and Wine; so the Supper made thereof is our Lords Body and Bloud, into which the Bread and Wine by the Almighty power of the Word is changed. So that if ye will shew Christ himselfe to be (g) made or (h) wrought in our Lords Supper, ye must shew Bread and Wine to be changed into Christ himselfe, and so to be Eaten of his Faithfull at his Table. But whereas there are three things, Christ that maketh the Supper, the Communicants that receiue the Supper, and the Supper it self; ye say, that Christ for his part giueth his own self verily present, likewise that the Communicants for their part Eat him by Faith and Spirit. And so ye shew that the maker of the Supper worketh, and that the Communicants worke. But all this while ye shew vs not what is wrought in the matter of the Supper, that is to say, in the Bread and Wine, nor what is made of them. O great slander that ye were charged withall, which now so much as by your owne word ye are discharged of.

The Sacramentaries teach nothing to be wrought in the Lords Supper. 1. Cor. 11. What is Supper properly.

How

The proper worke of our Lords Supper.

How much founder is the (i)Catholike Doctrin, which teacheth the proper worke of our Lords Supper to be the turning of the substance of Bread and Wine into his Body & Blood? Which work because ye will not confesse, ye haue deuised a worke of your owne working, which is not proper to our Lords Supper. For if I can receiue Christ in my house at home by Faith & Spirit, how is that worke(k) proper to his Supper, which may be wrought without his Supper? Or can I not beleeue in Christ, or lift vp my Spirit vnto him, (l) except I come to Supper? Or if I doe call for Christ, doth hee not giue himselfe, by grace vnto me?

How make the Defenders Christ verily present in his Supper.

But (say ye) at the Lords Supper Christ giueth himselfe verily present. To what purpose, I pray you? That we may Eat him (say ye) by Faith and Spirit. Well reasoned forsooth. Haue ye forgotten the giuing to eat, & eating that, which is giuen, to be Relatiues, one of the hauing relation to the other? If Christ doe exhibite himselfe verily present as your Latin text hath, or giuen his own selfe verily & presently, as your Interpreter telleth your tale for you (m) doth not he so exhibite or giue himselfe, as he will be receiued? Or doth he shew in one hand a peece of Bread & with the other strike vs on the head with a stone? If he giue himselfe verily present, as ye say, we take him verily Present. And then (vnlesse yee meath by himselfe, his grace which is of Christ, and not of Christ himselfe) we eat him verily present, not only by Faith and Spirit, but by taking him into (n) our Mouth and Body if it please him at any time to be eaten by Faith and Spirit alone, (after which sort he is daily eaten by those that humbly call vpō him) then he giueth not himselfe verily Present, but by faith & Spirit, other wise named grace, or some spiritual effect of his working. But in our Lords Supper the Scripture requireth a special & peculiar presence of Christ to wit, of his flesh, so as it may be eaten. If thē he giue himself verily present, as ye say, he is present in his own person, God & Man, with Body, with Bloud, with Soule, with Godhead If ye meane the very presence of his Godhead, that presence belongeth no more to Christ, then to the Father, & to the holy Ghost And so haue ye not declared any peculiar presence belonging to his Supper. For by Presence of his Godhead he is alwaies verily present, as well before Supper, as at or after Supper: because he filleth Heauen and Earth. It remaineth that either ye vnderstand not your selues, or wilfully deceiue that infinite number of Soules, for whose sake Christ hath shed his Bloud.

The presēce of Christ in Baptisme and in the Supper is distinct, which the defenders make to be like.

(n) Your error in making the Presence of Christ in Baptisme like to his presence in the Supper is too grosse. For although Christ worke both our Regeneration & our nourishment by his diuine Sacraments, yet in Baptism our Regeneration is by name attributed in the Gospel to the holy Ghost also, to shew that Christs presence there is spirituall. But his Supper consisteth of his Body & Blood, which are so vnited to Christ, as they are peculiar to the second person in God. Againe, forasmuch as they are receiued into vs, as food to nourish our Bodies to Resurrection, (o) as the Gospel saith, and no mans Body is otherwise nourished then by Eating indeed that meat whereof he is nourished, and the Flesh of Christ as himself saith is meat indeed, and his Bloud drink indeed; we are forced to beleeue another manner of presēce in the sacrament of the Altar, then in Baptisme. And therfore ye haue handled this matter too sleightly and coldly.

Wee touch Christs Body, and eat it with our Mouth, and how.

Ioh. 6. Cor. Hom. 24.

Ioh. Sentent. Prosp.

The Defenders imaginary holding of Christ, holdeth not Christ as hee is in the Sacrament. Matth 26.

Where as ye say, we do not touch the body of Christ with Teeth and Mouth, (p) are ye so accustomed to swallow downe whole morsels, as ye neuer touch them with your Teeth? Or haue ye learned to eat that, which ye touch not with your Mouth? If Christ said, Take, Eat, this is my Body and the Apostles took & Eat the same neither could they take & Eat without touching: it seemeth ye handle eating too sleightly & coldly, when ye will haue it without touching. Chrysostome a more Substantiall handler of things then any of you is, saith of Christs Body, Quod omnium maximum est, atque principium, intra nos non coepit tantum, sed tota gustaque sumitur, sed comedit, & en accepto domum redit. Of all things that be in earth what is the greatest & the chiefest, (q) that dost thou not only see, but toucheste neither only dost thou touch it, but also eat it, & hauing receiued it, thou goest home againe. How we touch it wee know, for it is not now a mortall and corruptible Body, wherein we may fasten our teeth, but glorious and immortall, (r) and therefore we touch it by the reason of the Accidents of Bread and Wine, with whose Forms (as S Augustine speaketh) it is couered or vailed; and so commeth it to our Teeth, and to our Mouth, & nourisheth both our bodies and Soules to life Euerlasting. Nay but we (say ye) hold him fast & eat him by Faith, by Vnderstanding and by the Spirit. I pray you be not too hastie to hold him before yee haue him How come ye by him? His grace he giueth diuers waies, but himselfe bodily and presently as man, he neuer promised to giue otherwise, then when he said, Take, Eat, this is my Body. And then Iudas (s) (who had but a very mean Faith) because he receiued the sacrament receiued him also. And our Blessed Lady altho ugh she had a most perfect Faith, receiued him not after that sort, because then she receiued not the Sacrament. How can ye assure your selues that your faith taketh the body of Christ, (t) which was neuer promised to your Faith? If your Faith take him not as he is in the Sacrament, how can your Faith hold him fast there? As heer before ye haue said much, & proued little against the Real Presēce, wresting and stretching certain Fathers sentences, and the scripture it self to that purpose, not wholly & faithfully but by peece meale & patchedly alleged, so as ye might best make them serue to the maintenance of your false Doctrine: right so in the conclusion of that part of your Apology, with a like grace ye heap a number of mangled authorities together, whereby to perswade, that forasmuch as the fathers haue aduertised vs to lift vp our minds to Heauenward, we should not think wee eat the Flesh of Christ as being heere present with vs vnder the Forme of Bread. Therefore whereas ye lay to the Catholikes charge, as though by their Sacrilege the people were bereft of a great benefit, in that they be taught to one contēt with the one kind, vnder the same receiuing no lesse then if they had both: How much more worthily are ye to be charged with the crime of Sacrilege, that (v) robbe them of the greatest Treasure that is in the Church, so much as in you lieth, the Body & Bloud of our Lord and instead therof pretend to deliuer vnto them a peece of Bakers Bread, and a Cup of Wine? But let vs see what good reason or authority ye bring out of the Fathers against the true presence of Christ in the Blessed Sacrament.

(i) Vntruth. For Abraham and Isaack receiued Christs very Body, before the Sacrament was ordained. It is not peculiar to the Supper.

(k) Such vnchristian scornes, against Christs ordinances are very vnseemly.

(l) Christ offereth himself vnto our Faith, and by our Faith hee is receiued.

(n) Vntruth. For the purest & best learned Fathers haue maintained the same as shall appeare.

(o) Vntruth. For there is no such word in all the Gospell.

(p) Heathenish and vnchristian speeche.

(q) As you see Christs body in the sacrament, euen so yee vse it, and no other wise. Ambrose saith: Fides christiana dat: Non tenetur corpore.

(r) Vntruth, childish & manyory. The learned Fathers neuer knew those follies.

(s) Iudas had a very mean Faith.

(t) Vntruth, as shall appeare. But where was Christs body promised to your Mouthes

(v) Vntruth For we rob them not but offer them indeed & verily the body of Christ: & shew them where and wherwith they may receiue it.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

D. Harding, your conscience knoweth, and will testifie against your selfe, that wee neuer called the holy Sacrament of Christs Body, Bakers Bread, no more then we call the Sacrament of Baptisme, a Paile of Water. Wee haue alwaies spoken honourably, and and reuerently thereof, as it was mæte wee ſhould ſpeake of the Myſteries of the Death of Chriſt, and as the Holy Catholike Fathers, haue euermoze vſed to ſpeake beſoze vs.

Theſe wilde, and wanton, and vnſæmely ſpæches, agree rather with your Doctrine. Foz call your owne wozds a little to remembzance. In your firſt Anſwer ye call the Holy Sacrament, as it is vſed and Miniſtred by vs, accozding to the Ozder of the Holie Fathers, A peece of Bread not worth a point: In this place yee call the Holy Miniſtration, ſo vſed by vs, A leane, and a Carrien Banket: In the nert diuiſion yee call it A Toy. Theſe bee your wozds, M. Harding, and may well ſtand, both with the Sobziety of your Spirit, and alſo with the whole ſubſtance and tenour of your Religion.

Auguſt. contra Maximin. lib. 3. cap. 22.

We call it, The Sacrament of Thankſgiuing, and, The Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood. And with the Holy Father S. Auguſtine we ſay: In Sacramentis Videndum eſt, non quid ſint, ſed quid ſignificent: In Sacraments we muſt conſider, not what they bee (in themſelues) but what they ſignifie.

Chryſoſt. in Geneſ. Homil. 24.

We haue no ſpeciall regard to the Bzead, Wine, oz Water: Foz they are Creatures Cozruptible, as well after Conſecration, as they were beſoze: But wee direct our Faith Onely vnto the very Body and Blood of Chriſt: not as being there Really and Fleſhly Pzeſent, as ye haue imagined, but as ſitting in Heauen at the Right Hand of God the Father. The Holy Father Chryſoſtome ſaith, although in generall wozds, not ſpeaking ſpecially of this Sacrament: Oculi Fidei, quando vident hæc ineffabilia bona, ne ſentiunt quidem hæc viſibilia. Tantum inter hæc & illa intereſt: The eies of our Faith, when they behold theſe vnſpeakable good things, they do not ſo much as mark theſe outward things that wee ſee with our Bodily eies. So great is the difference betweene theſe things. And hærein reſteth the groſſeneſſe of your errour, that ye diuide not the one thing from the other.

Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract. 26.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Aliud eſt Sacramentum, aliud res Sacramenti: The Sacrament of Chriſts Body is one thing, and the Subſtance of the Sacrament (oz Chriſts Body repzeſented by the Sacrament) is another thing. And againe he ſaith: Ea demùm eſt miſerabilis animi ſeruitus, Signa pro rebus accipere: To take the Signes (oz Sacraments) in ſtead of the things themſelues (that be Signified, as M. Harding doth) is the miſerable bondage of the Soule.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3 cap. 5.

In like maner Origen ſaith: Simpliciores neſcientes diſtinguere, ac ſecernere, quæ ſint, quæ in Scripturis Diuinis Interiori homini, quæ verò Exteriori deputanda ſint, vocabulorum ſimilitudinibus falſi, ad ineptas quaſdam Fabulas, & figmenta inania ſe contulerunt: Simple men not able to diſcerne in the holy Scriptures, what things ought to be applied to the Outter Man, and what to the Inner, being deceiued by the likeneſſe of words, haue turned themſelues to a ſort of peeuiſh Fables and vaine Fantaſies.

Origen in Prologo in Cantica Canticor.

You call our Doctrine naked and cold, foz that we ſay, The Sacrament is a Figure. And yet becauſe ye cannot in any wiſe denie, but the ſame wozd Figure, to the ſame purpoſe is commonly vſed of all the ancient Catholike Fathers, and Dozors of the Church: therfoze ye thought it good to qualifie, and to mince the matter, and to ſay, It is a Figure, not of the Body, but of the Death of Chriſt. And hære it is a wozld to ſee, how pitifully yee trouble your ſelfe with your variety, and change, and ſhift of Figures.

M. Harding. Arti. 12. Diuiſion. 2.

Firſt you ſay, The Sacrament by the iudgement of Damaſcene, is called a Figure before the Cõſecration, that is to ſay, beſoze the Sacrament be a Sacrament. Foz beſoze Conſecration it is no Sacrament. Afterward vpon better aduice, ye ſay, The Formes onely, and the Shewes and Accidents are the Figure of Chriſts Body. Again you ſay, Chriſts Body Inuiſible, is a Figure of Chriſts Body Viſible: that is to ſay, A thing vncertaine, is a Figure of a thing moſt certain. Now laſt of all, ye ſay, as, I think, no man euer ſaid beſoze, the very Body of Chriſt it ſelfe is a Figure of the Death of Chriſt. Thus many pzety ſtrange vnknowne Figures, ye are dziuen to deuiſe, thereby to auoide, one ſimple, plaine, vſuall and common Figure. Foz, to leaue an infinite number of other ancient Fathers, S. Auguſtine ſaith: Dominus Figuram Corporis ſui Diſcipulis ſuis commendauit, & tradidit: Our Lord commended and deliuered to his Diſciples a Figure (not as ye ſay, of his Death, but) of his Body.

Aug. in Pſal 3.

Whereas you ſay, The body of Chriſt is preſent indeed, and that his Death is abſent onelie: If ye lift to cauill, as ye doe, and as your manner is, idlely to play with the wozds and phzaſes of the ancient Fathers, ye might as wel and by as good warrant ſay, that Chriſts Death is as pzeſent as his Body. Foz S. Cyprian ſaith: Paſſio Chriſti eſt Sacrificium, quod offerimus: The Sacrifice that we offer, is the Paſſion of Chriſt. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In Myſterijs Mors Chriſti perficitur: The Death of Chriſt is wrought in the Myſteries. S. Hierome ſaith: Chriſtus nobis quotidiè Crucifigitur: Vnto vs, Chriſt is Crucified euery day And S. Gregory ſaith: Chriſtus iterum in hoc Myſterio Moritur: In this Myſterie (of the holy Communion) Chriſt is put to death againe. By theſe wozds, thus pzeſſed and rackt, as your your maner is, ye may eaſily proue, not only that Chriſts Body, but alſo that his Paſſion, and Death, and Bloodſheading is verily preſent. De Con. Diſt. 2. Quid ſit.

Cyprian. lib. 2. epiſt. 3. Chryſ. in Acta, homil. 2. Hieronym. in Pſal. 97. De Con. Diſt. 2. Quid ſit.

Ye ſay, Ye adore the Sacrament with godly Honour. We anſwer you, as Chriſt ſometime anſwered the woman of Samaria, Vos adoratis, quod neſcitis: Ye adore and worſhip ye know not what. For who euer willed you thus to Adore the Sacrament? Who taught you, who bade you ſo to doe? What Prophet? What Apoſtle? What Father? What Doctour of the Church? Iohan. 4.

Chriſts Death. Abſent or Preſent.

But here, M. Harding, ye doe vs great wrong, to ſay, we call Chriſts Body an Idol, ſauing that ye haue a Charter to ſpeake what ye liſt. For we know and haue euermore confeſſed with Chryſoſtome, that the Body of Chriſt is worthy of the higheſt Honour: and we Adore it, and worſhip it, euen as the very Body of the Sonne of God. Howbeit, as it is ſaid before, Chriſts Body is one thing, and the Sacrament is another. The Sacrament is in Earth: Chriſts Body is in Heauen, at the Right hand of God the Father. And therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith in the ſame place: Aſcende ergo ad Cœli portas, & diligenter attende: imò non Cœli, ſed Cœli Cœlorum: & tunc, quod dicimus intueberis: Mount vp therfore vnto the gates of Heauen, and diligently conſider: Nay, I ſay not, vnto the gates of Heauen, but vnto the gates of the Heauen of Heauens: and ſo ſhall you ſee the things, that we ſpeake of. Chryſ. 1 Cor. Homil. 24. Chryſoſt in eadem Hom.

But what meant you, M. Harding, thus out of ſeaſon to preſſe in with your Lenten Argument, I to ſay, It is Superſtitious with you, to eat drie & Lenten Meats? If ye ſay, there can be no Superſtition in choice of meats, either ye are deceiued your ſelfe, or elſe ye ſeeke occaſion by the way to deceiue others.

Tertullian ſaith: Deus ventre non colitur, nec cibis, quos Dominus dicit perire, & in ſeceſſu, naturali Lege purgari. Nam, qui per eſcas Dominum colit, prope eſt, vt Dominum habeat ventrem ſuum: God is not honoured with the Belly, nor with meats, which the Lord Chriſt ſaith, do periſh: and are purged in conueiance by Naturall Order. For who ſo by meats honoureth the Lord, in a maner maketh his Belly to be his Lord. S. Hilary ſaith: Hæretici ſicco Panis Cibo viuunt. Sed quis tandem otioſi huius propoſiti profectus eſt? Totum hoc inane atque ridiculum eſt, & cum ipſis Superſtitionis cauſis miſerabile: Hereticks liue by drie bread: But what profit is there in this idle purpoſe? It is altogether vaine and fooliſh, and in reſpect of the cauſes of their Superſtition, it is alſo miſerable. Tertull. in epiſt. de cibis Iudaicis. Hilar. in Pſal. 64.

S. Hierome ſaith: Quid prodeſt oleo non veſci, & moleſtias quaſdam difficultateſque ciborum quærere, Caricas, Piper, Nuces, Palmarum fructus, Simulam, Mel, Piſtacia? Audio præterea, quoſdam contra regulam, hominumque Naturam, aquam non bibere, nec veſci Pane: ſed ſorbitiunculas delicatas, & contrita olera, betarumque ſuccum, non Calice ſorbere, ſed Concha: Pro pudor. Non erubeſcimus iſtiuſmodi ineptijs? nec tædet Superſtitionis? Inſuper etiam famam abſtinentiæ in delicijs quærimus: What auaileth it to eat no Oile, and with paine and much adoe, curiouſly to ſeeke for meats, Figs, Pepper, Nuts, Dates, fine white Bread, Hony, and Piſtacia? Beſide this, I heare ſay, there be ſome, which contrarie to the common order and nature of men, will neither drinke Water nor eat Bread: but ſeek for delicate ſuppings, and Herbs ſhred together, and the iuice of Beets, and receiue the ſame, not out of a Cup, but out of a ſhel Fie for ſhame: Do we not bluſh at ſuch fooliſhneſſe? Are we not weary of ſuch ſuperſtition? And yet beſide all this, liuing in ſuch curious delicacie, we ſeeke to be praiſed for our faſting. To leaue all others, Eraſmus, a man of great iudgement, ſaith: Maior eſt in his rebus Superſtitio apud Chriſtianos, quàm vnquam fuit inter Iudæos: There is more ſuperſtition heerein among Chriſtians, then euer was among the Iewes. We weigh not the choice of Fiſh or Fleſh: but the burthen of the Minde, and the ſnare of the Conſcience. Hier. ad Nepotianum. Eraſ. in Annot. in 14. ad Rom.

But to paſſe ouer your needleſſe Lenten talke, the Feaſt, that we ſet before the people, is neither drie nor carrien, (notwithſtanding it liketh you, by your vnciuill termes, ſo to call it) but Spirituall, Holy, and Heauenly: I meane, the very body of Ieſus Chriſt the Sonne of God, to the comfort and releeuing of Body and Soule. And yet, foraſmuch as it ſo well delighteth your eares to call it carrien, we refuſe not the name. Chryſoſtome likewiſe, although in more reuerend and ciuill ſenſe, calleth it Carrien. Theſe bee his words: Vbi eſt Cadauer, ibi ſunt Aquilæ. Cadauer Domini Corpus eſt propter Mortem. Aquilas autem appellat, vt oſtendat, ad alta eum oportere contendere, qui ad hoc Corpus accedit, & nihil cum terra debere illum habere commune, nec ad inferiora trahi, & repere, ſed ad ſuperiora ſemper volare, & in Solem Iuſtitiæ intueri, mentiſque oculum habere acutiſſimum. Aquilarum enim, non Graculorum, eſt hæc menſa: Where as the Carien is, there are the Eagles. The Carrien is the Body of Chriſt, in reſpect of his Death. But he nameth Eagles, to ſhew, that who ſo will approch to his Body, muſt mount aloft, and haue no dealing with the Earth, nor be drawn, and creepe downward: but muſt euermore flie vp, and behold Chryſoſtom. 1. Cor. Hom. 24.

hold the Sonne of Iuſtice, and haue the eie of his minde, quicke and ſharpe. For this is a Table of Eagles (that flie on high) not of Iaies (that crepe beneath.)

Verily Preſent.

Ye adde further: But, ſay yee, at the Lords Supper Chriſt giueth himſelfe verily preſent. To what purpoſe? I pray you. That wee may eat him (ſay yee) by Faith and Spirit. Well reaſoned forſooth. Now forſoth, M. Harding, this is Hicke Scorners Logicke, farre vnmeet for a man of your grauity.

Haue ye forgotten (ſay you) the giuing to eat, and eating that which is giuen, to be Relatiues, one of them hauing Relation to the other? If Chriſt do exhibit himſelf verily preſent, doth not he ſo exhibit or giue himſelfe, as he wil be receiued? If he giue himſelf verily Preſent, we take him verily Preſent, & then we eat him verily Preſent, not only by Faith & Spirit, but by taking him into our Mouth & Belly.

Verily, M. Harding, this, of your part, was not very well reaſoned. For a man may haue Chriſt verily Preſent, although he haue him not in his mouth. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Habes Chriſtum in Præſenti, per Signum: In Præſenti, per Fidem: In Præſenti, per Baptiſmatis Sacramentum: Thou haſt Chriſt in the time Preſent, by his Signe or Token: In the time Preſent, by Faith: In the time Preſent, by the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Thus many waies we haue Chriſt Preſent, and verily Preſent. And S. Auguſtine imagineth Chriſt thus to ſay vnto the people of Capernaum, Non hoc Corpus quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis: Ye ſhall not eat (with your bodily mouth) this Body of mine, that you ſee. Wee remember well the relation, that is betweene Giuing and Receiuing: and therefore we marueil ſo much the more, that you ſo vnskilfully would abuſe it. For, as Chriſt offered his Body Spiritually to our Faith and Spirit: euen ſo Spiritually, by our Faith, and Spirit, we receiue it. And where ye ſay, We take Chriſts Body into our Mouthes, and Bodies, as hauing forgotten that Chriſt ſaith, The words that I haue ſpoken, be Spirit and Life; S. Auguſtine would ſoone haue remooued you from this groſſe error. For thus he ſaith vnto you: Quid paras Dentem & Ventrem? Crede & manducaſti: What prepareſt thou thy Tooth and thy Belly? (This eating is Spirituall.) Beleeue (in Chriſt) and thou haſt eaten.

Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract. 50.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 98.

Spirituall Eating.

S. Ambroſe ſaith: Fide tangitur Chriſtus: Fide viderur. Non tangitur Corpore: non oculis comprehenditur: By Faith Chriſt is touched: By Faith he is ſeene. He is not touched with Body: He is not ſeene with eie.

Ambroſ in Lucam lib 6 ca. 8.

Likewiſe ſaith Gregorius Nyſſenus S. Baſils Brother: Ego aliam Eſcam agnoſco: quę ſimilitudinem quandam proportionis eſcæ huius Corporis gerat: Cuius voluptas, atque ſuauitas ad animum ſolummodò tranſeat: I know another kind of Meat, bearing the Likeneſſe and reſemblance of our bodily Meat: (for that this inwardly feedeth the minde, as the other outwardly feedeth the Body) The pleaſure and ſweetneſſe whereof (goeth not into the mouth or belly, but) paſſeth onely into the Soule. Thus we vnderſtand our ſelues, M. Harding, and deceiue not, as you ſay, the Soules that Chriſt hath bought. God forgiue you and others, that ſo haue done, that the blood of many be not required at your hands.

Gregor. Nyſſen. De Creatione Hominis, c. 19.

Your errour (ye ſay) in making the Preſence of Chriſt in Baptiſme, like to his Preſence in the Supper, is too groſſe. Yeare is one error more then any of the learned Catholike Fathers euer noted. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In the Sacrament of Baptiſme we are made Fleſh of Chriſts Fleſh, and Bone of his Bones. S. Bernard ſaith: Lauemur in Sanguine eius: Let vs be waſhed in his Blood. Leo ſaith: Chriſti Sanguine rigaris quando in Mortem ipſius Baptizaris: Thou art waſht in the Blood of Chriſt, when thou art Baptized in his Death.

Chryſ in epi. ad Ephe. hom. 20. Bernard. Super Miſſus eſt, hom. 3. Leo in Sermon. de 4. Feria. c. 1.

By theſe few it may appeare, that Chriſt is Preſent at the Sacrament of Baptiſme, euen as he is preſent at the holy Supper: vnleſſe ye will ſay, we may be made fleſh of Chriſts fleſh: and bee waſht in his Blood: and bee partakers of him: and haue him Preſent without his Preſence. Therefore Chryſoſtome, when he hath ſpoken vehemetly of the Sacrament of the Supper, he concludeth thus: Sic & in Baptiſmo, Euenſo is it alſo in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. The Body of Chriſt is likewiſe Preſent in them both. And for that cauſe Beda ſaith: Nulli eſt aliquatenus ambigendum, tunc vnumquenque fidelium Corporis Sanguiniſque Dominici participem fieri, quando in Baptiſmate Membrum Chriſti efficitur: No man may doubt, but euery Faithfull man is then made Partaker of the Body, and Blood of Chriſt, when in Baptiſme hee is made the Member of Chriſt. As for your Reall and Fleſhly preſence, it hath bene often talked of on your part, but neuer proued.

Beda in 1. Cor. 10.

We ſay, VVe touch not Chriſts Body with our Mouth or Teeth. VVhat (ſay you) be yee vſed to ſwallow downe whole Morſels? Such childiſh and wanton talke, M. Harding, ſpecially in the debating of matters of Religion, would better become ſome lighter perſon. VVe know, that, as S. Auguſtine ſaith: Gratia Chriſti non conſumitur morſibus: The Grace of Chriſt is not conſumed by morſels. Yee might haue made the like anſwer to S. Auguſtine: For he ſaith to you, as I haue alleged him before: VVhat prepareſt thou thy Tooth and thy Belly? O, M. Harding, the eating of the Body Chriſt, is a worke Spirituall, and and nædeth neither bruſing of tooth, nor ſwallowing of the throat, nor helpe of the outward and bodily mouth. If ye know thus much, why doe ye diſſemble it? If ye know it not, ye come too rathe to ſpeake of theſe things.

S. Baſil ſaith: Eſt Spirituale Os Interioris Hominis, quo nutritur, recipiens Verbum Vitæ, quod verbum eſt Panis qui deſcendit de Cœlo: There is a Spirituall Mouth of the Inner Man, by which he is nouriſhed by receiuing (Chriſt) the word of Life, which is the Bread that came from Heauen. Baſil. in Pſ. 33. Ἐστὶ καὶ τοῦ ἔσω ἀνθρώπου στόμα τὸ ὑπὸ τοῦ λόγου τρεφόμενον.

Againe he ſaith: Guſtate, & videte, quòd ſuauis eſt Dominus. Sæpè obſeruauimus, vires animi habere nomina ab aliqua ſimilitudine Membrorum Corporis. Quoniam ergò Dominus noſter eſt Verus Panis, & eius Caro eſt Verus Cibus, neceſſe eſt, eam voluptatem quæ ex illius Panis delectatione affertur, in nobis per guſtum exiſtere Spiritualem: Taſte ye, and ſee that our Lord is gratious. We haue often times marked that the Powers of the minde haue their names from ſome likeneſſe of the parts of the Bodie. Therefore ſeeing our Lord is Bread in deed, and his Fleſh is verily Meat, it cannot be choſen, but the pleaſure and ſweetneſſe of that Bread muſt be wrought in vs (not by our Bodily mouth, but) by the Spirituall taſt of the Soule. Baſil. in eund. Pſalm. Ἐπειδὴ ἀφορισάμεθα πολλάκις ὁ τῶν μελῶν ἡμῶν, ἢ ἐστὶν ἀληθῶς βρῶσις, ἀληθῶς ἡ ἡδονὴ τῆς ἐφαπτικῆς ἄρτου διὰ γεύσεως ἡμῖν παρέξει ἐγκεκραμένη.

S. Cyprian ſaith: Eſus Carnis eius quædam eſt auiditas, & quoddam deſiderium mandi in eo: The Eating of that Fleſh is a certaine greedineſſe, and a certaine deſire to dwell in him. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ipſe eſt Panis Cordis noſtri: Chriſt is the Bread (not of our belly, but) of our Heart. And againe: Intus Eſuri, Intus Siti: Hunger thou Within: Thirſt thou Within. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Videte, Fratres, Panem Cœleſtem: Spirituali Ore manducate: O my brethren, behold this Heauenly Bread: Eat it with the Spirituall or Inner Mouth of the Minde. Cyprian de cœna Domini. Aug. in Pſa. 48 Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract. 26. 4. Sent. Diſt. 10 Secundum hos.

Thus are we taught to eat that Spirituall Meat, without chewing or ſwallowing, or vſe or office of the bodily Mouth. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non manducans, manducat: & manducans, non manducat: He that eateth not, eateth: and he that eateth, eateth not.

But Chryſoſtome ſaith: Quod omnium Maximum eſt, atque Præcipuum, in terra non conſpicaris tantùm, ſed etiam tangis: nec tangis tantùm, ſed etiam comedis: The greateſt and Worthieſt thing that is, thou doeſt not only behold in the Earth, but alſo toucheſt it: Neither doeſt thou only touch it, but alſo eateſt it. Here I beſeech you M. Harding, diſſemble no longer, but ſpeake plainely. How doe you behold the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament? With what ſenſes, with what eies doe you ſee it? If ye ſay, with your bodily eies, why ſay you, Chriſts Body is there Inuiſible, couered with Accidents, and cannot be ſeene? If ye ſay (as it is indeed) that yée ſee the ſame Body onely with the Spirituall eies of your Minde, then ye allege Chryſoſtome directly and plainely againſt your ſelfe. Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. homil. 24.

Spituall Eating.

But S. Auguſtine ſaith: Habet Fides oculos ſuos: Faith hath her eies to ſee withall. And S. Bernard ſaith: Viſio Animæ, intellectus eſt: The ſeeing of the ſoule is vnderſtanding. With theſe eies we ſée Chriſt, that is to ſay, wee vnderſtand Chriſt, or beléeue in Chriſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Velamen poſitum erat contra faciem eorum, ne viderent Chriſtum in Scripturis: There was a Vaile laid ouer their face, that they ſhould not ſee Chriſt in the Scriptures. Aug. epiſt 84. Bernar. Meditation. cap. 3. Aug. in Euangelium. ſecund. Lucã Serm. 49

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Non tantum præſtare poſſunt Corporales oculi, qui viſibilia cernunt, quantum oculi Spiritus, qui ea quæ non videntur, neque ſubſiſtunt, videre poſſunt: Theſe Bodily eies that ſee things viſible, cannot doe ſo much as the eies of the Spirit. For theſe eies are able to ſee the things that be not ſeene, and haue no being. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Oculi animi, etiamſi Parietes, etiamſi Mœnia, etiamſi Montium moles, etiamſi Cœlorum Corpora compererint obſtantia, omnia facilè prætercurrunt: The eies of the minde, notwithſtanding they finde Wals, or Mountaines, or the Bodies of the Heauens to ſtand againſt them, yet will they eaſily paſſe thorow them all. With theſe eies, ſaith Chryſoſtome, we ſee that moſt worthy, and moſt glorious Body of Chriſt. Therefore he ſaith: Credamus, & videmus Præſentem Ieſum: Let vs beleeue, and we ſee Ieſus Preſent before vs. Likewiſe S. Hierome ſaith: Eſt intelligentia Spiritualis, qua Chriſtus cernitur: There is a Spirituall vnderſtanding, wherewith Chriſt is ſeene. Otherwiſe S. Ambroſe ſaith: Chriſtum nunc ſecundùm Veritatem videre non poſſumus: As now, according to the Truth (with bodily ſight) we cannot ſee Chriſt. Chryſ. de Verb. Eſai. Vidi Dominum. homil. 2. Chryſ. in Marcum homil. 6. Hieron. in Amos, lib. 3. 6. 9. Ambroſ. in Oratione, de fide Reſurrectionis. Ambroſ. in Lucã, lib. 6. cap. 8.

Now, as the Body of Chriſt is ſeene, ſo is it touched: and as it is touched, ſo is it eaten. But it is not ſeene with Bodily eies: It is not touched with bodily fingers: For S. Ambroſe ſaith: Fide tangitur Chriſtus: Fide Chriſtus videtur: By Faith Chriſt is touched: By Faith Chriſt is ſeene. Therefore the Body of Chriſt is not eaten with the bodily mouth, but onely by Faith, which is the Spirituall mouth of the Soule.

Iudas (ye ſay) who had but a meane faith, becauſe he receiued the Sacrament, receiued him alſo. Oh how much is poore Iudas beholden to theſe men! Chriſt calleth him the Childe of Perdition.

Iohan. 6. Iohan 13. dition. S. Iohn saith: The Diuell was entered into him. Againe Christ saith: He was a Diuel. Therefore this Meane Faith that you allow him must néeds be a very little pretty Faith: euen such a Faith as ye might well allow the Diuell.

Spirituall Eating. Iudas.

Yet with the same Meane Faith (ye say) receiuing the Sacrament, hee receiued Christ also. First, it is not well and thoroughly agréed vpon, that Iudas receiued the Sacrament, or was present at all at the Last Supper. S. Hilary saith plainely: He was gone foorth about his wicked purpose, and receiued it not. But be it that S. Hilary were deceiued, and that Iudas indéed receiued the Sacrament: yet, as it said before, Christ Body is one thing, and the Sacrament of Christs Body is another thing.

Hilar. in Mat. Canon. 30.

S Augustine saith: Discipuli manducabant Panem Dominum: Iudas panem Domini, contra Dominum: The Disciples did eat the Bread which is the Lord: But Iudas did eat (not the Lord, but) the (Sacrament, which is the) Bread of the Lord, against the Lord. And yet in plainer sort he saith: Christus adhibuit Iudam ad Conuiuium, in quo Corporis & sanguinis sui figuram Discipulis suis commendauit & tradidit: Christ admitted Iudas vnto his Table, whereat he gaue and deliuered vnto his Disciples a Figure of his Body.

Againe, S. Augustine saith, as in the Person of Christ: Qui in me non manet, & in quo ego non maneo, ne se dicat aut existimet manducare Corpus meum, aut Sanguinem meum bibere: He that abideth not in me, and I in him, let him not say, or thinke, that he either eateth my Body, or drinketh my Blood.

The obiection that ye make of the Resurrection of our Bodies is light and vaine, and to small purpose. For if no man shall haue part in the Resurrection, but onely they that haue receiued the Sacrament of Christs Body, then are all the holy Fathers, Patriarchs, and Prophets of the Old Testament, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, Aaron, and such others: then are infinite numbers of Christian Children: then are many godly Martyrs, which being Baptized in the Blood of Christ, were taken out of this life before they could receiue the Sacrament, vtterly excluded for euer from all hope of Resurrection, which were a thing too horrible to enter into Christian eares. But Christ, when he spake these words, meant not the receiuing of the Sacrament, but the Spirituall Eating of his Verie Body, and the Spirituall drinking of his Very Blood: whereof he is made partaker vnto Resurrection and Life Euerlasting, whosoeuer beleeueth in the Death of Christ. And therefore S. Basil saith of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Baptisma est vis & efficacia ad Resurrectionem: Baptisme is a Power and a Strength vnto Resurrection. But hereof we shall haue occasion offered to say more hereafter.

Basil de Sanct. Baptismate. τὸ δὲ Βάπτισμα δύναμις ἐστὶ πρὸς τὴν Ἀνάστασιν.

Further, How can yee assure your selues (say you) that your Faith receiueth the Body of Christ, which was neuer promised to your Faith? By the way I beseech you, M. Harding, when, or where was Christs Body euer promised to your mouth? Verily Christ promised his Body to be receiued by Faith, and by Faith Only, and none otherwise. For thus he saith: Ego sum Panis ille Vitæ: qui venit ad me, non esuriet: & qui credit in me, non sitiet vnquam: I am that Bread of Life: He that commeth vnto me shall neuer hunger: and he that beleeueth in me, shall neuer thirst. Here haue you, M. Harding, a plaine promise made vnto your Faith. But of your mouth we heare nothing. If you haue ought to shew out of the Scriptures, Doctours, or Councels, let it appeare, and that in plaine words, without colour. Otherwise, if ye cauill in words, we must say yee haue nothing. Therefore the Ancient Father Origen saith: Ideirco dicitur Panis Vitæ, vt habeat Gustus Animæ, quod degustet: Therefore is Christ called the Bread of Life, that (our Faith, which is) the Taste of our Soule may haue what to taste.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision 2.

And therfore in celebrating these Mysteries, the People are to good purpose exhorted before they come to receiue the Holy Communion, to lift vp their Hearts, and to direct their minds to Heauen-ward: because he is there by whom we must be fed, and liue.

M. Harding.

I pray you, which these Mysteries meane you? Those that ye haue in your New Communion, or those that we haue at the Altar of God in the Catholike Church of Christ? If you meane your own new deuised toy, therof ye cannot bring any sufficient reason against the Church partly, which condemneth the same. If ye meane the Holy Mysteries of the Catholike Church, ye misreport the matter. For by that exhortation ye speake of (a) the people are not prepared to receiue the Communion onely, nor chiefly, but to dispose themselues accordingly, and as it becommeth the to pray, for to that ende be these words, Sursum Corda, Vp with your harts, pronounced by the Priest in the Preface before praier. Read S. Cypriã In Sermone 6. De Oratione Dominica, and ye shall finde him to referre the whole to Praier. But what if wee admit your words, refusing your Heretical meaning? We graunt the people are to good purpose exhorted, as ye say, and that he is in Heauen, whose flesh we feed on in this Sacrament, thereby to attain to life euerlasting. What conclude ye of this? Ergo, he is not heere? For at that marke ye shoot, euery man may see. Heere we tell you, that your Rhetoricke is better stuffe then your Logick: for your Argument is foolish. With the one ye may lead the simple perhaps: with the other ye moue the learned to laugh at you. For Christ is in Heauen, and also heere, as Chrysostome saith: Et hic plenus existens, & illic plenus, Vnum Corpus: (b) He is heere fully, and there fully, One Body. These two propositions, Christ is in Heauen, and, Christ is heere, may well stand together without iutting the one the other out of place. He is there at the Right Hand of the Father visibly: he is heere vnder the Formes of Bread and Wine inuisibly: there in Glory, heere in Maiesty: yet as truly and fully heere, as there concerning his (c) Substance, as Chrysostome saith. Ye proceed foorth, and say.

Sursum Corda.

(a) Vntruth: Heere M. Hard. misreporteth his own Masse booke.

(b) Christ is in Heauen by the Substance of his Body: and heere by working, or by Graces.

(c) Vntruth. For Chrysostome neuer neither wrote so, nor meant so.

a foolish Argument. In Epist. ad Heb. Homil. 17. Christ is both in Heauen & also heere in the Sacrament.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It may become you, M. Harding, as well to call the Reuerend Ministration of Christs Holy Mysteries, a Toy, as to call the Gospell of Christ Errour and Heresie. So likewise Libanius the Heathen, although a man, I trow, not of your Profession, said sometime, that all the Bookes either of the Scriptures, or any of the Christian Fathers, in comparison of Iulianus the Renegates Bookes, were Toies and Trifles. Howbeit Our Toies be the same Toies that were once vsed, and allowed vniuersally throwout the Catholike Church of God, before your Masse was euer knowen, and were then thought to be no Toies.

Socrat. Lib. 3. ca. 19. Christianorum Libri ridiculi, & nugaces, si enim Iuliani Libris conferamur.

Touching these words, Sursum Corda, Lift vp your Hearts (ye say) they were applied in Old times vnto praier, and not onely or chiefly to the Ministration of the Sacrament, and that (as ye seem to say) by the Witnesse of S. Cyprian. As for these empty words, Only, or Chiefly, yee vse them Onely as a false light to blinde your Reader. For in our Apology ye found thē not.

Touching S. Cyprian, ye thought it best to dissemble, and to shift his words, and to command him to silence. For thus he saith, euen directly against the whole practise of your Church: Sacerdos ante Orationem, Præfatione præmissa, parat Fratrum mentes, dicendo, Sursum Corda: vt dum respondet Plebs, Habemus ad Dominum, admoneatur, nihil aliud se quàm Dominum cogitare debere: Before Praier the Priest with a Preface prepareth the Hearts of the Brethren, saying vnto them, Lift vp your hearts: that when the People answereth, We lift them vp vnto the Lord, they may be put in minde, to thinke of nothing else, but of the Lord. Where is this Order, M. Harding? Where is this Ecclesiasticall Tradition now become? Throwout your whole Territory of Rome, in what Church, in what Chappell is it kept? Where doth your people answer the Priest at the Common Praier? Or, where doth the people vnderstand either the meaning of the Sacraments, or any thing that is pronounced by the Priest? Or, why are you so vnaduised, to allege manifest Authorities against your selfe?

Cyprian. in Oratione Dominica.

Ye say: The people was taught by these words, not to consider what was meant only by the Sacraments, but to giue attendance vnto the Praier. Wherein your owne Masse booke is easily able to controle you. And in the Greeke Liturgies, not before any other publike praier, but immediately before the Holy Ministration, the Priest saith: Ἄνω σχῶμεν τὰς καρδίας: Let vs lift vp our Hearts. And Chrysostome saith: Clamamus in conspectu Sacrificij, sursum Corda: We crie aloud in the sight of the oblation, Lift vp your Hearts. S. Augustine saith: Sursum Corda habeamus. Si resurrexistis cum Christo, dicit Fidelibus, Corpus & Sanguinem Domini accipientibus, dicit, Si Resurrexistis cum Christo, quæ sursum sunt, sapite: vbi Christus est in Dextra Dei sedens: Quæ sursum sunt quærite; non quæ super terram: Let vs lift vp our Hearts. If ye be risen againe with Christ, he saith vnto the Faithfull, hee saith Alexand. Halen 4 Que. 17. Memb. 1 Artic. 3. Par. 1. Cap. 9.

The wordes be plaine, and can in no wiſe bee denied. It were wiſdome, M. Harding, in ſuch caſes to auouch no more then ye know. Otherwiſe your wordes will goe to Toles.

Howbeit the matter being granted, that theſe words pertaine to the Holy Miniſtration, yet if we would reaſon thus; Chriſts Body is in Heauen; Therefore it is not Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament; Yee ſay, We ſhould make a foolish Argument: Our Rhetoricke is better ſtuffe then our Logike.

Chriſts Body in one place.

This Argument, M. Harding, is taken of the Nature of Chriſts Humanity: which being the very Naturall Body of a Man, by the iudgement of the ancient Fathers, muſt nedes be in one onely place at one time, and can reach no further. For otherwiſe it were not a very Naturall Mans Body. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, as hee is alleged by Gratian; Corpus Domini in quo Reſurrexit, in Vno loco eſſe oportet; The Body of our Lord wherein hee roſe againe, muſt needs be in One place. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Chriſtus ſecundùm Preſentiam Corporalem, ſimul & in Sole, & in Luna, & in Cruce eſſe non potuit; Touching Bodily Preſence, Chriſt could not be in the Sunne, in the Moone, and vpon the Croſſe all at once.

And againe: Chriſtus vbique eſt Virtute, non Opere; Diuinitate, non Carne: Chriſt is euery where by his power, not in deed; By his Godhead, not by his Fleſh.

Cyril, in Iohã. lib. 9. cap 22.

S. Cyril ſaith: Chriſtus cum Diſcipulis ſuis, etſi non Corpore, tamen Virtute Deitatis ſemper futurus eſt; Chriſt will euermore bee with his Diſciples by the Power of his Diuinity, although not in his Body. Therefore to Conclude, S. Auguſtine ſaith: Videte Aſcendentem; Credite in Abſentem; Sperate venientem; Tamen per Miſericordiam occultam etiam ſentite Præſentem: Behold Chriſt Aſcending: Beleeue in Chriſt being Abſent: Truſt in Chriſt that ſhall come againe: And yet by his Priuy Mercy feele him Preſent. Beleeue, ſaith S. Auguſtin, in Chriſt being now Abſent, and not here.

Aug. in Pſ. 46.

Thus the ancient Catholike Fathers were bold reuerently to reaſon of Chriſts Humanitie: yet was not M. Harding yet borne that ſhould ſo bitterly charge them with Fooliſh Arguments. Nay rather Ruffinus ſaith: Sed ultra adnumerato Calumniæ eſt, Corpus humanum aliud eſſe putare quàm Carnem: It is but a Fooliſh finding of a Cauill to ſay, that the Body of Man is any other thing than Fleſh.

Ruffin. in Hier. Inuectiua prior.

But Chryſoſtome ſaith: Chriſt is whole heere, and whole there. But Chryſoſtome in the ſame place many waies expounded his whole meaning. For thus he ſaith, if it would haue pleaſed M. Harding to haue ſeene his wordes: Offerimus quidem, ſed ad Recordationem facientes Mortis eius: Hoc Sacrificium Exemplar illius eſt: Hoc quod nos facimus, in Commemorationem fit eius quod factum eſt. Idipſum ſeu per offerimus: Magis autem Recordationem Sacrificij Operamur: We offer indeed, but in Remembrance of his Death. This Sacrifice is Token or Figure of that Sacrifice. The thing that wee doe, is done in Remembrance of that thing that was done before. We offer alway the ſame thing (that Chriſt offered.) Nay rather we worke the Remembrance of that Sacrafice (that Chriſt offered.) Notwithſtanding, to ſpare time, this Obiection is anſwered more at large in my Former Reply to M. Harding.

Artic. 6 Diuiſ 8.

But whereas M. Harding ſaith, Chriſts Body is as fully heer as it is in Heauen concerning the Subſtance, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, he would vnder the name of that holy Father wilfully warrant a great Vntruth. For Chryſoſtome ſaith not; Chriſts Body is preſent in Subſtance: Yee hath no ſuch wordes. Yee ſaith not ſo: Ye ſaith the contrary: as namely where hee ſaith as it is before alleged: The very Body of Chriſt it ſelfe is not in the Holy Veſſels, but the Myſtery or Sacrament thereof is there conteined.

Vultum est ergo illum in paruo aut abscondito loco quærere, qui totius est Mundi Lumen: The Second Comming of our Saviour shall be declared in Glorie. Seeing therefore he is the Light of the World, it is great follie to seeke him in any small Corner. Heere, M. Harding, S. The Apology, Chap. 14. Division 3.

Cyrillus saith, when we come to receiue these Mysteries, all grosse imaginations must quite be banished.

M. Harding.

Why doe ye not by your quotation direct vs to the place where this saying of Cyril may bee found? *Know ye not that we haue good cause to suspect your dealing? Do we not almost euery where finde you in manifest lies? If ye meane plaine Truth, why deale ye not plainely? Christs saying must needs bee true, Who euill doth, hateth light. Because ye knew the place maketh directly against you, and subuerteth your whole Sacramentary Doctrine, ye thought it good policy to take a word or two for your purpose, and leaue the rest, trusting it should not be espied. Wherein ye doe like the Scorpion, that casteth forth his venome with the spirt of his taile, and forthwith creepeth away into a hole. Would God as ye abuse the name of Cyril, so ye would stand to the Truth, by him (euen in that place which ye allege) substantially declared. Who listeth to see the place, let him read Cyrills Answer to Theodorites reprehension of the eleuenth Anathematisme against Nestorius. There he sheweth, that Nestorius destroied the meane of the Vnion of both Natures in Christ, to the intent the Body of Christ might be found but a common Body, as men haue, and not a Body proper of the Word, hauing power to viuificate or quicken all things. (a) For Nestorius diuided Christ, and taught the Word to be the Sonne of God not of Marie: and Christ Man the Son of Marie only, as Man; and dissolued the whole Mysterie of the Incarnation, so as Christ should be another certaine Sonne beside the Word. And because the (b) Nature of the Godhead cannot be eaten, therof he talked vainly and prophanely, that in the Sacrament we eat Flesh, and not Godhead. For confutation of this detestable Heresie, Cyril bringeth him to the consideration of the Blessed Sacrament, and apposeth him, whether he thought that in the Sacrament, Christ being (c) by his Doctrine) Man, besides God the Word, we eat a man, as one would say, after such sort as the Barbarous people of the new-found Land America, called Canibals, eat one another. But because that were absurd and beastly, Cyril saith, that we eat not a common Body, though the Nature of Godhead (c) properly be not eaten, but that Body which is Proprium Verbi: the proper Body of the Word, which quickeneth all things. by receiuing whereof, (d) we receiue whole Christ, God, and Man. And heere Cyril laieth to Nestorius charge, as though he draue men to grosse cogitations touching this Sacrament. The words be these: Num hominis comestionem, &c. What, doest thou pronounce this our Sacrament to be eating of a man, (the Greeke is ἀνθρωποφαγίαν) and driuest vnreuerently the minde of them as haue beleeued vnto grosse imaginations, and attemptest with humane imaginations to treat of those things which are attained by an only, pure, and exquisite Faith? These be the grosse imaginations which Cyril would to be banished at the receiuing of this Sacrament, and that we eat the Body of Christ, not as being a common Body, as the Body of euery mortall man: and though the Nature of Godhead be not eaten, that yet we eat that Body which is the proper Bodie of the Word, that quickeneth all things. Now as (e) we haue not that grosse imagination of eating a common Bodie, (which of the Greeks by a term plainer to the learned is called, ἀνθρωποφαγία) when we receiue this Sacrament: so it is euident by Cyril, that in the same (f) we eat verily and in deed the Bodie of Christ, the Word incarnate. For otherwise his sayings had not made ought against the Heresie of Nestorius And thus receiuing Christs Body in the Sacrament, we receiue it truly, and with Faith, and without grosse imaginations. All this weighed, how proue ye now Christ to be so lodged in Heauen that notwithstanding his owne Word, (g) we lacke him heere in these Holie Misteries? But let vs consider your other authorities.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Touching the quotation in the Margin, escaped in the Print, that fault, I trust, shall be amended. But how will you amend your fault, M. Harding, so often alleging such things as your Conscience knoweth to be most vntrue? I will not wander farre to put you in mind. In the last line of your former Diuision ye auouch that vpon Chrysostome, that, you know, Chrysostome neuer neither wrote, nor meant. As for the manifest Lies, wherewith ye so sharpely, and so often charge vs, though there were some Truth in your challenge, as there is none, yet might not we therein in any wise compare with you. Conterning the affiance ye would seeme to haue in these words of Cyril, ye thought it good skil thus to crow out with some courage before the fight.

In what sense the Godhead may be eaten, or not eaten, I haue alreadie said so much as then seemed sufficient, in my Former Reply to your First Answer. The meaning of Cyrillus is this: We cannot, neither know, nor beleeue on, nor feed vpon the Diuine Maiesty of God, as it is pure and simple, and in it selfe: But all our knowledge, and all our Faith, which is our Spirituall Feeding and Life, is derined vnto vs through Iesus Christ, and standeth only and wholly in this, that the Sonne of God hath taken the

(b) The meaning is this. We cannot be fed or nourished by Christ, as he is in his Diuine Nature but only by the Faith that we haue in his Flesh Crucified.

(c) Vntruth: guilefully enclosed: for neither the flesh of Christ in proper speech can be eaten.

(d) We receiue whole Christ; God, and Man, not with our Mouth, but by Faith and Spirit.

Very Nature and Substance of our Corruptible Flesh, and ioined the same in One Person vnto his Godhead. Therefore S. Hilarie saith: Cognitus fieri Deus hominibus, nisi assumpto homine, non potuit. Quia Incognoscibilem cognoscere, nisi per Naturam nostram, Natura nostra non potuit: God could not be knowen vnto men, but by the Receiuing of man vnto him. For God that surmounteth all knowledge, Our Nature could not know, but by the mean of our Nature. So saith S. Augustine: Quærebam viam comparandi roboris, quod esset idoneum ad fruendum te: Nec inueni, donec amplecterer Mediatorem Dei & Hominum, Hominem Christum Iesum: I sought a way to get strength, whereby I might be able to enioy thee: but I found it not before that I embraced Iesus Christ, which is the Mediatour betweene God and man. August. Cõfession. li 7. ca. 18.

Nestorius Hereof stood not either in Transubstantiation, or in Reall Presence: but only in the dissolution of the Person of Christ, in that he diuided the Manhood of Christ from his Godhead: and so concluded in the end, that Christ was onely a bare naturall Man, in all respects as others were. If it had beene so, then could wee not haue beene saued by the Death of Christ, no more then by the Death of Codrus and Decius, who being nothing else but Very Naturall Men, gaue themselues to Death for the safety of their countries. Neither could wee beleeue in Christ Crucified: that is to say, wee could not Eat, nor Feed vpon the Body of Christ, or haue Life by it. Cyrillus saith: Quomodo purgabit nos ab operibus mortuis Sanguis enim Communis Hominis nihil habet maius quàm Sanguis Tauri, aut Hirci: How then shall Christ deliuer vs from deadly workes? For the Blood of a Common Man hath nothing more (to worke Saluation) then the Blood of a Bull, or a Goat. And therefore the same Cyril imagineth Christ thus to say: Mortalem Carnem assumpsi: Sed quia Naturaliter vita existens habito in ea, totam ad meam Vitam reformaui: I haue taken Mortall Flesh vpon my selfe. But forasmuch as I Naturally being Life, dwell in the same, I haue reformed that whole Flesh vnto my Life. So saith Leo: Verus venerator Dominicæ Passionis, sic Crucifixum Iesum Oculis Cordis aspiciat, vt illius Carnem suam esse cognoscat: Let the true Worshipper of our Lords Passion so behold Christ Crucified with the eies of his heart, that hee may vnderstand that the Flesh of Christ is his Flesh. But hereof, I trow, M. Harding will moue no great question.

Spirituall Eating.

Further it is fully confessed of either side, that wee by Faith Eat the very Bodie of Christ, not as the Body of any other Common Naturall Man, but as the Body of the Sonne of God: and that the same Body so eaten by Faith, and none otherwise, giueth Life. But how that Body may be Eaten, therein standeth the whole doubt. Hereunto S. Cyril answereth thus: Num Hominis Comestionem hoc nostrum Sacramentum pronuntias? Et irreligiosè ad crassas cogitationes vrges mentem eorum qui crediderunt? Et attentas humanis rationibus tractare ea, quæ Sola, Pura, & Exquisita Fide accipiuntur? Doest thou say, that our Sacrament is the Eating of a Man? And doest thou vnreuerently, and without Religion, force the minde of the Faithfull vnto grosse (and Fleshly) cogitations? And goest thou about with Naturall imaginations to deal those things that be receiued by Only, Pure and Perfect Faith? These words seeme plaine, and free from quarrel. Yet hereof may grow another doubt. For by M. Hardings iudgement, to thinke that Christs Body is to be receiued into our Mouthes and Bellies, is no maner grosse Imagination. But we say, as Cyrillus saith, to auoid all such vncomely and Fleshly Vanities, Christs Body and Blood are a Spirituall food, and must be receiued, not with Mouth, or Teeth, but with Only, Pure, and Perfect Faith.

Cyril. Anathematismo. 11.

Only by Faith.

Concerning M. Hardings fantasie, Pope Nicolas vnder a Solemne Protestation would haue vs to say, Ego Corde & Ore profiteor, non tantùm Sacramentum, sed etiam Corpus Christi in Veritate, sensualiter manibus Sacerdotum tractari, frangi, & dentibus Fidelium atteri: I professe with Heart and Mouth, that not onely the Sacrament, but also the Body of Christ it selfe in very Truth, and in deed is sensibly touched, and broken with the Priests hands, and torne with the teeth of the Faithfull. But this talke is so fond, and so vtterly void of discretion, that the very Barbarous Glosse is faine to controll it in this sort: Nisi sanè intelligas (ista) Verba Berengarij, in maiorem incides Hæresim quàm ipse habuit: Vnlesse thou wisely vnderstand these words of Berengarius, thou wilt fall into a greater Heresie than euer he held any.

De Cons. Dist. 2. Ego Berengarius.

S. Cyrils words be plaine: Sola, Pura, & Exquisita Fide accipiuntur: These things be receiued (not by Mouth, but) by Only, Pure, and Perfect Faith. Likewise againe he saith: Initium & Fundamentum in Sanctificationem & Iustitiam Christus est, per Fidem, scilicet, & non aliter. Hoc enim modo in nobis habitat: Christ is the Beginning and Foundation vnto Holineſſe and Righteouſneſſe: I meane by Faith and none otherwiſe. For by Faith Chriſt dwelleth in vs. So ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus: Hoc eſt bibere Ieſu Sanguinem, participem eſſe incorruptionis eius: This is the Drinking of the Blood of Ieſus, to be made partaker of his Immortality. Origen ſaith: Eſt ergo ipſe vulneratus: Cuius nos Sanguinem bibimus, id eſt, Doctrinæ eius verba ſuſcipimus: He was wounded, whoſe Blood wee Drinke, that is to ſay, the words of whoſe Doctrine we receiue.

Clemens in Pædagogo, lib. 2. cap. 2.

Origen in Numer. homil. 16.

But what is there ſo plaine as theſe words of Athanaſius? Quot Hominibus ſuffeciſſet Corpus eius ad Cibum, vt Vniuerſi Mundi alimonia fieret? Propterea Aſcenſionis ſuæ in Cœlum mentionem fecit, vt eos à Corporali intellectu abſtraheret: Vnto how many men could Chriſts Body haue ſufficed for Meat, that he ſhould be the Food of all the World? Therefore hee made mention of his Aſcenſion into Heauen, that he might withdraw them from Corporall and Fleſhly vnderſtanding.

Athan. in illud Euangely: Quicunque dixerit verbum.

Here, M. Harding, I beſeech you, tell vs by the way when ye teach vs, that Chriſts Body is Fleſhly preſent, that it is receiued into the Mouth, that it is chewed and bruiſed with Teeth: and that it paſſeth further into the Belly, how doe you withdraw our minds from Fleſhly and Corporall vnderſtanding? If this Eating be Spirituall, what Eating may be counted Corporall? If this be Ghoſtly, what is Fleſhly?

Hereof S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: Cùm videritis Filium Hominis Aſcendentem, vbi erat priùs, Certè vel tunc videbitis, quòd non eo modo quo putatis, erogat Corpus ſuum: Certè vel tunc intelligetis, quòd Gratia eius non conſumitur morſibus: When ye ſhall ſee the Son of Man aſcending vp, where he was before: Then ſhall ye ſee, that he giueth not his Body (to bee Eaten) in ſuch ſort, as you imagine: Then ſhall ye vnderſtand, that his Grace is not conſumed by morſels. And therefore againe he ſaith: Nolite Fauces parare, ſed Cor: Prepare not your Iawes, but your Heart.

Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract. 27.

Aug. de Verbis Domi ſecund. Luc. Serm. 33.

This is the Very, True, Spirituall, and Onely Eating of Chriſts Body: and whatſoeuer fantaſie M. Harding hath deuiſed beſides, of his Mouth and Teeth, is, as S. Cyril ſaith, a Vaine, Vnreuerend, Groſſe and Fleſhly Imagination.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuiſion 4.

The Councell of Nice, as it is alleged by ſome in Greeke, plainly forbiddeth vs to be baſely affectioned or bent toward the Bread and Wine, which are ſet before vs.

M. Harding.

As for the former part of the ſentence, which ye bring out of the Nicene Councell (a) ſoundeth nothing againſt the Catholikes, (for they alſo teach the ſame:) (a) ſo the latter part is directly contrary to your Doctrine, which ye thought good to leaue out, leſt thereby ye ſhould haue marred your whole matter. Such nipping and rounding of ſentences hath euer been taken for a marke to know Heretikes by. Among wiſe men ſuch practiſe worthily bringeth you into ſuſpition of Vntruth. The words of the Councell truely reported be theſe: Let vs not at the Diuine Table baſely behold the Bread and Cup ſet before vs: but lifting vp our mind, let vs by Faith vnderſtand on that Holy Table to bee laid the Lambe of God, that taketh away the Sinnes of the world, of Prieſts Sacrificed vnbloodily. And receiuing his precious Body and Blood verily, let vs beleeue theſe to be the pledges of our Reſurrection. For in conſideration heereof we take not much, but a little, that wee may know, wee receiue not to filling (of the Body) but to Sanctimony. Take the end with the beginning, and what maketh this Decree of that holy Councell for Defence of your Sacramentary Doctrine? And here, who be more baſely affectioned and bent toward the things ſet on that Table, ye that make them but Bread and Wine, or wee that after Conſecration, beleeue vnder the Formes of Bread and Wine verily to be made Preſent the Body and Blood of Chriſt? Whether is a baſer exerciſe, to feed on (b) common Bread and Wine, and to dwell in the indgement of the ſenſes, or to eat the very Fleſh of Chriſt, the Bread of Life that came downe from Heauen to immortality of the Body and Soule, to forſake the ſenſes, and follow the vnderſtanding of (c) Faith? Well we agree with you, not to be ouer baſely intent to the Bread and Cup. But why doe not ye performe that, as followeth there after your owne allegation out of that Councell? Why doe ye not with thoſe 318. holy Fathers, and with the whole Church of Chriſt vnderſtand by Faith on that holy Table to be laid the Lambe of God, that taketh away the Sinnes of the World? Why doe ye not recant your wicked Doctrine againſt the Bleſſed Sacrifice of the Maſſe? Read the whole ſentence, ioining the end to the beginning. Say not all thoſe holy and learned Fathers, the Lambe of God, on this Sacred Table (they meane the Altar) to be Sacrificed of the Prieſts vnbloodily? Againe why bring ye the Chriſtian people from the Body of Chriſt whereby they are redeemed, to a (d) bare peece of Bread, teaching it to be but the Figure of his Body? Saith not this Councell, that we receiue the precious Body and Blood of our Lord (e) ἀληθῶς, that is, verily and indeed (f) whereby indeed all your Tropes and Figures be quite excluded? Againe if theſe were but Bread and Wine, as yee teach, would the Councell ſay, that we take them not to ſociety, but to Sanctimony and Holineſſe? What Holineſſe can we haue of Bread and Wine? What Holineſſe obtain we not by eating of the Body of Chriſt, being the proper Body of the Word, or God the Words own Body, that hath Power to viuifie, & quicken all things? Thus we come within you, Defenders, as it were, & claſping with you, wring your (g) wea-

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

We allege this place, although briefly, yet ſimplie and truly, and without any maner fraud or guile. But if rounding and clipping of the Holy Fathers be the marke of an Heretike, as it is here auouched, then haue we one marke more wherby to know M. Harding. For this is his ordinarie vſage and practiſe of courſe.

Touching either the Beginning or the End of this Decree, there is no cauſe, wherefore any Word therein written ſhould of our part be diſſembled. The Holy Fathers in that Councell teach vs, vtterly to withdraw our eies from the Bread and Wine, being nothing elſe, but Creatures tranſitorie and corruptible: and by Faith to behold the very Body of Chriſt, which is Repreſented in the Myſteries. To like purpoſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: as it is alleged before: Ea demùm eſt Miſerabilis animæ ſeruitus, Signa pro Rebus accipere, & ſupra Creaturam corpoream oculum Mentis ad hauriendum Æternum Lumen leuare non poſſe: This is the miſerable Bondage of the Soule, to take the Signes in ſtead of the things that be Signified: and not to be able to lift vp the eie of the Minde aboue the Corporall Creature, to receiue the Light euerlaſting. And therefore immediately before the holy Miniſtration, the Prieſt ſaith vnto vs, as it is ſaid before, Lift vp your Hearts. In this ſort the ſame Fathers ſpake of the Water of Baptiſme: Baptiſma noſtrum Oculis ſenſibilibus ſpectandum non eſt, ſed Oculis intellectus. Vides Aquam? Cogita Vim & Poteſtatem Dei, quæ in Aquis latet: Our Baptiſme may not be conſidered with the Senſible or Bodily Eies, but with the Inner Eies of the Minde. Seeſt thou the Water? Thinke of the Might and Power of God, that lieth hidden in the Water. Thus, as in the One Sacrament, they withdraw vs from the Water, euen ſo in the Other Sacrament, they withdraw vs from the Bread.

The Labe laid vpon the Table.

But it followeth in the ſame Decree, Let vs by Faith vnderſtand, on that holy Table to be laid the Lambe of God, that taketh away the Sinnes of the World. If the ancient Fathers, to the end to ſtirre vp and to enflame the hearts of the people, had not ſometime vſed vehement phraſes and extraordinarie kindes of ſpech, M. Harding might many times ſpare his penne and kepe ſilence. But he doth the Fathers great wrong, that preſſeth onely their bare words, and diſſembleth their meaning. Gregorie Nyſſene, S. Baſils Brother diſcretly and learnedly openeth this whole matter. Thus he writeth: Cùm in habitudine loci alicuius, vel negotij in loco exiſtentis, intelligibilium aliquod extiterit, Abuſiuè id ibi eſſe dicimus, propter operationem eius, quæ ibi eſt, locum pro habitudine & operatione accipientes. Cùm enim dicere deberimus, ibi operatur, dicimus, ibi eſt: When any Spirituall thing is in the conſideration of ſome place, or elſe in conſideration of ſome matter being in a place, We ſay, the ſame Spirituall thing is there, by an Abuſe, or by an Extraordinary vſe of ſpeech: becauſe of the effect of that Spirituall thing, that there is wrought: taking the place inſtead of Conſideration or Working in the Place. For where we ſhould ſay, There it Worketh, thus wee ſay, There it is. Euen ſo whereas theſe Fathers ſhould haue ſaid, The Effects or Graces, that we haue by Chriſts Body, are laid before vs vpon the Table, by Abuſe of Speech they ſay, the Body of Chriſt is laid vpon the Table. Likewiſe ſaith Gratian, Quidam non improbabiliter exponunt, Carnis & Sanguinis Veritatem, Ipſam eorundem efficientiam, hoc eſt, Remiſſionem Peccatorum: Some men not without good reaſon, by the Truth of Chriſts Fleſh and Blood, vnderſtand the Effect or Working of the ſame, that is to ſay, the Remiſſion of Sinnes.

Gregor. Nyſſen. de Anim. ca. 11.

De Conſ. diſt. 2 Species.

And as theſe Fathers ſay, Chriſt is laid vpon the Table, euen ſo, by like phraſe of ſpeech S. Gregorie ſaith: Chriſt is killed vpon the Table: Chriſtus iterum in hoc Myſterio moritur: Eius Caro in populi ſalutem patitur: Chriſt dieth againe in this Myſterie: His Fleſh ſuffereth for the Saluation of the people. So ſaith Chryſoſtom: Vt in Cœlo cœlatur Deus, ſic in Scripturis abſconditur. Non omnes intelligunt Deum Veritatis, poſitum in Scripturis: As God is couered in Heauen, ſo is hee couered in the Scriptures. All men vnderſtand not God that is laid in the Scriptures. So ſaith Athanaſius: Eſt etiam in Verbis Scripturarum Dominus: Our Lord is in the Wordes of the Scriptures. So ſaith S. Hierome: Supra nudam metuis humum exeſa Ieiunijs membra collidere. Sed Dominus tecum iacet: Thou art afraid to Lay thy Body, worne out with Faſting, vpon the bare ground. Yet the Lord Lieth there with thee. Againe: Nudus atque eſuriens ante fores noſtras Chriſtus in paupere moritur: Chriſt naked and hungrie, lying before our gate, dieth in the poore.

De Conſ. diſt. 2. Quid ſit. Chryſ. in Matth. homil 4. Athan. De Interpret. Pſalm. Hieronym. De vita Eremetica Hieronym. ad Gaudentium.

And to leaue other like ſayings and ſentences of the ancient Fathers, Pope Adrian ſaith faith in your late Councell of Nice: In Scripturis Sanctarum Imaginum Agnus Præcursoris digito ostensus, depingitur: In the Scriptures of the Holy Images, is painted the Lambe of God, that Iohn Baptist shewed with his finger. De Cons. dist. Sexta Synod.

These sayings must be qualified with a gentle Exposition: and may not be rackt extreamely to the sound and rigour of the Letter: Chrysostome thus expoundeth these words of S. Paul to the Galathians; Quibus Christus ante Oculos prius depictus erat, in vobis Crucifixus. Atqui Christus non apud Galathas, sed Hierosolymis fuit Crucifixus. Quomodo igitur dicit, in vobis? Vt ostendat vim Fidei, quæ potest etiam procul dissita cernere; indicans, quòd illi oculis Fidei, exactius cernerent, quàm nonnulli qui præsentes adfuerant, eaque quæ gerebantur, conspexerant; Vnto whom Christ was painted out, and Crucified among you before your eies. Yet was not Christ Crucified in Galathia, but at Hierusalem. How then saith S. Paul vnto the Galathians, Christ was crucified amongst you? His meaning was, to shew the strength of faith, which is able to see things though they be farre away; and that they by the Eies of Faith, saw the death of Christ more plainly and perfectly, then many that were present at his Death, and saw all that was done. Chryso. in epist. ad Galat. cap. 3

Thus the Fathers in this Councell said, Christs Body is laid foorth vpon the Communion Table, that is, not vnto our bodily eies or senses, but vnto the eies of our Faith: I meane by way of a Mysterie or Sacrament: but not verily or indeed. In this sense S. Augustine saith vnto the people: Vos istis in mensa; Vos estis in Calice; Yonare laid vpon the Table: You are in the Cuppe. As the people is laid vpon the Table, so is Christs Body laid vpon the Table. And as the people is in the Cup, so is Christs Blood in the Cup. The people is there by way of a Mystery; euen so is Christs Body and Blood there by way of a Mystery, and none otherwise. Thus, M. Harding, wee withdraw not the people of God, as ye vntruly say, from Christs Body to a pæce of Bread: but rather we lead them, as the Ancient Fathers euer did, from the Creature of Bread, to the beholding, receiuing, and eating of Christs very Body and Blood. De Cons. dist. 2 Quia passus.

The Lamb laid vpon the Table.

In what sort and sense Christ is now Vnbloodily Sacrificed by the Priest, for shortnesse sake, gentle Reader, I must referre thee vnto my Former Reply to M. Harding. Artic. 17. Diuis. 14.

How the Holy Mysteries be pledges of our Resurrection, it hath partly beene said before, and partly shall be said hereafter more at large.

How we may receiue the Body of Christ indeed and verily, without either Transubstantiation or Reall Presence, I haue both touched before in this Treatie, & also in my Former Replie. Certainely S. Augustine saith: The Receiuing of Christs Body indeed, and the Receiuing of the Sacrament: are sundrie things. Thus he writeth: Ostendit Christus, quid sit, non Sacramento tenus, sed re vera Corpus Christi manducare, & eius Sanguinem bibere: Christ sheweth what it is to eat his Body, and to drink his Blood not by way of Sacrament, but verily and indeed. For the eating of the Sacrament with Mouth and Teeth, is not the very True eating of Christs Body: but a token or Mystery of the same. S. Augustine saith: Qui manducat intus, non Foris: qu. Manducat in Corde, non qui premit Dente: He that eateth Within, not he that eateth Without: He that eateth (Christs Body) in his heart, not he that bruseth (the Sacrament) with his Tooth. Whoso by Faith receiueth the Body of Christ, receiueth it substantially, Really, Verily and Indeed: and dwelleth in Christ and Christ in him. Thus is Christs Body receiued, as these holy Fathers say, not to the filling or contentation of the Body, but vnto the Holinesse and Sanctification of the mind. Artic. 4. Diuis. 8. Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 21. cap. 11. Augustin in Ioh. Tract. 26.

Thus ye come within vs, M. Harding as ye say, and claspe with vs: and ouerthrow vs by learning, and wring our weapon out of our hands, and with the other end thereof, ye strike vs downe. Me thinketh, I heare one say, Denique metuebant Omnes iam me: If some handsome Gnato stood by you, I trow, we should haue a prett ty play. But vnsensible men are we, that feele none of these deadly blowes, I will answer you, as S. Augustine sometime answered Pascentius the Arian Heretike: Facile est, vt quisque Augustinum vincat: videris, vtrùm Veritate, an Clamore: It is an easie matter to ouercome Augustine: But see you whether it be by Truth, or by noise of words. And againe: Non bonum Homini est, Hominem vincere: Sed bonum est Homini, vt eum Veritas vincat volentem: quia malum est Homini, vt eum Veritas vincat nolentem. Nam ipsa vincat necesse est, siue negantem, siue confitentem: It is not good for a Man to conquer a Man: But it is good for a Man, that the Truth may Conquer him with his good will. For it is ill for a man, that the Truth should Conquer him against his will. But whether he will, or not, the Truth must needs Conquer him. Thraso in Eunucho. August ad Pascent. epist. 174

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision 5.

To receiue or beare Christ.

And, as Chrysostome very aptly writeth, we say, that the Body of Christ is the Dead Carcase, and wee our selues must be the Eagles: meaning thereby that we must flie on high, if we will come to the Body of Christ. For this Table, as Chrysostome saith, is a Table of Eagles, and not of Iaies. Cyprian also: This Bread, saith he, is the Food of the Soule, and not the meat of the Bellie.

M. Harding.

(a) O earthly Diuinity! Then haue you little to do in Heauē.

(b) Not by pulling Christ downe to vs: but by lifting vp our harts to him.

(c) With thy Faith, not with thy Mouth.

(d) Vntruth. For Chrysostome speaketh only of the Presence of Grace: of this grosse & fleshly Presence, hee saith nothing.

(e) Vntruth. For Chrysostome not once nameth Reall Presence. Read the answer

(f) Vntruth. For the Nicene Councel maketh no mention of anie such Formes. And, beeing but idle Formes and Shews, how are they a Spirituall food, or how can they serue to make you holie?

Indeed Chrysostome saith, as ye report. But Sirs, what meane ye? To Eat the Body of Christ, which is the dead Carcase, in respect of his Death (for vnlesse he had fallen, wee had not risen againe) must wee so bee Eagles, as we vse no office of mans Body to this kind of Eating? Must we flie so hie, as wee looke not to finde this Body in Earth? Can we not Eat this Body, except we fly vp to Heauē? Can we not come by it, but there? Can we not Eat him, but there? Yes forsooth. (a) We need not to go out of the Earth for the matter. For Chrysostom himselfe in the same Homily, frō whence ye fetch this, saith, that whiles we be in this life, this Mystery is cause, that the (b) Earth to vs is become Heauen. He that desireth to know what Eagles we must be, and how high we must flie to come to the Eating of this Body worthily, let Chrysostome euen there expound Chrysostome. Hee nameth Eagles (saith he) to shew, that he must get him on high, that commeth to this Body, and he that must haue nothing to doe with the Earth, neither be drawn downward to base things, and creep, but alwaies flie vpward, and behold the Sunne of righteousnesse, &c. Will ye yet heare him more plainely declare, what he meaneth by this high Eagles flight? Wipe away (saith he) all filth from thy Soule, prepare thy mind to receiue these Mysteries. If the Kings Child arrayed in Purple and Diademe were deliuered vnto thee to beare, wouldest thou not cast down on the ground all that thou holdest and receiue him? But now, when thou receiuest not the Kings Child, (c) but the only begotten Son of God, tell me, I pray thee, art thou not afraid? And doest not cast away all loue of worldly things, and garnish thy selfe with him onely, but doest thou yet looke downe on the Earth, art thou yet in loue of thy money? art thou yet giuen to the Earth? If it bee so, what forgiuenesse, what excuse shalt thou finde? This spirituall flying vp requireth Chrysostome: and yet in that Homilie he declareth (d) the Body of Christ to be present heere in Earth, meaning in this holy Sacrament, yea that verie Body, which was Nailed, Beaten, which was not ouercome by Death, which the sun seeing Crucified, turned away his Beames, for which the vaile of the Temple was rent asunder, stones, & all the Earth quaked, the Body that was made all Bloody, and being thrust in with a speare, powred foorth Fountaines of Blood and Water to all the World healthfull. Thus ye see how farre Chrysostome is from your strange Doctrin, concerning the very and (e) Reall Presence of Christs Bodie in the Sacrāmēt of the Altar. Of which Altar, and of the Sacrifice of that Body made and offered by the Priests, & of the Adoration due thereto, in that Homily he speaketh most plainely. That to proue your purpose, ye must seeke for another Homily, which ye are neuer like to find: for Chrysostome serueth not your turne. As neither Cyprian whom ye allege, and against whom, God knoweth, verily we confesse with holy Cyprian and the Fathers of the Nicene Councell, that the Body of Christ which we receiue in the Blessed Sacrament is the food of the Soule, and not common meat to fill the panch. And therfore of the outward Formes we take but little (f) according to the Nicene Decree, acknowledging, that spirituall food to serue to Sanctimony, not to Satiety. Lastly, ye bring for you S. Augustine in these words.

In 1. Ioan. tract. 10. homil. 14. What Eagles must we bee, & how high must wee flie to come to the Eating of Christs body. What is meant by the high Eagles Flight. Chrysostome acknowledgeth Christs very Body present in the Sacrament.

Cyprian alleged by the Defender to no purpose.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here M. Harding casteth his colours to shadow that thing, that will not be hidde. Whereas Chrysostome saith, Thou receiuest not the Kings Childe, but the onely begotten Sonne of God, he so racketh and pulleth these words, as if the Fathers in their writings had neuer vsed any kind of Figure: and as if we were bound vnder paine of damnation, to receiue what sentence soeuer they haue spoken, according to the very rigour and extremity of the Letter.
